LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA, TUESDAY, AUGUST 31, 1976

NO. 1

LONGWOOD OFFERS . . .

SOMETHING FOR EVERYONE

Dear Longwood . . .

Have We Got A Month For You!

Let me add to the numerous words of welcome — to the freshmen and transfers as they begin the experience of Longwood College, and to upperclassmen as they return to continue that experience.

Open yourself — to be excited, to be depressed, to be made to wonder why, and to be made aware that answers must be sought after rather than waited for. There are a lot of good things at Longwood, and people are generally willing to discuss. Don't let apathetic students and faculty influence you. If you want something — ask for it and be willing to defend yourself. Keep yourself open and always be ready to ask why — there won't always be straightforward answers, but you will have made an impression by persisting. Changes will never come unless and until students work for them. Be open, for one-sided discussions accomplish nothing. Don't take "we're looking into it" for a final answer, and don't assume that something obvious to you is obvious to other students and the administration.

With the introduction of journalism to Longwood College, the Rotunda can practice what it preaches. It is a newspaper for the students and is controlled by the students. There are few barriers to confront those who have something to say: slander and anonymity are basically the only untolerated concepts. Last semester a special issue was presented concerning student legal rights, and special features will be continued this year. A student newspaper should of course report school sponsored events. It must, however, realize that the world is a much larger place than Farmville, and it must also present information pertaining to the lives of its readers. It is in this context that special research will be presented concerning birth control, abortion, venereal disease, suicide, and anything else that Longwood is interested in. The Rotunda's concern is not a moral one — the only objective is to present symptoms, preventative measures and perhaps addresses of free clinics so that should an issue be of particular concern to an individual, she or he will have some idea of what to expect and what to do about it. Too many have closed their eyes and ears for too long to matters that a decade ago were not openly discussed. College students are faced with situations that require adult decisions, and without some guidelines these situations can get out of hand. They are not uncommon — just not openly discussed. It is my hope that students, faculty, and administration will let the Rotunda serve as a sounding board. Suggest. Complain. Wonder. Let's open Longwood to the world.

A Letter From CHI

Dear Class of 1980:

CHI of 1977 welcomes you to Longwood in hopes that your first year and every year will be an enjoyable one. Many of you have heard the name CHI or rumors about the organization but still do not know what it is or why it exists. The Handbook defines CHI's purpose as an organization which strives "to promote and maintain a spirit of cooperation among students in every phase of college life", but it is also an ideal, reached through Scholarship, Leadership, Character and Honor.

Each year the members of CHI attempt to improve the spirit of cooperation within the student body. In past years this has been done through letters, candles, commendations and gifts to the college. CHI of 1976 expanded the tradition by sponsoring a symposium on a subject which they felt was beneficial to the student body.

CHI of 1977 hopes to continue many of these traditions and perhaps start a few new ones. But remember, it is impossible for these few to achieve an ideal so high. The heart of CHI and its ideal is seen in those who seek its real purpose.

Have a Good Year

Eventful Week For Seniors Includes

Senior Capping And Convocation

By LISA SMITH

Last week was an eventful one for the seniors of Longwood College. On September 7, at 7:00 p.m. Longwood students filed into Jarman Auditorium to officially become the seniors and the graduating class of 1977. On September 9, at 1:00 p.m. the seniors went to Jarman again for Convocation — this time in a more serious atmosphere.

In the traditional capping event, Kathy Riggins, senior class President, welcomed the class of '77 on "finally reaching the peak of our career." With the recognition of class officers and the senior class sponsor, Mrs. Parrish, Kathy then introduced President Henry I. Willett as the guest speaker. He spoke of how people will invest the time and money to go to college but at the same time get overly concerned with placement records. Dr. Willett reassures students that there "will be job opportunities available for good people." He also advised students "after having thought through what you want to do then stick with it." This sound advice can eliminate tension and stress from many undecided college students and make for a more pleasurable college experience.

The little sisters and brothers then rose and placed the caps on their big sisters and brothers, thus recognizing the seniors of '77. After capping, the sophomores gave their sister class a reception in the Gold Room, which included a song of their own making.

Presiding at Convocation was President Henry I. Willett with the Invocation by Brother Gerard Von — Hagel. Dean Wells recognized the Longwood Scholars, which included thirteen girls from the freshman and sophomore classes, and she announced the new Nel Anderson Sprague Scholarship to be given to a freshman writing the best composition. The student will receive $100 for his/her achievement.

Kathy Riggins introduced the guest speaker, Dr. Robert R. Ramsey, Jr., the Secretary of Education for the Commonwealth of Virginia. Dr. Ramsey gave a thought provoking and challenging speech. He recalled his first convocation as a freshman and the excitement that went with it. It is a time when we must look ahead and think about the future. There are many challenges ahead yet much growth. And while many are in an "identity crisis" and looking for a "self-definition" the possibility of anyone telling each individual what his identity might be is out of the question. We must seek our own and find the identity that suits us best.

Dr. Ramsey pointed out that Longwood had responded to the challenges of the new life style and had kept in mind excellence and high standards in facing these challenges.

A highlight of the event came when President Willett announced that the dining hall would be named after Dr. Herbert R. Blackwell. This was received by a standing ovation from the audience.

Annual Ring Ceremony Held On Sept. 9

With A Ring Dance Highlighting Event

By DONNA HASKY

On Thursday, September 9, Longwood Juniors received their college rings at the annual Ring Ceremony. A new touch was added to the occasion this year, with a banquet for the Juniors and their Little Sisters before the ceremony.

Dr. Eleanor Bobbitt was the guest speaker for the ceremony, which was held in the Sunken Gardens. Part of her message included an original poem entitled "If Longwood Could Speak—What Would It Say?" Dr. Bobbitt went on to speak about what Longwood means in terms of honesty, integrity, friendship, scholarship, and leadership.

To further celebrate, approximately 90 couples attended the Ring Dance Saturday night in the Gold Room. The band for the semi-formal event was "Cold Duck", which also played here last year for a mixer.

Commenting on the success of the Ring Ceremony and Dance, Ring Committee Chairman Sue Rama said, "I think the ceremony went very well and that everyone that attended got something from the message. The band was terrific and I think everyone had a really good time. We had a lot of support—both in the dance turnout and from those that helped work at the door and with the refreshments."

The Ring Committee has worked on plans for the ceremony and dance since October of last year. They were also responsible for interviewing and selecting a ring company and helping with ring orders. Members of the committee were Sue Rama, chairman, Liz Barch, Terry Donohue, Sally Hoffmaster, Ginger House and Sara Jo Wyatt.

Utilization? Demand It.

Common sense dictates that in order for any group or event to be worthwhile, it must be used to its fullest capacity. Anything if left dormant will become useless, and any ideas if not pursued will be forgotten.

The Press Conference is a prime example. Unless students attend it ready with questions and gripes, it will serve no other purpose than to give free cokes and cookies. Only when problems are repeated over and over will any solutions come. Everybody has a complaint or suggestion about something, and a press conference is the place to air it. Only when the administration is pumped for action will improvements be made. In using the press conference to its fullest capacity, go prepared to ask questions and to justify your complaints. Don't let anyone pass the buck to someone who is not there. Demand at least an explanation as to why something was or was not done. Be specific and don't accept run-around answers. When an issue is brought up that has no immediate solution, expect some answer within the next week or ask why. Don't leave the press conference without some feeling of accomplishment or frustration. Point out issues that need attention — put the administration to work.

The Student Counselors is an organization with high potential but yet not used to its fullest capacity. It is made up of students whose primary aim is to assist a student being investigated. These people are Longwood's version of a lawyer and can be present during an investigation and trial. Judicial Board, during its preliminary investigation, tells the student about the counselors and advises them to use one. The investigation is then halted until a counselor arrives to be with the student involved if she so wishes. Student counselors are a shoulder to cry on, a sounding board, a friend, and a defense lawyer during a trial. Whether the decision made is for or against the student, at least someone was there to help and care. Judicial Board is to be congratulated for its use of the counselors. Residence Board, however, never calls on them. Even though its investigations and trials are not as serious in nature as Judicial Board, they are still trials, and students being investigated have a right to a counselor. Why then, does Residence Board not advise the student about them? What justification is there for not using them? None. Student counselors are here to be used — at any hour of the day or night. They are here to help anyone in trouble. They offer no threat to the Board, but offer assistance to the student. Supposedly anything that is for a student's good should be fully utilized. Evidently Residence Board feels differently.

In justifying the existence of any event or group, it must be shown that it is fully utilized and serves a purpose. Whether at a press conference or with counselors, unless students know about it and put it to use for themselves, it becomes nothing more than a name.

After Two Weeks Of Minority Life, The Freshmen Male Students Speak Out

By THOMAS HAWKE

It's been close to 2 weeks now since the first male resident students arrived at Longwood to start the first "Era" of the outnumbered but overwhelmingly happy resident males. In this small period of 2 weeks the Longwood males have become immune to the Hampden-Sydney boys clattering up the wall, and listening to these college students (?) welcome us with their free phone calls at 2 in the morning. I can also say that Longwood males have formed many opinions of the college, some extending from the far right to a little left of center. But it seems that most of the male opinions I have encountered have been roughly middle of the roads.

Andy Pittard, a music major, commented, "For a school this size they really have a fantastic music department. I'm really impressed overall with the faculty. They give you the feeling that they're there so you can learn, not so they can teach and leave like some of the greater populated universities."

When he was asked to respond on the issue of males at an all female school he said, "It's all right! I consider it a challenge."

Why he stopped with the word challenge, I haven't the slightest. I'm under the impression he used the word with academics in mind.

Walter Hughes was asked the same question but his response was slightly different. "I don't really know what I think of the idea, guys at an all girl school that is. I just know that most of the girls are friendly when you talk to them and most of them are happy to have males at Longwood. But it seems that they keep catching us coming out of the showers on First Floor TABB."

Yes, right now for the time being it seems the main idea running through the average guy's head is 20:1, 20:1! They're really not concerned with the social activities that most of the student population is involved in. Activities such as Tri Sigma, Alpha Gamma Delta and other activities that only students that are beardless (meaning they can't grow one) and small footed can get into. However, you'll find that any opportunity that arises where a male can be involved, one is usually present and willing to participate.

Well, with everything running so smoothly and the guys getting settled into their new way of life with no complaints, everything must be working out. Almost. It has come to my attention and I agree, that when Longwood accepted the first male student they must have slightly over looked the stunning reality that they had also accepted his appetite. I'm sure I don't have to stress the fact that males "devour" more food than the average female because the guy is (don't get on your high horses P.E. majors) naturally more active, therefore requiring more energy to burn.

This overall seems to be our only gripe. The situation has become critical and embarrassing when we have left the dining hall and walk into a group of girls with our stomachs growling and have one say, "Why don't you go eat?"

Seriously now, overlooking the slight need for food, I can say that the majority of the minority are impressed with Longwood as a school and are happy they made the choice they did.

Maxey, Burgwyn And Day Chosen

As New Geist Members At Tapping

By SANDY HAGA

Geist, an honorary society for juniors and seniors, tapped three new members on September 7. The group's most evident function is the sponsoring of Oktoberfest, which will be October 15-16 this year.

Michelle Neal opened the ceremony with the reading of the poem "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening," by Robert Frost. The main speaker was Mrs. Cada Parrish, a math professor and sponsor of the Alpha Lambda Delta chapter at Longwood. Mrs. Parrish pointed out that Geist is an honor organization which is based on three criteria: Scholarship, Leadership, and Service. She also stressed the importance of individual contributions, and support of leaders. It was also suggested that students give things a chance before they complain. Mrs. Parrish pointed out that progress is not made without change.

Following Mrs. Parrish's speech, three candles representing humility, integrity, and intelligence were lit. Next Ellen Cassada announced the recognition of new members. Former members tapped Linda Maxey, Emily Burgwyn, and Mabel Day.

Linda Maxey is a senior from Scottsville, Virginia, majoring in Home Economics. She is a member of Zeta Tau Alpha sorority and Kappa Omicron Phi. Linda has worked as a Colleague and Student Assistant.

Emily Burgwyn is a senior from Richmond, majoring in Physical Education and Recreation. She has played on the JV tennis team, has served on Residence Board, and has been active in Oktoberfest skits. Emily is also a member of the Newman Club Folk Group, Alpha Gamma Delta, and Delta Psi Kappa. She is presently serving as vice-chairman of Legislative Board. Emily was a Festmeister and a Colleague.

Mabel Day, a senior from Burkeville, Virginia, is majoring in Physical Education. She is a member of the Afro-American Alliance and Delta Psi Kappa. Mabel is presently serving as president of the Intramural Activities Association.

Sandy Maloney closed the tapping ceremony with a challenge for everyone present, "Live each day to its fullest; you will not pass this way again."

Various Changes— Good And Bad— Stem From New Dinning System

With the coming of the male population to Longwood College, many traditions have been abolished in the name of progress. The family style dining arrangement is one such tradition that has fallen prey to this thing called progress.

The new dining hall procedures include the expanded meal-hour which enables students to eat when they wish and provides seating for a greater amount of students. Students now have more flexible class schedules because of the new method.

However, the entire concept of family style dining has changed. In years past, mealtime was one part of the day when everyone could be together and relax; now, the atmosphere is a mixture of tension and chaos. Students can no longer enter the dining hall with less than a group of five and expect to be seated together. Even with a larger group there is no guarantee that they will remain together. The procedure of checking identification cards has caused some ill feelings. The rule that no one may enter without their I. D. card, even when the hostess is positive the person is a student has caused problems of students going without their meal. Also this process of I. D. checking and seating increases the length of time the students remain in line.

Before, students were allowed to remove some foods from the dining area. Those days are gone and the only plausible explanation is the fact that ARA Slater is losing money. And if enough money is lost, the cost of tuition will rise. One may ask why are they losing money; the answer is that the choice of two entrees is resulting in a waste of food.

From the waitress' point of view, this new arrangement has resulted in longer hours in the cafeteria; less time to devote to the academic side of college, and with no noticeable increase in pay. There is more time wasted in the waiting to serve the students than necessary. And those waitresses assigned to reset tables, do so without extra pay.

The hostesses are forced to neglect their main duties and concern themselves with the seating of the students. Moreover, in the past, many waitresses and hostesses alike were known for their friendliness. Now, there are seldom anything but complaints about the general attitude of all dining hall personnel. Most students understand the situation, but that makes it no easier to live with.

After talking with a number of students and waitresses, a list of possibilities for improving the dining hall procedures has been offered. If continuous seating is to continue, then the concept of family style seating should give way to complete buffet. Waitresses should be assigned to consistent work shifts and regular tables whenever possible. To further reduce the problems at dinner, the choice of menu should be deleted. And if the working conditions were improved (i.e. less time in the dining hall) more students would be willing to work as waiters and waitresses.

If our established practice of dining must change in the name of progress, then let it be done efficiently. There are no half-in-half measures to follow. Either return to complete family style arrangements or go to buffet totally — but do so with the approval of the majority of people involved — the students. After all, what else is the dining hall concerned with?

Tom Chapin To Appear In Outdoor Concert

Thursday, September 16 is the date that the Student Union has reserved for an outdoor concert by Tom Chapin. The concert, from eight till ten p.m. will be on Lankford Mall, and will be free.

Tom Chapin, a native Brooklyn, is the brother of the famed Harry Chapin. Tom's musical career began in his high school days when he and his brothers and father combined talents and produced the band The Chapin Brothers. Tom has played with both of his brothers, Steve and Harry, respectively, and has also played with Mt. Airy. In television, Tom was the star of the children's program, "Make A Wish."

At the present, Tom's ultimate concern is to play on his own, and to make a name for himself. In a recent interview, Tom comments that he "is working to establish himself as an individual performer." He has had, and is booked for several coffeehouse engagements, yet he is anxious to do some long concerts.

Tom has written a number of extremely interesting songs of his own. "Sorrow Takes a Bow" is a beautiful ballad written about a friend's marriage breaking up. That song, like many others of his, shows a great deal of creativity, emotion and sensitivity. His range of songs are from light, humorous tunes that invite audience participation to his more serious songs. His show is well organized, varied and smooth, complimented by his enthusiasm on and off stage.

Commenting about writing, Tom explains, "I see the only way to stay sane is to keep on writing. It never hurts to keep writing and that's what I'm trying to do now."

Legislative Board Holds First Regular Meeting

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS
The first meeting of Legislative Board was held Monday, September 6 in the Reading Rooms of Lankford at 7:00. After old business, Elaine Sneed reminded the representatives that the Student Activities Fees Committee is taking requests for additional funds from the various organizations on campus. Mary Bruce Hazelgrove, chairman of Orientation, asked about the possibilities of the Student Assistants receiving money as the Colleagues and Orientation Leaders do, in order to help them prepare for Orientation. Elaine answered that this would have to come in the form of a request before Student Activities Fees Committee.

Dr. Gussett talked about the Leadership Seminar to be conducted by Dean Swann and Ms. Nicholas for the next nine weeks. This seminar is for those interested in activities and discussions to develop leadership qualities. Emily Burgwyn said about the Leadership Seminar, "I think it's going to be great as a growth thing." She went on to add that the seminar would not be for credit, which might turn a lot of people off, but there should be a lot of commitment and dedication on the part of students participating in the seminar. The first Leadership Seminar will meet Wed., Sept. 15 from 4:30-5:45.

It was decided that a press conference with President Willett will be held during the third week of September. Watch for further details. There was also some discussion about summer school and Sue DeLong asked about the possibility of a three week short session in May.

Legislative Board meetings deal with the affairs of the student body. The meetings are always open and anyone is welcome to come and air their views or just listen. Meetings are at 7:00 on Monday nights at different locations around campus. Lists of these locations are posted on bulletin boards in the dorms. The next meeting will be held on Sept. 13 in French Dorm Parlor.

Internationally Known Bradley Fields To Conduct "Tricky" Workshop And Show

Magician Bradley Fields is scheduled to appear at Longwood on Tuesday, September 21.

Tuesday afternoon Mr. Fields will conduct a workshop in the C Room in Lankford. The time will be 3:00 p.m., and it will be free. Mr. Fields will perform Tuesday evening at 8:00 in Jarman auditorium. Admission for Longwood students will be $1, and guest admission will be $2.

Bradley Fields gives the art of illusion a new dimension. Whether performing his original fantasies or presenting such classics as "Levitator" and the "Indian Basket Mystery," he restores the sense of wonder and poetry to magic.

With inimitable style and artistry he creates imaginary corners in space from which objects appear and disappear. Handkerchiefs come alive and bird cages melt into thin air.

"Magic should be a thing of beauty, mystery and wonderment, an art with aesthetic principles". . . says illusionist Bradley Fields, who in only twenty four years has accomplished a feat worthy of his own magical talents. Performing across the U. S. in clubs and universities, he gained international recognition touring England, France and Italy. Fields studied Mime in Paris with Etienne DeCroux and blends this ancient art with his illusions. He appeared in concerts with Sean Phillips, David Bromberg, Seals and Crofts, was the first magician to play Washington's, The Cellar Door. He recently completed a Special for French television "Les Cercles Magiques."

In support of the upcoming political week, the S-UN urges you to attend "All the President's Men" beginning Wednesday at the State Theater —

Clifford Earl, Virginian Sculptor To Conduct A Lecture Seminar

Clifford Earl, a Virginia-based sculptor who enjoys national recognition, will conduct a lecture-demonstration here Monday, September 20.

Earl's appearance was announced by I.B. Dent, president of the Central Chapter of the Virginia Museum, and Barbara L. Bishop, chairman of the Art Department at Longwood College, local sponsors for the event. His program is related to the exhibition, "Idea into Image-Sculpture," which is currently touring the state aboard a Virginia Museum Artmobile. The exhibition will be seen in this area September 20-23 at the Farmville Shopping Center.

The artist's program will deal with wood sculpture construction, assembly and design. He uses a band saw as a tool for direct carving of wood as the participant observes the creation from the first to the final or near-final stages.

Earl attended the Ringling School of Art in Florida, the University of North Carolina, and received his B.F.A. in sculpture from Virginia Commonwealth University. His teaching experience includes elementary schools, Richard Bland College, the North Carolina School of Arts in Winston-Salem, and the Jewish Community Center in Richmond.

He has won numerous awards throughout Virginia, Florida, New York, North Carolina and South Carolina. In addition, one of Earl's fanciful airplane creations was selected for inclusion in the new Smithsonian Air Space Museum in Washington, D.C.

Earl's program will be held on the lawn of Bedford Art Building at Longwood College beginning at 3 p.m. The public is cordially invited to attend.

Venereal Disease: What You

No One Is Immune To V.D. For It Can Infect Anyone

Anyone can catch VD. Even the "Nice girl" down the street. No one is immune to VD and a person can be infected again and again.

Perhaps you can pick the victims. John, who's been in trouble with the law; Susie, known as promiscuous; Manuel, who is poor; Patty, who lives in a slum. Don't be too sure. It's just as likely that George, the quiet honor student may be affected; or Karen, who drank too much and went to bed with a blind date. Or Martha; faithful to her steady boyfriend, she is unaware that he is not faithful to her. Because there are no outward signs of VD (venereal disease) a person never finds out he has been infected until it's too late.

Today, the United States is in the middle of an epidemic of venereal disease. Gonorrhea, one of the venereal diseases, is the most frequently reported communicable diseases. Together with syphilis, gonorrhea's more widely publicized but much rarer cousin, they are outranked in incidence only by the common cold, and ranks as a major killer among communicable diseases. The number of cases of VD each year exceeds those of strep throat, scarlet fever, measles, mumps, hepatitis and tuberculosis combined.

Because of their mode of transportation, syphilis and gonorrhea are hush-hush diseases. No one will admit the "nice" boys and girls can and do develop VD. He doesn't mind telling you he has a cold or some other contagious disease, but VD is another matter because it's associated with sex. He keeps the fact that he may be carrying the disease to himself, avoiding treatment and infecting other people with whom he has sex.

After six years of "silent" epidemic, it now strikes an estimated one out of six women. If untreated, it can cause sterility, arthritis, insanity paralysis or blindness, even death. Yet many of its victims don't even know they're infected.

Today, the cure for all venereal diseases is quite simple. All that is required is a series of penicillin shots. These can be given at public health clinics or discretely by a doctor. If you think you may be infected get help immediately. The life you save may be your own.

If you're 15 to 25, chances are strong that you have VD.

If you're a girl, you might have it and not know it!

If you've had sexual contact, play safe: see your doctor (he'll be discreet).

You'll feel better if you know you don't have it.

If you go have VD treatment is fast, effective and painless.

Some Of The Special Problems That The Disease Syphilis Carries With It

Each venereal disease has its way of attacking the body, and each presents special problems of cure and control. Syphilis is caused by a corkscrew-shaped germ, or spirochete, called Treponema pallidum (Latin for "pale corkscrew"). It thrives in the moist environment of the mucous membranes lining the genital tract, rectum and mouth but expires quickly outside its human host. For this reason the disease is never transmitted by contaminated toilet seats. Inside the body, the syphilis spirochetes multiply rapidly and cause an insidious infection that is really two diseases in one.

The first sign of syphilitic infection, called "primary syphilis" is the appearance, ten to ninety days after exposure (three weeks on the average) of a chancre; a hard, painless, red-rimmed sore. It usually shows up wherever the germs first touch the mucus membrane — on the male's penis, at the edge of or inside the female's vagina. Although highly visible on the outside, the chancre gives little discomfort and can go unnoticed if it develops inside the vagina.

Because the chancre heals without treatment, an infected person may be lulled into a false feeling that all is well. But a second warning appears three to four weeks later. A measles-like, nonitching rash shows up, usually first on the trunk, then on the arms, palms of the hands or soles of the feet. About half the syphilis victims may also develop a low grade fever, sore throat, splitting headache, sore mouth or inflamed eyes, hair may fall out in patches. These symptoms may persist for only a few days, last for months, or recur within a year. This is known as the secondary stage.

The secondary stage may disappear after a matter of days or months. For years, the disease may remain latent, with no symptoms, and detectable only by a blood test. The syphilis victim may experience no further trouble. But in one in four cases, the disease will emerge in a particularly vicious fashion. The spirochetes may attack the brain, causing a form of insanity, the spinal cord, causing paralysis; the blood vessels causing heart attacks, and the optic nerve, causing blindness.

Syphilis can be transmitted only during the primary stage and after an incubation period of some ten to ninety days. The patient with latent syphilis is no longer infectious through sexual contact.

Most states require blood tests for syphilis for all couples who want to get married and for all pregnant women. Many large companies require routine blood tests before employment and some hospitals check patients for syphilis upon admission. The prenatal blood test is a means of protecting an unborn infant. Although syphilis cannot be inherited, an infected mother may transmit the disease to the embryo she is carrying in her uterus. Unless she is treated during pregnancy, her baby can die before birth, or be born with congenital syphilis, which can kill, blind or cripple.

Don't Know Can Hurt You

The Elusive Enemy Gonorrhea, Still Holds Many Mysteries

Compiled By Anne Carter Stephens

Self-Check Test: How Much Do You Know?

Despite the fact that gonorrhea (colloquially called "clap," "the whites" and "strain") was first recorded in medical annals as far back as 2637 B.C., and is presently the most common bacterial infection in adults, scientists have yet to unravel more than a few of the disease's mysteries.

They know it is caused by a microscopic organism so delicate that it can live for only a short time away from the warm, moist, nutritious environment inside the human body. Consequently, explains Dr. Brown, "It is not normally transmitted from person to person as are other germs—by food, drink, air, insects or inanimate objects." Generally, the organisms—called gonococci—depend upon intimate, particularly sexual, contact that allows them to find their way directly to any of the body's mucous membrane surfaces (such as the linings of the urinary canal, the vagina, the rectum, the eyelids or the throat).

"Under certain circumstances," explains William F. Schwartz, VD education chief for the CDC, "we also know that a person can become infected in other ways." For instance, a man conceivably could pick up the organism in the humid setting of a steam bath from a towel or mat recently contaminated by someone with an active case of gonorrhea. A mother whose teen-age son or daughter has the disease might unknowingly infect herself by picking up her child's contaminated underwear, then rubbing her eye with the same hand. Each year a number of newborns contract gonorrhea in their eyes as they pass through the birth canals of their infected mothers, and little girls occasionally get the disease by playing with douche syringes, towels or on bedding recently stained by infected parents.

Within half a week or so after exposure, he notices a discharge of pus from his penis and feels pain, which may be quite severe, when he urinates. A girl may note a painless watery yellowish discharge from the vagina, but such a symptom may be missed, or not even occur at all.

What is not known are many of the subtleties of how the gonococcus and the infection it causes behave inside the human body, particularly in females. This wide-gap in knowledge has given rise to much popular myth and false assumption.

For example:

Within three to eight days of the time a man contracts gonorrhea, specific, visible symptoms usually develop, and these can be readily treated and cured with penicillin or some other antibiotic.

Because this can be accomplished before complications can arise, men often dismiss the infection as "no worse than a common cold." Some doctors do too.

What they fail to understand is that in females, for reasons that are not entirely clear to researchers, the disease usually remains hidden. Explains Dr.

Don Printz, a gonorrhea expert with the CDC: "At least nine out of ten females who get gonorrhea are asymptomatic—without any symptoms—in the early stages of the disease. The typical woman victim feels perfectly healthy, and a doctor generally can see nothing upon examining her to indicate that she is, in fact, infected and that she can pass the infection on to other people. Indeed, even in cases where women come to doctors with symptomatic complaints such as vaginal discharge, the symptoms are usually caused by some simultaneous vaginal infection and not by the gonorrhea itself."

Without warnings from her own body, then an infected woman must usually rely on an infected man to inform her of her need for treatment—if he cares enough about her to do so and if he understands enough about gonorrhea to sense the urgency. Such is often not the case, however.

HOW THE MENACE MOVES

Generally, the disease explodes in either of two ways—or both. Its inflammation may spread upward from the cervix (the most common female site of infection), to nearby tissues and organs in the genitourinary tract and lower abdomen. (It may also spread initially from the throat or rectum.)

Or gonococci may invade the bloodstream and be carried to distant sites in the body where they spawn damaging satellite infections. "In either instance, women will react very individually," explains Dr. Printz. "Some will suffer excruciating pain and high fevers, others will not. Some will develop symptoms that suggest appendicitis or rheumatic fever. In some cases, a few days' bed rest may relieve any discomfort. But the infection continues, inflicting irreversible damage."

With terrible speed, the spread of gonorrhea into the lower abdomen can scar the ducts that carry the male sperm, inflame the Fallopian tubes, the glands around the genital tract, the uterus, the abdominal lining, the ovaries, the whole pelvic area. It may spread to the liver and produce symptoms similar to a gallbladder attack. Also the gonococci seem to pave the way for other potentially dangerous organisms, ordinarily living harmlessly in the genital tract, to become active and follow in as secondary invaders. "Tissue destruction can occur very early, within hours, before a woman can even seek treatment," explains Dr. Lucas.

Largely because of delays in therapy, an estimated two to three percent of infected women are made sterile and many more "relatively infertile" by permanent scar tissue building up and blocking their tubes as the therapy works to repair damage from the infection. Indeed, says Dr. Printz, "Gonorrhea is the single most common cause of sterility in women, and (in such cases) efforts to restore fertility by surgery and other means are almost certain to be unsuccessful."

1. If scar tissue from gonorrhea blocked the Fallopian tubes in a woman, or the seminal duct in a man, he or she would become

- A. Insane.
- B. Sterile.
- C. Arthritic.

2. If a man and a woman got syphilis at the same time, and neither was treated, which one would be infectious longer?

- A. The man.
- B. The woman.
- C. No difference.

3. When is syphilis most likely to cause serious damage to the body of the infected person?

- A. Before he is infectious.
- B. While he is infectious.
- C. After he is no longer infectious.

4. If you thought you had syphilis or gonorrhea, the smartest thing would be to

- A. Try to treat yourself.
- B. See a doctor as soon as possible and tell him what you suspect.
- C. Get a regular physical examination.

5. If a syphilitic chancre goes away by itself without treatment, the person

- A. Does not need treatment.
- B. Still needs treatment for syphilis.
- C. Usually develops gonorrhea later.

6. The most effective way to stop the spread of syphilis (if we could do it) would be to treat everyone

- A. Whose blood test showed positive.
- B. Who had intimate contact with an infectious person.
- C. Who developed a rash.

7. If you have gonorrhea, you

- A. Must have syphilis.
- B. Cannot have syphilis.
- C. May have syphilis.

8. Some people have had polio vaccine and are immune to polio

- A. And some are totally immune to syphilis but not to gonorrhea.
- B. And some are totally immune to gonorrhea but not to syphilis.
- C. But nobody is totally immune to either syphilis or gonorrhea.

9. If you catch syphilis once, you

- A. Can catch it again.
- B. Can never catch it from an infectious person again.
- C. Become immune to it for a long time.

10. If you have had syphilis for more than a year, you may have no outward signs

- A. But you will most certainly not feel at all well.
- B. And you may feel perfectly well.
- C. But there will always be sores hidden in the moist folds of your skin.

11. Early signs of syphilis

- A. Are always about the same in every infected person.
- B. Are often hidden but always painful.
- C. Are often hidden, painless, and difficult to detect.

12. The first sign of syphilis

- A. Cannot be missed because it is always large and painful.
- B. Always shows up in about the same place.
- C. May appear from ten to ninety days after the person is infected.

13. A woman who thinks she might have a venereal disease is more likely to avoid trouble from it if she asks a doctor for

- A. A general checkup.
- B. An examination of her reproductive organs.
- C. Tests for syphilis and gonorrhea.

14. Suppose a person thought he had syphilis. He goes to a doctor and is examined. The doctor can find nothing wrong with the person. There were no signs of syphilis. The blood test was negative. Which is correct?

- A. The person can be certain that he does not have syphilis.
- B. If the person had syphilis, he got over it without treatment.
- C. The person might have syphilis anyway.

15. Which is true?

- A. Syphilis is caused by germs, but gonorrhea is not.
- B. Syphilis and gonorrhea may be either injuries or diseases.
- C. Both syphilis and gonorrhea are caused by germs.

16. Venereal disease is transmitted mostly through

- A. Contaminated drinking water.
- B. Intimate skin-to-skin contact.
- C. Public toilets.

17. If a man becomes infected with syphilis and is not treated, his wife might be infected by him

- A. For only about three months after he was infected.
- B. As long as two years after he was infected.
- C. For only about six months after he was infected.

18. Most men begin to realize there is something wrong with them within which of the following time periods after they get gonorrhea?

- A. Three to eight days.
- B. One to three days.
- C. Twenty-four hours.

19. A woman with gonorrhea

- A. Usually realizes there is something wrong within a week.
- B. Usually does not realize there is anything the matter with her for a long time.
- C. Will develop a chancre wherever the germ first entered the body.

20. If male X had intimate contact with female Y, who had infectious syphilis, which is the surest way for X to get to a physician and be treated for syphilis?

- A. X gets a rash and fever and goes to the doctor about it.
- B. Syphilis begins to damage some of X's vital organs.
- C. Y is treated for syphilis and tells the physician that she had contact with X.

21. When gonorrhea germs invade the body

- A. A man may become sterile, but not a woman.
- B. A woman may become sterile, but not a man.
- C. Either a man or a woman may become sterile.

22. It is never too late to treat a case of syphilis

- A. And repair the damage it has done
- B. And prevent it from doing any damage
- C. But the damage it has done cannot be repaired.

23. People who have had recent sexual contact with a person who has infectious syphilis should be

- A. Treated
- B. Treated
- C. Treated

24. You can be vaccinated or get immunity shots for

- A. Syphilis but not for gonorrhea.
- B. Gonorrhea but not for syphilis.
- C. Neither syphilis nor gonorrhea.

25. If you have syphilis, you may not know what it is,

- A. But you will always know for sure by the way you feel that there is something wrong with you.
- B. Or even that there is anything wrong with you.
- C. But you would always know if you had learned its signs and symptoms.

26. The signs and symptoms of syphilis

- A. Are always painful in both women and men.
- B. Are often hidden and painless.
- C. Always include sore throat, rash, and fever.

27. The signs and symptoms of syphilis

- A. Often imitate those of other diseases.
- B. Cannot be mistaken for anything but syphilis.
- C. Are always the same and always appear on the sex organs.

28. The first sign of syphilis

- A. May appear almost anywhere on the body.
- B. Is always on or around the sex organs.
- C. Can always be seen in men but never in women.

29. Under certain conditions, VD may be passed from a person who has it to one who does not through

- A. Sexual contact, but not kissing or petting.
- B. Sexual contact, including kissing but not including petting.
- C. Any intimate skin-to-skin contact.

30. The symptoms of gonorrhea

- A. Are likely to be noticeable and painful in a man, but hidden and painless in a woman.
- B. Are likely to be noticeable and painful in either a woman or a man.
- C. Are likely to be noticeable and painful in a woman, but hidden and painless in a man.

Style Cutting
Hair Reconstruction

Form cutting and reconstruction of the hair are the "in thing" for the male and female. If you are tired of that limp, lifeless hair, reconstruction is for you. This is a process of rebuilding body and fullness in your hair without curl.

We are at your service from Tuesday morning until two o'clock Saturday afternoon.

Music Notes

Choir Officers

The new officers were elected to the choir council for the Longwood College Concert Choir. Diane Quinn was elected as secretary and Abby McChesney as the freshman representative. Hold-over members include Shelby Shelton, president; Theeres Tkach, vice-president; Janet Truitt, treasurer.

Cameraata Singers' Fall Concert

The 1976-77 edition of the Longwood College Cameraata Singers will feature a choir of mixed voices instead of the all-female singers as in the past. This year the group has been expanded from 12 women to a balanced male-female ensemble of 28 voices, and will again be under the direction of Dr. James McCray, chairman of the music department.

Their first concert is scheduled for September 23 at 8:00 p.m., and will be an evening devoted to the music of Classical Period. This late eighteenth century music includes Mozart, Haydn and Beethoven. The audience will move from room to room to view and hear the various performances and activities which range from vocal solos to dances of the period. The audience will participate in one work in that members of the audience will roll dice to determine what music is played and then members of the group will dance to that music. This type of activity was popular during the eighteenth century. European pastries will be served with Viennese coffee as part of the festivities.

In addition to a candlelight performance of the Missa brevis of Saint Joannis deDeo by Joseph Haydn, there will be a harpsichord solo by Dr. Paul Hesselink and opera scenes from Marriage of Figaro (Mozart) and Cosi van tutte (Mozart) staged and directed by Norma Williams.

Reservations are required and only 198 seats are available for this intimate evening. A tariff of $1.50 covers the concert and all refreshments. Make ticket reservations at the Public Relations office or telephone 392-9371.

Freshmen Recital

The Longwood College Department of Music chose five freshman music majors to perform in the freshman honors recital which was held on September 2 in the Molnar Recital Hall. Those chosen were Abby McChesney, soprano; Ann Blood, soprano; Bill McKaig, baritone; Mary Breeden, soprano; Gene Rowland, piano.

Visiting Artist

The music department proudly announces the first Visiting Artist Recital which will be presented by Kenneth Huber, Pianist, on Thursday, September 16, at 8:00 p.m. in the Molnar Recital Hall of the Wygal Music Building. This will be the second consecutive year that he has been invited to Longwood as a recitalist.

Huber has established himself as a major pianist in the Southeastern United States. His gifts as an interpreter of Classical and Romantic piano literature have won him praise from critics and audiences alike. He has concertized from Maine to Alaska as recitalist and soloist with orchestras since making his debut at the age of 14. His concert will feature the music of Scarlatti, Mozart, Chopin, and Schubert. There is no charge for this recital and the public and student body are cordially invited to attend.

As Team Members Prepare

By DIANNE HARWOOD

There seems to be an annual routine developing on the Longwood campus. Each new school year brings class schedules, untanned faces, late fall weather, and more noticeably, about forty-five young ladies who run up and down a crab-grass field trying to place a grossly small ball into an oversized cage. (We refer to these individuals as "field hockey players".) As the first two weeks pass, the sun gets hotter, the blisters get bigger, and the group gets smaller. For those who have survived the sun, the blisters, and the cuts have now earned a berth on the Longwood College Field Hockey team.

Over forty girls tried out for twenty-seven positions, twelve of the final twenty-seven are freshman. "The skill level of our first year players is extremely high," states coach Sally J. Custer. "With fifteen seasoned upperclassmen returning, plus the large freshman turnout, I'm highly optimistic and looking for a successful season."

Ms. Custer thinks that William and Mary and the University of Virginia will be the teams to beat this year. "Madison will be in there too, along with an improved ODU team," she says. "We will play the University of Kentucky Oktoberfest week end, which should also prove to be a well-matched game."

The Longwood squad opens its season on September 20th at Lynchburg College. With the sound of the first whistle, twenty-seven proud young ladies start a new conquest; a conquest that last near lead them to the national tournament and the title of the sixth best hockey teams in the nation. "We definitely have our sights on nationals," says Ms. Custer. "we want to change the bumper sticker from number six to number one."

New Sports Program Includes Men IIG

There is a new look in Sports at Longwood this year. For the first time there will be organized men's intercollegiate sports. This fall there will be a men's soccer team coached by Mr. Dick Williamson, was granted Intercollegiate Interest Group status by the I.A.C. at its September 8 meeting. At the time, there are eighteen men, ranging from freshmen to senior resident and commuting students, in the conditioning program.

Two games have been scheduled with Hampden Sydney. They will be on Oct. 14 and Oct. 18 at Hampden-Sydney. Hopefully other games can be scheduled with the Community College at Keysville, Lynchburg, and Ferrum Colleges.

Practices take place Monday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings from 6 to 8 p.m. at the soccer field near the campus school. Any other Longwood men interested in participating should contact Mr. Dick Williamson, Dept. of HPER at his office in Iler Gymnasium or call him at 392-9268.

The Men's Intercollegiate basketball team has been working on a conditioning program under the directorship of Dr. Allen McNamee. So far there are eleven candidates working out. This program began Sept. 6 and will end Sept. 17. Formal basketball practice will begin in French gym on Sept. 20. There is a ten game schedule with a season-ending tournament.

Volleyball Season Opens Sept. 23

The intercollegiate volleyball team has been having tryouts for the past week. Twenty-four new talents as well as eight experienced Longwood players have been working extremely hard to make this year's varsity and junior varsity teams. Each team will carry eight players. Both teams will also play a full schedule, including five home matches.

The season for J.V. begins at home, Thursday, September 23 at 6:00 with a match against Franklin County High School. The first varsity match is also at home against Eastern Mennonite on Thursday, October 7, at 6:30 in Iler Gym.

The coach Carolyn Price and manager Susan Bowman are expecting a really good year, and hope you will support our team throughout the season.

Tennis Team In Full Swing

By MARY BARRETT

The Longwood Women's Varsity Tennis Team is back on the courts for the fall season. This year a young, talented team will be battling opposing teams from around the state in intercollegiate competition.

The roster includes last year's returnees: Dee Donally, Frances Simmons, Gwen Koehlein, Mary Barrett, Angie Gerot and seniors, Lisa King and Clare Baxter. Four promising freshmen, Margie Quarles, Penny Stevens, Lisa Smith, and player-manager, Jill Bacchieri, will be a strong addition in their first year on the Longwood team.

Coach Phyllis Harriss is optimistic of a good season against some tough opposition. She expresses much confidence in her team's ability, stating, "I am looking forward to working with one of the best teams I've ever coached."

The candidates for the men's basketball team are:

Lester Crusie	Billy Rogers
Chris Bugg	Bennie Shaw
Rob Johnson	Roger Strong
D. J. Lindsey	Russ Tomlin
Mark Munoz	Bill Whitlock
	Bryan Welbaum

Wednesdays at 7:30 p.m. in the I.A.A. room in Lankford.

1976 Fall team intramurals include flag football, volleyball, and swimming. Information and entry blanks for dorm or sorority teams may be obtained outside of Ms. Carolyn Price's office. Any teams wishing to participate must submit an entry prior to the due date. Individual intramurals offered first semester include singles tennis, archery, ping pong and bowling. Information for these events will be posted on the I.A.A. bulletin board in the new smoker outside the dining hall. The current intramurals are flag football and tennis. Any questions concerning the intramurals or the Association may be referred to Carolyn Price, sponsor, Mabel Day, president, Terry Donohue, Vice President, Sue Nama, Secretary, Linda Baumler, treasurer on the dorm representative.

Lancers Plan Several Shows

By LORI MORGAN

The Longwood Lancers invite you to attend the club meetings every week in Tabb classroom. Please see the Daily Bulletin for the day and the time.

The Lancers have two Horse Shows planned for this school year, in the Fall and in the Spring. The club is for those people who are interested in horses. It is for people who are interested in pleasure riding and also for those who are interested in competitive riding.

The club advisor is Miss Sally Bush and the officers of the Longwood Lancers for 1976-1977 are:

Kathie Marth — President
Debbie Cross — Vice President
Sharon Arrington — Recording Secretary
Lori Morgan — Corresponding Secretary

We hope that you will make every effort to attend the meetings, and we look forward to seeing you there.

LC Golfers Seek To Regain State Title

Five students have been selected for the Fall 1976-77 Longwood College Golf Team. Included in the group are former members Gail Pollard, senior and Meg Baskerville, sophomore. New members of the team are freshmen Nan Patterson, Deanna Vanwey, and Becky Webb. The team is coached by Dr. Barbara Smith of the Department of Health, Physical Education, and Recreation.

The first Longwood College Golf Team was organized in 1964 by Dr. Smith and has a cumulative record of 36 wins, 3 ties, and 13 losses. The first state collegiate team championship was held in 1970 at the Longwood Golf Course. At that tournament Longwood won the state title which they held through 1971 and 1972.

The state championship this year will be held at Longwood on October 29, 30, 31. Dr. Smith said, "we are glad to be hosting the state tournament again and the members of the team are working very hard in an effort to regain the state title for Longwood." "Since the team may have an opportunity to participate in the National Collegiate Golf Championship in Hawaii next June if they qualify I feel that they will be working extra hard to have a successful season," Dr. Smith added with enthusiasm.

The entire college community is cordially invited to attend the matches.

Swap Shop Means Books, Scholarship

By KAREN SHELTON

Aiding the students by allowing them to buy books cheaper, and providing two scholarships are the primary purposes of the swap shop. The two scholarships are awarded each spring. One scholarship is academic; the other is based upon service. The amount of these scholarships is determined by the total amount of money earned during the first and second semesters by the swap shop. Scholarship recipients are chosen by a committee of swap shop workers. Need is also considered in deciding upon a recipient.

There was a high percentage of new books this semester, but the swap shop still made about $350. Any left over books became the property of the swap shop and will be sold next semester if they are still being used.

Mary Ann Gresham, swap shop chairman, said that she did not encounter any real problems. She said, "the first semester swap shop was mostly for experience; we hope the second semester one will be a little more organized."

Oriental Art To Be Sold

A special exhibition and sale of Original Oriental Art will be presented on Thursday, September 16, 1976, at Bedford Building, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Marson Ltd. of Baltimore, Maryland, specializes in exhibiting for sale a collection of Original Oriental Art, totaling approximately 500 pieces, from Japan, China, India, Tibet, Nepal and Thailand. The oldest prints date back to the 18th and 19th Century and include Chinese woodcuts, Indian miniature paintings and manuscripts and master works by such artists as Hiroshige, Kuniyoshi, and Kunisada. The modern pieces consist of a large group of original woodcuts, etchings, lithographs, serigraphs and mezzotints created by world renowned contemporaries. A representative will be present to answer questions about the work, artists and the various graphic techniques employed. Prints are shown in open portfolios in an informal atmosphere and you are invited to browse through this fascinating and well described collection. The price range is wide and there is a treasure to be found for most everyone's budget.

Baldrige Selected To Attend Workshop

Mark Baldrige, Assistant Professor of Art at Longwood College, was one of twenty metalsmiths across the country to be invited to attend a two-week workshop in electro-forming at Tyler School of Art, Temple University in Philadelphia. The workshop was made possible with a grant from the National Endowment of the Arts.

Mr. Baldrige was also invited to participate in a Bicentennial Crafts Exhibit at Indiana University through the month of August. He exhibited a sterling silver chess set and a set of silver champagne goblets.

Oct. 15-16 Appear To Be Great Days As Plans For Oktoberfest Are Made

By SANDY HAGA

Plans are under way for what promises to be a great Oktoberfest, scheduled for October 15 and 16.

The Reds have finished their script and the Greens are working on the second scene. Skits tryouts will be held September 20-22.

Mary Ann Gresham reported that one thing which will be new and different about Oktoberfest is the Freshman class.

Cam Oglesby stressed the fact that everyone is welcome and urged to participate in their Oktoberfest. Workers for the Reds and Greens feel that the skits are good and she is excited about the progress. As Cam Oglesby said, "We want to make it the best Oktoberfest."

In 1927 the carnival, now described as "...a real, sure enough Circus with side shows, freaks, animals, clowns, ring performances, circus food, trinkets, and continuous music (provided by the Hampden-Sydney orchestra)," was listed as main event on campus.

During the following years, a number of changes were made in the Circus format. In 1935, it was first held in October, and also in the '30's, Alpha Kappa Gamma, a national leadership fraternity on campus, assumed responsibility for its organization. Students were chosen for the honored positions of Ringmaster, animal trainer, and carnival chairman for their intellectual ability, leadership, and spirit.

In the late 1940's the Carnival began to have guiding themes, such as Mardi Gras, and "Gay Nineties," and was expanded to two days. The entire affair, with the exception of skits, was held outside, and a parade through Farmville was added to the list of activities. Usherettes were chosen from each class in 1950 to assist the Ringmaster and Barker in conducting the week end activities.

In 1966 a major revision was made in the annual festival. Member of Alpha Kappa Gamma, Dean Wilson, Dr. Frances Brown, and Dr. Carolyn Wells founded an honorary campus organization whose purpose it was to "recognize and encourage leadership, promote college loyalty, preserve ideals and traditions of the college, and to foster high ideals of service and scholarship." The newly formed organization was Geist, named after the German word for spirit and imagination. Geist assumed responsibility for the Circus Week end, which was now re-named "Geist Festival."

In 1968, Oktoberfest, a traditional German festival celebrated in October, was announced as the new theme.

Scenes like this were common at recent clown try-outs, which saw 21 Longwood students named as Oktoberfest klowns.

As printed in last week's Rotunda, the Student Activities Fees Committee has been appropriated $67,795. Each undergraduate student at Longwood College must pay $35 activity fee. $67,795 divided by $35 equals 1937 students. According to the Registrar's Office, there are 2127 students — 1922 dorm and 205 day students.

$74,445 — $67,795 = $6,650.

Tom Chapin Captivates Audience During Performance

By JO LEILI

Six-foot-five, slim, "fantastic!" and "just great; with flashing blue eyes and "the nicest teeth I've ever seen!" Tom Chapin literally captivated his audience on Thursday night, September 10th, for the first Student Union mini-concert of the fall '76 semester.

Performing before a crowd of about 300 students in the Gold Room of the Lankford Building, Chapin was introduced on stage at 8:00 p.m., where he remained following two standing ovations until 10:00. "I've done two Virginia concerts, so far, and tonight will be at least as good!" Tom stated, and with that greeting, began his concert with "Heard a rumor...moments in the sunlight, weekend in the rain, evenings in the country that will never come again."

Brother of the song writer, poet and singer Harry Chapin, Tom involved his listeners actively in chorus lines. "A concert is half me and half you. You can sit on your duff but sing too!", as he led in a strong, clear voice which noticeably lacked Harry's harsh, characteristic gruffness. A song such as "Traveling Man" lent to the audience the fast paced lyrics of "Travelin man, must be a travelin man, travelin fool, fastest feller in the land...ran so fast that he didn't get caught 'till the police shot him down!" or the quieter "it sure is hard when sorrow takes a bow."

Weaving as much pleasure as poetry into his presentation, Chapin and his folk guitar covered amusing anecdote songs, such as the one written "By a Harvard professor who went bad" about a suicide prone maid, and a song about unrequited teenage love "Ooo, Jenny, Jenny, somehow we'll make it through!" Tom's numerous professional experiences include the five year running T.V. show of "Make a wish, which was conceived for six to eleven year old speed freaks," and was filmed in New York City, London, Spain, Greece, and Philadelphia. In 1969, fresh out of college, Tom assisted in the making of "Blue water, White death," from which Peter Benchley got the inspiration for the best seller "Jaws." The theme song for this expedition was an 1890's ballad, as rendered by Chapin "A man eating shark will eat neither woman nor child."

With New York City as his rearing grounds, Tom was inspired musically by many of the sights. A note worthy one was How Come?

This editorial is intended to air several complaints about our surrounding environment. It offers no tangible suggestions — but rather asks the question "how come?"

College supposedly is attended by adults. How come Rotundas were found thrown on the floor of the New Smoker after one or more intelligent students ripped out coupons for a free meal? This newspaper is not planned and distributed each week in order to entertain the staff members. Its purpose is to present news, questions, and opportunities to the student body and not to be used as a carpeting for floors. It could be expected that kindergarteners might abuse something intended for their enjoyment — but not college students. Don't cry out to be treated as adults unless you are willing to act as adults and take on a little responsibility, respect, and initiative.

Students aren't the only ones who must answer the question how come. The concept was conceived last spring of redecorating the snack bar in order to give it an atmosphere conducive to coffeehouses, films, and simple relaxation. How come students returned to campus in the fall — not to see an improved snack bar, but rather to find railings on the wall in front of Curry, an outdoor basketball court, and new additions to South Cunningham? The snack bar is used by students and faculty and is a popular gathering place. Improvements to it could be enjoyed by everyone. Can the same be said of railings or of the court which is being used by local people while Longwood students practice in the convenient gym?

Furthermore, how come students must go through channel after channel in order to propose new changes, and then wait for it to be approved, but the administration can suggest, approve, and put into action ideas basically as they wish. A prime example is the work and convincing it took to lengthen open house hours. Students planned for over a semester and met time and time again with those having final approval before finally seeing it become a reality. On the other side of the standards was the almost overnight change of the hours of locking the dorms, and more recently the invention of color coded ID cards to ensure admittance of only Longwood students to events and meals. Organizations must keep itemized records of all expenditures and receipts, and all checking and savings accounts are annually submitted for audit. The same cannot be said for a certain discretionary fund of the administration. Does this idea bring to mind a form of double standard? It would seem logical that what is required of students should likewise be required of faculty and administration.

Until the time comes when the majority of students behave in ways becoming adults and the administration loosens their hold on final approval in all matters, the question of "how come" will continue. Let's begin to plan for the day when students and officials act on a one-to-one straightforward, totally open basis. Working together for one common cause — ever heard that expression before?

The Other View

Dear Editor:
In regard to the commentary written concerning the dining hall last week, we, an interested few, would like to clarify some misinterpreted views.
The males on campus are not the reason that the dining system changed. The present system evolved from a number of complaints about table closings and the inability for some students to remember meal schedules.

To our knowledge, no group of five persons has been separated. We try our best to keep the lines flowing smoothly, but there are a few (quite a few) students who have not progressed to the stage where they can eat without their roommate or special friend sitting with them. The hostesses have not been alerted to any special cases concerning young ladies who have some overt fear to eating with new people or for some strange reason cannot eat without their "special" friend(s). To remedy this situation, please come in with a group of five to insure a table together. If you do not have four friends and you cannot be separated from your special buddy, have your doctor send a written note to the dining hall staff to alleviate any difficulties.

According to the article, waitresses and hostesses have lost their friendliness. If this appears so, please bear in mind that we do make the rules, but we are responsible for enforcing them. We do not like being compared to the Gestapo, nor do we try to employ their methods. Complaints regarding the new dining hall system should be taken up with those in the administration who established the rules.

All students should remember that they are responsible for bringing their own I.D.'s to all meals. These I.D.'s are for the protection against non-students or day students eating meals literally free. The lines would move much quicker if each student had his or her I.D. ready so the hostess can see it clearly. It's no thrill to sit and look at more than 1000 mug shots, so don't add to her job by trading I.D.'s with your best buddy. Just because she's a sorority sister or a so-called party-er does not mean you have to risk your name and reputation to get her admitted to a meal. Remember this act constitutes falsification of records and is an Honor Code offense. This rule is supposed to be effective against the entire student body, with immunity granted to no one.

All waitresses have been informed of the rules of the dining hall and are also compelled to abide by them. We are students too, with the extra burden of working. We have resigned ourselves to the fact that we have to work and so we try to make the best of it. But, we are only human, with the failings characteristic of all humans. If for some reason we do not appear sunshiny and bright—reflect back on your day of classes and see how much you'd smile. We'll try to abide with you during this period of transition, if you promise to try to do the same with us.

P.S. We'd especially like to thank the males on campus for their co-operation in the dining hall. On the whole they've given us far less trouble than the so-called Longwood Ladies.

Does The Administration Or The Students Have The Decision-Making Role At Longwood

By CINDY CUMMINS

At a time when public political emotions are peaking because of the up-coming elections, the Rotunda thought it might do a little political research of its own — Longwood politics, that is. Recently, students were asked their opinion to this question: "How strong a role do you feel that the administration should play in the decision-making process here at Longwood — especially in regard to student organizations?" These were some of the responses we got:

Jan Bates, Freshman said... "It's hard to say...I think that in matters concerning the Student Government, majority rule should be the main requisite for decision-making in most matters. I do feel that the administration should present its opinion but the final decision belongs to the students."

Janet Hutchinson, Sophomore said... "I think that the students should be able to make up policies contemporary with the times...there should be no final veto by the administration if the student body is in favor of it."

Carol Benstein, Freshman... "I think the system that we have now is probably the best that we could have while still maintaining control...everyone has a different opinion about how things should be run...I like the check and balance system that seems to take place among the various organizations. I feel that the administration should have the right to say no to student wishes as long as logical reasons are given to the students."

Dave Gates, Freshman... "I think the administrative role in the student-policy-making is important and that they should have veto power as a means of setting guidelines and keeping procedures on a reasonable course. I think they should have final say in the decision-making process."

We also talked with several students working directly with various student organizations.

Ruth Bourne, Chairman of the Judicial Board said... "I feel that the administration plays a vital role in the functioning of the Judicial Board. Their advice and logical guidance in matters is very important in the proper functioning of the board." She went on to say that she has often found that the administration is more experienced in many matters and therefore aids the Board in making wiser decisions. Along with this, Ruth did express the opinion that she feels the students should be consulted more concerning decisions made. As an example, she cited certain revisions that the Judicial Board drew up for this year's handbook and said that unknown to her, until the book came out, things had been added and other deleted. She feels that this lack of communication is often due to the fact that the administration is so busy. She saw a need for more communication in other student-administration relations.

Roxann Fox, Chairman of the Student Union said... "I feel that the administration should work more closely with the students on all matters concerning policy making. The students should have greater input and be made more aware of specific actions rather than the general information they often receive."

Carol Lewis, Vice-Chairman of the Residence Board... "I think that the administration has a lot of good intentions and that they try...but...I think that the students are too often intimidated by the administration in the decision-making process. If things are going to be vetoed, there should be an explanation given to the student body as a whole. In any matter concerning student life-style the administration's role should be solely advisory. I also feel that students should have the right to override a veto by the administration. Students are given a lot of responsibility but not enough authority to carry through."

George Bennett, Freshman... "I feel that the administration should have a part in the decision-making process but not an extremely dominate one. There should be a faculty advisor on each organization who will advise only...there should be veto power but it should be able to be overridden."

While it seems that student-administrative relations are active it also seems that some think there is room for improvement. As one person put it... "everyone has a different opinion about how things should be run"...but as long as those varied opinions are voiced and heard we can be sure that our democratic process is still alive and working. It is dissent that precedes change and change often that brings growth. If you'd like to voice an opinion on the matter, The Rotunda would like to hear from you.

Several Proposals Passed At Legislative Board Meeting

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS

Susann Smith called the Legislative Board meeting to order at 7:00, September 13, in French Parlor. First priority was given to Committee Reports and Recommendations. Emily Burgwyn, vice-chairman of Legislative Board, stated that most of Legislative Board's committees are not effective. "There is no cooperation between committees, between the administration, between us." There is no communication between the boards and the committees. Her recommendation was to re-evaluate the standing committees of Legislative Board through the Ad Hoc Committee designed to study By-Laws for the constitution as well. Beth Rafferty was approved to replace Beth Hatch on the Ad Hoc committee. A report of this re-evaluation will be forthcoming in the next two weeks.

Two important questions were voted on at the meeting. A motion was made to give the Legislative Board the choice of voting on ballots when there is an important and-or controversial decision to be made. A majority of the representatives must vote to use ballots instead of show-of-hands to make this choice valid. This motion was passed unanimously and will serve to prevent the members of Legislative Board from being influenced in their voting by faculty, administration, or other members of the board. This will better insure representation of the student body's interests on important issues.

Another motion was proposed in which each delegate's vote on each issue would be printed in The Rotunda. This motion was also passed unanimously. From now on all of the students will be able to see if their views are being accurately represented and acted upon by their chosen delegate to Legislative Board.

The final order of business was the passage of a proposal to elect the editor of the Student Handbook within the first weeks of the fall semester, beginning this year, instead of waiting until the spring semester as has been done in the past. This action will result in more involvement and input into the Student Handbook on the part of the student editor. Following this the meeting was adjourned.

The September 27 meeting of Legislative Board will be held in Wheeler Parlor. If you have any concerns, or if you would like to become involved in your student government, the Legislative Board members urge you to come and take part in the meetings.

female in nature and 3 years his senior, whom "I never had enough balls to go up and talk to!" evoked visions of "Blue eyes and a wanting mouth, like a north wind that's traveling south". Further northern images included a New Jersey Turnpike number "Sugar Bush", during which the audience provided the percussion with keys, hands, shoes, and bottles, while singing "Oh, what a day!"

Tom's first ovation number consisted of a Harry Chapin tune "Circle" which customarily closes a concert performed by either Tom or Harry, nicely summing the magical, thoughtful feelings with which he leaves his audience... "All my life's a circle, sunrise and sundown, moon rolls through the nighttime, 'till the daybreak comes around. All my life's a circle, and I can't tell you why! Seasons spinning round again, the years keep rolling by!"

Various Questions Discussed At Luncheon For Male Students

By THOMAS HAWKE

The "lunch" consisting of beef pot pie (?) and melted Dreamscapes was served as the thoughts of roughly 70 males continued to keep saying, "Looks can be deceiving", and the first luncheon to discuss problems such as the "bathing cap" and "shirt" issues along with ideas on how to bring the male into the social circle of Longwood College began.

The males were quick to respond to the question, "any questions", and the business of the luncheon got started with a slight thud.

The "bathing cap" rule states that all males having hair a certain length are required to wear a bathing cap in the swimming pool. Round one went to the administration as they could justify their reason of "hair clogs up the pool" better than the opposition's loss of pride.

The second question raised was "Do guys still have to wear shirts everywhere outside their dorm?" It was decided that shirts were only required on the tennis courts, golf course and all school functions. (Dining hall, in the Rotunda, classes, etc.)

The minutes ticked by and the subject was changed to male sports. With the soccer team spear headed by Bill Breeden and Henry Hoover Bear III well established and the basketball team given second life, the fall activities seemed to be off on their way to becoming permanent.

Spring sports were "talked about" and both the males and the administration came to the conclusion that a general interest would be required before any sport could be started.

As the luncheon continued and turned toward slight repetition, questions and discussion tended to become table oriented which I found in my case to be very beneficial.

The idea of starting a possible fraternity evolved with the lone set back of, "All you have to do is express your interest", which various males have now decided to do, and I wouldn't doubt that by the second semester, rush for the first Longwood fraternity may be under way.

Actually, if the male considered, there are many activities that he is excluded from on campus because he is a male. But he should also consider that because this is the first year for male residents, he can't expect to fall into a tennis and golf team or have a choice of six fraternities. However, he has virtually unlimited activities he could start with the proper amount of interest, where I'm sure the administration would be more than happy to accommodate.

What happens when a community of suburban husbands become unhappy with their wives? The answer is to turn them all into sexy robots...and the result is "The Stepford Wives." The highly suspenseful story by Ira Levin, author of Rosemary's Baby, is quickly complicated by two newcomers (played by Katherine Ross and Paula Prentiss). They endanger their own lives as they try to uncover the mystery behind the housewives' seeming lack of individuality.

"The Stepford Wives" will play in Jeffers Auditorium at 7:30 p. m. on September 23, 24 and 25. Admission is 75c.

Abortion: What, When,

An Introduction-

Statistics And A Little History

According to most recent public estimates, 1.6 million American women terminate their pregnancies each year — considered in a closer context, this means that almost 5,000 legal abortions are performed each day in the United States alone.

At no time in the history of mankind has medical technology reached its current high point of expertise, knowledge, facilities, and research. With man's increased ability to protect and prolong life, however, has also come the knowledge and means of reliable termination of life, and the possibility of life — this, in its most controversial context, is abortion.

While abortion has been practiced in cases where pregnancy resulted from rape, incest, or when a mother's life or mental health was endangered for almost as long as has been technically — though not always medically — possible; it is only within the past two and one half years that legal, medically safe, and substantially less expensive abortions have been available to the general public in the United States for any vast number of reasons.

Prior to the 1973 Supreme Court overthrow of state abortion statutes, approximately one million illegal abortions were performed each year. Yet, a decade ago, only 8,000 legal abortions were performed each year as compared to the current, previously cited figure of 1.6 million per year.

History of Abortion Laws and Practices

The anti-abortionists sometimes argue that abortion violates an age-old natural law. But for centuries abortion in the early stages of pregnancy was widely tolerated. In many societies in Europe and later in America it was used as one of the only dependable methods of fertility control. Even the Catholic Church took the conveniently loose view that the fetus became animated by the rational soul, and abortion therefore became a serious crime at forty days after conception for a boy and eighty days for a girl. (Methods of sex determination were not specified.) English and American common law, dating back to the thirteenth century, shows a fairly tolerant acceptance of abortion up until quickening, the moment sometime in the fifth month when the woman first feels the fetus move.

Most of the laws making abortion a crime were not passed until the nineteenth century. In 1869 Pope Pius IX declared that all abortion was murder. By the 1860's, in this country, new legislation outlawed all abortions except those "necessary to save the life of the woman."

There were reasons why abortion suddenly became a "crime." The first was quite legitimate; abortion was a dangerous operation — methods crude, antiseptics scarce, the mortality rate high. It was in part the mid-nineteenth century wave of humanitarianism that brought in abortion laws to protect women. Secondly, it was during this time that medical care for women passed out of the hands of midwives, who had almost certainly performed abortions as part of their services, into the realm of male doctors, who did not necessarily respect a woman's right to end a pregnancy. Thirdly, new understanding of the biology of conception and pregnancy made it clear that the fetus is alive before its movements can be felt, so an abortion before quickening became for some a more serious matter. Fourth, just at a time when women's increasing understanding of conception was helping them to avoid pregnancy, certain governments and religious groups desired population growth to fill growing industries and new farmable territories. Abortion laws saw to it that women took their place alongside the other machines of a developing economy. Last and perhaps most insidious, a highly moralistic group obsessed with banning "sex for pleasure" struck up a campaign against both abortion and birth control. Sex was for marriage and marriage was for making babies. Sex outside marriage was immoral; pleasurable sex inside marriage was somewhat immoral; and unwanted pregnancy was the punishment for such indulgence.

History has shown that women will seek abortion whether it is legal or not, and the new laws made increasing numbers of women have to get abortions illegally. There was a high rate of complication, infertility and even death among women who desperately tried to abort themselves, or who were forced underground for dangerous illegal operations. There were illegal profits to back-street abortionists, who charged high prices for non-medical procedures done in unsanitary conditions. There was blatant discrimination against poor women, who had to risk back-street abortions while their wealthier sisters could often find and pay a cooperative doctor. And those unable to end their unwanted pregnancies too often found their lives, and those of the children born, twisted by the hardships involved.

In the mid-1960s some angry and concerned women and men began to organize to try to change the existing abortion laws. In 1970 New York State passed not a mere "reform" but a "near repeal" abortion statute, allowing abortion up through 24 weeks from the last menstrual period, if it was done in a medical facility by a doctor.

Then in January 1973 the U. S. Supreme Court made its decision affirming that the "right of privacy" . . . founded in the 14th Amendment's concept of personal liberty . . . is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." The Court held that through the first trimester (12 weeks) of pregnancy, the decision to have an abortion may be made solely by the pregnant woman and her doctor. Following approximately the end of the first trimester, a state's power to regulate abortion is limited to the establishment of rules governing where and by whom an abortion may be performed. "It is only when the fetus has reached a point of viability (from 24 to 28 weeks of gestation) that the state may go so far as to prescribe abortion. . . except when it is necessary to preserve the life or health of the mother."

The Legal Implications of Abortion: The Laws As They Now Stand

1. Abortion is a decision that rests solely between a woman and her physician until approximately the end of the first twelve weeks of pregnancy.
2. During the following twelve weeks, "the State, in promoting its interest" in the woman's health, may — if it so chooses — impose regulations on the abortion procedures in ways that will safeguard her health.
3. After this period, "the State, in promoting its interest in the potentiality of human life, may, if it chooses, regulate" and prohibit abortion, except when it is necessary to preserve the mother's life or health.

WHERE TO CALL

Are there any reliable short-cuts?

There are a couple.

One is to call a source of medical care you've used before — a doctor, a hospital, a community health center, or a birth control clinic that you know, like and feel generally comfortable about. At the very least, any of them should be able to offer you the test-plus-exam confirming pregnancy. It may turn out they can also provide the rest of the services necessary at a price you're happy with. If so, fine. If they can't, they should be able to advise you how to proceed from that point on.

Another way is to call Planned Parenthood — either their FAMILY PLANNING INFORMATION SERVICE (677-3040), which is for anyone, or FACTS BY PHONE (677-3320), which is specifically for callers under 18.

Both refer, not just to Planned Parenthood centers, but to other state-licensed clinics and hospitals, whichever you prefer and/or need. Or if you want to be a doctor's private patient, they'll give you the names of qualified specialists. They can also answer questions and help with special situations, financial or otherwise. There's no charge — referral is something you should never have to pay for.

Interviews And Implications- Why They Chose Abortion

"I love Gary, and we're going to be married, probably next year. But when I got pregnant the fall of my junior year (in college - 1973), it was like the whole world crashed in. It would have killed my parents if they knew we were sleeping together, let alone that I was pregnant. We probably both would have had to drop out of school. There wasn't anything I could do then. The whole thing (experience of pregnancy) nearly ruined the entire year for me. We almost broke up."

A 1975 college graduate who also had an abortion in 1973 noted similar reasons for choosing abortion. "I'd been on the Pill for a year, and had just gotten off. We got drunk one night, and that was it. John's a year younger. He was all ready to get married, but I just couldn't let him do that either. My parents would've understood, I think, but it would've really been a disappointment to them. I think they know we practically live together, but I think they also think we've got sense enough to be careful. We are, now."

Interviews and the attitudes of survey respondents seem to point out that young women who have abortions are usually engaged in a close relationship with only one male, and are quite often planning on marrying him following graduation from college. The exceptions are the occasional, promiscuous female, or the individual who finds herself pregnant while in her early teens.

WHEN YOU CALL FOR AN ABORTION APPOINTMENT

Be prepared to ask:

- ☐ What's the complete cost and what does it cover?
- ☐ The abortion itself, including the services of the doctor who does it (and the anesthetist, if needed)
- ☐ Pregnancy confirmation, including urine test and internal exam
- ☐ All laboratory tests, including urinalysis, blood tests for anemia and RH factor, and blood typing
- ☐ Counseling services
- ☐ Anesthetic Local? General?
- ☐ All drugs and medicines, including Rhogam, if needed
- ☐ Birth control, including counseling, prescription, and supplies (or insertion, if you want an IUD)
- ☐ Post-abortion checkup
- ☐ How is payment handled?
- ☐ What insurance coverage is accepted?
- ☐ Do you have to pay in advance?
- ☐ Can you pay in installments?
- ☐ What's the policy on consent?
- ☐ How long will you have to stay at the clinic or hospital?
- And if you're calling a free-standing clinic...
- ☐ Is it state-licensed?
- ☐ What happens if emergency hospitalization is necessary?
- ☐ Is there a 24-hour phone number?

Be prepared to tell:

- ☐ Your LMP date—when your last period started.
- ☐ Your age and health history—past or present illnesses, allergies, any other special conditions.
- ☐ If you have health insurance coverage—Medicaid, Blue Cross—Blue Shield, or any other.

Comparative Statistics for the Different Abortion Methods

1. Incidence		July 1972- June 1973
July 1970- June 1971		New York City*
55.7%	suction	77.4%
28.7%	D & C	10.9%
14.7%	saline	10.8%
0.9%	hysterotomy	0.2%

As time goes by and information about abortion gets around, more and more women are able to have abortions in the first 12 weeks, when they are safer.

2. Mortality (deaths related to each procedure)

September 1974 survey, 17 states reporting overall:

3.2 deaths per 100,000 legal abortions. By method:
1.7/100,000 suction
13.2/100,000 amniotic fluid exchange
66.0/100,000 hysterotomy

Early abortion is safer!!! These mortality rates compare well to the 14 deaths per 100,000 live births for women going through pregnancy and childbirth in 1973.†

3. Complications (including excessive bleeding, infection, perforated uterus and retained tissue, as well as minor complications)§

	EARLY ABORTION	SUCTION	D & C	SALINE
4- 6 weeks	1.3%
7- 8 weeks		3.9%	5.1%
9-10 weeks		8.1%	6.8%
11-12 weeks		9.6%	6.2%
12-14 weeks		25.4%	13.0%
14 weeks				29.5%
19-20 weeks				21.0%

The General Abortion Process- A Brief Overview

The counselor should also be familiar with the general abortion process. It is for this reason that the following summary has been compiled.

Medical Preliminaries: Prior to the abortion the woman's doctor will want her medical history. He will inquire as to how many previous pregnancies the woman has experienced. He will also need to know if the abortion candidate has a history of asthma, TB, heart disease, acute kidney disease, epilepsy, or bleeding or clotting problems. The physician will normally check blood type as well.

Anesthesia: Vacuum (suction) aspiration abortions can be performed under either local or general anesthetic. The local anesthetic (or paracervical block) is normally an injection of xylocaine or novocaine on either side of the cervix. Local anesthesia is generally considered to be both safer and cheaper than a general anesthetic. General anesthetics tend to require a longer recovery time.

Complication: Instances of complications are very rare and generally less than 4 women in 1000 experience complications, (Boston Womens Health Club Collective, Our Bodies, Our Selves, p. 146). Hemorrhage can be caused by a laceration of the wall of the uterus by the dilator or curette. This is characterized by a heavy flow of blood accompanied by heavy clotting.

Most normal abortions produce slight spotting however and the two should not be confused. The heavy blood flow can be indicative that not all fetal tissue has been removed or that the uterus has not contracted to normal size. Infection can occur if unsterilized instruments have been used or if the woman's resistance is low so that any infection present before the abortion can spread. The woman should not use feminine hygiene products or have intercourse too soon after the abortion as this may lead to infection as well. Nausea, vomiting, heavy cramping, and temperature are all symptoms of possible infection. Incomplete abortion results when all fetal material has not been removed. This usually requires that the abortion be completed by D&C. An odor or discharge, cramping, vomiting, nausea, or hemorrhaging are all danger signs.

Aftercare: A woman can normally resume normal activity within a few hours of the V-S. However, she should be on the lookout for danger signs listed above. Further physicians will normally recommend that she abstain from douching, tub baths, tampons, or intercourse for four weeks. Most doctors prescribe an antibiotic such as tetracycline or ergotrate. Normally if an antibiotic is prescribed it is recommended that alcoholic drinks be refrained from for 10 days.

Techniques Of Abortion- How It Is Done And When

Vacuum . . . Suction: The suction method has become the most commonly used medical technique for the termination of pregnancy. The procedure involves the dilation of the cervix by passing a series of plastic or metal dilators (each larger than the other) into the cervix. Once the cervix is dilated, a sterile tube attached to a vacuum aspirator is inserted into the uterus. The aspirator sucks up the fetal tissue from the uterine wall. The fragments are thus drawn out and down a tube by means of the vacuum pump. This process normally takes about 5 to 7 minutes. The uterus may experience some cramping, but the procedure is virtually painless. This technique is permissible up until the 12th week of pregnancy. The V-S technique is easier and faster to perform than the D&C procedure and causes the patient less trauma.

Dilation and Curettage; (D&C) Although the V-S method is now more frequently used, some physicians have been practicing the D&C for years and continue to use this procedure. This procedure involves the dilation of the cervix and the scraping of the patient's womb with a curette. Dilators are used to expand the cervix. The size of the dilators range from 2 mm. At the 10th week the dilator is 12 mm. and at 12 weeks the dilator is 14 mm. The curette, which is a small metal loop on the end of a thin long handle, is used by the physician to gently scrape the internal wall of the uterus. The fetal tissue is removed with forceps. During this procedure the patient is totally anesthetized. The patient must recuperate from six hours to two days during which time there may be some bleeding. This procedure can be used up until the 12th week of pregnancy. Care must be taken not to perforate the uterine wall during the abortion, which is usually done in a hospital.

Saline Injection: in this procedure a local anesthetic is applied to the abdomen; then a long needle is passed through the abdominal wall which withdraws an amount of amniotic fluid. The amniotic fluid is replaced with an equal amount of concentrated salt solution. Patients normally do not react unfavorably to this injection but some women experience heat, cramps, or a burning sensation in the pelvic region. If this occurs the woman's head is elevated and she is given some water to drink. Once the symptoms have subsided the procedure is continued. Sometimes minute quantities of salt enter the abdominal cavity which may cause cramping or nausea. This is treated easily and there are no long term effects of this discomfort. Contractions will begin several hours after this process. These contractions are as strong as those experienced during full term pregnancy. General anesthetics are not used but sleeping pills or demerol may be used. After 8 to 15 hours of labor the fetus is expelled. This experience can be painful and emotionally harrowing and it is essential to provide counseling for those women having this method of abortion. This procedure is used in pregnancies that have gone for 16 weeks or longer.

Hysterotomy: This procedure may be used after 20 weeks of pregnancy. The fetus is removed through a small abdominal incision near the pubic bone. This is considered surgery. Several days of hospitalization are required and this can be terribly expensive. It is very common for women to require caesarian births after having this type of abortion.

Survey Results

A survey was made recently of 90 college females concerning abortion and their feelings about it. Below are General Implications Drawn from Total Survey Results.

1. There is no apparent significance between religious preference and the individual likelihood of engaging in premarital sexual intercourse.

2. There is apparently no significant relationship between marijuana usage and premarital intercourse; roughly two thirds of all non-virgins had used marijuana, while almost one half of all virgins had. There is, however, a tendency on the part of non-virgin marijuana users to experiment with stronger drugs.

3. While ages of first intercourse ranged from 13 to 19, the mean age for all non-virgin was 18.

4. The great majority of survey subjects are familiar with almost all forms of birth control; the Pill ranks as the foremost choice as a birth control method among two thirds of all subjects.

5. Virgins are more likely than non-virgins to turn to parents for information about sex; however, all subjects indicated they would consult reading materials and friends for information first, while doctors and health-phys ed. teachers followed closely behind parents as "sex information consultants." Non-virgins are four times as likely to consult a doctor for birth control information as are virgins.

6. Half of all non-virgins report a tendency to engage in sexual intercourse with no birth control, while two thirds of all virgins say they would never do so without using any birth control method.

7. Approximately three-fourths of all non-virgins, and exactly one half of all virgins worry about the possibility that they might become pregnant while not married.

8. Two thirds of all subjects became aware of abortion in junior high school; most learned about it through a health-p.e. class, although the introductory sources were varied.

9. Over two-thirds of all survey subjects know at least one individual who had an abortion, although non-virgins are slightly more likely. Of all subjects concerned, the mean ages for both the subject and the individual at the time of the abortion was 18. One of every 18 subjects has had an abortion.

10. The majority of subjects indicated that they were aware of, would make personal use of, and considered abortion counseling services useful, desirable, or necessary for the general public. However, the majority of subjects also felt that the variety of counseling services outside of those concerned with abortion are not generally known to be available.

11. Only two subjects felt that abortion was never justifiable under any circumstances; slightly over one third felt that it was justifiable under any circumstances.

12. Over two-thirds of all subjects regarded individuals who had had abortions as "no different from anyone else"; however, virgins were more prone to feel that those who have had an abortion were careless.

13. Both virgins and non-virgins favored three of seven possible answers to the question "If I became pregnant and was not married, I would . . ." They were: consideration of having the child, and basis of a decision after talking to the child's father, and the subject's parents.

14. Subjects who indicated that they knew at least one individual who had had an abortion noted in over half of their responses that pregnancy resulted from a lack of use of birth control.

15. The majority of subjects felt that their attitude towards abortion has been greatly affected by friends.

16. Slightly over half of the subjects felt that availability of information concerning abortion and birth control was adequate.

17. With the exception of only six individuals, subjects felt that individuals who have had or are considering having abortions need at least some professional counseling.

Kenneth Huber Enthusiastically Greeted At Piano Performance

By Margaret Hammersley

Thursday evening, September 16, the Longwood College Music Department was both proud and pleased to initiate the Visiting Artist Series with the performance of pianist Kenneth Huber. Thursday's recital marked Mr. Huber's second appearance at Longwood, and he was received with great enthusiasm.

With no introduction needed, Mr. Huber began his program with three pieces by Scarlatti: Sonata in C Major, L. 104; Pastorale in E Minor, L. 413; and Capriccio in E Major, L. 375. The intense expression with which the pieces were performed captivated his audience. The Scarlatti selections were followed by a Mozart selection, Rondo in A Minor, K. 511, and three Chopin pieces. The ardor and sensitivity with which Mr. Huber played Chopin's Nocturne in C Sharp Minor, Op. 27, No. 1; Nocturne in D Flat Major, Op. 27, No. 2; and Barcarolle, Op. 60 penetrated throughout the audience.

Mr. Huber's passion for, and absorption with his music was overwhelmingly evident with his performance of Schubert's Fantasy in C Major, Op. 15. Scanning the audience for their expression and response, it was apparent they were very excited with the dynamic opening phrase of Schubert. The audience so remained enraptured through the entire selection, applauding Mr. Huber with immense fervor. The Schubert selection was certainly the most enthusiastically received selection of the evening.

Following the recital was an informal reception in which Mr. Huber warmly greeted his audience.

Thursday afternoon, several hours prior to the recital, Mr. Huber, casually attired and practicing in the hall, granted The Rotunda an interview. Composed and very much at ease, Mr. Huber talked of himself and of music, naturally. Kenneth Huber, at age fourteen made his musical debut with a solo recital while studying under teacher Shirley Shaffer in Colorado Springs, Colorado.

Perhaps the busiest and most ambitious time in his life was the four years with the United States Navy Band, in Washington, D. C. In 1968 before his enlistment, he wondered if the Navy would have a position for a performer such as himself. He commented, "Friends thought I was crazy," however, after an audition, the Navy Band Services wanted him. Mr. Huber explained that the Navy Bands grew considerably at that time period, for there were other talents such as Mr. Huber, who enlisted in the military with such intents.

Those four years were extremely busy. While living in Washington, D. C., he traveled extensively with the band. Simultaneously, he was performing solo recitals and teaching private lessons. Once a week Mr. Huber went to Baltimore for his own lessons under Leon Fleisher. For a period of one semester, he flew almost every week end to Indiana to complete his Masters Degree at Indiana University. Mr. Huber commented, "It took a lot of energy."

Mr. Huber has played throughout the country with various orchestras, as well as a soloist. Currently he is a Professor of Piano at Virginia Intermont College.

When asked about his selection of repertoire, Mr. Huber admitted that he does not always concentrate upon classical and romantic pieces. For Thursday's program he had originally planned American works to complement the American Bicentennial, yet with further reflection decided that the audience would probably have already been "Americanized to death," and so remained with the program of Scarlatti, Mozart, Chopin and Schubert. Mr. Huber commented that he chose such a program because it was "extremely challenging to me artistically." He had not previously opened a recital with Scarlatti, so decided that it was time to do so. He has played Scarlatti for some time, and enjoys it.

Musically, the Chopin pieces complement one another. Mr. Huber explained that the openings and closings of the two nocturnes and Barcarolle, "seem to fit together. . . That's the way my mind works." Sitting at the piano to demonstrate what he had said, he played a bit of the three pieces, and then simply added, "Barcarolle is one of my favorite pieces."

Mr. Huber explained that Schubert's Fantasy in C Major, Op. 15 was "a piece way ahead of its time." He found it to be "technically difficult," as well as musically "challenging." He had recently learned the Schubert composition over the past summer. He enjoys a composition which presents a challenge, and enjoys "giving it shape."

The Mozart selection, Rondo in A Minor, K. 511, was chosen for performance because "it is gem of classical music."

Mr. Huber also talked about modern music for piano. When asked if he played any contemporary pieces, he answered, "Yes, but not in front of audiences." He was also asked if he composed himself; his answer was simply, "No." He commented that he thinks musically, but it is not as though he sits at the breakfast table and has tunes pop into his head. Rather than composing himself, he "recreates" others' music.

Upon asking Mr. Huber about his reception at the college, he admitted to have been received very warmly, and was quite pleased with such a reception. He was delighted that the faculty and the department of music were so cordial and gracious. Speaking of the recital hall, he complimented the Molnar Hall very highly, commenting that "It is a wonderful place to play. . . a beautiful hall. . . the acoustics are great."

Mr. Huber confessed that his initial reception "makes a difference" to him and to his performance. He added in closing, "Everyone here is very friendly; you want to play for them."

As Mr. Huber was enthusiastic about playing at Longwood, Longwood was equally as enthusiastic about his performance, and will welcome him back at any time.

Music Majors Travel To Sing

Several Longwood Music majors have sung on two separate occasions for citizens in Buckingham County. On September 4th, Janet Tuitt, Theresa Tkach, Hank Dahlman, Laura York, Richard Chisenhall, Rene Rowland and Diane Quinn went with Dr. McCray under the request of Mr. I.B. Dent to a meeting of the Central Virginia Museum Chapter at Col Alto in Buckingham. After a buffet meal, a light program was presented including numbers from "Carousel" and "Godspell." This was also a first for Longwood. Mr. Dahlman and Mr. Chisenhall were the first male music majors to sing for the promotion of music education at Longwood.

Longwood Player's Upcoming Production, Twelfth Night, To Play From October 6-9

By TRISH HOWLAND

"To be or not to be" is not the question in Jarman Auditorium these days, for preparations have begun on the Longwood Player's upcoming production of Shakespeare's TWELFTH NIGHT. This comedy of characters, directed by Dr. Patton Lockwood, will be presented to Longwood audiences and to the general public October 6th through 9th at 8:00 each evening.

The cast includes a wide variety of talent, not only from Longwood and Hampden-Sydney students, but professors and members of the local community as well. Jacqui Singleton, Longwood senior portraying Sir Toby, has been seen in such recent productions as THE APPLE TREE, BEGGAR'S OPERA, and THE CHILDREN'S HOUR. Opposite Sir Toby is Sir Andrew, played by Longwood freshman, George Bennett. The role of Malvolio will be portrayed by Hampden-Sydney professor, Dr. Hassell Simpson. A long time actor on the stage, Dr. Simpson's most recent performances include: Daniel Players productions of HARVEY, COME BLOW YOUR HORN, and PLAZA SUITE, and Hampden-Sydney productions of TEN LITTLE INDIANS and INDIANS. Rick Vaughn, currently teaching mathematics at Cumberland High School, will portray County Orsino, the Duke of Illyria. Rick's many accomplishments on the stage include THE BEGGAR'S OPERA, and PEER GYNT at Longwood, as well as Hampden-Sydney's productions of INDIANS, and the Daniel Players production of PAINT YOUR WAGON.

Reenee Manley, Longwood sophomore, will present a most comic appearance as Shakespeare's Feste, the Clown. Reenee's recent credits include IN THE RESTROOM AT ROSEBLOOM'S, THE CHILDREN'S HOUR, and THE BEGGAR'S OPERA. Jill Wilkins, a Longwood senior, will perform in her acting debut, the character Viola. Vicki Mann, a Longwood freshman, will also be making her debut at Longwood in the role of Olivia. Maria will be portrayed by Linda Carlisle, a Longwood day student, who has performed in such productions as A MOUSE THAT ROARED, RHINO+ SERIOUS, CAN'T TAKE IT WITH YOU, and OLIVER at a Community Theatre in Kingsport, Tennessee.

Others in the cast include Andy Mann as Antonio; Jerome Laux as Sebastian; Mary Isemann as Curio; Linda Kulp as Valentine; Larry Folwell doubling roles as the Captain and the Priest; Paulette Daniel and Diane McKown as Officers; and Kate Young, Connie Turner, and Susan White as attendants to the fair Olivia.

Backstage can be found the familiar faces of Stage Manager, Sara Jo Wyatt and Assistant Director, Trish Howland. Technical crews will be headed by Steve Chu, set; Anne Saunders, lights; Jenny Clover-Droney, make-up; Meryl Phelps, sound; Wanda Kirkland, costumes; Marilyn Kibler, publicity; Karen Kimbrough, props; and Lee Murray, house.

A multi-level, period set has been designed by Mr. Ben Emerson, who is the latest addition to the Longwood Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts. The lighting design will be provided by Anne Saunders, and among the musicians for the performances will be Temple Williamson, Stacey Waymack, and Kate Young.

Remember! The TWELFTH NIGHT is coming! Come one, Come All!!!!!!

L.C. Library Has New New Attractions And Systems For This School Year

By ANITA CRUTCHFIELD

The library has initiated a new system of counting its users. As one enters the building he is counted by an electric eye which counts each time the light is broken. Hopefully this will be a more accurate way of measuring the number of people using the library.

The hours for the library as of now are: 7:45 a.m.-10 p.m. Mon.-Thurs., 1 p.m.-5 p.m. Sat., and 2 p.m.-10 p.m. Sundays. Librarian Mrs. Martha LeSturgeon says that these hours are based on counts of users in the past. Usually usage drops off by 9 p.m. every night and not many people chose to spend Saturday nights at the library.

Mrs. LeSturgeon does not anticipate any changes in the security system of the library and that they are now in the process of an inventory. This is the first inventory since the 1950's.

On exhibit now in the downstairs library are some art works of Mordt Gassner. An Intimate Exhibition: ARTWAYS OF MORDT GASSNER was assembled to show how style expresses function in art as in behavior. In this selection of his works the motive is to demonstrate how intent, content, and attendant circumstances evoke the manner of creative self-expression.

Mordt Gassner was born in New York City, attended Parsons School of Design, the Art Students League and Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. Primarily a painter, he has devoted most of his career to vast symbolic mural composition for which he has received many awards and a Guggenheim Fellowship.

He made his theatrical debut as art director for Douglas Fairbanks Sr.'s "Thief of Baghdad" and has since worked extensively on Broadway plays as well as films and television. His commercial work includes advertisements, wall paper and fabric designs, steamship decor, and book illustrations.

Lancers Had Good Turn Out For Their Fall Try-Outs

The Lancers plan to hold their Fall Club Show on Friday, October 15th. The club would like to see you at their show. Please see the Rotunda, Kathie Marth or Debbie Cross for further information as to the time and place.

The Lancers held try-outs on Tuesday Sept. 14th and Monday, Sept. 20th, for the show which is at Averette College on October 8th. The following people tried out:

Kathy Castagna
Pat Caudle
Dee Clemmer
Debbie Cross
Kathie Marth
Megan McDonald
Polly Milliner

Lori Morgan
Pat Perkins
Juli Tracy
Brenda Wile

The results of the tri-outs will be in next weeks Rotunda.

There has been a revision of the officers for the Longwood Lancers of 1976-1977, and are as follows:

Kathie Marth — President;
Chairman of the Horse Show.
Debbie Cross — Vice President; Co-Chairman of the Horse Show.
Sharon Arrington — Recording
Secretary.
Lori Morgan — Corresponding Secretary.
Ann Corson — Treasurer.
Kathie Marth — Historian.

The tentative schedule of the Lancers Competitive Riding Group is as follows:

Oct. 8 (Fri.)	Averett
Oct. 15 (Fri.)	Longwood Club Show
Oct. 22 (Fri.)	Lynchburg and R-MWC
Oct. 29 (Fri.)	Oak Manor — Madison and Mary Baldwin
Nov. 5 (Fri.)	Southern Sem.
Dec. 3 (Fri.)	Virginia Intermont
Feb. 18 (Fri.)	Sweet Briar
April 8 (Fri.)	Longwood Club Show
April 15 or 22	Regionals
May 6	Nationals

Elections, Spirit, And Enthusiasm Present At Recent Class Meeting

By DONNA HASKY

The main purpose of the Freshman Class meeting was to elect an Oktoberfest chairman from the class of 1980. Carol Bensten was elected chairman and Pam Spangler was elected as Freshman Dining Hall Representative, but the meeting ended up being more than just an election. On that night of September 14th, Jeffers Auditorium was filled with class spirit. . . the spirit of Red and White. Liz Barch, Junior Class President, expressed pleasure and surprise at seeing the more than 100 freshmen that attended.

Evidencing their freshman enthusiasm, seven candidates were quickly nominated before it was moved that the nominations be closed. The seven included Becky Allen, Carol Bensten, Cyndy Downey, Dee Dee Giannettino, Robin Rowen, Stacy Waymack and Trisha Whitehurst.

After the meeting, newly-elected chairman Carol Bensten expressed her feelings about freshman involvement in Oktoberfest. "I'm really happy to have been elected to one of the first and most important endeavors we will undertake as a class this year. I know we can make an important impact on Oktoberfest."

"As a class we have a lot of spirit, it's just a matter of getting everyone together. The Junior class officers have been fantastic in helping us get started, but now more of the responsibility is ours. We can do it, because there's really something for everyone in Oktoberfest. We need help with the sets, costumes, color rush and all the other things that go into making Oktoberfest the special week end that it is."

Kappa Delta Pi And The Student Educational Association Meet To Discuss Plans For The Year

Two educational organizations met last week in order to discuss both new and old business connected with their field. Kappa Delta Pi, the national honor society of education, and the Student Educational Association met in order to plan for the coming year. Both organizations are anxious to get more information and materials for students interested in education and for those preparing to teach.

On September 15, Kappa Delta Pi held its first meeting. Christy Moody, President stated that because of the lack of methods courses in their fields, many secondary majors felt they were unprepared to student teach. Kappa Delta Pi plans to do something about this, although as of now it is still in the planning stages of development.

Another event the society plans to do is a once-a-month banquet with guest speakers. They also hope to get companies to bring materials and information to Longwood for display purposes. A banquet for out-going student teachers has also been discussed. Christy indicated that Kappa Delta Pi wanted to be "something helpful and worthwhile for the students of Longwood College!!"

On the immediate agenda are the plans to sponsor the beer and pretzel party for Oktoberfest, scheduled for Friday, Oct. 15.

The SEA had their first meeting on September 14, beginning with the introduction of the new officers for this year. Wanda Garrett was announced President, along with Kathy Condyles and Jeanne Machen as the two Vice-Presidents. According to Kathy Condyles, the purpose of this organization is to "encourage and promote the 'teaching profession'". Several events have been planned with this purpose in mind. One of the newest additions is the SEA Scholarship to be given to a deserving student in the spring. Guest speakers and movies, both with an educational theme, will be brought to Longwood College for the benefit of all students.

Two important events have and will take the SEA off the Longwood campus and put them on the road. On Sept. 10, Jeanne Machen and Gail Parsons represented the SEA in a Leader Meet at Smith Mountain Lake. New trends in the educational field were discussed as well as information involving teachers themselves. On Oct. 13, the Longwood SEA has been invited to visit Lynchburg College to meet with the SEA there. The President of the Student Virginia Association will be the guest speaker.

Both organizations are a service to the teaching profession, and plan to work jointly for this cause. Membership into Kappa Delta Pi requires an average of 3.2 overall, with 6 hours of education for juniors and 12 hours for seniors. Members are tapped in the fall and in the spring. The SEA is open to all students. Dues are $7.50 and tentative plans are being made for a membership booth.

The Formation Of L.C. Chemistry Club Discussed

By JO LEILI

Longwood College has visibly grown in leaps and bounds during the past few years progressing in most areas of social and academic endeavor. Not to be outdone, the Longwood Department of Natural Sciences is experiencing its own "feeling of change" concerning the chemistry department and the formation of two new campus organizations.

On Tuesday, September 7, at 8:00 p.m., chairman of the Chemistry department, Dr. Maurice M. Maxwell, and interested chemistry or chemistry affiliated majors met to discuss such future possibilities. The first order of business was the tentative development of a "Chemistry Club" similar to those which exist at most larger universities. This organization, social and academic in nature would consist of Chemistry majors, Biology or Physics majors associated with Chemistry. Providing social activities for those of related interests, plus the recruiting of new members into the Chemistry field would be some goals of this club. The "steering committee," devised to look over constitutions and made into the red tape of new club formation were seniors Betsy O'Donnell, Anita Powell, and Jo Leili.

Next on the agenda, was the topic of founding a Longwood Chapter of the American Chemical Society in affiliation with Hampden-Sydney College. This would fulfill the desire of this society to form chapters in the central Virginia, Randolph-Macon and Lynchburg College, excluding schools and industry west of the blue ridge section and Chesapeake Bay area.

A campus chapter of the A.C.S. could help finance speakers oriented in the science fields, with the advantage of defrayed costs if a union were formed with Hampden-Sydney. Several students currently enrolled at Longwood have been student affiliated members of the A.S.C. for over a year, possessing the membership requirements that they be working toward an undergraduate degree in chemistry, chemical engineering, or a related discipline. The benefits of affiliation include the availability of discounts on subscriptions for high level A.C.S. research journals and magazines, employment aids for positions wanted or positions available for all levels of college degrees and regional, topical and national meetings which are open for attendance to all affiliates.

Discussing why he felt that Longwood now was ready for the formation of a "Chemistry Club" Dr. Maxwell claimed that "There has been a definite growth in the number of Chemistry majors here at Longwood, and we now have a sufficient number to form a club. After all, we've had informal social activities with the Chemistry majors in the past anyway, so now is the time to get organized!" As for the benefits of club formation, Dr. Maxwell stated "In the club, we would not only have social gatherings, but could also sponsor intellectual activities, such as for example, the series of toxicology lectures which was held last year. Plus, such an organization could hopefully lead to the future formation of a possible chemistry honorary here at Longwood."

L. C. Golf Team Holds 1-1 Record After Two Matches

The Longwood Golf Teams have a cumulative record of 71 wins, 16 losses and 3 ties..

The golf team had a match with William and Mary and Madison in Williamsburg on September 9, 1976. Longwood beat Madison 8-4 and lost to William and Mary 7-8. Nan Patterson, a freshman from Martinsville, was low scorer for Longwood with Deanna Vanwey, a freshman from Alexandria, second.

Scoring is done by the Nassau Scoring System. The winner of the front 9 holes receives one point, the winner of the back 9 holes receives one point, and the winner for the total 18 holes receives one point. Therefore, it is possible for each player to score three points for their team. Points received for Longwood were as follows for the match on Sept. 9 Gail Pollard - ½, Deanna Varwey - ¾, Becky Webb - 5, Meg Baskerville - 4, Nan Patterson - 5.

The next golf match will be at the Longwood Golf Course with William and Mary and Madison. On Monday, September 20. The match will begin at 12:30 p.m.

Golf Schedule

Randolph Macon vs. Madison, Sept. 28, at Lynchburg — 1:00 p.m.

Mary Baldwin Invitational, Oct. 1-2, at Staunton — Two Day.

Sweet Briar vs. Averett, Oct. 7 at Longwood — 12:30 p.m.

Randolph Macon, Oct. 13 at Longwood — 1:00 p.m.

VFISW State Tournament, Oct. 28-30-31 at Longwood — Three Day.

Basketball Try-Outs To Begin Soon

On September 15, a woman's basketball meeting was held for all students interested in participating in this sport. Coach Carolyn Hodges told the group that tryouts will begin October 18 and would be on Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays for about two weeks. The coach also stated that all participants must be able to jog a mile by tryout time. The basketball season will begin December 3 with a game against Old Dominion University.

Phi Kappa Phi National Honor Society Names Newly Elected Officers

Newly elected officers of the national Honor Society of Phi Kappa Phi at Longwood College are student vice-president, Christy Lynn Moody and from the faculty, Dr. Elizabeth B. Jackson, president and Dr. Paul Hesselink, secretary-treasurer. Eligibility for membership in Phi Kappa Phi is based upon high scholastic attainment among junior and senior students and college faculty members. The following individuals were initiated on April 13, 1976 and are current members: Winifred Agee, Penn Aaron, Vernioia Barrell, Sandra K. Frey, Elsa Kathryn Craft, Penny Kay Harding, Jo Marie Leili, Rebecca Y. Maxwell, Christy Lynn Moody, Betsy Fulcher Pace, Agnes J. Shepard, Mary Abbie Vestal, Eleanor L. White, Dr. Carolyn Craft, Mr. James Crowl.

The primary objective of Phi Kappa Phi is the recognition and encouragement of superior scholastic attainment among junior and senior college students and college faculty members.

The Phi Kappa Phi Foundation promotes academic excellence and achievement through nineteen fellowship awarded on a competitive basis to graduating students who are members of the society. Longwood students and faculty members are invited to request further information on these fellowships and to suggest qualified candidates for fellowship awards.

Two 1976 graduates of Longwood College having membership in Phi Kappa Phi have received fellowship awards, the Alpha Lambda Delta fellowship is held by Molly Lee at the Medical College of Virginia and the Pi Gamma Mu fellowship went Dawn Candice Adams for study in history at Vanderbilt University. A present senior member of Phi Kappa Phi, Elsa K. Harvey, was co-recipient of the Wilson Greek Award at Hampden-Sydney College, the first woman to receive an academic award from that college.

Dr. David Alexick, Professor Of Art To Exhibit Work

Dr. David Alexick, Assistant Professor of Art at Longwood College, is currently having a retrospective exhibit of his paintings at the St. Paul's College in Lawrenceville, Virginia. The works being exhibited through September 30 span a period of fifteen years, and the subject matter includes interpretations of still life, landscape and portraits.

The public is invited to view Dr. Alexick's work in the exhibit area of the Student Union Building.

Ms. Barbara Bishop Displays Art Work In Roanoke Gallery

Ms. Barbara L. Bishop, Associate Professor and Chairman of the Art Department at Longwood College, is currently showing a photo-silkscreen print in "Preview," an exhibit by the Roanoke Fine Arts Center in the Downtown Library Gallery, Roanoke, Virginia. Artists represented in "Preview" have been invited to exhibit during the 1976-77 season in one of several galleries supported by the Roanoke Fine Arts Center. Ms. Bishop will have a one-woman show in the Young Gallery December 28, 1976 - January 23, 1977.

Proficiency Tests Are Scheduled

English proficiency tests will be given twice this semester, Thursday, October 7, and Thursday, November 11. The tests are scheduled on both days at 1 p.m. in Room 108 Grainger.

Students who have been found to be deficient in the use of written English are required to remove this deficiency before graduation. A faculty committee, headed by Dr. Cathleen Hosey of the English Department, administers the English proficiency program.

A Week Of Debates . . .

Students Vs Administration At Press Conference

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS

Questions and answers about the present dining hall procedures, I.D. cards, drinking in sorority chapter rooms and student activity fees were exchanged at the first press conference of the semester on Tuesday, September 21. President Willett, along with Dean Heintz, Dr. Dalton, Dr. Gussett, Mr. Carbone, and Mrs. Klassen were present to provide information to the many students assembled in the Gold Room for the press conference.

Susann Smith, chairman of Legislative Board, opened the press conference with recent Legislative Board actions. She then turned the press conference over to President Willett.

Dining Hall and ID's

Most of the discussion at the press conference centered around the new dining hall procedures. President Willett began by making two statements, "In terms of dining hall procedures the change didn't come about because of coeducation, but from complaints about the closing of tables." President Willett went on to say, "The cost of food is going up. We've analyzed the food operation to see if we could cut some of the auxiliary functions...On the other hand, we've tried to put the correct costs on the items (of food) taken out."

On the topic of presenting I.D. cards to get into the dining hall, Beth Rafferty asked, "Who but a Longwood student would eat there?" President Willett replied, "You would be amazed at the number of people who will come in and eat," referring to people of various classifications who had not paid to eat in the dining hall. This is the main reason for checking I.D. cards at the dining hall door.

Some students asked about the possibilities of going back to the old system in the dining hall. President Willett said that we haven't used the new system long enough, although he doesn't want to say we're going to always use one system or another. Mr. Carbone said about the old system, "The major problem was table-closing...and the set time for meals." In answer to another question, Mr. Carbone also said that the new system is "not costing anymore money". He did explain that the two choices of an entree for lunch had been cut out because of preparation problems.

Several students brought up the problem of the new I.D. cards not being accepted by some stores when cashing checks. The absence of a student number or social security number makes the I.D. cards invalid in many situations. President Willett said that this problem would be taken care of before the next issuance of I.D. cards. Mr. Klassen reminded students that the proper procedure to follow if you lose your I.D. is to go to Dean Heintz's office during weekdays and to his office on week ends.

Capital Projects and SAFC

President Willett announced that Dr. Peale is working on a list of small capital projects around campus to present before the Board of Visitors in November. This list would include changes in shower facilities of North Cunningham, possible partitioning of the lower dining hall, and answering needs in the Lankford Building. President Willett also acknowledged the editorial in the September 21 edition of The Rotunda. He explained that the railings on the wall in front of Curry were state requirements, whereas the outdoor basketball court was his idea. He hoped to move shortly on the Snack Bar changes but they had to give consideration to problems with funding for these changes.

President Willett said that there is lots of concern about the accumulations and reserves of Student Activities Fees. He said a reserve amount has accumulated and it could be possible to use some of this money for the Snack Bar improvements.

Registration

In answer to the question, "Was registration this semester worth the time and trouble," President Willett gave a definite yes. He felt that the process of fall registration would reduce substantially the number of schedule changes, a problem encountered with the spring pre-registrations. Dr. Gussett added that last year there were around 5,000 schedule changes. While figures would not be complete until after October 1, the number of add-drops for this semester was nowhere near 5,000.

Drinking

On the subject of drinking alcoholic beverages in sorority chapter rooms, President Willett said, "We need to meet with sorority representatives to talk about this." He continued by saying the administration just recently received the last of several communications from Carter Vs Ford On Television . . .

By LISA TURNER

President Ford and Jimmy Carter met last Thursday evening for the first of three televised Presidential debates. While nothing particularly new or substantial was established, the debates reached an estimated 100 million viewers, and may have a telling effect on the outcome of the November election.

Technically, the debate was marred only by an embarrassing 28 minute loss of sound, attributed to a faulty connection somewhere within Philadelphia's Walnut Street Theater, site of the first debate.

Ford and Carter differed sharply on their views of the American economy. Ford spoke of his successes at "turning the economy around" and of his record — he says he has reduced both the unemployment and inflation rates. He also stated that the Gross National Product is up by 6 per cent, and has promised a balanced budget by 1978.

Carter immediately pointed out that the Ford administration is saddled with the largest deficit in history, more than four times that of Richard Nixon. He spoke of the doubling number of bankruptcies of small businesses, and the fact that the average American's take-home pay is less than that in 1968.

Carter appeared to be particularly concerned with the tangled system of United States bureaucracy, claiming that responsibility is spread "all over the government," and that this leads to a "gross waste of money." He promised a complete reorganization of government, and said that he intends to reduce the number of federal agencies from 1900 to 200. He did not, however, say which agencies will be cut, nor did he promise to reduce the number of actual federal employees. He frequently cited his reorganization effort as governor of Georgia.

Ford quickly reported that Carter's budget as governor had increased by 50 per cent, and that Carter's successor had described the state Medicaid program as being "a shambles." He also noted the decrease in the number of White House staff members who are working for the President.

Carter also seemed to be very concerned with the nation's tax system, calling it a "welfare program for the rich." He suggested that his program would correct this, noting that "I don't want to raise taxes, I just want to make the fair." He intends to do this partially by erasing tax loopholes.

Carter also turned his attention to the question of unemployment, noting that the Ford administration is responsible for the highest rates of unemployment since the Great Depression and that "this affects people." He supports a program to create jobs, but did not spell it out.

Ford is expected to veto the controversial Humphrey-Hawkins bill, explaining that its benefits would not begin early enough, and that this would mean dealing with a period of 9-18 months. He is particularly supportive of restricting government spending, and is proud of the fact that most of his

Where It Functions Best...

One of the most effective committees at Longwood College is the Student Activities Fees Committee. Besides handling most of the money paid by students as activity fees, it has become highly respected by the student body. The entire committee is open and willing to discuss any matters in question with all who will take the time to ask. In the past several years, it has come a long way, from a bare existence to a meaningful and effective tool. The committee fairly distributes the money that it is allocated among the various organizations, and explains why a particular group did or did not receive the total amount requested. There is even an appeals procedure if the organization disagrees with the committee.

Technically, the Student Activities Fees Committee is a committee of the college. For the past several years, however, it has been functioning as a committee of legislative board. Despite the opinions of some, there is a large distinction between a committee of the college and one of legislative board. Being a part of legislative board allows concerned students to volunteer to serve on the committee and to be subsequently elected. It has its own bylaws under the student government constitution that stipulates who its members will be, which official will serve as its advisor, and the length of time each will serve. Responsibilities of each are spelled out, and there is no doubt as to who does what or where decisions come from. A committee of the college, on the other hand, is appointed by the dean of the college for possibly an indefinite period of time. Since it is an appointed committee, it has no constitution as such.

Consequently, the advisors are also appointed by the dean rather than elected by the committee members itself. This may be a trivial point to be concerned about, but how can a committee be expected to be effective and totally worthwhile when its members do not campaign to be on it and when it has no final say so as to who will advise and work most closely with it?

Granted, the committee is technically one of the college. Since it is functioning so well and so effectively as a committee of legislative board, why not designate it as such? Don't disband it because of a technicality and appoint totally new members who are not as concerned and familiar with its purposes and functions. The Student Activities Fees Committee is finally worth the backing and respect of students, faculty and administration. It is a working committee; it communicates well with each other and with Longwood College, and it knows what it is doing and in what direction it needs to go. Don't change it now when it has come so far and has the potential to do so much good.

One Man's Opinion About Visitation

By THOMAS HAWKE

Within the last week or so the upper classmen voted for their residence hall visitation privileges. Sooner or later the Freshmen will get their chance and I mention this because it ties in directly with my opinion concerning the change of hours. Let me get directly to the point.

"Do I favor extended visitation hours?" You'd better believe it. I think they're great if not abused. They can in the longrun help the students gain a better understanding of each other and close the social gap at Longwood. With this idea stated, I can't help but think, "What are the real reasons for having limited visitation?" Is it so the individual floors can have some privacy or is it so you don't get the chance to use the excuse, "I have a poster in my room I want to show you" and then forget to come out after seeing it until just before the sun comes up; or is it so you just don't have to worry about guests from off campus running about in the dorms to 6 a.m. Sunday morning? (After all, the campus is not under the same restrictions as are the dorms so take your guest outside.)

I look at these three reasons and laugh. Isn't longer visitation just a way of extending the time period that the visitors have before they can look at their watch and say, "Oh well, I should be leaving but so what. It won't hurt to stay."

Don't take me wrong. Extended visitation is a good thing if not abused and when abused, I'm not saying everyone does so. Actually, this problem is up to your hall presidents to solve and take care of unless he/she is involved. If this is the case, with no enforcement of the rules, why not just make it a 24 hour open house on week ends.

I was recently at the University of Maryland where this was the policy in the sorority house I stayed the night in. My friend and I both had to stay on our guard so we wouldn't get "caught with our pants down" if you'll pardon the pun.

As a result; to try to avoid "getting caught" at our dorm the president on my hall has been cracking down lately and the incidents have been cut down to a minimum but not completely stopped. It's still not uncommon to be under the impression that its a week day and have a person of the opposite sex who just walked on your hall say, "To me everyday is Saturday man!" As a matter of fact, last Monday at 7 p.m., Bill Breeden was coming out of the shower and...

S-UN Outdoor Concert Oct. 2 At Estates: Rosewater Blue And T & M Express

There's going to be a concert at Longwood Estates October 2 featuring the mellow sounds of the T & M Express duo, Tim York and Michael Hawthorne and the diverse and lyrical music of "Rosewater Blue."

Tim York and Michael Hawthorne, both natives of Texas, who've been described as "...two Texas-accented, guitar-playing troubadours with warm, jazzy voices," ... have been playing together for about two years now. Their music has been described as ... "secrets — shared by those who had heard them ...", and their entertainment as ... "spring-day fresh, earnest and articulate." Their music is a combination of folk and rock, blues and jazz that's been warmly received wherever they go.

Michael Hawthorne has been called a ... "gifted writer" ... whose music stems from a 'classical' background. He was a winner in the 1974 American Song Festival when his song, "Convict Hill" won in the Amateur Folk Song division. "The song is based on a true story of a road gang of convicts ..." and he was awarded $5,000 for it.

Tom York ... "the bulwark of the Express vocal talent" ... has a "Neil Youngish" voice that has been described as "the sweeter of the two." Some of his composites include "Where the Eagles Fly" and "Elizabeth."

Both Hawthorne and York presently reside in Columbus.

"Rosewater Blue," formed by the musical talents of Michael Beasley, Jerry Zanolski, Mark Wittman and Chick Cusick, originated "three years ago in Florida when three musicians along with some friends sat down and discussed the concept of what is the evolving music of Rosewater Blue." Their music includes original compositions "Take It Slowly" and "Give Yourself Away"; and other more well known songs such as "Hey Jude" and "When Will I Be Loved?" Each member of the group combines his unique individual talents to form a sound that ... "combines harmonizing vocals with a variety of instruments" ... which ... "create a unique air of moods and feelings for their listeners." October 2nd's outdoor concert at Longwood Estates is one you won't want to miss. It will begin at 7:30 lasting till 10:00. Beer and cokes will be sold. Student tickets are $1.00, guest tickets, $2.00 each. So bring a friend.

Oktoberfest Meisters, Klowns Announced

By SANDY HAGA

On September 20, the klowns, ushers, and meisters for Oktoberfest were announced at a Geist assembly.

It was an exciting event which began with clapping, German music, and candy distributed by Geist members dressed as Klowns. Next, the audience saw slides of last year's Oktoberfest and following this Mabel Day announced the names of 21 girls who will serve as Klowns: Elizabeth Gilbert, Sue Morris, Kim Burpee, Colleen Russell, Bebe Cole, Debbie Sullivan, Kathy Cougar, Cindy Morris, Dede Kilpatrick, Mary Kay Polk, Kim McCanna, Rosalind Crenshaw, Robin Boynt, Lynn Mayberry, Terry Johnson, Linda Wovitt, Ann Marie Morgan, Darlene McGoin, Carol Lewis, Diane Connolly, and Carolyn Foster.

Michelle Nealon then announced the names of the ushers: Freshmen — Bill Breedon and Kathy Dolan; Sophomores, Ann Johnson and Dianne Harwood; Juniors, Donna Lowe and Sue Rama; Seniors, Dee Matthews and Susann Smith.

The climax of the evening was the announcement of the Oktoberfest Court. The three girls who were named meisters are Becky Ruck sophomore, Renny Bruno junior, and Shelby Shelton senior. Becky will serve as Mittenmeister or Midway Marshall; Renny will serve as Feistmeister or Mistress of Ceremonies; and Shelby will be the Geistmeister or Mistress of Spirit.

Becky is a recreational therapy major from Springfield, Virginia. She has worked with the Student Union and served as a Colleague.

Renny is a biology and pre-med. major from Drexel Hill, Pennsylvania. She has worked on the Oktoberfest float committee and is co-editor of the yearbook. She is a member of the Granddaughters Club and the Outdoor Recreation Club. Renny has been a Colleague and she is a member of Alpha Sigma Tau.

Shelby Shelton is a music major from Hurt, Virginia. She has been a member of the Camerata and Madrigal singers. Shelby has also served as president of the Concert Choir.

Skit practice is under way and the Meisters and Ushers are practicing their dances.

The festivities will start October 15 with the skits at 7:30 in Jarman. Tickets will cost 50c. Following the skits, there will be a beer and pretzel party sponsored by Kappa Delta Pi. On Saturday, there will be an art auction exhibit from 11:00 a.m. — 3:00 p.m. Alumnae art majors will make donations and money made from the art will be used as a scholarship for a student in the art department. A german smorgasboard picnic will be served from 11:30 a.m. — 1:30 p.m. At 1:15 p.m. there will be a choir concert in Jarman. The Midway will open at 2:00 and the Longwood Band will be there to play German music. From 2:00-5:00 there will be booths, an H2O show, a one-act play, JV and varsity hockey games. From 5:15-6:30 dinner will be served. Skits are at 7:30 in Jarman and tickets will cost $1.00. After the skits, there will be an Alumni Chi Walk on the Colonnade followed by the Cake Cutting in the downstairs dining hall.

Bradley Fields Gives Show

By ANNE CARTER STEPHENS

Floating ladies, magic wands, disappearing coins and trunks locked up with people inside them, are all in the world of magic. And the world of magic contains Bradley Fields.

This red-haired, green eyed magician performed Tuesday night in Jarman Auditorium. Earlier that afternoon, he conducted a free workshop in Lankford for anyone interested in attending. He showed some of his basic tricks which he uses while on tour, and gave his audience a chance to ask any questions. During his performance Tuesday night, he presented (with the help of two assistants) such classics as "Levitation" (floating a lady in mid-air), pulling objects out of a hat and some of his own original fantasies.

To him, magic is something he never got interested in. The enthusiasm and determination was always there. He said "I've always been interested in magic. There isn't a time I can remember when I wasn't." He was born and reared in New York, and at the age of 14, worked as an assistant to a professional magician. Later he decided to become a magician, and went to Paris to study Mime with Etienne Decroux. Since then, he has toured England, Italy and France, and was the star of a T.V. special aired on national television in France. Currently he is traveling across the U.S. performing at clubs and universities, and he now teaches magic at New York State University at Purchase.

Paul Thorson, Singer- Composer, To Perform Here

Paul Thorson, a singer-composer, will perform at 8:00 p.m. on October 5 in the Gold Room. The program is free and open to the public.

Paul received a bachelor's degree in music performance in 1970 from Wayne State College, Wayne, Nebraska. Since then, he has toured high school and college campuses with Campus Crusade for Christ's music ministry, first as part of the Great Commission Company and now as a soloist.

"I found an answer to aimlessness and confusion through a relationship with Jesus Christ," Paul said. "Now I want to use music to communicate that answer to other people and the joy that He brings."

Paul, whose performance consists primarily of his own compositions, sings soft rock while accompanying himself on the piano.

Campus Crusade for Christ is an interdenominational Christian movement composed of students and laymen who have united to help change the world in this generation through telling others about Jesus Christ.

Begun in 1951 on the UCLA campus by Bill and Vonette Bright, the movement now consists of more than 4,000 staff members in 68 countries.

Suicide: Concoctions

A Major Cause Of Death-Theories, Types, Causes

Suicide, defined as the voluntary taking of one's life, is a foremost cause of death in the United States. Many sociologists have theorized on the rates, reasons and types of suicides.

Results of most studies conclude that more men commit suicide than women, on a ratio of three to one, although three times as many women attempt suicide unsuccessfully. The chance of suicide is increased with age. The fourth highest cause of death among both men and women, between the ages of 25 to 44, is suicide.

Concerning religion, the highest rate of suicide is found in the Protestant sector. Members of the Catholic faith are less likely to commit suicide because they consider it a mortal sin. The Jews have the lowest number because Judaism is not only a religion, but a sub-society.

A sociologist, Emile Durkheim, divides suicide into three areas: egotistic, anomic and altruistic. The egotistic suicide is caused by an individual's lack of participation in groups. For example, an aged individual may commit suicide because of an abrupt decrease in participation in such areas as jobs or community activities. Another example is the freshman experience at college.

Anomic suicide is a result of a person having no guidelines to live by, due to some change in his life. A suicide prevention center in Detroit, Michigan, received a phone call from a woman inquiring about help for her son. The woman had been widowed three years earlier and was concerned because her son had not fully accepted the death of his father. She was concerned about her son's depression and requested a referral to his school's mental health clinic. She gave no signs as to any problems concerning herself. The center made the request and then called the woman back for verification. Immediately after talking with the center, the woman committed suicide. Another example is the business man who loses his job. Because of the insurance annuity, he feels more valuable to his family dead.

The third type of suicide, altruistic, involves an individual who is controlled by a group. One example is the Kamikaze Pilot. A few recent suicides have been attributed to Moon's Unification Church.

A useful factor to consider suicide is attempted suicide. Attempted suicide can be divided into two categories: the serious attempt, which is a person stopped only by an incident which should not have happened; the non-serious attempt, where the person is hoping to be saved.

The person hoping to be saved will take extra precautions to avoid death. Such is the case of a man over 60 years who planned his suicide so that a daughter would find him before he died. There are cases where the 'plan' backfires, so that the individual must ask for help. An example of this is the young girl, who slit her wrist and waited. When it became apparent that she would not be rescued, she struggled to a phone and called for help.

There are various reasons for attempting suicide. The person who wants to be saved commits the act because of some problem or desire. These include letting someone know that there is something wrong, i.e., an unconscious call for assistance. This is exemplified in the person who feels he would not be taken seriously if he merely asked for help. Also, persons who try to acquire help but are not heard.

Another reason for attempting suicide is manipulation. An example of this is in a marriage situation where the wife attempts to gain 'her way' by threatening suicide.

Many attempt suicide to encourage attention. A child who feels that the parents 'do not care,' may attempt suicide to receive this love. This can also be seen in a person who feels that their loved one is slipping away.

Self-punishment is also a reason for attempted suicide. A person may feel that he or she is the sole cause for something and that the only resolve is suicide.

Pure frustration is a common cause. The person may be extremely exhausted mentally, physically, and feels the only relief is rest; although death is not usually the result sought after.

Usually an attempted suicide is a signal of some problem or desire. If the problem is not resolved the person is capable to try again and succeed. In a study, it was found that of those who had committed suicide a large number had attempted at least once before. Perhaps even a greater tragedy is that a large number who only want to attempt succeed because of miscalculation.

A great majority of individuals at one time or another reach a crisis point when suicide is considered. Fortunately most of these crises pass. It is only in those extended or recurring depressions that suicide appears to be the only way out.

With an increasing concern in humanitarianism there is a large growth of crisis centers or 'hot lines.' Most of these agencies are staffed by volunteers with access to a professional. The volunteers are given a thorough training in all possible contacts.

The usual procedure when a caller threatens suicide is simple. The aide should stay calm, speak in a low voice and try to keep the caller on the line as long as possible. Most callers do not wish to actually commit the act; so the aide can usually keep the caller talking until the momentary problem is close to resolve.

The best determinant as to the seriousness of the individual is whether or not there is a plan. If there is a plan the aide asks if the person has the weapon in the room. For instance, if the person says he's going to shoot himself, the aide asks what kind of gun he has. If the caller will not answer, the aide can be fairly sure that there is no gun. There are some callers who are more than willing to describe the make and even click the gun in the phone.

Once the aide has gotten the caller to talk freely, the next step is to resolve the problem or refer the caller to the proper person for help. Although there have been cases where the caller goes through with the act, a far greater number have been talked out of it. These agencies provide the "listening ear" that most attempters desire.

Gallup Poll Results Show Moral Beliefs

In a recent Gallup Poll Survey, 51 per cent of the Americans polled believed it is morally wrong for a person to commit suicide. There were no exceptions, even when a person is in great pain, with no hope of improvement, it was still considered wrong. 41 per cent polled disagreed. 53 per cent, however, felt that an individual did not have the moral right to end his life when he had an incurable disease. 40 per cent felt that he had the right. 72 per cent were opposed to someone taking his life because he felt that he was a burden on the family, while 20 per cent felt that he had the right.

The Poll also showed differences of attitude depending on age. Of those interviewed between the ages of 18 to 29 (with or without a college education), more than one-half believed that a person had the moral right to terminate his life while suffering great pain and terminal illness. Fewer than 30 per cent, however, felt that being a heavy burden on the family was reason enough to commit suicide.

This survey was conducted between April 4-7, 1975, and was based on interviews with 1,535 adults in 3,000 locations.

About School

He always wanted to say things. But no one understood. He always wanted to explain things. But no one cared. So he drew.

Sometimes he would just draw and it wasn't anything. He wanted to carve it in stone or write it in the sky.

He would lie out on the grass and look up in the sky and it would be only him and sky and the things inside that needed saying. And it was after that, that he draw the picture. It was a beautiful picture. He kept it under the pillow and would let no one see it. And he would look at it every night and think about. And when it was dark and his eyes were closed, he could still see it.

And it was all of him. And he loved it.

When he started school he brought it with him. Not to show to anyone but just to have it with him like a friend.

It was funny about school.

He sat in a square, brown desk like all the other square brown desks and he thought it should be red.

And his room was a square, brown room. Like all the other rooms.

And it was tight and close. And stiff.

He hated to hold the pencil and chalk, with his arm stiff, and his feet flat on the floor, stiff, with the teacher watching and watching.

And then he had to write numbers. And they weren't anything. They were worse than the letters that could be something if you put them together.

And the numbers were tight and square and he hated the whole thing.

The teacher came and spoke to him. She told him to wear a tie like all the other boys. He said he didn't like them and she said it didn't matter.

After that they drew. And he drew all yellow and it was the way he felt about morning.

And it was beautiful.

The teacher came and smiled at him. "What's this?" she asked.

"Why don't you draw something like Ken's drawing? Isn't that beautiful?"

It was all questions.

After that his mother bought him a tie and he always drew airplanes and rocket ships like everyone else.

And he threw the old picture away.

And when he lay out alone looking at the sky it was big and blue and all of everything, but he wasn't anymore.

He was square inside and brown and his hands were stiff and he was like anyone else. And the thing inside him that needed saying didn't need saying anymore.

It had stopped pushing. It was crushed. Stiff.

Like everything else.

(This poem was turned into a teacher in Regina, Saskatchewan, by a senior in high school. Although it is not known if he actually wrote it himself, it is known that he committed suicide a few weeks later.)

Student Suicides . . .

"Jump!" some students shouted playfully to the young man on the roof of the 28-story U. of Massachusetts Library. He returned the shouts and dropped some model rocket engines that sounded like firecrackers on them. He then took a running leap and plunged 286 feet to his death, the forth suicide there in two years.

Four suicides in two years is about average for a campus the size of the U. of Massachusetts according to a 1968 study by Dana L. Farnsworth, "Psychiatry, Education and the Young Adult." The study estimates that on a 10,000-student campus:

- * * * 1,000 students will have emotional conflicts severe enough to warrant professional help;
- * * * 100 to 200 will become apathetic and unable to organize their efforts;
- * * * 15 to 25 will become ill enough to require treatment in a mental hospital;
- * * * 5 to 20 will attempt suicide, and 1 to 3 will succeed.

Other studies show that the rate of suicides among young people is less than among older people, but it is second only to accidental death as a cause of death in the college age group. Each year 10,000 college students in the U.S. try suicide; 1,000 succeed.

Suicidal Attempt Revealed In LC Student Interview

This is a factual interview with a Longwood student. She was 16 years old at the time of her first attempt; white, middle-class and Presbyterian. Both of her parents were living at the time.

HOW DID YOU TRY TO COMMIT SUICIDE?

"I took an overdose of pills."

WHAT TYPES OF PILLS?

"Various types. I got them out of the medicine chest and took them when I got home from school."

WHO FOUND YOU?

"My Mom found me unconscious and took me to the hospital. When I got there, they pumped my stomach out."

WHY?

"Well, you know how it is when you're 16. I was having problems with my peers and was disappointed with myself. Plus, I was having guy problems. . . the relationship wasn't going as I thought it should. I guess the culmination was the fact that I found out that my Dad was having an affair. It kind of racked up my brain, ya know?"

HAD YOU EVER THOUGHT ABOUT IT BEFORE?

"Yeah, I had a whole list of poems that I'd written before, during and after. One time I was going to slit my wrist but I didn't."

WHAT MADE YOU FINALLY GO AND TAKE THE PILLS?

"The fact that I was going to try it before and didn't. I got really upset and then suddenly felt peaceful and thought 'what the hell' and did it."

WHAT WAS YOUR PARENTS REACTION?

"My Dad doesn't know still. My Mom is the only one that knows. She didn't think my Dad could take it because his uncle was dying and she didn't want to add to his lot of problems."

DID YOU SEEK HELP AFTER THIS?

"Yes, I went to an analyst."

FOR HOW LONG?

"Three months. I stopped on my own because he wasn't doing me much good. It was a free clinic and I had to drive quite a ways to get to it. A friend at school — who was a teacher — helped me more."

DID YOU TRY TO CONTACT ANYONE BEFORE YOU TOOK THE PILLS?

"No."

DID YOU LEAVE ANY NOTES?

"No."

HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT ABOUT TRYING IT AGAIN?

"I contemplated jumping off the roof when I was a freshman."

WHY?

"A number of reasons. I guess you could say I had the Freshman Syndrome and plus I was physically ill. I couldn't cope with the pain and I was being hassled by everyone."

WHAT STOPPED YOU?

"A person stopped me when I was on the roof. I don't think I would have gone through with it this time, though. I was 18 and I didn't get that same gut feeling that I had right before I tried it when I was 16. This time, I think I WANTED someone to stop me."

WHAT DID THIS PERSON TELL YOU?

"The regular stuff. . . that I had a good reason to live and a lot to live for. A lot of reinforcement, stuff I wanted to hear."

DO YOU THINK YOU WOULD EVER TRY IT AGAIN?

"No, now I can deal with my problems."

HOW DO YOU FEEL ABOUT SUICIDE NOW?

"I think it's wrong. I mean, there's a whole world out here and you just can't cut yourself out. God has a reason for your being here."

IF YOU FOUND OUT SOMEONE YOU KNEW WAS CONTEMPLATING SUICIDE NOW, WHAT WOULD YOU TELL THEM?

"I'd ask them to give me three good reasons why. Usually they can't. Then I'd give them positive reinforcement. I think most people want someone to talk them out of it."

WHAT DO YOU THINK IS THE BIGGEST CAUSE OF SUICIDE?

"Self failure or concoctions of self failure."

FOR YOUR INFORMATION

The Golden Gate Bridge in San Francisco, California has the highest suicide rate of any place in the entire Western World. At last count, 546 people met their death after jumping off this bridge. Plans are now being considered to construct a $1,000,000 anti-suicidal barrier to alleviate the problem.

Excerpt from:

A Very Little Sphinx
by Edna Saint-Vincent Millay

I know a hundred ways to die.
I've often thought, I'd try one;
Lie down beneath a motor truck
Some day when standing by one.

Or throw myself from off a bridge—
Except some things must be
So hard upon the scavengers
And men that clean the sea.

I know some poison I could drink.
I've often thought I'd taste it.
But mother bought it for the sink,
And drinking it would waste it.

Ben Emerson, Technical Director Joins Longwood Drama Staff

By TRISH HOWLAND

The Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts proudly presents the newest addition to its staff, Mr. Ben Emerson. A native Virginian, and more than knowledgeable in the field of technical theatre, Mr. Emerson joined the 1976 Longwood Faculty with an impressive list of credentials; among these include a masters degree in technical theatre from the University of Richmond, where he served as resident technical director for one year, and an undergraduate degree also from the University of Richmond.

Not only has Mr. Emerson worked on U. of R. productions A VIEW FROM THE BRIDGE, HOSTAGE, MANDRAGULA, as well as many others, he has also worked several individual theatres, and taught theatre classes at VCU. The past summer, Mr. Emerson spent as the resident technical director at PanFare '76, an outdoor theatre in Richmond. There, he designed the production of DARK AT THE TOP OF THE STAIRS, and he manned the construction of WEST SIDE STORY, and A RAISIN IN THE SUN.

Commuting daily from Richmond where he and his wife, Nancy, live, Mr. Emerson is "amazed at how slowly traffic moves" in Farnville. He admits that the college community is a "friendly place," but he was initially and remains amazed at the slower pace of Farnville as a whole.

Along with the speech and introduction to Drama classes, Mr. Emerson is teaching what was once called "Play Production" and is now called "Stagecraft." It is designed for the freshman drama major and those students certifying in drama to acquire practical experience in Set Construction. Currently the stagecraft class is building the tri-leveled set which Mr. Emerson has designed for the upcoming Longwood Player's Production of TWELFTH NIGHT.

Mr. Emerson will design all of the Longwood Player's Major Productions, including THE GLASS MENAGERIE, which will be presented in early November. Although plans are still incomplete, Mr. Emerson says that he hopes for the set to be fragmented, or without walls, and primarily using levels and platforms.

In the meantime, the construction of the TWELFTH NIGHT set goes on, thanks to the stagecraft class, and of course, Mr. Emerson.

Day Center Provides Child Care, Learning Experiences For Students

By LISA SMITH

The Day Care Center in Farnville was founded in August of 1975 when a group of interested and concerned parents saw the need for a type of child care for the children of the community other than a strictly babysitting service. From this interest grew the reality of a Day Care Center that would offer a learning environment plus the satisfaction of competent care being given to the children.

Dr. Richard J. Aubry, Administrator for the Day Care Center and professor of Education at Longwood College, commented that there has been "basically very good response." Businesses of the community of Farnville have donated financial assistance, and several companies have donated equipment and supplies. The Day Care Center is licensed by the State of Virginia, and meets all the health regulations set up. The Center serves a hot meal once a day with two snacks during the day. The center also requires minimal tuition and holds fund raising activities such as dances, doughnut sales, and raffles in an effort to meet the expenses.

In the past the Panhellenic Council of Longwood College has sponsored the Day Care Center, and contributed their time and energies to help the Center with anything that might need to be done. Two girls from various sororities went each week, and not only kept the children occupied but also made curtains and painted for them. This is one of the assets of a center of this kind being so close to a college. "One of the ways we've improved is having Longwood College there", stated Dr. Aubry. It gives students a chance to try out new learning centers, observe child behavior, and most especially a chance to gain experience working with children of all races and backgrounds. "The Center provides a vehicle for children to learn how to work together", says Dr. Aubry "Children at this age don't really know the meaning of prejudice". This is clearly reflected in a visit to the Center. These children are learning to play together, learn together, and share many of the same common interests. For the staff worker, the student volunteer, or a visitor to the Center, this is a rewarding sight.

Jeanne Schiel, a Longwood student and Day Care Center worker, says this opportunity provides a "good chance to work with kids". The Center is unique in that the situation is "not an ideal situation." These children do not have many of the advantages common to higher socioeconomic families, and the work is more of a challenge. The predominant age group for the Center is 3, 4 and 5 year olds; however it is open to children of 2 through 7 years of age. Dr. Aubry commented on the fact that for this age group "simple routines like walking in line, sharing paints and crayons, and eating with others" are some of the main functions stressed.

One of the prime supporters of the Center is its Director, Mrs. Bobbie Scott. Mrs. Scott is dedicated to helping meet these children's needs and is concerned with not only working with the children, but in keeping the parents informed. Mrs. Scott recently attended workshops in Stanford, Conn. to better prepare her to fulfill the needs of both parent and child.

Dr. Aubry also commented that he has been "pleased and gratified at the cooperation of both the community and Longwood College." For him it has meant a lot of hard work, but the knowledge gained in the operation of a business will be invaluable.

The center is only one example of the way in which joined forces and positive thinking on the part of people such as Dr. Aubry, Mrs. Scott, and members of the community can turn an idea into a worthwhile and beneficial cause. Children are one of the best possible reasons for pulling resources together and investing time and interest.

Republican Club Plans Activities Campaign

By LISA SMITH

The College Republican Club has started off this year with a number of plans. According to Karen Kimbrough, Chairman, the purpose of the Club is to "function as a Republican Party on campus, to assist students in voter registration, and to campaign both for the college and community". The most immediate purpose is to get the students to register and be able to vote on an absentee ballot. Plans are being made to set up tables in the New Smoker for absentee ballots.

There are several issues that the Republican Party signifies that students should be aware of.

They are in favor of private enterprise as well as a limited government. By this most of the power will be strongest in the local area while the Federal government will have less power. Generally the Republican Party operates on a conservative level.

While the Club does represent a political facet on campus, it is not "all serious business," says Karen. They plan to have guest speakers, picnics and an opportunity for students to get to meet others. The Club simply gives the student a chance to be "playing a role in your government" states Karen.

Since the work is volunteer, the time spent working in the club is up to the individual. The club will work however, with the Senior Campaign in the area for the Presidential election and for future elections. The meetings are open, welcoming any and every interested student. This year promises to be a very exciting one, so think about your government.

Study Seminars Emphasize Tips

By SHERYLE SMITH

Improving study habits is to be the purpose of the How To Study Seminars being conducted by Dr. Lehmann, Dr. Harris, and Dean Swann.

Anyone who wishes to improve his study habits is encouraged to attend these seminars in Hiner B-4 during the following dates. Beginning on Monday, October 4, the seminars will be held through November 11.

Mondays: October 4-November 8 — 2:00-3:00

Tuesdays: October 5-November 9 — 3:15-4:15

Thursdays: October 7-November 11 — 4:00-5:00

Anyone wishing to attend these seminars should sign the list on the hall bulletin board across from the office of the Dean of Students. There will be a maximum of 25 students per group. If anyone wishes to attend these seminars, but has a conflicting schedule, please see Dr. Jan Harris.

Good study habits will be emphasized. Also, the methods of note taking, outlining, and reviewing will be introduced. In addition, proper techniques will be given for writing a research paper and preparing for an exam. Dean Harris said, "Tips from these seminars will enable students to put together a good study program." By attending these seminars, a student can learn how to study productively.

Dr. Harris also urges anyone who needs help or wants to improve his study skills to attend these seminars.

Hockey Team Splits Opening Week

By DIANNE HARWOOD

Well folks, another hockey season is in full swing and I for one am excited. The girls opened their season Monday against Lynchburg and they looked sharp. New uniforms made our million dollar team like a million and one. And they played like it. By the way, they won, 4-1.

Coach Sally Custer was pleased with her squads first performance. "Experience was one of our key factors. The girls are seasoned players and work well together. The team displayed a special cohesiveness—that which comes from good conditioning and the universal desire to win".

Forward Terry Voit was up to her old antics again by scoring all four Longwood goals. Terry is a very fluid player; the type of person you like to watch in home movies (in reverse). Another big plus for the LC squad was the return of junior Scottie Capehart. After sitting out last season, Scottie has returned to her center halfback position and is the backbone of the defense.

But the game is not all peaches and cream. The Longwood squad lost their second contest to Westhampton 1-0. An improved Westhampton squad outmaneuvered the lagging LC offense and scored twelve minutes into the second half. Longwood just could not substantiate a drive and penetrate into Westhampton's striking circle. But we all have bad days. An impressive performance was displayed by goalie Jane Grier who stopped eighteen shots on goal.

As an extra feature, two new ideas will be incorporated into future hockey articles. One will be a player spotlight. Each week one player will be totally embarrassed by a report on her excellent performance the preceding week. The second feature is called "The Sally Custer Quip". Coach Custer, being of unusually humorous wit, has agreed to come up with one catchy phrase each week. Are we ready? Here we go. The first quip: "Valley Forge might have frozen the Washington brigade, but the Longwood Legion's ability to fire up will negate history this November of '76".

Speaking of being in a mood of high exhilaration, I must say that I have never been more excited and more impressed with a junior varsity squad. For fourteen girls who have never seen each other or played as a team, I think they deserved a second look. They played with the maturity of an established squad; they abolished the Lynchburg team 8-0. Junior Linda Baunier scored four of those goals, followed by Debbie Kinzel with two, Linda Crovatt and Kim Furbee with one each. Says Coach Custer: "I was extremely pleased with their performance. This was the first time most of the girls have played our particular system, and they kept their cool".

The JV's also took a 3-1 decision over the Westhampton JV's. Suzanne Ash, Linda Crovatt, and Debbie Kinzel each tallied a goal for Longwood. "The second team has great potential," states Ms. Custer, "each person is so versatile; each one could play a number of positions". I think they will do just fine.

Legislative Board Meeting Held

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS

The Legislative Board met briefly on September 20 in South Cunningham. Emily Burgwin opened the committee reports by explaining that Student Activities Fees Committee is not a Legislative Board Committee, but it is a committee of the college. Legislative Board is to recommend students to work on the committee only. This is the first of the reports to come from the Ad Hoc Committee on Committee Reform and By-laws.

Susan Smith administered the oath of loyalty to Sally Graham, the new senior representative. Mary Bruce Hazelgrove volunteered to be Legislative Board's Oktoberfest Booth chairman. The October 4 meeting of Legislative Board will meet in Cox Parlor at the regular 7:00 meeting time.

RECOMMENDATIONS

FACULTY-STUDENT-STAFF RETREAT

August 27, 1976

1. The College remain approximately the same size. Strive to continue the reputation of a good, small, general purpose, coeducational college.
2. Continuation of the personal approach as far as relationship between faculty-staff and students.
3. A new physical education facility is desperately needed for instructional and recreational-athletic purposes.
4. A career counseling center on campus in conjunction with the Placement Office. Publicize job opportunity trends, especially in non-teaching areas.
5. Security of library books:
 - A. Have duplicating machine in the Reserve Room of the library. Hopefully, this will eliminate theft and defacing of reserved books and periodicals.
 - B. Bring the problem to the attention of the students.
 - C. Station someone at the door to check all books as people leave the library.
6. Available facilities for securing rooms between suites in the residence halls.
7. Student participation in College fund raising before graduation.
8. Encourage students to have patience with the new continuous seating procedure in the dining hall in order to give it a chance to be successful.
9. Complete plans for the Leadership Seminar for interested students.
10. Promote acceptance of coeducation.

Golfer's Have 3-1 Record

On Monday, September 20, the Longwood Golf team participated in a tri-match with William and Mary and Madison on their own green. Longwood beat Madison 11½-½ and William and Mary 12-2½. This made the Longwood team's season record stand now as 3 wins and 1 loss. The point total to date is Longwood 39 and Opponents 15.

The points earned by the Longwood golfers on Monday were Nan Patterson with 4 points, Deanna Vanvey with 4 points, Meg Baskerville with 6 points, Becky Webb with 4½ points and Gail Pollard with 3 points. The low scorer for the entire game was Becky Webb with a score of 87.

The team will play Randolph-Macon Women's College on Monday, September 27 and travel to Staunton to participate in the annual Mary Baldwin Invitation Golf Tournament on Friday, October 1.

I.A.A. Football Fun

On Wednesday, September 22, there was the strange sight on the Longwood campus of a number of young men and ladies trotting down a field with rags sticking out of their pockets trying to catch an oval pigskin ball. Actually this event was nothing unusual; it was just the first game of the IAA Flag Football Intramurals between participating dormitories and sororities.

Two games were held on Wednesday. The results were that French beat South Cunningham and Zeta Tau Alpha defeated Main Cunningham. On Thursday, there was one game in which North Cunningham lost to Cox.

So far two forfeits have occurred when the teams have failed to show up for the games. On Wednesday, neither Alpha Gamma Delta nor Tabb I appeared and on Thursday, Tabb III and Frazer were absent.

More games have been scheduled throughout the week. A schedule is posted in the New Smoker telling what teams are playing and when the games will be held.

First Volleyball Match Won

The J.V. Volleyball team had its first match Thursday, September 23 in Her Gym against Franklin County High School. There were three games played. Franklin County was the victor in the first, hard fought game with the score of 15 to 9. The second and third games were won decisively by the Longwood team. Respectively, the scores were 15 to 1 and 15 to 5.

The next volleyball game scheduled is at home against Eastern Mennonite at 6:30 p.m. Show your support and enthusiasm by coming to the game.

First Horse Show To Be Held Oct. 15

By LORI MORGAN

The Longwood Lancers Riding club and team will hold their first Horse Show for this year, on Friday, October 15. The show will be held at Hampden Stables and will begin at 2:00. There will be a state car to take all interested students out to the stables every 45 minutes. It will be leaving the automotive center, adjacent to Barlow Field, starting at 1:45.

All Longwood students are encouraged to enter the show, if you know how to ride; if not, we would like you still to come out to watch and to show your support for the College and for the students that are entered in the show. In order for you to compete, you must pre-register. There will be someone in the New Smoker from 12:30 to 3:00 on Sept. 27, 28, 29, 30, Oct. 1, 11, 12, 12, 14 so that you can pre-register for the show.

I. Pleasure for Beginners — (Beginner walk, trot) — judged on smoothness of gaits, control and attention of mount — manageability and disposition of mount.

II. Pleasure for Advanced Beginners — (Advanced walk, trot) — same as No. 1.

III. Pleasure for Intermediates (Beginner walk, trot, canter) — same as No. 1.

IV. Pleasure for Advanced — (walk, trot, canter) — same as No. 1.

V. Equitation for Beginners — judged on good seat and hands, general management and control of mount. Horsemanship of rider, manner and performance of mount to count.

V. Equitation for Advanced

Beginners — same as No. 5
VII. Equitation for Intermediates — same as No. 5
VIII. Equitation for Advanced — same as No. 5

IX. Go as you please for Beginners — judged on ability to maintain the gait and way of going. Conformation does not count.

X. Go as you please for Advanced Beginners — same as No. 9

XI. Go as you please for Intermediates — same as No. 9
XII. Go as you please for Advanced — same as No. 9

XIII. Pairs for Intermediates and Advanced only — judged on general management and control of mount at a walk, trot, and canter. Three pairs in ring at one time.

XIV. Reserve Champion and Champion for Beginners — To be determined by points: Blue — 7 points; Red — 5 points; Yellow — 4 points; White — 3 points; Pink — 2 points; Green — 1 point.

XV. Reserve Champion and Champion for Advanced Beginners — same as No. 14

XVI. Reserve Champion and Champion for Intermediates — same as No. 14

XVIII. Reserve Champion and Champion for Advanced — same as No. 14

Those who want to enter the Horse Show, must remember to pre-register. The Longwood Lancers look forward to seeing you all at the Horse Show on October 15.

The Lancers' first Horse Show for this season is at Averett, on Friday, October 8, and we wish you all luck at that show.

the sororities here concerning their national chapter regulations on this subject. He also said that all sorority representatives would have to be present at the upcoming meetings before anything about drinking policies in chapter rooms could be decided.

President Willett summed up the press conference in these words, "We're talking about the process of change. We've changed to co-education, we've changed dining hall procedures, we've changed the I.D. system, we've changed registration." He concluded by saying that sometimes we've been chided for being too slow to make any changes and then again for making too many changes too fast. Whatever is the case, we'll have to examine our situation and come to acceptable terms with ourselves.

vetoes reflect this. He sharply criticized the Congress for voting itself additional funds, for its large number of employees, and questioned its morality.

In addition to economics, the candidates covered the topic of amnesty. Carter favors a pardon for Viet Nam draft evaders, while delicately defining the difference between a pardon and amnesty. He remarked that amnesty infers that the action in question was right, whereas a pardon does not make this kind of judgment, but just grants forgiveness.

Ford continued to support his program of conditional amnesty, where the evaders are given amnesty in return for voluntary work in the nation's behalf. He also defended his pardon of Nixon for his alleged involvement in Watergate, declaring that "Mr. Nixon has been penalized enough by his resignation and his disgrace."

Both Carter and Ford support mandatory energy conservation measures and further research into development of other types of energy: coal, solar, and the like. Ford was quick to point out that he is the first president to put out a comprehensive report on energy; Carter criticized the structure of the energy commission.

The next debate is scheduled for October 6 in San Francisco.

Presidential Debates — Nixon-Kennedy Parallel

By LISA TURNER

To most critics, the most important thing a Presidential debate contributes is an insight into the personality and images of the candidates. Some historians attribute Richard M. Nixon's loss in the 1960 election to the image he projected in his first debate with the then Senator John F. Kennedy. They claim that even though Nixon was the more talented of the two at the art of debate, he lost it because of his poor appearance on television. He appeared nervous, unshaven and fatigued next to the more youthful and relaxed Kennedy.

In addition, Kennedy seemed to grasp better the importance of the media in influencing the voters; thus, he spoke more to the audience than to his opponent.

The Ford campaign committee saw these debates as an important means of squelching doubts as to Ford's leadership capabilities. (In a pre-debate survey, a substantial number of those polled indicated that they were worried about Ford's purported lack of leadership qualities. It may be relieving to his committee to know that he has recently picked up several points, but not necessarily because of his image in the debates.)

At the same time, Carter forces were concerned about their candidate's tendency to cloud the issues, and appear too vague. Some voters have been heard to remark that Carter is a little too cool and impersonal in answering questions on policy, and that he has a tendency to appear somewhat "holier than thou", although his recent revelations to Playboy magazine may have changed that.

All in all, it was very hard to decide whether either side had come up with an outright victory in the first debate. Both candidates showed a very good command of statistics, and rhetoric. Ford definitely displayed his talent for remembering facts and figures, if he dwelt a little too long on them, it was probably to exhibit this quality to the fullest.

One thing that is certain is that neither candidate intends to become a "victim of themedia." While this is admirable, a viewer can only hope that the next debate deals a little more with fact, a little less with image.

People writing letters to the editor should not use the Rotunda as vehicle for escape. Problems can best be solved in face-to-face encounters. Remember also that letters must be signed by all people involved in writing the letter.

Art Department Is Featuring The Weinstein Collection In Bedford

By CONWAY THOMPSON

The Art Department of Longwood College is featuring the collection of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Weinstein of Roanoke in the Bedford Gallery from September 20 to October 17.

The exhibition reveals the joys of collecting and the obvious pleasure the Weinsteins take in their growing family of art. For this is a family, a personal group chosen with love.

If any main trend predominates, it is surrealism or fantasy, often laced with humor. It is also predominantly a collection of Virginia artists, who hold up well against such "names" as New Yorker Peter Agostini.

The tour de force of the collection and an oil painting of the new surrealism school is Nancy Witt's "Self-Portrait." Startlingly realistic and uncompromising in technique, it shows the artist from behind, contemplating a canvas also seen from behind. It is a painting which explores something of that land frequented by the French artist Magritte, but shows this artist in her maturity—revealing more and more of that intense, lonely, and personal battle which any artist dealing with the subjective world must fight to clarify.

The Weinsteins show a love of nature rendered in painting and prints, but nature more suggested than totally exploited as in the blue road mysteriously disappearing into hills by Harriet Stokes, the tiny untitled landscape by Lyn Yeatts, or the double circle motif of trees and grass by Barbara Bishop. A response to the innocent and naive shows in their choice of Charles Hewitt's "John and Mary Lived Here" or Maryann Harmon's "Mountains." Victor Huggins' layered hills beneath a great space of blue lend serenity, while Peyton Klein's "April 15" bursts with color and the germinal feel that Gorky often achieved. Betty Tisinger's work in oil stick shares this happy riot of complementary color.

It is a happy collection, filled with humor, especially in the sculptured pieces. One cannot grieve as Kenneth Beer's Daphne metamorphoses into a tree. Peter Wreden's braided steel figure may be a Don Quixote off to tilt at windmills, but what splendid plumes and saber. Jerry Krebs' exotic bird is utterly astonished at the strange egg it's laid and wedged among its three feet, but what fun for children (all ages)! And Agostini's plaster piece, cast from life, shows two male hands holding on eternally to plump and rounded forms. (He used to blow up balloons, dip them in plaster, then puncture the balloon with a pin, leaving the plaster form.)

Kent Ipsen is represented by one glass piece, not as large or formally controlled as some of his blown vessels, but notable for exquisite control of color in a difficult medium—iridescent blues, greens, and purples. Carol Summers, a nationally known printmaker, is seen in the Weinstein Collection through a tiny copper and brass sculpture, a cheery sun over rainbow, which could be worn as jewelry.

Clifford Earl is riding high with two marvelous men in their flying machines, one called "The Spirit of Elmont." They may be bound for Richmond to bombard the capitol with marshmallows before the cock crows.

In this three-dimensional group Emily Galumbeck's Indian pot and Robert Crane's raku pot march to a different drum entirely, each in its way realizing something archaic, earth wrenched, and tragic.

One of the strangest fantasy works, a pastel by Jim Yeatts called "Spinx, Blue Bearded" suggests a dream of voluptuous nudes revolving about a Bluebeard, content to view the colorful richness of it all. Jack Coughlin's Dream Circus may evolve from a similar male fantasy.

Pop Art might be said to be recalled by Clayton Pond's serigraph "Flower Man" bouncing with complementary reds and greens. The subtle "Pollination" of Jone Plenkowski cools its message through her sensitive use of white space.

One could continue—the fine lithograph from Terry Hirst's Duchamp series, "Duchamp Plays Chess with Rembrandt in the Bathtub," is a choice print, in tonal quality, spatial treatment of chess-board, tub and figures, and tongue-in-cheek humor. In this one Rembrandt knows he's bound to lose.

It is a fine show of do your own thing collecting. Only a few works cling to an art movement, per se. The Weinsteins have revealed themselves to be as independent, strong willed, witty, and charming as the artists whose works they have selected.

Gallery hours are 9 a.m. to 12 noon and 1 to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, and 2 to 6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. The public is cordially invited to come and enjoy.

TWELFTH NIGHT Opening Wednesday-

Cast Ready For Creation Of The Theatre

By TRISH HOWLAND

And the Great Directors said "Let there be actors, lights, sets, costumes, props, make-up, sound and publicity," and then it came to be...the creation of the theatre.

The most recent "creation of the theatre" available for all Longwood students to experience is the opening of the Longwood Players Production of Shakespeare's TWELFTH NIGHT, October 6th, Wednesday night in Jarman Auditorium. The performances will run October 6-9 at 8:00 each evening.

Four and a half weeks of rehearsals have readied the cast for the opening, and the most recent additions to the production are all the technical aspects. The set, created and construction by Mr. Ben Emerson, establishes the setting, obvious to the audience the Elizabethan locale. The lighting which Anne Saunders will provide, establishes the mood of this comic farce. She will provide many beautiful moments in the play, with only special lighting effects can create.

An unusual approach to this Elizabethan comedy will be apparent in the costuming for the play, which will be contemporary in style. Most of the cast will be wearing jumpsuits adequate to their character.

Perhaps you have already noticed the creativity in the publicity. Approximately a week ago, over a hundred letters were posted on boards all over campus, addressed to: "...the unknown below'd." Sorry, you must come to Jarman to find out who it is.

We, the Longwood Players, cast and crews of TWELFTH NIGHT, would like to extend to you a most welcome invitation to our "creation to the Theatre."

All four performances are being dedicated to Dr. Herbert R. Blackwell.

No words can pay adequate tribute to this man. Dr. Blackwell, always with a smile, has been a way of life at Longwood. He put students first over any amount of paperwork and was never too busy to sit beside you and talk about any and everything. He has solved many a problem, and brightened innumerable days. His honesty and one-to-one personal contact will always be treasured by Longwood College. He has done so much — and asked only friendship in return.

Thank you, Dr. Blackwell. . .

An Open

Letter To The

Board Of Visitors . . .

This is to tell you about a matter that concerns many students. I assume that you have received a copy of last week's Rotunda and have read the editorial concerning the status of the student activities fees committee. A number of students involved feel strongly that the committee should be a part of legislative board in order to best represent and serve the student body in distributing their activities fees. As I stated in my editorial, it technically is a committee of the college. For the past several years, however, it has functioned under legislative board, with its members and advisors being elected. This year the committee in my opinion is the most respected and effective one on campus. Its members for the most part have served on it for several years and are familiar with its workings. They work well together, and I feel that they sincerely stand for the best interests of Longwood students. The majority of those involved in student government feel very strongly against the possibility of the committee losing student input, and they fear that this would result from an appointed committee of the college.

Longwood's activities fees committee is one of the few in the state that is student oriented. It would be a shame to change it. After all, it seems logical that there should be major student input into the distribution of student money into student organizations. This is not to say that an activities fees committee of the college appointed by the dean would not be effective. Many are afraid, however, that a new committee comprised of people unfamiliar with the situations would cause it to lose some of its credibility. The present members, along with their advisors, have put much time and effort into an extremely important committee. It functions so well that few criticisms ever evolve.

What can the students of Longwood College do to preserve the committee as it is now? It seems pointless to revise a committee that is so definitely doing its job so capably. If the committee members didn't bother to dig to find answers, it would be understandable to seek a change. This is not the case. Who should students talk with in order to alleviate their concern? There seems to be a lack of communication between the administration and student organizations, not only the student activities fees committee. This lack becomes evident when students work hard for a change only to see it defeated in the final channels, and when new changes that concern students occur almost overnight and basically without student knowledge and input. Granted, many colleges never involve their students in policy-making and carrying through, but Longwood has been different. We are noted for our student oriented government. Why now is there a possibility of changing a major committee from student directed into administrative appointed? There is a degree of pressure coming from many sides in many directions, causing indirect questions and answers. Simple, honest, and direct one-to-one communication is needed, and the activities fees committee would be the perfect place to start. Students want it to be a legislative board committee, run by students for students in the primary interests of students. The committee is ready to accept this responsibility, and students are ready to give it to them. What can we do?

SAFC Reply

Dear Editor and Student Body:

We, the now active Student Activities Fees Committee, would like to express our thanks to Ellen Cassada, Rotunda editor, for her support of the committee's position in last week's editorial.

In the last two years, Student Activities Fees Committee has spent many hours constructing an efficient commit. We have been functioning as a committee of Legislative Board comprised of members elected by Legislative Board on the basis of their interest in the financial affairs of the many organizations on campus. We have been fortunate to have students and advisors who were both active in their position on the committee and equally interested in their work with the committee. Each advisor has played a vital part in the development of the committee and we would like to take this time to express our appreciation for their sincere interest and their active participation. The advisors of the committee are Mr. I.B. Dent, Dean Swann, Dr. Sandra Brell, Mr. George Stonikinis, and Mrs. Kidder. Our major concern of being a committee of the college is losing student input into our membership, therefore, possibly losing proper channeling of student fees. We hope that through discussion and cooperation on all sides we will be able to reach a workable compromise that will satisfy both sides. We have requested that Dean Wells meet with the committee to discuss this matter. We would like to thank the student body and organizational treasurers for their support. We are open to any suggestions at any time.

Various Topics Discussed By D. H. Committee

By ANITA RIVARD

The Dining Hall Committee met Wednesday, September 29; various topics were discussed, including the choice of entrees, the upcoming food preference survey, and other general concerns.

It was noted that there has been no choice of entrees during the last half hour of dinner. This problem should be alleviated as soon as Dining Hall personnel evaluate data from the first month's menu cycle and plan for future meals.

The question was raised concerning students who cannot eat certain foods for medical or religious reasons; this led to a discussion of meal tickets, which would allow students to eat only the meals they choose in the Dining Hall. The meal ticket system would not be feasible for Longwood at this time, one reason being that there are not adequate kitchen facilities in the dorms for students to prepare meals. In addition, the present system is less expensive overall for the student.

Any alumni planning to be on campus and wishing to take meals in the dining hall should contact the Alumni Association prior to that time; meal tickets for alumni are provided at the discretion of the Association.

Food preference surveys are being planned by the Committee for distribution in the near future. Students are urged to participate in this survey, which will aid the dining hall staff in the preparation of menus.

It was announced that ARA-Slater has acquired a new executive chef who will soon begin his duties at Longwood.

Any problems or suggestions concerning the dining hall should be directed toward the committee. Committee chairman is Carol Lewis, vice-chairman of Residence Board. Other representatives are: Freshman-Pam Spangler; Sophomore-Ellie Kennedy; Junior-Anne Hunt; Senior-Sally Chewing; Hostess-Cheryl Bailey; Waitress-Rosie Waddell. Also working with the committee are Miss Doris Carey and Mr. Frank Klassen.

Dining hall committee meetings are held on a monthly basis. Meeting times will be posted in the dorms and interested students are encouraged to attend.

Tuck, Bruno And Shelton Selected To Lead 1976 Oktoberfest Events

By SANDY HAGA

Oktoberfest is just around the corner and all three meisters are hard at work. The festivities start the 15th.

Becky Tuck, the mitten-meister, will cut the ribbon, opening the Midway on Saturday. She will supervise the judging of the booths and will present the booth awards on Saturday night.

Rennie Bruno, feistmeister, will work with the festival chairman, Michelle Nealon, in presiding over the entire week end. Rennie will also preside over the skits. Along with her other duties, she will work in the information booth at the Midway.

Shelby Shelton is geistmeister, chosen because she is a senior who symbolizes the spirit and intelligence which lies behind Oktoberfest. Her duties include attending various skit and usher practices along with the other meisters. She will preside over the hockey game, introduce color rush runners, and is in charge of selling tickets for lunch and dinner.

Shelby will also present a good Luck Hex to each class chairman for the Reds and the Greens. One side of the Hex denotes good luck and success to the class during the year's activities. The other side symbolizes the spirit of unity felt during Oktoberfest. Both the red and green colors are represented on the hex, but blue predominates. There is a shamrock in the center of the hex.

Shelby pointed out that for the first time the Longwood band will perform at Oktoberfest Mr. Darrell Harbaum will conduct the band. A fan fare will be played by two trumpets when the ribbon is cut opening the midway.

Shelby said she hopes the guys will participate with the same spirit the girls have shown in the past. The skit participants, klowns, and ushers are hard at work. Those involved in preparations for Oktoberfest are enthusiastic and spirited. Hopefully, many more students will become involved and excited about what promises to be a fantastic Oktoberfest.

Millions For Funds Still Untouched

The Bureau's Director Dr. Robert J. Boileau says, "Millions of Dollars originally set up in foundations to aid students in varied fields of higher education goes untouched each year. Qualified students do not know of the funds and in many cases have never heard of the foundation or foundations. Hundreds of foundations have been set up at the request of some now deceased well-meaning person or persons with direction that among the foundation's purposes is or shall be to aid and assist men and women in all fields of higher education. There are now and have been administrators of these foundations who find security in their position as administrator or director to play down the paying out of funds in fellowship or scholarship grants thus insuring to themselves a nice fat annual fee to administer a do nothing foundation." Dr. Boileau further stated, "It is the Bureau's hope to make contact with many qualified students and to put many foundations on notice that their aid will be requested by worthy students and that failure on the part of foundations to respond will be reported to the Internal Revenue Service and their tax exempt status questioned."

Longwood's Head Residents- Who Needs Them- We Do

By DEBBIE MOUL

The hall is quiet and peaceful. Rumor has it that the boy's floor nearby is planning to raid. Your friend and you lurk stealthily in the shadows armed with powder, shaving cream and other legal weapons. There is a sound at the end of the hall. You step back, breathless, as you watch the door gradually open. Three figures walk in and the battle is underway. Within minutes, it's over and you stand back, exasperated, as you watch the boys dash swiftly down the hall. The floor is slightly visible amidst the shaving cream and powder. Girls watch in amazement. Within minutes, your Head Resident appears at the end of the hall. She neither shouts nor scolds, but the bewildered expression on her face asks what happened. Your friend and you explain and she listens intently. She understands. This is what makes your Head Resident and her assistants so special. They understand and identify with you, and we need this.

It takes a lot of energy and endurance to maintain a job for twenty-four hours a day. You must communicate well with others and have a feel for what you're doing. This is important if you want to be successful as a Head Resident.

After speaking with the Head Residents of coed dorms, I've concluded that fondness for young people is a primary reason for wanting this position. Each of the Head Residents that I spoke with had taught or had worked in a school and this in turn has helped them in understanding a student's needs. After teaching high school seniors, Ike Stoneberger, Assistant Head Resident of Tabb, French and South Ruffner, feels that is familiar with the problems of young people. Carl Wesley, assistant in Frazer, emphasized this when he said that he wouldn't "turn his head on the students." They need his respect as well as he needs theirs. Mrs. Tuttle, Head Resident in Main Cunningham feels that her girls aren't problems, but they may have problems and she is there to help. After working at Stratford College for seven years, Mrs. Marshall, Head Resident in Frazer, says that she really enjoys working with young people. These are few of the people that we students can relate to.

As far as the school going coed, Longwood graduate and temporary Head Resident of South Cunningham, Wanda Trent thinks it's great. Each of the other Head Residents and assistants seem to agree. They feel that the interaction between males and females is good and the transition in the change has gone smoothly.

Mrs. Ordogh, Head Resident of Tabb, French and South Ruffner, is the one of the sweetest persons that I've ever met and I know that if I needed someone to talk to, she would be there. Each of the Head Residents and assistants on campus is here to help us and we should be thankful that they put themselves out for us.

Who needs them...we do.

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS

Legislative Board met September 27 in Wheeler Parlor. Susann Smith called the meeting to order. Emily Burgwyn announced that committee sign-up sheets are on the bulletin board in the New Smoker. She told the representatives to encourage other students to sign up. Legislative Board committees include Swap Shop, Help-out, Elections, Organization Evaluations and Editor of the Handbook committees. College committees posted for sign-up are Academic Policies, Library, Founder's Day and Bookstore committees.

Turning to old business, the press conference of Sept. 21 was discussed. It was suggested that from now on press conference be scheduled for Thursdays, if at all possible. This way the topics for discussion could be printed in Tuesday's copy of The Rotunda in time for students to review them before attending the press conference.

Emily Burgwyn announced that a contest to determine a nickname for Longwood's sports teams will be upcoming in November. This contest will be sponsored by the Intercollegiate Athletic Association (I.A.A.). All students are eligible to participate in the contest. More information about this contest will be seen in later editions of The Rotunda.

Susann Smith said that she, along with Ruth Bourne and Ellen Cassada, will be attending the Peaks of Otter Conference on October 6. This will be a leadership conference and Susann commented, "We hope to get a lot of good ideas out of it."

Mary Bruce Hazelgrove said that she would have Orientation Evaluation results at the next meeting.

Also at the next meeting, Legislative Board will be voting on a Residence Board proposal. The proposal has to do with the elimination of ratification of Open House hours, found on page 66 of the Student Handbook. The proposal would replace ratification with automatic acceptance of these Open House hours for all residence hall from the very beginning of the school year:

Friday.....5:00 p.m.-1:30 a.m.
Saturday.....1:00 p.m.-1:30 a.m.
Sunday.....2:00 p.m.-10:00 p.m.

This proposal intends to do away with the shorter Open House hours while waiting to vote on the above hours, since every hall in every dorm has passed these maximum hours since the ratification process was set up.

The October 11 meeting of Legislative Board will meet in the Commons Room. Everyone is welcome at any of the meetings of Legislative Board.

Widespread Interest Found In Family History

A recent graduate of the U.S. Department of Archives & Institute for Genealogical Research, has put together a Family History "Starter Kit" for persons interested in delving into their own family's history. Phaon Sundiata of Annapolis, Maryland who put together this Kit originally for Afro-Americans found, as a result of appearing on several TV programs, that the response from European-Americans (or white Americans) was as great as that from black Americans. Because of this turn of events, Mr. Sundiata developed a "Starter Kit" for European-Americans also. It was necessary to compose two different Kits because of the difference in research techniques that must be used when searching for family documents recorded on a governmental level prior to the year 1865.

Mr. Sundiata who, himself, is researching the "Barksdale" line of his family's ancestry has found that the original Barksdales who settled in Virginia were from England and that in addition to being a prominent land and slave-owning clan they also enjoyed a reputation as being a charitable and energetic folk. "worthy of the trust of the people." Sundiata's great-grandfather worked on the plantation of William Peter Barksdale of Halifax County, Va., and it is this family's records that must be sought next.

Any Americans interested in tracing their family's history may receive some helpful hints by writing Mr. Sundiata at Eastport P.O. Box 3063, Annapolis, Md. 21403.

Shakespeare To Be Shown Here In Franco Zeffirelli Style

By DONNA HASKY

What do you mean "Shakespeare is boring"? You've obviously never seen Shakespeare done Franco Zeffirelli style. Before you get too upset though, your big chance is coming this week. The Zeffirelli Film Festival, consisting of "Romeo and Juliet", "The Taming of the Shrew", and "Brother Sun, Sister Moon" will be shown in Bedford Auditorium. Admission will be .50 for each showing.

Zeffirelli's unique style of directing has turned the classical "Romeo and Juliet" into a masterpiece. Says Films Incorporated, "It succeeds because the two leads are actually played by teenagers who give a truly convincing portrait of adolescents bursting with sexual hunger. For the first time the full potency of Shakespeare's star-crossed lovers seeking to escape a hostile adult world is felt." Zeffirelli has also updated another Shakespearean classic for contemporary audiences in "The Taming of the Shrew".

Zeffirelli depicts in his own style a story of youth against "the establishment" in "Brother Sun, Sister Moon". It's Zeffirelli's partly fictional-partly biographical story of a young man that returns home from war, leaves his father's wealth, and leads a band of joyful friars around the countryside.

The movies will be shown on the following dates in Bedford Auditorium:

Wednesday, October 6, 7:30 p.m., "Romeo and Juliet"

Thursday, October 7, 7:30 p.m., "Brother Sun, Sister Moon"

Friday, October 8, 7:30 p.m., "The Taming of the Shrew"

Sunday, October 10, 4:00 p.m., "The Taming of the Shrew"

Sunday, October 10, 8:00 p.m., "Romeo and Juliet"

Sunday, October 10, 8:00 p.m., "Brother Sun, Sister Moon"

Muriel Bach Portrays Lives Of Six Untimely Women Activists

Muriel Bach, America's leading exponent of one-woman theatre, presents a timely new show called, Lady, You're Rocking the Boat!

In 50 exhilarating minutes, Ms. Bach reveals intimate, witty insights into the lives of six women activists. Some are internationally famous. Others are little known or misunderstood.

They include Abigail Adams, wife of the second president of the United States and mother of the sixth; Catherine Greene, behind-the-scenes catalyst in the invention of the cotton gin; Lydia Pinkham, author of the first book on sex education; Eliza Young, Brigham Young's 27th wife, who helped outlaw polygamy; Gertrude Stein, avant-garde writer and mold-breaker; and Eleanor Roosevelt, humanitarian.

Ms. Bach, with fastidious timing and attention to detail, effects all costume and make-up changes on stage in an unbroken sequence.

She will appear in the Gold Room on Oct. 12 at 8:00 p.m.

About her professionalism, Wallace A. Bacon, Chairman of the Department of Interpretation at Northwestern University, has this to say: "Muriel Bach's show is a splendid example of the art of interpretation. She gives us finely sketched portraits of women who made their mark on history and she makes them all newly memorable today. The art which Miss Bach practices is demanding. She is one of the finest, and she works with consummate skill and exquisite good taste."

Also in Ms. Bach's repertoire are Ms. - Haven't We Met Before?, Madame, Your Influence is showing... because of her, and Two Lives.

She travels the United States each season performing for a multitude of groups; and when she is at home in Chicago long enough, she does an occasional radio or television commercial or even a film.

But she says her first love is performing for a live audience and "alive" you'll be as Muriel Bach unfolds her latest creation...LADY YOU'RE ROCKING THE BOAT!

Tickets are $1.00 for Longwood students and $2.00 for the general public.

Students, Residents Featured In Coffeehouse

By JO LEILI

On Thursday night, September 29th, the Student Union featured "Open Mike Night." At this time, the diverse talents of eight Longwood Students, and four local residents were displayed for a free admission price, with a "coffee house type" setting of red checkered table cloths, cokes, popcorn, and candles.

Opening the performance, complete with 12 string guitar was "Cricket" Melissa Crick, who entertained her audience with some "Laid back-mellowed out" tunes. Cricket picked an assortment of numbers such as "Anticipation" by Carly Simon, Fleetwood Mac's "Landslide", and "You won't matter anymore" by Linda Rondstadt.

Next, junior Diane Quinn, "the more classical part of the show," as she described herself, accompanied on piano by Laure York, executed "Where am I going?" from the musical "Sweet Charity." Other gifts to her Listeners included an "old Blue eyes special!" the sincere "You will be my music," "Stormy weather" by "My idol Liza Minnelli!", "The song that can only be sung when something traumatic happens to you!" "Maybe this time,!" and the magnificent "what I did for Love" from the Broadway Hit "A Chorus Line."

Robin Rowen followed, who with folk guitar sang an original "Standing free...with you, because I want to see that eagle gliding on the breeze!" The spiritual "Summertime" was then "felt" by Vanessa Dayne "...baby don't you cry..." On piano Andy Pittard rendered "Someday, kind of depressing...which reminds me of a girl I broke up with," and Elton John's "Benny and the Jets" from "Yellow Brick Road."

"Cowpalace" then starred as the voices of Tray Eppes and Dale Whitehead blended to tell the tale of a truck driver "Well six days on the road and I'm gonna make it home tonight!" A song about souvenirs, "how hard they are to get and easy to lose" was executed, followed by Steve Goodman's "City of New Orleans...good morning America how are ya?," say don't you know me I'm your native son!"

With a change of pace, Paulette Daniel sang an Elton John number "The greatest discovery...dedicated to all Little children who have a new Little brother," as she accompanied herself softly on piano. Also by Elton John, Paulette played "Tooken...an extremely quiet child, ...at St. Patrick's every Sunday, his brain just snapped...with tear filled eyes you killed!"

Combining their talents, Reeny Manley and Jacqui Singleton each first performed a solo, with Reeny's husky rendition of "Big Yellow Taxi" by Joni Mitchell. Jacqui after "fighting" with the mike (and winning!) donated her own original "Bits and Pieces...each morning brings a new sensation..." Their joint efforts included Jacqui's beautiful "Sweet Sunday...slip away...Look at the sky my darling...we've got time to fool around", and the calmed-down head music, "House at Pooh Corner."

Bringing the open mike to a close were Beau Elliot on bass fiddle, and Robyn Robbins, on 12-string guitar. A Paul Simon number about "a couple who could win a prize, they've been going at it all night long...I's about as destitute as I could be!", was followed by some Neil Young tunes.

S-UN Sponsors Trip To Fun-Filled Hawaii

By MAUREEN HANLEY

How would you like to spend part of your Christmas vacation in Hawaii and be the envy of your classmates when you return to Longwood with your golden brown tan? Well, this dream can become a reality for the sum of $399.

For this semester the Student Union is sponsoring an eight days-seven nights trip to Waikiki, Hawaii, with all major expenses included in the fee, except the meals. The plane will be departing from Washington on December 30th and returning on January 7th.

The reason for this excursion, stated Bettie Bass, "is that the Student Union is now a member of the Virginia College Travel Association, which plans two school sponsored trips during both Christmas and Spring Break. Every year this association tries to get all the Virginia colleges to participate, so Longwood is this year."

According to Bettie, "each school has one delegate which attends the Virginia College Travel Association Meeting, which is being held on October 30th, to vote on where the trips should be. During the meeting, each delegate votes for a place that she feels her fellow collegemates would enjoy traveling to, which is how Hawaii was selected."

Bettie also said that, "one of the association's major functions this year is to arrange for all the Virginia Colleges in a semester or quarter systems to have their Spring break at this time. So, that all the Colleges on the semester system will have their breaks at the same time, while the schools in the quarter system will have their's together. Thus, the various schools can have more interaction with each other because they will have the same vacation."

Even though the deadline for the first money deposit was due October 1st, Bettie is requesting an extension, thus more Longwood students can take advantage of this fun filled trip. So, if you enjoy the water, sun, excitement, and lots of fun, then you will not want to miss out on this rare experience.

T & M Express and Rosewater Blue, sponsored by the Student Union in conjunction with the Longwood Men's Association, entertained a near capacity crowd October 2 in the Gold Room. Comments after the concert invariably ranged from "Wow!" to "Fantastic!" to "When are they coming back?"

It was a dreary rainy night outside, but inside the atmosphere of the concert was sunny and fun. The audience quickly responded to the songs by hand-clapping, foot-stomping, singing-along, and whatever else the mood warranted. The small setting of the Gold Room gave the concert a rare intimacy that many events lack. There was an almost one-to-one relationship between the performers and the audience, which added to the enjoyment. Both groups appeared at ease and ready for good times. Their repertoires included a wide range of songs — from personal moody reflections to foot stomping bluegrass to good ole rock and roll. In short, there was something for everyone.

Thanks T & M Express and Rosewater Blue, for an enjoyable evening that allowed this campus to let its hair down, forget classes and hassles, and just have a good time. We look forward to seeing you again soon!

Brown, Bates, Brown And Adams Selected To Lead The Freshmen

By ANNE CARTER STEPHENS

Elected president was Pam "C.B." Brown. Her unusual name did not come from the current Citizens Band Craze but a box of cereal. "I participated in Project Upward Bond during the summer at Roanoke College. Every morning I'd eat Captain Crunch Cereal for breakfast, it's my favorite kind, especially Crunch Berry. Well, one day I dyed my hair red and some one called me the Crunch Berry Beast. The name's stuck ever since."

From Patrick Henry High School in Roanoke, she plans to be a Therapeutic Recreation Major. In high school, she was Choir President and very active in student government, so she feels prepared for her job.

"When I found out I was elected I jumped all the way up in the air. I think the most important thing to do now is to get all freshmen in activities, especially Oktoberfest. Support me. Come by 165 North Cunningham, if you want me for anything."

Jan Bates, from Culpeper High School in Culpeper, was elected V-P. She ran for office because she wanted to "help the freshman class make a great impression on Longwood." She said, "Officers are good but can't be expected to do everything, but I know the freshman class will support everything because we're a very spirited class."

Jan has been very active since she's been here. She's involved with B.S.U. and has been selected to join Tafari. Also she's been working on the script, music and set committee for Oktoberfest.

Secretary for the freshman class is Rhonda Brown. She's from Hopewell High School and plans to major in Elementary Education. She decided to run for office because she didn't want to sit around and do nothing.

Already she's in the red and white skit and on the Oktoberfest booth Committee, so she's really becoming involved.

In high school, she held offices in many different clubs and was a majorette for 4 years. She also won several essay contests. Her favorite pastime when she's not listening to music is twirling a baton and she likes to travel and meet people. "Please come by B11 French anytime" says Rhonda.

Elected treasurer was Jody Adams, from Henrico High School. She's been class Secretary and Treasurer in High School-plus other club offices so she's really experienced. She ran for treasurer because she felt she could straighten out and handle the freshman money situation because of the limited funds. She's also been in Oktoberfest since she's been here and plans to participate in intramural sports. She's a Physical Education Major and likes sports in general.

"I like Longwood and I've met lots of great people. The Freshman class has a long way to go but they can do what they have to do," says Jody.

Longwood History Professor Involved In Historical Film

By MARGARET HAMERSLEY

Dr. Charles Sydnor, an Assistant Professor of History at Longwood, is currently engaged in the completion of an historical film documentary. The film has been in the making for the past thirteen months, and upon final approval by the Public Broadcasting System, will be aired during the first of next year. Funded by the Longwood Foundation of Longwood College, the film documentary is a biography of Adolf Hitler.

Dr. Sydnor, who teaches several classes in German history revealed that his interest in the subject began while in high school; he remembered the documentary film, "The Twisted Cross" aired in 1956, as being the "first contemporary historical film making a significant impact on me, and that stimulated my interest in the subject." As a history major at Emory and Henry College, he confessed that "A lot of people accused me of being some sort of freak or something, or a little weird, because I was interested in German history and the Nazis." An advisor at Emory and Henry however, encouraged Dr. Sydnor to pursue his interests.

Attending graduate school at Vanderbilt, Dr. Sydnor concentrated in Modern European History, and German History since 1870. His Ph.D. dissertation concerned the topic of the S.S. The dissertation itself became the "original rough form" of his soon to be published book, Soldiers of Death: S.S. Death's Head Division, 1933-45. While working on his dissertation he was encouraged both to study the German language, and to study in Germany. The primary sources which he needed to complete his work were in German, and were located in German archives.

As a Fulbright Fellowship recipient, Dr. Sydnor traveled to Germany in July of 1968. Once in Germany, he attended Goethe Institute, an intensive language institute located in Soest, Westphalia. He recalled studying the language "eight hours a day, six days a week, for three months." A Fellowship stipulation required that he be enrolled as a regular graduate student in a German university. He was assigned to Albert-Ludwig University in Freiburg, the location of the main military archives which housed the necessary dissertation materials. After one year at Albert-Ludwig University, Dr. Sydnor returned to Vanderbilt in 1969 to complete his Ph.D.

Dr. Sydnor continued to travel back and forth to Germany pursuing research for his book. In Germany, in 1972, while searching for photographic materials for his book, he met the director of the photo archives who in turn informed him of the existence of a larger film archives, thus triggering his interest in German film.

In the spring of 1975, Mr. Al Moffett, a film producer at WWTB television station, learned of Dr. Sydnor's interests, and contacted him. Interested in producing a television documentary concerning World War II, Mr. Moffett proposed that he and Dr. Sydnor work together on a program.

Simultaneously, Dr. Sydnor was working on a short six minute program concerning the S.S. for channel 23. Dr. Sydnor and Mr. Moffett combined efforts to produce a thirty minute program on the S.S. for channel 12. Upon "favorable" response from viewers, the two decided to work on a longer program.

Dr. Sydnor recalled, "We mutually agreed that the best initial effort should be on a subject that we knew we could handle, a subject we knew enough film material would be available on, and a subject that would be in the area of my greatest strength as a historian. So we decided to do a film biography of Hitler."

After receiving a $20,000 grant from the Longwood Foundation in September of 1975, Dr. Sydnor and Mr. Moffett began "commuting to Washington." In the National Archives there was a great deal of captured German film which the "German government shot in the 1920's, 1930's, and 1940's." After six months of research, 27,000 feet of film approximately five and one half hours of film, was purchased. During the months of April, May, and June, the film was edited. It was also during that time that Dr. Sydnor wrote the script for the program. He commented, "The script really is a biography of Adolf Hitler; it's a condensed biography, but I spent three and one half months working on the script and I had to boil it down so that could be narrated in the framework of an eighty-eight minute program. It was the most difficult thing I ever had to write. He continued, "To compress as much information as you have relative to Hitler's life into a ninety minute program is a horrendous challenge." During the 13, 14, and 15 of this month, the film will be "mixed down" into the eighty-eight minute segment. Mr. Moffett will narrate the documentary.

When the film is completed, it will consist of edited video-tape, narration, background music, and natural sound. As an example of the technical work involved, Dr. Sydnor explained how he retained the natural sound of one of Hitler's oratories and produced underlying subtitles. Dr. Sydnor viewed the film section and copied phrase by phrase, in German, its content. After translating the German into English, he fed the translation into a videoing machine which in turn produced the English subtitles. This allowed the natural language and drama of the situation to remain.

An historical film documentary that has been widely distributed is Lenia Riefenstahl's "Triumph of the Will." Dr. Sydnor spoke of Riefenstahl as a "very gifted film maker, in fact she was probably the best European film maker alive in the 1930's." Speaking of the film, he described it as "pure propaganda."

Dr. Sydnor has tried to avoid such spectacularism in his documentary. Speaking of his film preparation he stated, "I have done this hopefully with the utmost care toward presenting a straight forward, yet accurate, extremely accurate and analytical program that deals strictly with Hitler's life." He continued, "The documentary will have some very ugly things in it because the major features of the Nazi regime were very ugly." When asked what he expects viewer response to be, he answered, "I don't think anyone who sees the television program would come away with an impression that there was anything at all admirable about Hitler, as a person, as a personality; or that there was anything admirable about his policies or his beliefs, because in my opinion, as an historian, there was not."

In talking of the film's objective, and its long term value, Dr. Sydnor commented, "I hope the film will be regarded, I hope it will be viewed critically, as a highly accurate, factual, comprehensive film biography." He added, "I hope that it will be the kind of thing that a high school teacher, college teacher, university professor could take into a class... and show to his class and have the film really present this period in as accurate fashion as possible."

Concerning future plans, Dr. Sydnor and Mr. Moffett have been commissioned by the George Marshall Foundation to produce a film documentary on the American occupation of Germany during World War II. The Foundation was created in the 1950's by President Truman "to historical research that General Marshall represented." Dr. Sydnor plans to write and to narrate the script; Mr. Moffett will produce the film. During a George Marshall Foundation sponsored seminar, Dr. Sydnor and Mr. Moffett were able to secure channel 23's mobile unit to film interviews with several men "responsible for developing American policy in Europe after the war." The program is scheduled to run sixty minutes.

Dr. Sydnor commented that with the completion of this, "I don't envision doing anything else beyond the Marshall documentary because it is very difficult to find funding... for programs of this kind." He added, "I tend to be very methodical and very precise in research, and that also takes a lot of time." He explained that it is more time consuming to conduct research in film than to do the same in papers, books and the like. There is also the problem of film accessibility.

Dr. Sydnor has been enthusiastic while working with both documentaries, and needless to say, is quite anxious to view the final production. He has complimented the crew of channel 23 as having fully cooperated with himself and Mr. Moffett. In closing he mentioned, "We think it's going to be a good program."

The future indeed looks bright for Dr. Sydnor. The first of the year should see the airing of the Hitler documentary. June is the expected date of his book's publication. And in the mean time, Dr. Sydnor will be composing his second lengthy documentary film. Many congratulations are in order for Dr. Sydnor — Glückwunsch!!

Hockey Team Scores Defeats Over Cavalier Club, Bridgewater

By DIANNE HARWOOD
The Longwood College Field Hockey Team defeated the Bridgewater Football Team (er... Hockey Team) last Tuesday by a score of 4-1. Excitement was the mood from the opening kick-off (tmnn, maybe that should be opening bully) and continued throughout the game. May I be the first to applaud the 150 plus fans who appeared to support the team — by far the largest group to watch the art of obstruction, flat passes sticks and occasional goals in recent years.
Carol Filo gave the fans something to cheer about as she tallied a goal ten minutes into the first half. The rock'em sock'em Bridgewater Babes came right back to score, thus ending the first half in a tie. The second half brought an array of beautiful fireworks in the form of three Longwood scores. Inner Terry Voit scored a pair and wing Terry Donohue popped in one as the L.C. offense swam through Bridgewater like fishes. In between the offensive spurts, Longwood girls received an assortment of bruises, shoves and body blocks, compliments of you know who.
Our fabulous team also defeated the Cavalier Club of Richmond 6-0. Terry Donohue and Debbie Kinzel each scored two while Theresa Matthews and Debbie Carl each added one. So it was a good week for L.C.

This week's "player of the week" is Junior Cathy Lowe. Cathy, a physical education major from Chantilly, Virginia plays the position of left link. "Little" (as she is affectionately known) played one heck of a game against Bridgewater. She is responsible for both offense and defense, and therefore gets almost twice the workout of any other player. Cathy just always seemed to be there when you needed her. Well done, Little Lowe.
Another feature will be the "play of the week" award. This week's prestigious honor goes to Inner Terry Voit. Miss Voit received a pass at Bridgewater's 25 yard line and, after stopping the ball, couldn't decide who she wanted to pass to. After observing the situation for several seconds and still unable to come up with a receiver, she decided to primp her hair. By then, Bridgewater was beginning to figure out Miss Voit's strategic stall maneuver, and attempted to attack. But our hero got the pass away with a flick of the wrist, and all was well.
The Junior Varsity isn't pussey-footing around, either. They also defeated a Cavalier Team 3-0 and then landed Bridgewater a 3-0 loss. The Cavalier win saw scores by Linda Crovatt, Kim Furbee and Suzanne Ash, while the Bridgewater game produced scores by Debbie Kinzel and Linda Crovatt (with 2). In four games, the J.V. squad has scored 17 goals while allowing only 1. And they have yet to be beaten. And that speaks for itself.

And now for the "Sally Custer Tips." Coach Custer was a bit slow this week, so keep in mind a great deal of thought went into this one. The short stick became a Longwood "Bridge" over Troubled Water" as the blue and white bara "coutures" jawed their opponents during the first home game of the season."

Glass Blowing Exhibit To Be Presented October 10

An illustrated lecture on glass blowing will be presented by Mr. Ned Giberson, Glass Blower and Owner of Englehardt Art Glass, at 7 p.m., Sunday, October 10, in Bedford Auditorium at Longwood College.

Mr. Giberson will discuss various techniques of glass blowing, both traditional and contemporary. Many of his illustrations will be examples of glass by European masters which he saw during a concentrated glass study tour in Europe and Scandinavia during the Spring of 1974.

Hand blown glass by Mr. Giberson is predominantly straightforward, functional ware. He concentrates on form and clear crisp colors in a rather traditional sense as he seeks to produce a light, transparent, delicately controlled vessel.

Mr. Giberson's study of glass blowing began in 1970 when he served an apprenticeship to Dudley Giberson in Warner, New Hampshire. Study followed at Penland School of Crafts, Penland, North Carolina; Scorpio Rising Workshop in Georgia; and Guilford College, Guilford, North Carolina, from which he graduated in 1973. He is currently a member of Glass Art Society, Virginia Crafts Council, and Piedmont Crafts, Inc. Recent exhibits and galleries in which his work are shown include Virginia Museum Biennial Crafts Show 1976, Hand Work Shop, Richmond, Virginia, Tidewater Artists Association Invitational Crafts Show, Twentieth Century Gallery Virginia Objectmakers Show, Williamsburg, Virginia, "New Faces," New York, Lynchburg College Invitational Crafts Show, and North Cross School, Roanoke, Virginia.

The public is cordially invited to attend Mr. Giberson's lecture on October 10, which precedes a two-day glass blowing workshop for Longwood College Art Majors on October 11 and 12, at Englehardt Art Glass, Sunnyside Farm, Rice, Virginia.

TWELFTH NIGHT Considered

Big Success For Longwood Players And Drama Dept.

By Margaret Hammersley

Five weeks of constant work and dedication culminated in success for the Longwood Players and the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts as they presented Shakespeare's Twelfth Night, their first production of the year. The production was directed by Dr. Patton Lockwood, and Assistant Director, Trish Howland.

Set in the country of Illyria, the comedy evolved around mischievous disguise and deceit. The main plot, serious in nature, involved Orsino who was in love with Olivia, but who employed a male servant, Cesario, to relay that love to the lady. In actuality, Cesario was a young female, Viola, presumed to be lost at sea. Within the sub-plot, Olivia's cousin, Sir Toby, plus the company of Sir Andrew, Maria and Feste, schemingly deceived Olivia's servant Malvolio, leading him to believe that the lady loved him. With each additional line the plot became more complicated, and all the more hilarious.

Performing the roles of Orsino and Olivia were Rick Vaughn and Vickie Mann. The sincerity with which Rick played his role was well done. Perhaps Rick's best scene, that which revealed his character most clearly, was with the end of the play as he was confronted with the accusations made against Cesario. His expression then was his best. Unfortunately, the serious scenes, in juxtaposition to the comic scenes, were overpowered.

As Olivia was supposedly grief-stricken by the death of her brother, that grief was not convincingly projected. Neither was her declaration of love for Cesario convincingly projected. Vickey's seemingly lack of empathy in her role was a weakness.

Acting the role of Viola-Cesario was Jill Wilkins. Viola, assumed dead, was the twin of Sebastian. While in servitude to Orsino, she fell in love with him, yet she was entrapped by her male disguise. Costumed identically like her brother, she was mistaken for him.

The character of Viola was most clearly portrayed through Jill's facial expressions and gestures. Her expressions were especially comical when she was addressed in masculine terms. At the end of the play, Viola disguised as Cesario, mistaken for Sebastian, and totally confused, was accused of slaying Sir Andrew and of being married to Olivia. Then appeared Sebastian. With her realization that she had been mistaken for her brother, her expressions were priceless. Expressions often said more than words.

Jacqui Singleton carried the role of the disorderly and manipulating cousin of Olivia, Sir Toby. Commanding her role with ease, the dynamic character was portrayed quite well. Her actions were convincing, her expressions comical. The combination of Sir Toby and Sir Andrew (George Bennett) provided endless humor for the audience. Had Andrew never opened his mouth to utter a line, he still would have received roaring laughter from his comic blank expressions and incessant nose blowing. Andrew's character was extremely well portrayed.

As Shakespeare's comedies often included a fool (who was usually anything but a fool), Twelfth Night was one such comedy. Feste, the clown was played by Reeny Manley. Witty dialogue plus musical talent equalled success for Reeny. She appropriately portrayed the character with energetic zest. The costuming and make-up was excellent. Reeny's gift for music was well received by the audience.

Also in that notorious company was Olivia's lady, Maria. It was her hand that wrote the deceiving C's and U's and T's in the love letter to Malvolio. Linda Carwile convincingly schemed with her cohorts and then turned to face Olivia with seriousness. Occasionally Linda's speech became a bit hasty.

From his first entrance through his last exit, Dr. Simpson playing Malvolio, kept the audience in a continuous roar. The character was splendidly depicted through Dr. Simpson's

Second Of Three Presidential Debates Aired Wednesday In San Francisco

By DEBBIE MOUL

Last Wednesday evening, the second of three debates between President Gerald Ford and Governor Jimmy Carter was held at the Palace of Fine Arts Theatre in San Francisco. The topics of debate for the evening dealt with foreign policy and defense issues. Noted journalists, Henry Trehwitt of the Baltimore Sun, Max Frenkel of the New York Times and Richard Valeriani of NBC, posed the questions for discussion. After a brief summary of the ground rules, the debate was soon underway.

With the appearance of being relaxed and very much at ease, Carter was asked the first question concerning the Republican way in foreign affairs and how he would have acted. In response, he merely stated that our country is not strong and if he, Carter, were to become president, he would work on defense. In reference to the Ford administration, he stated that as far as foreign policy is concerned, Henry Kissinger has been president. Ford has not taken the stand he should have.

Ford was then able to respond to Carter's statement. He reminded the viewers that Governor Carter's campaign calls for reductions from $5 to $15 billion dollars in the military budget. If we were to cut the defense budget, we would have to close 20 military bases and "there is no way you can be strong militarily with those kinds of reductions." Ford then went on

Some Recommendations

A recent conference at the Peaks of Otter saw student government leaders, judicial chairmen, and editors from 12 state and private schools come together and openly communicate. Situations and policies were discussed, and ideas and recommendations were gained. Those students involved were interested in exchanging procedural techniques and in airing concerns and problems common to every school. Many seemed fascinated by the concept of a press conference; perhaps the future will see a similar opportunity for student-administrative "debates" on other campuses.

Residential regulations were discussed at length. At Radford, each dorm, rather than the school itself, decides whether halls are to be considered public or private places, especially for social purposes. Many schools have either 24-hour visitation or extended hours during the week.

The most interesting aspect of the conference was a discussion about the variety of ways in which student activities fees are controlled and distributed. All of those schools commenting stated that students had virtually total control over the money allocations. At Washington and Lee, for example, the total number of students is multiplied by the amount of activities fee to determine the total budget. The student government receives all the activities money, and a student board decides on the distributions. The budget is, of course, college audited, but is student run. There is a reserve fund of $7,000 for emergency use by the student board. Any money that an organization does not use goes into this reserve fund, and the student activities board has total control over both the budget and the reserve fund. At Randolph-Macon, the student government also controls activities fees. At the present time, this fee is paid directly to the student government and is not included in the overall comprehensive fee.

Many of the colleges give the student government president the authority to appoint committees. Longwood seems to be one of few whose committees for the most part are elected by the entire legislative board from a group of concerned volunteers. Most schools also are adopting programs to emphasize communication and respect between students and between students and the administration. Various quality of life memorandums have been drawn up to serve as guidelines to the campus. It would seem more logical for the student leaders and others involved to openly work toward this communication itself rather than toward drawing up written guidelines. Many individuals, students, faculty and administration — at Longwood are working toward open communication. The answer lies in straightforward questions and straightforward answers. Run-around serves no purpose other than to frustrate all concerned parties. Everyone is working toward a common goal of bettering Longwood College, and it is only through open observations and discussions that this can be done. There is no need for one group to feel pressured or threatened by any other groups. A major turning point for Longwood would be total openness and genuine trust between the students and administration. Efforts are being made to draw both sides closer together. Don't worry about hidden meaning behind conversations. Simply open yourself to others — two together are much stronger and safer than one alone.

Letters To The Editor

A Letter To Chi

Dear Chi of 1977,

As members of the Sophomore Class, we would like to share our feelings which concern the attitudes and set atmosphere towards the physical appearance of Chi. We do respect the ideals for which you stand. We feel that a walk would stimulate the Blue and White spirit especially among the Freshmen and Sophomore Classes. As last year's Freshmen, we were impressed and deeply moved by Chi's burning. We feel, that by walking, it would encourage us to strive for the ideas upheld by Chi. Please help us get into the spirit of Oktoberfest and other traditions. Thank you.

With respect,
Dee Donnelly

A Reply

To the concerned students:

Chi would like to answer the letter concerning the lack of traditional activities of this organization. In our striving to fulfill the goals of Chi, we would rather work namelessly. To do so, our identity must be secret, and walking with the lack of a realistic curfew would jeopardize this.

We've attempted to make ourselves known through more subtle means. This includes letters, candles and a forum, now scheduled for November. By walking, even though it is a beautiful ceremony, we would draw attention to the people in the organization, rather than the purpose.

Chi hopes to benefit the student body in ways which are more tangible, such as the forum and any support we give to organizations or activities. We hope, in some way, to improve the campus life, whether it be through instructional means or supportive means.

We would like to thank you for your concern and for giving us the opportunity to bring our answer to this question out in the open.

Eight ushers have been working hard preparing dances for Oktoberfest. This weekend they will perform on the Midway. The ushers will do three dances.

They will also serve as ushers at the skits and sell cokes during intermission. On Saturday they will work at the Biergarten and the Geist Information Booth. The ushers will cut the cake Saturday night.

There are a number of good booths and some should be different from those of previous years. The skits are also reported to be new and exciting.

Usher Ann Johnson said, "I'm excited about Oktoberfest and the spirit on the Longwood campus. I know it's going to be the best Oktoberfest ever."

Take advantage of the opportunity to participate in Oktoberfest. Support your class in color rush and take part in the spirit of blue and white which unites students of all classes.

Wright Brothers May Wear Black Hats But Are Considered "Good Guys"

The Wright Brothers are coming! Monday, October 18, the Wright Brothers Overland Stage Company will perform in Jarman Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. Admission for Longwood students will be $1.50, and $3 for guests. WBOSC performed on campus last semester with overwhelming success.

To look at them you'd think that they were promoters for one of the sesquicentennials which crop up every year in the Hoosier state, or possibly rodeo riders who had duded-up in their Sunday-go-to-meetin' suits for a night on the town. But once they start their performance, you know that the Wright Bros. Overland Stage Co. is not a hick band — they are strictly professional, from their stage presence to their sound and lighting equipment.

The group: TOM WRIGHT — patter, vocals, electric guitar and bass; TIM WRIGHT — acoustic, electric and pedal steel guitars, vocal, banjo and harmonica; KARL HINKLE — electric guitar and bass, vocals; JIM SPELL — drums, flute and guitar; RON PERRY — personal manager, lights and sound.

The group has such a closeness with those who come to see them that a standing-room-only crowd is the least number of patrons expected at any one performance.

This popularity can be traced to a number of things: their musical variety, show, talent, and humor.

The cut of their Texas cattle buyer suits is soon forgotten when they jump into selections by contemporary artists such as The Beatles, Neil Diamond, and the Doobie Brothers.

And it's not only the artists covered in a single evening by the WBOSC, but also the particular selections which bring to light the deep feelings the band has for music, ecology, brotherhood, and their fellow men.

In the show department we find Ron Perry, the man behind the scenes as it were, who makes good use of the WBOSC's lighting and sound system to enhance the impact of each number and each member of the band.

If all this band could do well was play music it would be sufficient, but with the addition of Tom Wright's down-home sophisticated jokes and clever lead-ins, backed-up by Karl Hinkle's humorous sound effects and facial expression, the WBOSC's total on-stage show is dynamite.

They may all wear black hats, but musically they are definitely "good guys."

Alpha Lambda Delta Initiation Held

By ANNE CARTER STEPHENS

Rosalind Crenshaw and Michelle McCollum were initiated into Alpha Lambda Delta during the fall initiation ceremony Sunday. In order to be initiated into the honorary society, a 3.5 cumulative average must be achieved in either the first semester or the entire year.

The ceremony, held in Lankford C Room, was officiated by the administrative liaison and honorary member, Dr. Mary A. Heintz, faculty advisor, Mrs. Cada Parrish, and Alpha Lambda Delta president, Ann Johnson. According to the official ritual, the initiates and the officers marched in and assembled around an altar, upon which stood a candelabra. After the initiates signed the pledge, pins were presented by Dean Heintz, and a certificate was awarded by Mrs. Parrish. President, Ann Johnson lighted a candle from the candelabra and lighted Dean Heintz's and Mrs. Parrish's candle who lighted Rosalind's and Michelle's.

The purpose of the chapter is to encourage superior scholastic achievement among students in their first year in institutions of higher education, to promote intelligent living and a continued high standard of learning, and to assist women and men in recognizing and developing meaningful goals for their roles in society.

The organization was founded as an honorary society for freshman women in 1924 at the University of Illinois by the Dean of Women, Marcia Leonard. It soon became a national organization as chapters were established at Purdue University in 1927. Growth of the society has continued until now there are 192 chapters.

"It's a great honor," commented Ann, "and I'm very happy for Rosalind and Michelle."

Residence Board Proposals Approved

Unanimously By Legislative Board

Legislative Board unanimously approved two Residence Board proposals at its October 4 meeting. The first proposal approved eliminates ratification of Open House hours. It will no longer be necessary for students to obey shorter Open House hours while waiting to vote on maximum Open House hours at the first of the school year. The second proposal extends the Open House hours for Oktoberfest weekend. The Open House hours for October 15, 16 and 17 will be as follows:

Friday — 5:00 p.m.-1:30 a.m.;
Saturday — 10:00 a.m.-1:30 a.m.;
Sunday — 10:00 a.m.-10:00 p.m.
All Legislative Board members voted except Linda Brinson, Bonnie Gheen and Karen Kimbrough (excused) who were absent.

In other business, Emily Burgwyn issued Legislative

Board and College committee sign-up results. Emily said she was pleased with the people who signed up for the committees but some committees still needed some more members. She said that at the next meeting the Legislative Board members would vote on Organization Evaluation and Help-Out committee chairmen and Student Handbook editor. The members will also recommend names for college committees from those that signed up.

Suggestions for a Legislative Board money-making project were made. The money raised from this project would go to the Herbert R. Blackwell Scholarship.

The October 18 meeting of Legislative Board will be held in the Reading Rooms of Lankford at 7:00 p.m.

Mathematics For Fun And Profit Held At L.C. On October 2

By JEAN MOTTLEY

Mathematics For Fun and Profit, a program for high school seniors and juniors was held at Longwood on October 2. The purpose of the program was to acquaint students with Longwood College and the Mathematics Department.

Faculty members and Math Majors participated in the program. A few activities were "Mathematics-What after Graduation," with Miss Niki Fallis and Longwood graduates, "Fascinating Facts and Figures" with Mrs. Cada R. Parrish, and a film called, "Sets, Crows, and Infinity." Other activities were "A calculators Challenge: Darts Anyone?" by Dr. E. T. Noone, Jr., Dr. Richard Kidder with "A Panoramic View of Geometries," "What do you do With A Matrix" with Dr. Dwayne Nuzman, "Lady Luck: The Ruin of the Gambler," by Dr. Robert S. Wu. Other features were Computer Facilities Yours to show the capabilities of the IBM Systems-3, tours were given by Dr. Robert P. Webber. Also Dr. William L. Hightower gave Interactive Computing Demonstrations. Calculators and Teaching Materials were on display.

Paul Thorson Considered As Being Devoted, Friendly

By LISA SMITH

Flashing smile, friendly personality, and a concern for others are just a few of the impressions one gets when meeting Paul Thorson of Campus Crusade for Christ. Paul travels with this organization across country and out of the country as a singer, composer, and speaker. His music is part of his ministry and on October 5 Paul demonstrated his talents in a warm and meaningful program before a large crowd in the Gold Room. According to Paul a music ministry "tends to attract people who would not come to hear a minister," and also "softens their resistance."

MUSIC has been a part of Paul's life since he was a small child and is now his profession since joining Campus Crusade in 1969. When asked why he chose Campus Crusade as the organization to become affiliated with, Paul responded, "My goals are commended with their goals, and I enjoy the people I work with."

emphasized the importance of understanding love and expressed this theme in songs he composed such as, "Now," "Now I Belong," and "Nobody." "I always thought love was something you earned," stated Paul. This misconception was soon proven to Paul to be wrong when a Campus Crusade music team called "New Folk" shared with him the love of God. This love was available to him on any condition and eventually led Paul to become a Christian. It changed his life, and led him on to a ministry that carries him to many campuses.

Longwood College was very fortunate to have such a dedicated and talented person share his friendship and his music. In the last two years Paul has sung before 40,000 college students. For those who are restless and concerned about their own lives and future it is comforting to know that, "God created everything and everyone for a purpose."

Gassner To Present Lecture On

The Gold Rush, A Comic Masterpiece

Mordi Gassner will combine his talents with those of Charlie Chaplin in presenting a program that will show the significant contribution of the comic masterpiece, THE GOLD RUSH, in movie history. The lecture and film will be presented Wednesday evening, October 13, at 8 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium, Longwood College. Mr. Gassner will both introduce the film and, after its screening, comment briefly on its technique and humane values. He was an active professional on the Fairbanks-Pickford lot in the early 1920's, just prior to the release of Charlie Chaplin's greatest production. Speaking as a contemporary, whose subsequent career, abounding in creative activity, Mr. Gassner brings a lifetime of experience to his reflections upon that period piece, so momentous for the development of screen art throughout the world.

In a very brief summary of that career, The International Study of Research Institute, of which our neighbor was a faculty member, says: "Mordi Gassner Guggenheim Fellow, Florence; writer on art; stage and screen designer; member of scenic staff, Metropolitan Opera. Formerly Art Director of Piscator's Dramatic Workshop at The New School; Director of Research on Post War Planning, CBS; Program Consultant, World Cultural Center. Connoisseur, evaluating art collections internationally."

This program is under the sponsorship of the Central Virginia Chapter of the Virginia Museum of Fine Art. The public is cordially invited.

SELF DEFENSE AND SAFETY:

Education And Techniques- Aspects Of Common Sense

Self-defense for women has become a fairly 'hot' item in the past few years. While some men, and surprisingly, many women still feel that it is "unfeminine" for a woman to be able to defend herself against a man, far more people seem to believe that every person has a right to defend him or herself.

In the past, women had very few choices of how to defend themselves when approached by an assailant. One method that no one seemed to find fault with was to run as quickly as possible in the opposite direction. Another was to bite, scratch, and try to attract as much help (preferably male) as possible. The idea that a woman could put up an organized defense was considered a bit bizarre, to say the least. (Evidently, the idea that there were situations where a woman might be cornered or not have a chance to bite or scratch was not considered either. And it is a fact that most men can outrun most women.)

Well, it is 1976 and things have changed a bit. Several women have successfully conquered many traditionally male bastions. The idea that a woman has the choice to determine her way of life, as well as to protect it when threatened, is beginning to take hold. (Indeed, this idea has been the thesis for several recent best-selling books, such as How to say "No" to a Rapist and Survive.)

The first point that many books on self-defense make is that self-defense should be looked upon as a precaution, such as first aid or water safety. It should be learned even by those who live in a town with a low crime rate, just as a precaution. (How many people have argued that just because a person lives far from the ocean, he should remain totally ignorant of water safety?)

Another main premise is that knowledge of self-defense will give a woman a new sense of confidence, and help to alleviate fear should a dangerous situation arise. (This is not to say that women who know self-defense should walk fearlessly into the more dangerous parts of town, or pick fights with Sumo wrestlers. An important part of self-defense is knowing how to stay OUT of potentially dangerous situations.)

There are two aspects of self-defense. The first is education to prevent or minimize the danger of physical attack. The second is to provide the student with instruction in simple techniques of defense, if an attack can be neither prevented nor avoided.

The first aspect is the easiest to give advice on, as it can be called "preventive medicine". All that is needed is a little common sense.

Protection In The Home

It almost goes without saying that one very simple and important precaution is the installation of good locks on all doors and windows. These entries should remain locked at all times. There have been several instances of people who have kept an arsenal of strong locks on the front door, and neglect to lock their back or sliding glass doors. This practice should be avoided.

There are many good, and fairly inexpensive locks on the market today. Most houses and apartments today come equipped with spring locks, which may appear safe, but are indeed very easy to open. The burglar needs only to slip in a playing card, knife blade, or thin strip of celluloid to gain entry. Spring locks manufactured with little trigger guards are not much better. A good, force-resistant, dead bolt lock is the Segal-type lock, and it is made by several different companies.

Chain locks are very good choices for a second lock, when they are properly installed. Just make sure that the chain is made of good, strong metal (similar to motorcycle chain); a good chain lock can be purchased in most hardware stores. It would be good to ask the hardware salesperson about the various methods of property protection. Just try to remember that the most expensive device is not necessarily the best.

It is advisable to place a rod along the runners of sliding glass doors. This will absolutely prevent their being silently slid open. (A piece of well-fitted wood, such as a broom handle, will do nicely.)

An additional precaution might be investing in a good alarm system. I shall not go into the various alarms here; a salesperson in a hardware store would be much better prepared to discuss them. Many homeowners' guides claim that they are an excellent investment, providing at the very least, peace of mind.

Safety Measures To Take At Home

- 1) Lock all doors. Set the burglar alarm, if you have one.
- 2) When you are home alone, close the drapes. You might also adjust the Venetian blinds to face upward toward the ceiling.
- 3) Be careful not to make it obvious that you are alone, such as reading by an open window.
- 4) Always leave at least one night-light on in the house.
- 5) Be sure that your telephone is in working order. It can be your

PERSONAL SAFETY PRECAUTIONS

- 1) Avoid beginning conversations with strangers. If a stranger tries to involve you in one, politely ignore him and move away.
- 2) Never carry large amounts of cash on your person. AVOID DISPLAYING ANY CASH THAT YOU MAY BE CARRYING.
- 3) Try hard to avoid parking in dark, poorly lit areas. Supervised parking lots, while a bit more expensive, are preferable to a mugging.
- 4) Keep away from the building side of the street when walking, as well as shrubbery. Avoid shadows.
- 5) If you suspect you are being followed, trust your instincts. The most common mistake for a woman to make is to be afraid to look behind and check. DON'T BE AFRAID TO CHECK IF YOU ARE IN ANY DANGER. If you are, it is helpful to know it for sure, and to begin planning your defense. At no time is an attack from the rear to be preferred.
- 6) If at all possible, RUN TOWARDS SAFETY. Anything is preferable to a physical attack. Try to escape to a better-lit area, a place where there might be people, or even a private home. (The owner might allow you to enter, and it is doubtful that a mugger would want to attack you while an audience is present.)
- 7) Make as much noise as possible. Scream as loudly as possible. It is usually better to yell "FIRE" than "HELP!" as it seems to get better results. You can often scare off a mugger by attracting attention. It serves no purpose to be a stoic in the case of an attack.
- 8) Wear comfortable, easy-to-move in clothing. There is a big debate going on as to whether women in "sexy" clothing invite attacks. While it would be foolish to begin looking like a sexless frump just to avoid attacks of this sort, platform heels or tight skirts are of no help on the street. (It's even easier to fall off a curb in platform shoes.)
- 9) If you do find yourself in a dangerous place despite your precautions, try to think out your self-defense moves ahead of time. This prepares you for the possible danger, should it arise. It also helps you to stay alert. Most attackers will not go after someone who looks alert or capable of defending herself.
- 10) Try to travel with at least one other person, whenever possible.
- 11) Keep your car doors locked and your windows rolled up. Always check the back seat of your car before entering it.

Techniques Of Self-Defense

Many schools and community groups, such as the YWCA, now sponsor training in self-defense for women. In addition, there are several professional schools for this skill, such as Jhoon Rhee's Karate School.

Most self-defense classes use a combination of the various methods of self-defense. Several stress the martial arts. Different styles taught include JUDO, which is helpful in dealing with a close opponent. This method includes throwing, grappling, wrestling and choking skills. AIKIDO is a purely defensive art; it teaches the student to use the attacker's body motion against him. TAE KWON DO (also called Korean Karate) mobilizes the entire body. (Women, for example, have stronger legs than arms.) TKD helps to build up the leg muscles, as well as the self-assurance. JUJITSU is a combination of all of the skills listed above.

It is important to note that it is not essential to have a black belt in anything to be able to defend one's self against an attacker. While the martial arts are popular as a sport, no one is going to demand absolute perfection of a self-defense student. The student is taught a few of the most effective movements, and is given much attention and encouragement.

You could find out about the various classes in the area by calling the YWCA, or checking in the phone book. Be sure to check out all businesses with the Better Business Bureau.

There are several sources that were used in preparing this article. They are: Personal Safety and Defense for Women by F. Patricia Pechanec Stock; Oct. 16, "Family Circle" — "How to Protect Yourself from Attack," by Linda Dannenberg, and Our Bodies, Ourselves, by the Boston Women's Health Book Collective.

most valuable source of contact with the outside in case an intruder breaks in.

6) Keep a list of emergency numbers near the phone for easy reference.

7) Keep a flashlight on your night table.

8) If you plan to be gone for a short while, leave a few lights on. A good idea is leaving a light on in an upstairs bedroom — this will help to give the impression that someone is reading in bed.

9) Keep a bright light on outside the door. Insist that your landlord put good lights in the halls and stairways of your apartment building.

KEYS

It should be equally obvious that hiding keys in the usual places around the door is dangerous. Burglars know about looking under flowerpots and welcome mats too; this practice should definitely be avoided. You should not issue keys to acquaintances, laundry, or grocery services, because of the risk involved.

It would also be advisable not to leave your whole case of keys with parking attendants and the like, because of the danger of their being copied.

Legal Hand Weapons

The following is a list of legal hand weapons, and suggested ways of employing them.

- 1) LONG, FIVE CELL FLASHLIGHT. You can use it in a jabbing manner to the face or stomach.
- 2) ROLLED UP MAGAZINE OR NEWSPAPER. (Roll it up tightly and secure it with 3-4 rubber bands.) This can be used in a ramming manner to the face or abdomen.
- 3) UMBRELLA. Use it in a jabbing fashion. Most attackers will not attack someone who is carrying an umbrella, because it is so easy to use.

4) FINGER NAIL FILE. Use in a jabbing fashion with quick upward thrusts.

5) STIFF HAIR BRUSH OR STEEL COMB. You might rake this across the attacker's face or neck.

6) HARD-BOUND BOOK. Smash it into the face or neck.

7) PURSE. Push it towards the face.

8) HIGH HEELS OR WEDGE SHOES. Stamp on the attacker's foot.

9) KEYS. (Place the keys in the palm of the hand so that the small pointed ends protrude between the fingers.) Use as you would brass knuckles. These are especially efficient near the eyes.

10) HAIRSPRAY. Spray in the attacker's eyes or face. NEVER light a match to the stream of spray in hopes of converting it to a flame thrower. It will explode and you could be severely injured.

This list appears in an excellent book on self-defense called Personal Safety and Defense for Women by F. Patricia Pechanec Stock. It can be obtained for $3.75 from the Burgess Publishing Company, 426 South Sixth Street, Minneapolis, MN 55415.

Defense from the front

Telephone Precautions

1.) Don't reveal your telephone number indiscriminately. List only your initials in any kind of directory, and DON'T ADVERTISE THE FACT THAT YOU ARE A WOMAN.

2.) If someone calls and asks for your husband, don't just blurt out that you are single, and live entirely alone. While this could be called dishonesty, it is also known as "inviting trouble." Pretend to take any message down. If you are married, or living with a relative or male friend, don't tell the caller that he won't be back until a week from Saturday. If the caller seems at all suspicious, hang up.

3.) Human error is always possible, but be safe anyway. If a caller asks "Who is this?" or "What number is this?", ask them whom they wish to speak with, or what number they are dialing.

4.) If you receive an obscene phone call, the best thing to do is to hang up immediately (and quietly — don't slam the phone down.) If you receive a series of obscene calls, it would be best to report them to the police department. In the meantime, you could duplicate the sound of a tape recorder being turned on, or say (supposedly to someone else in the room), "Yes, officer, this is the same caller again." It is especially important not to appear frightened or annoyed, and do not talk with the caller.

Points To Remember

While we will not attempt to go into the various ways of actually protecting yourself when an attack occurs, (it would be far better to take a course in self-defense), there are a few points to remember.

1) Remain in control of yourself.

2) If you sense that an attack is imminent, run. If this is not possible, act crazy. It will put the attacker off momentarily, and might give you some time to plan out another defense or escape. A mugger does not want to attack someone who is unpredictable. It is better to appear silly than to be mugged.

3) Put your hands on anything that could be used as a weapon. Some examples may be found in the box above.

If Taken By Surprise

1) DON'T FREEZE UP. This is what the assailant is counting on.

2) Resist immediately, if you plan to do so. If you wait, the attacker may feel betrayed. Also, there is no point in putting up a violent defense at first, then pretending to befriend your attacker if it doesn't work. Resistance is irreversible.

3) If you sense that the attacker is only after your money or valuables, hand them over without a fuss. It is possible to recover them later, no sense in being maimed if it can be avoided.

4) If the attacker is threatening you with a lethal weapon, don't endanger your life by putting up a fight. If he tries to use it on you, you are quite justified in resisting, but don't force him to use the weapon.

If You Plan To Be Gone For A Few Days

1) Have the post office or a neighbor collect your mail until you return home.

2) Have your newspaper and milk services discontinued. Do NOT leave a note on the front door indicating when you plan to return... this is known as an invitation to a burglar.

3) Have a neighbor look in on your home every now and then, to look out for anything suspicious. You might also have someone keep the yard up in your absence; an unkempt lawn and leaves around the garage door can be a give-away. Be careful not to leave a bicycle in the yard, or laundry hanging on a clothes line.

4) Leave your valuables in a safety deposit box in your bank. (This includes important papers.)

Presidential Debates

to say that you couldn't negotiate with Brezhnev with such military outbacks. The tone of voice Ford exhibited was harsh as if to lash out at Carter. Yet, a point was made.

Another question posed was one concerning the concept of national interest. What should the role of the United States be in international relations? Carter went on to say that he has traveled for 21 months in this country, and has seen hurt people because of Watergate, the CIA and Viet Nam. The security of this country has got to come first. Carter brought up international trade and stated that he would never single out food as a trade embargo item. He would consider all of the equipment used. The U. S. is the arms distributor of the world, often to countries which fight each other. He states that we must first meet the needs of our country, then those of our allies and then we will ship cargo to other countries.

When asked about negotiations with China, Ford said that his administration will not forget or let down obligations to them. He doesn't believe that we should give, sell or transfer military equipment to any communist party.

One main point that Carter seemed to dwell on was that there is too much secrecy in the government, and if he were elected, this would surely change. He would quit making policy-making decisions in secret as were some of these concerning the Viet Nam War. If we could have a good foreign policy, then the strength of the country could be restored.

Carter feels that "we've let the economy go down the drain." Unemployment is so high. A strong economy is very important. He states that we want to return back to the statue our country once had and this won't happen if Ford is reelected.

In response, Ford spoke of his administration and how proud he is of it. He feels that Kissinger has done a fine job in foreign relations. But once again, Carter came back at Ford by speaking of the way Ford wouldn't appoint a presidential commission to go to Viet Nam and Laos to negotiate with leaders to release information concerning M.I.A.'s. Carter feels this to be very embarrassing on the behalf of Ford.

In his rebuttal speech, Carter asked of the type of world that we are going to leave our children. Is it going to be a world of hunger, secrecy in the government and the continual threat of the nuclear bomb or is it going to be a world of peace, with everybody working in unison and harmony.

He believes that it is going to be the latter, and that we should be a beacon for nations who search for freedom.

President Ford's rebuttal was primarily concerned with his administration. There are two things, he feels, that can't be debated; experience and results. With this he recalls things which he has done. America is strong, free, respected and not one young American is dying or fighting on a foreign battlefield.

Both candidates presented sound and reasonable arguments. The next Carter-Ford debate will be held at William and Mary College on October 22 at 9:30 p.m.

TWELFTH NIGHT

gestures, expressions and stance. Two brilliantly staged scenes involved Malvolio. Dr. Simpson's interpretation of Malvolio's soliloquy before the court of Olivia (the scene in which he stumbled upon the planted letter), clearly revealed the concealed nature of the character. Hidden nearby were Toby, Andrew, and Feste, amusing themselves overhearing Malvolio's words. When reading the letter, Malvolio's facial expressions gave distinct insight into his thoughts, before he said a word.

With his next entrance, the audience roared. Acting upon implications made in the letter, Malvolio appeared before Olivia attired in short blue pants revealing his yellow cross-gartered stockings. Flitting about and chasing Olivia up the court steps, Malvolio never ceased his foolish smiling. The audience was indeed receptive to Dr. Simpson's Malvolio.

There is a tendency in some productions to slide over minor roles, spending little time with their preparation. That, however, was not the case in Twelfth Night. The character of Antonio was well prepared and presented. The sincerity and seriousness with which Glenn Leftwich acted was quite realistic. Jerome Laux, portraying Sebastian, began a little heavy; his relationship with Antonio seemed somewhat strained. The relationship between himself and Olivia was acted with more ease, his expression was more natural. A vast improvement was in the action of the servants and attendants. They did not merely stand still, stone-faced, but rather, if something aroused their curiosity, their expressions reflected such.

Complementing the actors was an appropriately designed set. Ben Emerson of the Speech and Dramatic Arts Department was the set's designer.

Psych Club Is Proposed

The idea of creating a psychology club first came up in an abnormal psychology class, when the professor, Mr. David Stein, realizing the need for increased communication between students and faculty suggested that a psychology club be formed. Barbara Gawinski, a junior psychology major, immediately began to take action. She is trying to organize a club because, as she puts it, "I feel that students interested in psychology want more than just classroom lectures."

The purpose of the club would be to foster an interest in psychology through programs featuring guest speakers and field trips. They plan to visit institutions for mental health, experimental communities, and universities offering graduate programs.

A psychology club could also provide a career orientation program which would help students in deciding which specific fields they would like to pursue, and inform them of the degree requirements of their career goals. In exposing the psychology majors to valuable contacts and job opportunities the club would be an avenue for helping them to locate and obtain jobs. The success of the club could also lead to the development of a psychology honor society.

The Evaluations Committee for Student Organizations is now considering a petition signed by 17 students who wish to see a psychology club become a reality. These students will also be required to draw up a constitution. If this constitution is accepted by the Evaluations Committee, Legislative Board, and President Willett the proposed psychology club will become an official student organization capable of fulfilling the needs of its members.

The only criteria for membership into the club is to be interested in psychology. Since the membership will not be limited to psychology majors only, any Longwood student is welcome to join. If you are interested in promoting or joining the proposed psychology club contact Barbara Gawinski, phone: 392-8675.

Also attributing to the authenticity of the atmosphere was the music, which included Feste's wooden lyre constructed by Dr. Lockwood. Adding a contemporary touch to the production was the costuming. The success of the presentation was also dependent upon the hours and efforts put forth from those behing the wings, Anne Saunders, Jenny Glover-Droney, Wanda Kirkland...

Mastering the language in which Shakespeare wrote is no easy task. Aside from a few scattered inaudible lines, the actors are to be applauded for their success. Together, the crew the actors, and the directors produced a fine presentation.

Longwood Hockey Team Has Hot And Cold Season

By DIANNE HARWOOD

Well, fans, it was another up and down week for the Longwood College Hockey Team. The girls began the week with a 4-1 victory over a much improved ODU squad. The Longwood team got off to a slow start, which seems to be an ever-occurring problem. ODU drew first blood by scoring fifteen minutes into the first half. I think this sorta unnerved our girls; the remainder of the first half showed a lack of motivation from both sides. Now the second half was a different story. The Longwood offense ripped off four straight goals and amassed over 17 minutes of total penetration time. Terry Donahue, Terry Voit, Carol Fils and Scottie Capehart had a goal apiece to insure the Longwood victory.

But the game of the week occurred on Thursday, October 7. This was "the battle of the biggies" — number four ranked William and Mary against our own number six ranked L.C. It was a battle of strategy, stickwork, and marking; a battle that yielded no clear-cut winner. However, according to a new rule, the game was awarded to William and Mary due to the fact that they accumulated more penetration time. Final score 1-0 (PT) in favor of W&M.

A special note of recognition goes to the Longwood defense. The defense was bound and determined that W&M would not score, which they didn't. With this wonderful, leading introduction, I announce the "player of the week," goalie Jane Grier. Jane is a senior from Wilmington, Del., majoring in physical education. Jane got the defense all riled up, so they were breathing fire even before they took the field. Miss Grier recorded 12 goalie saves during the W&M game, and I mean she put some foot into her cleats. Way to Lang, Jane.

My memory is not cooperating with me this morning, so I guess I won't have a "play of the week." Therefore, on to the J.V.

The J.V. squad is making it tough for me — they keep winning so I have to keep using the same adjectives and verbs, over and over again. But I guess they can't help it... they're just too good. Last Tuesday they beat the daylight out of the ODU JV 7-0. Linda Crovatt scored 3, Debbie Kinzel hit on 2. Kim Furbie and Suzanne Ash both sank one for L.C. The baby blues also turned the tables on the William and Mary J.V. — the Indians fell 1-0. Debbie Kinzel scored her 9th goal of the season midway into the first half, giving Longwood its needed edge. I think Longwood has a team of the future in this year's J.V. They have had only one goal scored against them in six games, while they have scored 25. Keep it up, J.V.!!

And now for the "Sally Custer Quip": "Our defense ruffled the green and gold feathers of the Indians, but we're planning a — Custer and the L.C. Troops Massacred the Indians at Tidewater!"

Longwood Team Participates In Hockey Stick Drive

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Who would have dared to brave a cold, driving rain, thunder, lightning, speeding cars and vicious dogs to jog 13 miles holding a soggy Bicentennial Traveling Hockey Stick on a Saturday morning in Richmond? The answer is eight crazed Longwood College hockey team players. Also Coach Custer and her friend went along to take pictures and to give the much needed encouragement.

These brave souls, who shall be named because of their dedication were Cathy Lowe, Teresa Ware, Terry Donahue, Carol Benton, Cindy Moss, Debbie Northern, Debbie Kinzel, and Patty Hughton, who acted as head cheerleader. Scarcely awake at 8:30 a.m. Saturday, we departed in the school van to seek out a little white house just down from an Amoco station on Route 301. It took 20 minutes to meet with the team who was to bring us the hockey stick. As it turned out, they were sitting 200 feet behind us at the Amoco station.

The first adventurer to depart was Terry Donahue. Taking sure but slushy strides, she completed her first mile. One after the other, we completed the miles, each wearing one of the three raincoats we had between the seven of us.

These were solitary journeys that required prancing through mud puddles, negotiating steep hills, side-stepping on narrow bridges, out distancing snarling dogs, and finally, seeing in the far horizon a light blue van with its emergency blinkers flashing; at this sight, your soaked feet would pick up speed and slop even more determinately through the mud.

The Longwood runners at last reached the sign that said "Bowling Green—11 miles", where St. Catherine's met us, we turned over to them the stick and the scroll which now contained our names and which will one day be historically enshrined in some museum.

Our long day was almost over, but first we had to get something nutritious for our starved, cold, exhausted bodies. Then the team members returned to the van to get warm and wait for Ms. Custer and her friend to finish eating.

At 4:10 we rejoiced to return to Longwood. This experience wasn't too bad, (so long as I don't catch pneumonia), but I know I won't participate in the Tri-centennial Traveling Hockey Stick Drive!

Longwood Inter-Religious Council States Plans For Year, Purpose For Council

By LESLIE BOATWRIGHT

The Longwood Inter-Religious Council (LIRC) wishes to incorporate every religious denomination represented or campus into its activities. This can only be done if students of each denomination elect a representative and one alternate to the council.

Since the councils organization last March, six different religious faiths have participated: Baptist, Catholic, Christian Science, Episcopal, Lutheran, and Methodist. Although these six denominations represent a majority of the students at Longwood they do not represent all of the students. The goal of the Inter-Religious Council is to include every religious group regardless of its size.

The three basic purposes of the Inter-Religious Council are:

- (1) To coordinate activities of denominational or other religious groups on campus,
- (2) To encourage understanding of differing religious viewpoints, and
- (3) To provide a representative body to sponsor and plan special campus-wide activities.

The officers of the LIRC for 1976 are president, Connie Barbour and three officers-at-large, Julie Burner, Kim Turnbull, and Mary Lucy Wilson. The campus ministers serve as the LIRC sponsors. Last spring the Longwood Inter-Religious Council sponsored Rise and Shine Fellowship Breakfasts during Holy Week, featuring key speakers and singers from the student body, faculty and administration.

This year the LIRC plans to sponsor coffeehouses, speakers, Rise and Shine Breakfasts and Religious Emphasis Week. Already underway are Vespers which are held each evening at 6:30 in the Episcopal Church.

Money Used For Pan-Am Game

The Bicentennial Hockey Stick Drive is being done to raise money to send the U.S. Field Hockey Team to the Pan-American games. Many colleges and high schools have participated in this drive by jogging with the stick for a certain number of miles, and by getting sponsors for the number of miles accomplished. Longwood was given 13 miles to run in the Richmond area. The stick started in Georgia and is going north to Philadelphia by October 15.

Volleyball Team Defeated By EMC

On Thursday, October 7, the varsity and J.V. volleyball team played against Eastern Mennonite College. Despite the Longwood teams' determination and drive, the varsity lost 15-2 and 15-4, while the J.V. lost 0-15 and 11-15.

Their next game is at home against Lynchburg College on October 12 at 7:00.

Panhellenic Headlines

Alpha Delta Pi

A D Pi's are welcoming Janie Alexander, one of our traveling corres sec to our chapter this week. While here she is helping with preparations for our new pledges. Becky Bellamy is our newest pledge, after accepting an open bid last week.

For Oktoberfest, ADPi is sponsoring a Roulette game, with prizes donated by the members. Congratulations to Bettie Bass, who was recently initiated into the Society for Intercollegiate Journalists. Keep up the good work!

One of the ADPi's goals this semester is fund raising. Thus far we have had a bake sale and a successful car wash. We also sponsored an ice cream sundae party last week of approximately 25 girls.

Alpha Phi

Alpha Phi added two new members to their sorority: Mandy Latfoon and Renee Bourgeois. They also now have six new pledges.

Alpha Sigma Alpha

The AEA's summer included many different things. Four sisters were married over the summer. Steph Lucas, Kathy Schote, Mary Croom, and Patti Smith. And their sister, Anna Marshall, received her diamond during the summer months.

Our national convention was held in Williamsburg, and on Tuesday, all those who attended visited Farmville's Alpha chapter. An invitation ceremony was held in the Methodist Church so that AEA's from all over the country could participate. We'd like to take this time to congratulate and welcome Mary Woolfolk into our sisterhood. Also, Congratulations to Cindy Price and (in) Thomas who were initiated this fall.

Our fall activities will include money raising projects (the AEA's will be selling peanuts, corn, and rush functions. We are so proud to welcome Nina McAdams, Valerie Booker, and Ginny and Telispa Welter who are our new fall pledges.

Alpha Sigma Tau

Alpha Sigma Tau wishes to congratulate their two new pledges: Anita Braden and Cindy Sanders. Congratulations to emcee Bruno, Dianne Harwood, and Terry Johnson for their exit Tappings. Cathy Lowe and Mary Louise McGraw received bids from Delta Psi Kappa, the National Physical Education Honorary Fraternity. Cam Olgesby is the Sophomore Oktoberfest Chairman-Good Luck Cam! Congratulations to Terry Johnson and Caty Tafferty for making the Varsity Volleyball team and also to Scottie Capehart, Myra Gwyer, Jane Grier, Teresa Matthews, Kathy Arthur, Cathy Lowe, and Dianne Harwood (manager) for making the Hockey team.

Alpha Sigma Tau will sell the large plastic Longwood mugs at their Oktoberfest Booth. Congratulations to our new initiates—Sue Rible, Mary Gordon Hall, Panny Webb, Cam Olgesby, Ellie Kennedy, and Brenda Wile. Also a special thanks to Alice. Congratulations to Sally Graham for being elected senior representative to Legislative Board, and to Terry Johnson for being elected Captain of the Volleyball team. The AET's had a picnic at the cabin Wednesday night with their meeting afterwards. It was a social success!

Delta Zeta

Delta Zeta sorority has been busy with preparations for the coming year. One of the main events of this year was the annual faculty tea. We would like to welcome our new pledges, Laura Duncan, Anita Hoppe, Pam Kidd, Sheila Oakley and Terry Shiffet. Congratulations to Sharon Jones for making the Longwood Volleyball team, Lisa King for making the Longwood Tennis Team and Patty Marshall for being initiated into Pi Mu Epsilon. Another active member is Maggie Keen, guest hostess at Theta Chi.

Kappa Delta

Congratulations to Vonnice Morrison for being selected to Beta Beta Beta here on campus. Lyndi Chalky was selected as Longwood's correspondent to The Richmond News Leader. The KD's had a car wash at Hardee's. On Sunday, October 3, we held a memorial service for Crandall Turner. We are now in the process of preparing for Oktoberfest. We are selling hot dogs with chili. We are also planning for our Founders Day on Oct. 23rd.

Sigma Kappa

Sigma Kappa was honored with the presence of their traveling secretary, the week end of September 17-19. There was a parliamentary procedure meeting presented Sunday night, followed by a reception in her honor.

Sigma Kappa had a beer rush party Sept. 15th at the Longwood Cabin to welcome all K's and perspective rushee's.

A car wash was held at Hardee's on September 23 for fund raising, which really was a great success.

Sussann Smith was chosen by Geist to be a senior usher for the 1976 Oktoberfest.

Trish Howland is the assistant director of the play, Twelfth Night, which was presented October 6th through 9th. Clare Baxter made the varsity tennis team.

Our first candlelight of the year was for our advisor, Miss Connie Prillaman, who was recently engaged to Grett Dalton.

Sigma Kappa will be selling popcorn soon, hopefully before Oktoberfest, so all those who want some, keep your eyes and ears open!!!

Sigma Sigma Sigma

Sigma Sigma Sigma held their annual Mardi-Gras week September 20-24. The Sigma's traveled to Delta Sigma Phi at University of Virginia, had a cookout and held a coffeehouse with Wen Gill as the guest performer.

Congratulations to our new sister, Gail Trons, and to our new pledges Mary Beth Edwards and Debbie Goble.

Jenny Glover-Droney and Marilyn Kibber have been active in the recent production of "Twelfth Night." Jenny served as make-up crew chief and Marilyn as the publicity chief.

Tri-Sigma's National Leadership School was held in Chapel Hill, North Carolina, this past week end. Six delegated from Alpha Chapter attended. While there they visited Sigma's National philanthropy, which is the Robbio Pazo Memorial located at UNC Hospital.

On October 5, Sigma's traveled to University of Virginia and partied with Delta Sigma Phi and Sigma Chi.

Zeta Tau Alpha

Although every Zeta has been busy with school just beginning, we have had a successful opening year. With almost 40 returning Zetas, we started rush this semester with a Cabin party and a popcorn party for perspective girls. Our "Zeta Raffle" which followed these social events proved to be an extremely good money making project too. Besides college rush parties, all of the sisters have been engaged in visiting Holy Manor Nursing Home in Farmville.

We have had a lot of Zetas in the social spotlight too. Senior, Linda Maxey, was tapped into Geist. We have two Zetas on the Hampden-Sydney cheering squad, Trisher Williams (Captain) and Peggy Bryant. Hampden-Sydney rush parties have recognized some Zetas too. Zeta hostesses included Kathy Murphy, Barbara Lichford and Betsy Cash at Theta Chi, and Ann Gray and Beth Tomlinson at Sigma Nu. We are also proud to announce that two of our sisters got engaged this summer. Ann Gray and Joan Holloway were the lucky girls. We are also happy to say that we had 12 girls who made the Dean's list last semester. Flag football seems to be a major sport this year, and we are proud that we won. As for future plans, we are in the process of redecorating our chapter room. An interior decorator from Richmond is working with us, and it is exciting for everyone. Our last big party was Tuesday, September 28, with Theta Chi at University of Richmond.

In the flag football competition, Zeta has won the past two games. Our record is now 3-0. Also received one open bed. Sophomore, Debbie Hermarchy, from Richmond is our newest pledge.

October 11-15 will be a very busy week for Zeta. Monday, we celebrate Founder's Day. The entire week will be devoted to sorority rituals and functions. All is going well on second floor Stubbs.

Jerry Duncan Discusses The Field Of Music Therapy

By SHARON CONNOR

On September 28, Jerry Duncan from Lynchburg Rehabilitation Center presented a discussion on the field of Music therapy. The discussion was sponsored by the Longwood College Music Department. Mr. Duncan is a graduate of Florida State University, the oldest university in the U. S. to have a music therapy program.

Music therapy deals with a behavioral change made possible through music. Many everyday tasks, such as tying a shoe, reading, writing, counting, and cooking can be carried out by the use of music. Any phase of life can be taught. Movement is the technique involved which is taught either in class or personal instruction. This technique is used in helping the mentally ill to new endeavor. A music therapist is used as a consultant in public schools, jails, rehabilitation centers, hospitals, and the military.

The degree needed to be a music therapist is similar to a BME but practice teaching is not required. However, after four years in an institution, six months of internship under the direction of a music therapist is the usual procedure. It takes the same qualities to make a good therapist as it does to make a good teacher. However, the essence of patience is of great importance in teaching the behavioral processes and skills.

Only 30 institutions in the U. S. offer a degree in music therapy. This discussion was presented to Longwood students and faculty to answer any question on the subject and to raise an interest among the students. There are approximately 12 students attending Longwood that have an interest in music therapy. Since there are many jobs available in this field, the music department, with the aid of Mr. Duncan, hopes to establish one of the first state programs at Longwood.

Annual Fall Area Business Education Conference At L.C.

The Annual Fall Area Business Education Conference was held at Longwood on Wednesday, September 29, from 4:00-6:15 p.m. The theme of the conference was "Create an Exciting Learning Environment Through FBIA."

There were 51 area teachers and 10 Longwood College Business Education Students in attendance at the meeting.

Dr. James C. Gussett, Assistant Dean, welcomed the group on behalf of the College, and Betty Maxey, Longwood Regional FBIA President and student at Buckingham County High School, extended greetings to the participants.

Carl E. Jargensen, State Supervisor of Business Education, gave an overview of Business Education. Frances Hamlett, Assistant Professor in the Department of Business and Economics and Director of the Longwood Region of FBIA, gave an FBIA status report. FBIA Executive Secretary and Assistant State Supervisor, Business Education Services assisted by Mr. Jargensen and Florence Bailey, of the State department, presented a program on "FBIA — Our Curricular Activity."

The conference concluded with a dinner in the Banquet Room.

Three Week Seminar On Alcoholism Held At Wesley Foundation

By ANITA CRUTCHFIELD

The Wesley Foundation recently held a three week seminar on alcoholism in its student center. Alcohol is considered by some to be the number one drug problem on campus so at the beginning of each school term this type of seminar is held.

Dr. Ebbe Hoff, professor of Psychology and Physiology at VCU and Health Sciences Center director at MCV, lectured at the first seminar on September 15. He also works with the Studies and Rehabilitation Center, State Health Department of Virginia. "What Is Alcohol — A Medical Viewpoint" was the topic of his discussion.

Mr. Paul Van Vleet, coordinator of Alcoholism Treatment Center in Richmond, delivered a talk the second week on "Alcoholics and the Community and the Family."

"The Secret of Sandra Blaine" was the title of the film viewed at the last session on September 29. Sandra was a young society matron who turned from a social drinker to an alcoholic. A discussion followed which was led by Mrs. Nancy Anderson. Several women discussed how alcoholism had affected their lives when they came in contact with it within their families. The discussion was interesting and helpful to those who attended.

The Wesley Foundation will be holding various seminars throughout the year. This week Dr. James Helms from the Longwood History department will hold a Republican seminar to discuss the various aspects of the Republican candidate and platform. During October and November there will be worship and prayer seminars. In the spring they hope to have one on dating, engagement, marriage, and divorce as they did last year.

Bill Macdonald To Highlight Week Of L'Adventure Cousteau

Wednesday evening at 8:00 in Jarman Auditorium, photographer Bill Macdonald will present a lecture film on the career of Jacques Cousteau.

Bill Macdonald has been a sea world enthusiast since childhood. With mounting interest, he took up underwater photography.

In 1967 Bill received a B.A. from Long Beach State University, and was a certified Underwater Instructor. In 1968 he held the position of director for the Advanced Diver Program for the Underwater Unit of the Los Angeles County Parks and Recreation Department. 1972 brought him to the U.S. Divers Company as California sales manager, and west coast Public Relations Coordinator.

Several films which Bill has produced have been shown worldwide. His photographs have been published in books, magazines, and on filmstrips.

Bill first worked with the Cousteau Society during the filming of "Seabirds of Isabella." He is now the Coordinator of Special Projects for the Cousteau Society.

"The Cousteau Story" is a ninety-minute film exploring the career of Jacques Cousteau. The film begins with sections of various explorations, aqualung dives into wrecks (one being a Roman wreck of the third century B.C.) and caves. It also includes filming of Cousteau's first manned submersible, which extended man's diving limits to the continental shelf.

The film concludes with the Cousteau Society's dedication to the quality of life on Earth, with Jacques and Philippe Cousteau voicing opinions about some of the vital issues of our time.

Thursday evening at 4:00 and 7:30 in Jeffers Auditorium, the Cousteau film "The Unsinkable Sea Otter" will be shown. There is no admission fee.

The lively and vivacious sea otter, once considered extinct but now making an amazing reappearance on the coast of California, is once again in danger of extinction, and once again the danger is man. The sea otter, as we learned from the underwater scientist Jacques Cousteau in his television special, "The Unsinkable Sea Otter," is making a comeback in the middle of one of California's most popular boating centers.

Naturalists who are studying the animal fear that he may be lost as a result of being run down by motor boats and their lethal spinning propellers. Probably the most intelligent of all sea mammals, Cousteau and his divers shot never-before witnessed scenes of otters using rocks as tools while floating on their backs, and smashing sea urchins to bits that lie on their bellies. They will then use their bellies as tables for fellow otters to eat from. Unlike the whale and walrus, otters have no thick skin but have a luxurious fur to keep them warm while in cold water. To keep up body functions, the sea otter must consume 15-20 lbs. of food per day. Captain Cousteau and his crew have once again captured the unexplored in exciting sequences that could only be observed by the instinctive lens of this great oceanographer in "The Unsinkable Sea Otter."

Friday afternoon at 4:00 in Jeffers, another Cousteau film will be presented, "Lagoon of Lost Ships." In the never-before filmed sequences of the Jacques Cousteau special, "Lagoon of Lost Ships," we plunge downward to 50 sunken Japanese naval vessels unseen and untouched by man for a quarter of a century. The vessels lie in 300 feet of water on the bottom of Truk Lagoon—the victim of U.S. Navy dive bombers during a World War II raid on the former Japanese Naval fortress. Captain Cousteau and his divers found the ship's guns still pointing skyward, attesting to the fighting in progress while the ships were sinking. In the startling sequences, Cousteau's cameras probe the dark interiors of the ships, entering through huge torpedo holes in their sides. There, virtually intact, they find blankets still folded, items of clothing, gas masks and eating utensils, along with other artifacts of war. Oddly, marine life has adopted the entire ship as a haven. Coral growth abounds colorfully everywhere—exquisite reminders of how the sea can transform the "folly of man" into grotesque beauty 25 years later.

A New Beginning

Legislative Board this week voted on proposals to reconstruct Publications Board. For several years now, this committee has basically existed in name only. A definite problem has been the lack of a tangible purpose coupled with the lack of a cooperative effort by the membership in establishing any goals. One of the best things to happen to Publications Board has been its re-evaluation by Legislative Board. Impartial students scrutinized its workings and objectively made suggestions for revamping it.

The purpose of Publications Board is to promote interest in the three publications, to bring them closer together, to make recommendations of editors and business managers, to be open to complaints and suggestions, and to serve as a liaison between the publications and Legislative Board. The last purpose is one of the most important. It has seemed that Publications Board has almost been a separate entity with no one aware of its reason for existence. As a liaison, Legislative Board members and the student body as a whole can become more aware of the workings of the publications and can give better input to them. Publications are presented to, by, and for the students. There is not a select staff — all who want to express themselves can, and there is no excuse for any criticism that the feelings of the student body are not represented.

With the approval of the Publications Board recommendations, there will be a representative from each class as a member-at-large. One of these will be appointed chairman, and of the three remaining, each will become an ex-officio member of one of the publications. This totally new concept will give each editor a listening ear when problems arise, and an objective viewpoint for ideas and policies. They will also be able to estimate student responses to questions asked or to new ideas submitted. Instead of the individual advisors of the publications serving on the board, there will be only one advisor appointed by legislative board. This will eliminate any possibilities of pressure on the members to approve or disapprove various ideas. It almost defeats the purpose of a student committee to have a sizeable percentage of faculty or administration in its membership.

The suggestion to report to Legislative Board the attendance and outcome of each meeting will ensure an active organization rather than a stagnant one. With set purposes and a reorganizing of the membership to include only those with primary interest in the workings of the publications, perhaps Publications Board will become an active liaison between the publication, Legislative Board, and the students. Thank you is in order to the ad hoc committee who compiled the recommendations, for they gave a committee of little purpose something to organize itself for. Now it is up to the Publications Board itself to make these suggestions work.

Busy Voting Monday Night At Legislative Board Meeting

It was a busy voting night for Legislative Board, October 11, at its meeting in the Commons Room. Emily Burgwyn presented five proposals from the Ad Hoc Committee on Legislative Board Committee Evaluation. Two proposals were accepted unanimously by the Legislative Board members present. The first proposal dealt with attendance policy for Legislative Board members. Starting October 18, Legislative Board members will be allowed on unexcused and two excused absences per semester. More than the allowed absences will result in expulsion from the board. All excuses must be submitted in writing to the Legislative Board chairman, prior to the meeting. The second proposal dealt with the grade point average of Legislative Board committee members. While a 2.00 G.P.A. is not required, no student on Academic Probation will be allowed to serve on a Legislative Board committee.

Organization Evaluation, Help-Out and Academic Policies Committees still do not have enough names on the sign-up sheets. Legislative Board members were reminded to ask students about serving on these committees.

Cheryl Bailey and Susan Henley were approved to be recommended to Dean Wells for the Founder's Day Committee. Legislative Board also voted to give Mary Ann Gresham the names of people who signed up for Swap Shop Committee.

Oktoberfest preparations caused several representatives to be absent. Rennie Bruno, Linda Crovatt, Rosalind Crenshaw, Dee Donnelly, Rebecca Gee, (all excused), Linda Brinson and Bobby Thomas were absent. Mary Bruce Hazelgrove was there, however, and she gave a progress report on the Legislative Board Oktoberfest booth.

Susann Smith talked about plans for the project being planned by Legislative Board to raise money for a donation to the Herbert R. Blackwell Scholarship.

The October 25 meeting of legislative Board will be in French Parlor.

Letter to the Editor:

An Open Letter

Dear Editor,

This is an open letter to the student body. ANYBODY and EVERYBODY—are you listening? I am formally and cordially inviting anyone up to the kitchen on sixth floor Curry.

In the kitchen you will find a refrigerator, and you will probably find a bag labeled 621. In the bag you MAY find food—a little bit of this and a little bit of that. As it seems that everyone on the hall takes advantage of the bag's contents, I see no reason why all should not be entitled to partake of the feast.

Should you find that the bag is in any way closed—with masking tape, staples, or the like—please feel free to remove any obstacle which hinders your access to the contents. Enjoy yourselves!

Many thanks,
Margaret Hammersley

Next Production For Longwood Players To Be 'The Glass Menagerie'

By TRISH HOWLAND

Yes, the Longwood Players are already at it again. Try-outs were held last week for the upcoming production of Tennessee Williams' American classic THE GLASS MENAGERIE—resulting in a dynamic cast of upperclassmen. The leading female role, Amanda Wingfield, will be carried by Longwood junior, Patti Carr, who will be making her acting debut on Jarman Stage. A character analysis from Williams' original script states that Amanda is "a little woman of great but confused vitality clinging frantically to another time and place.... There is much to admire in Amanda, and as much to love and pity as there is to laugh at. Certainly she has endurance and a kind of heroism, and though her foolishness makes her unwittingly cruel at times, there is tenderness in her slight person."

Laura Wingfield, Amanda's daughter, will be presented by Longwood sophomore Bene Blake. Bene will also be making her acting debut on Jarman's Main Stage, although she has been seen in several one-acts, including Jacqui Singleton's one-act musical, "Michael and Cheeta." Bene's character, Laura, is said by the playwright to be "like a piece of her own glass collection, too exquisitely fragile to remove from the shelf."

Glenn Leftwich, a Longwood sophomore transfer student from VCU, will present Williams' classic fire-escape character, Tom. Also the narrator of the play, Tom is "a poet with a job in a warehouse. His nature is not remorseless, but to escape from a trap he has to act without pity."

Jim O'Conner, the gentleman caller, and also the most real character within the play, will be portrayed by Longwood sophomore, Alan Boone. Although the gentleman caller's role may seem insignificant, his appearance in the second act makes the plight of Amanda, Tom and Laura most evidently a grave sense of isolation.

The production, which will open November 10th and run through November 13th, is under the direction of Dr. Patton Lockwood, assisted by Longwood junior, Lee Murray. Theme music for the production of THE GLASS MENAGERIE has been created and will be performed live each evening by Jacqui Singleton. The set and lighting have been designed by Ben Emerson, both of which provide the mood for the play, set in the 1930's. Complementing the set, lights and actors will be the costumes, designed by Trish Howland.

Heading the backstage crews will be Brenda Ragsdale, stage manager; Meryl Phelps, set; Trish Howland, lights; Cassie Dearing, props; Mary Isemann, sound; Anne Saunders, make-up; Caryn Beausoleil, costumes; and Trisha Williams, house.

This upcoming production of Williams' THE GLASS MENAGERIE promises to be one of the most spectacular theatrical events that the Longwood audiences have seen in quite some time. Opening night is merely three weeks away, so be sure to make time to witness the Players next "creation of the theatre."

Muriel Bach Re-creates Boat Rocking Women

By JOLEILI

Professional, warm and humorous performer Muriel Bach dominated the stage Tuesday night, October 12th, as the Student Union sponsored a unique 50 minute presentation entitled "Lady You're Rocking the Boat!"

Held in the Gold Room the brilliant costume changes and displays alone were well worth the low admission fee. Building her entire monologue around the stark setting of a chair 2 tables and wire clothes screen housing her costumes, Ms. Bach solely created the realistic, believable existence of numerous characters as she spanned a 200 year time period.

Abigail Adams, the wife of the second president of the United States and mother of the sixth, was the first woman to appear stage left via front steps, to make known her feminist 1776 views. Barbed in a white "pretty nightcap" and flowing thick chestnut hair, "Abigail" irritably voiced her discontent with the Declaration of Independence and the fact that "Live, Liberty, and the pursuit of happiness pertains to the wives too!" Not too subtly dominating Adams, Abigail exclaimed how "All men would be tyrants if they could!"

The close of this set revealed the key to Ms. Bach's ability to provide a non-stop, flowing rhythm to her performance, as a long black gown worn during her transitional narrations also served as the undergarment for each costume change. Thus, with the disappearance of Abigail, Ms. Bach on stage, but behind the clothes hanger and continuously narrating became Catherine Greene, widow and owner of a debt ridden southern plantation. A pink cheek, hoop wired skirt, tight pink ribboned bodice with flowing white sleeves, and wide brimmed pink hat clothed this determined 1792 woman. Speaking to her "imaginary" boarder, Yale graduate Eli Whitney, Catherine revealed how it was actually her effective advice which developed the cotton gin, one of the most economically influential inventions of all time.

Then, graduating to the 1840's, the gray haired, spectacled, black and gray "satin-ed" Lydia Pinkham strutted on stage to promote her vegetable compound. Bound within the energies of this one female were exposed the components of inventor, healer, humorist, and a ground breaker who believed thoroughly in "night air, daily baths, and roughage for the female body!" Inspired the notorious Ms. Pinkham, believing that "The health of women is the hope of the race!" decided to "write a book, about everything I know about the facts of life! and... it will even have illustrations of the female pelvis and all that's in it!" In this act, Ms. Bach illustrated the evolution of the first sexually oriented manual "The facts of Life Treatise."

Changing the comedy pace, the seriously dramatic Eliza Young, the 27th wife of Norman Leader and active polygamist Brigham Young, pleaded her case for a divorce and freedom from possession. A heavy crimson colored, crushed velvet gown, with embroidered blue cuffs and a ruffled bottom skirt clothed Eliza, who "could not abide by the other 26 wives!" eventually helped outlaw polygamy in the U.S. by giving hundreds of public speeches cross country.

The "Literary tease" Gertrude Stein also made a stage appearance for the Lankford audience in the post depression 1930's. Ms. Bach proved this character at a lecture, when upon answering questions, explained her famous line "the meaning of a rose is a rose is arose!" Bold, witty and lightning quick, heavy set, graying Ms. Stein ended her questioner's barrage with a final "why don't I write the way I talk? Why don't you read the way I write!"

A naturally fitting end to the program found 77 year old Eleanor Roosevelt who "loved to knit but hated to sit," attired in a silver L'ame patterned gown center stage, celebrating her final New Year's party in 1961. In this portrayal, Ms. Bach superbly reproduced a likeness amazing not only in physical structure but especially in the characteristic "don't treat me like an old lady!" Eleanor's gruffness discussing politics, people, discrimination, and feelings, Eleanor closed the set of "Boat Rocking Women," with a toast to family, friends, and of course, the United States.

Wild West Show Presented In S-UN Coffeehouse

By

MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

From the rolling hills of Virginia's heartland come Jim Childress, and Steve Waldhorn, better known as the Wild West Show. Jim and Steve from Scottsville, were the attraction of the Student-Union's second coffeehouse last Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Jim and Steve originally met each other at an old-time music festival. Prior to the formation of the Wild West Show, Jim and Steve played with the Hankie Mountain Express, a blue grass band out of Stanton. They also played with the Monticello Dairy Rhythm Aces. The repetition in blue grass was unsatisfactory to them so they split with the bands and got into old-time music.

The Wild West Show originated approximately two years ago. Since then they have been singing and traveling together. They adopted the name of Wild West Show because at the time they were performing primarily western swing material. Last spring Mike Kott joined the group.

Jim plays the guitar, Steve the fiddle, and Mike the cello. Their music includes old-time Appalachian Mountain music, western swing and ragtime.

Performing is the group's sole occupation. Jim commented, "I like to play all the time, and playing all the time is the only way to sing all the time and not have to keep down a job."

Old-time music is the native music of the area in which the group lives. Steve commented, "I moved to Virginia and did some school work, but something was missing." It was then that he got into the native people, their ways of life, and consequently their music. He refers to old-time Appalachian Mountain music as "good-time music." It is "a statement of a life style," and "relays attitudes."

With his interest in old-time music, Steve learned to play the fiddle. He described the fiddle as being basic to traditional American music.

Jim added that he likes the lightheartedness of the music they perform.

The group is readying for, and looking forward to a New England tour. They feel that there will be fewer barriers to their music in New England. Steven explained that within this area too many people get the impression that their music is hillbilly, and turn away from it.

Jim and Steve enjoy coffeehouse performances, and they like contact with their audience. They are ambitious to perform a large scale concert, and are contemplating releasing a recording, yet there are no available dates.

It was obvious during their performance that the guys were genuinely enjoying themselves. Vocally and instrumentally, the two produced terrific, mellow sounds. Their music captured a folk spirit, and generated a warm, down-home feeling.

LC Democrats Enthusiastic About Election Campaign

By LISA SMITH

The Democratic College Club of Longwood College was off to a late start this year, however the delay has not dampened the high hopes of its members. According to Carol Henry, chairman of the club, the college Democrats are "working to get Carter elected."

Carol and Dr. Stuart met with the Central Democratic Committee last week in an effort to discuss the election plans and to make arrangements to work together in the community for the campaign and elections. The College Democrats will be helping with the polls and making phone calls to area Democrats.

Generally speaking the Democratic Party favors even distribution of power. However, as Carol pointed out, Carter's platform could differ from other Democrats such as the Virginia Democrats. This club is affiliated with Carter's campaign. Carter favors a regulation of hand guns as well as a waiting period on allowing people who have been convicted of a crime to register another gun. A cut down on the number of systems in our government is also in Carter's plan.

The club is planning to continue with building a strong club even after the elections. For the moment however, plans are being made to set up a booth of Carter material in the New Smoker this week where absentee ballot registrations will be available. Deadline for these ballots to be sent in are on Oct. 28.

Traditional Paint Battle Held

By KAREN SHELTON

Dear Mom,

You will never believe what happened here tonight. At about 10 o'clock I was in my room pretending to study, and I heard a lot of commotion out front. Of course, I went to see what was going on, and I could not believe what I saw. There were girls and guys, all freshmen, in the front of Main Cunningham dressed in their oldest clothes. They were all screaming "Red and White! Red and 'White!'" Finally, I realized what was going on. It was a pep rally for the traditional paint battle between the freshmen and sophomores. While the Baby Reds were having their rally in front of Main, the sophomores were also cheering on Wheeler Mall. In case you don't understand what I mean by paint battle, I'll try to explain it. Every year, a few days before Oktoberfest, the freshmen and sophomores have a paint fight. This year the freshmen are Reds, so all of the freshmen who wanted to participate went out and bought red water-based paint. The sophomores bought green. The object of the whole fight is to make the Reds green and the Greens red.

The battle took place on Wygal Mall at about 10:30. The Reds lined up on one side of the mall and the Greens on the other. After forming these "suicide" lines, each line charged their opponent. Everyone was throwing paint from trash cans, jugs, jars, and plastic bags. Some were even throwing paint filled balloons. I saw some water pistols, too! After everyone was totally drenched in red and green paint, a huge circle was formed, and the Baby Reds were announced winners.

It was really exciting just watching the battle. I can imagine how the participants felt! Maybe next year I'll have the nerve to fight!

Residence Board Meets

Dining Hall Committee Report:

Notices announcing the Food Preference Survey, to be held in October, were passed out to be placed in each Residence Hall.

Fire Wardens Report:

The fire drills went fairly well. Anytime an alarm is pulled the Residence Hall President is to call the Chairman or Fire Warden of Residence Board.

Old Business:

The Penalties Committee is working on penalties and have heard from several different schools. They are making up a list of other colleges they want to write.

New Business:

1. Noise pollution signs were passed out to be placed in the Residence Halls.
2. Floor president evaluation sheets were passed out to the Residence Hall presidents.
3. Bicycles are not to be kept in suite corridors or individual rooms in the Residence Halls.
4. Warnings, a campus, or suspension of open house privileges are the only penalties you can give during a Residence Hall Council Trial.

Volleyball Team Looking For A Comeback

By TERI DUNNIVANT

Longwood's Varsity Volleyball team suffered its second defeat of the young season on Tuesday night, falling to Lynchburg College: 6-15, 9-15. However, the team played a good game, showing much improvement. Coach Carolyn Price stated that the teamwork was showing "only after two matches together."

Losing several players from last year's team has left Mrs. Price with a young and inexperienced team. But she feels that once they get everything together, both teams will be among the teams to beat in Virginia.

The JV team, coming back from last week's loss to EMC, pulled it together to beat Lynchburg: 15-11, 15-9. Again Mrs. Price named teamwork as the "key to victory." The JV's just wouldn't give up to those Lynchburg rallies.

Mrs. Price noted much improvement in her players since tryouts, and continued improvement in their game play through some statistical analysis. The Varsity now holds an 0-2 record, the JV a 2-1 record for the season. This week, the Varsity travels to Roanoke (twice) and returns to Her on October 28th to meet Ferrum College and Liberty Baptist. Game time is 7:00, and your support is needed and greatly appreciated. So come out and watch the fastest game around!

Way to go! In an unprecedented match between Longwood men and Hampden-Sydney, our guys were snapped by the Crocodiles only once. The 1-0 score may have been a defeat, but to most it was a job well done!

Hockey Shots

By DIANNE HARWOOD

A lot happened in the world of Longwood College hockey this week, so I'll start right in with the minor details and then get to the meat of the story. First of all, those of you who are more observant in nature might have noticed that my work of art now has a name. The editor of this fine vehicle of communication suggests that since I write in column form, I might as well have a name for it.

Secondly, two new faces will be carrying the blue and white colors — Chris Tolbert and Kathy Bique. These girls were asked to join the squad due to an increasing number of injuries; injuries that are causing the girls to miss several games. So, best of luck to the two new kids on the block.

Now for the core of it all. For the first time this year, the girls put it all together and defeated the Richmond Club 3-1. Inner Terry Vout popped in all three I.C. goals. The majority of Richmond Clubbers were ex-Longwood players, so the stage was set for a grudge match. Goalie Jane Grier did not make the trip, and center halfback Scottie Capehart was recovering from a back injury. Little Lowe was whacked in the knee in the pre-game warm-up, so instead of seeing reverse sticks and chuckholes, she got the grand tour of St. Mary's x-ray room. Special congrats go to players of the week Kim Furbee and Debbie Kinzel. These freshmen were called up to replace the injured varsity players and they did a fantastic job. They got the three passes thru and the flat passes flat; they are the players of the week and that is that.

Thursday found the girls traveling to the University of Virginia. Although the game ended in a 2-2 tie, it was quite apparent that U. Va. held the upper hand. I hope the girls realize that half the season is over, and they cannot continue this "one game on and one game off." The entire forward line has got to score. The defense has got to hold and get those outlet passes out. Unless they can pull themselves together, they are going to have trouble advancing out their own division. Good luck, girls — you need it.

The JV's lost their first of the season by a score of 1-0. It was a close game, but the baby blues were just a smidgen off form, and U. Va. was able to capitalize on it. U. Va. scored early in the first half and I.C. just couldn't put it together after that. This gives the JV's a 6-1 record.

The "Sally Custer Quip" this week is short and sweet. "My team deserves a BIF after the U. Va. Game! Enough said."

The play of the week comes in the form of a "remember when." On the return trip from U. Va., a witty player came up with the following: "Remember when the hockey team use to win on penetration time?" Touché, amigo.

Survey Shows Longwood Students Not Apathetic

By CINDY CUMMINS
and DONNA HASKY

The statement that young people are apathetic seems one that travels with the ages and ours is no exception. One may hear the phrase used often in the conversations of those who are not "young" and at times, by those who are. But, according to a recent survey conducted by the Rotunda, one group of young people, our Freshman class here at Longwood, certainly proved un-athetic in one area in particular and that was in voting in the recent Freshman class elections.

The poll proved that an overwhelming majority of the class did participate with only about three in every twenty not voting. The general response given by those who didn't vote was that they felt that they did not know enough about the candidates to make a wise decision. Kelly Crowder of North Cunningham felt that there wasn't enough campaigning by those running for office and felt the campaign would have been improved by a kind of open platform where the candidates could have presented themselves and their views to the students personally.

Those who had voted were asked what they would like to see accomplished by the Freshman class officers. These were some of the responses:

Roberta Baker said, "I'd like to see our class unified by our officers, not just in our Freshman year but as we progress together through our years here at Longwood."

Sharon Pleasant, "I'd like to see our officers promote friendliness and helpfulness."

Cindy Byrd felt that it was most important right now that the officers, themselves, get organized and said, "...each one (officer) should take on their own responsibility and do their best to accomplish their tasks."

Karen Shelton said she feels that it's important that the Freshman class gains a strength and independence of their own—that they should become involved in the workings of our school such as student Gov. etc.

Raye Rector said, "I'd like to see our officers help give our class a real sense of belonging here at Longwood."

Karen Peters said that she would like to see some activities that would keep the unity and spirit of the Freshman class strong, possibly a class dance.

Betty Helton also said she would like to see a dance or carnival sponsored by the Freshman class. "It would also be nice if we could contribute something to the school as a class."

Lynn Blake said that she felt "There are still so many people in our class that I haven't met—I'd like to see a class dance or some other activity to help us get to know more people."

Getting rid of 8:00 classes was another suggested project for our officers...well, maybe when they're more experienced!

In general, the promotion of unity, spirit and organization were the main interests that the Freshmen felt their officers should devote themselves to. If this poll is a good indication of what the Freshman class hopes to accomplish this year, the word "apathetic", may fade out of their vocabulary altogether. Wouldn't that be a project for us all to work on in the coming year? Keep that Red and White spirit strong!

Alcohol Lecture To Be Held

By SHERYLE SMITH

The Dean of Students Office and Chi are offering an alcohol symposium on November 3 and 4. On Wednesday, November 3, there will be a lecture on the effects of alcoholic parents on students and recovery from alcoholism. The many books published by Ms. Ashton include Modern American Sculpture, A Reading of Modern Art, Picasso on Art, The New York School: A Cultural Reckoning, A Joseph Cornell Album, and Yes, But... A Critical Biography of Philip Guston.

The public is cordially invited to attend Ms. Ashton's lecture which is sponsored by the Department of Art at Longwood College.

Rock-Around-The-Clock For Crop And Help Feed Hungry People In The World

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS

You can help to feed hungry people around the world simply by rocking around the clock in rocking chairs! How? Just get a few friends or relatives to sponsor you in the CROP Rock-A-Thon, sponsored by the Wesley Foundation, on October 30. Then come to the Lankford Building, have a seat in your favorite rocking chair, and rock on!

There will be 13 rocking chairs in front of Lankford (inside Lankford in case of rain or cold) from 6:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. on October 30. Students, and faculty from Longwood and Hampden Sydney, as well as Farmville community members and local high school students are urged to rock for CROP. Participants must be 16-years-old or older. "Rockers" in the Rock-A-Thon should rock at least an hour (preferably more) with friends pledging money for each hour rocked.

All money raised through Rock-A-Thon pledges and donations will be given to CROP. What's CROP? CROP is the Community Hunger Appeal of Church World Service. CROP provides food for emergency relief and resources for self-development (such as seeds and farm tools) both here in the United States and abroad in 30 nations overseas.

Many students from both Longwood and Hampden-Sydney are expected to turn out for the Rock-A-Thon. Several administration and faculty members will also be making contributions. A special added attraction during the event will be the arrival of all Head Residents from each of the dorms. They will all be rocking together for an hour. So even if you won't be able to rock on October 30, pledge some money to your Head Resident—she'll do it for you!

At least 460 million people are on the verge of starvation. Be concerned enough to help these people. Either participate yourself or sponsor someone who is rocking in the CROP Rock-A-Thon, October 30. Betty Lewis is chairman of this event and George Baumgardner is coordinator for the Rock-A-Thon at Hampden-Sydney. Phone or visit the Wesley Foundation, 204 High St. (across from French dorm) if you are interested or have questions Sign-up sheets for participants will be in the New Smoker and Wesley Foundation Student Center. Remember, world hunger is your problem, too.

Longwood Students Plan To Operate F.M. Radio Station

By SANDY HAGA

Plans are under way for a college 10 watt educational F.M. radio station which would be operated by Longwood students. Four years ago several faculty and student members checked into the possibility of establishing a station, but their efforts did not succeed. Two years later another attempt was made, but it also failed. This year Dr. Patton Lockwood made a proposal to the Faculty Liaison Committee for the establishment of a station. Reasons for the proposal were that there is an increased interest in communications, personnel to the job, and pressure to act now because fewer frequencies are available. The committee composed of three members of the Board of Visitors has supported the proposal.

Several sources of funding are under consideration. The station could be privately funded, supported by student activities fees funds, or become part of the college budget. However, before a station can be set up, the Federal Communications Commission must approve an application for a license to broadcast. The Virginia FCC office stated that applications will not be accepted until January 1. After the FCC receives the application, processing may take as much as six to eight months.

The application consists of two parts. An engineering section, which deals with the technical aspects of a station, and the programming section, which involves presenting a program proposal which meets FCC requirements for this type of station. As an educational F.M. Station it must be educational and non-commercial. The station could be heard up to five or six miles from the antenna on Jarman Auditorium. Broadcasting could possibly start second semester, but will probably begin next summer or fall, if the application is approved.

A college station would benefit students and would serve as a practical lab for different departments. Student activities and sports could be broadcast. A radio station would also serve as a means of contacting not only the college community, but the Farmville community as well. Eventually, the station might be able to get wire service news from the Associated or United Press. This would provide a broad coverage of national and world news as well as local and state news.

Dr. Lockwood anticipates possible membership in the Intercollegiate Broadcasting Association if a station is established. It is expected that a broadcast group will be formed on campus and a survey taken to determine the listening preference of students. A series of shows run by students with varied interests, is being considered. This would enable the station to offer something that would appeal to the different tastes and interests of students. Speeches and concerts could also be broadcast.

There will be a meeting soon of all students and faculty interested in working on programming and operation of a station.

Longwood S-UN Sets Aside Oct. 25-29 As Political Week For Coming Election

By LISA SMITH

In the interest of the student body, the S-UN of Longwood College has set aside this week to be Political Week. Speakers, debaters, and a mock election are set up for the remaining nights of this week.

In the past years, the special event week planned by the S-UN, has usually centered around some topic that is non-academic. Last year was Freak Week, with a number of events dealing with ghost and goblins and superstition.

According to I.B. Dent, director of the S-UN, the organization would like to "get away from the image of light entertainment". Dent also stated that the aid of the S-UN is "to appeal to a broader range of students' needs".

One of the immediate needs of college students is to be aware of current events. Political Week provides an excellent opportunity for students to talk to one another about the election and to become involved in a major election.

This Political Week is aimed at presenting the issues of both parties without attempting to sway the observer one way or another.

A debate between Virgil Goode and Marshall Coleman is scheduled for tonight. Goode is a member of the Democratic Party while Coleman is a member of the Republican Party. Each debator will have a chance to his say, followed by a response to each others comment. The debators will than ask each other questions and respond accordingly. The program will conclude with questions from the floor.

The mock election taking place on Wednesday, October 27, provides each student with a chance to vote for his-her choice. All students are urged to participate in the mock election. The results will be announced at the speech by Dr. Goldberg on Wednesday night.

Two speeches on topics other than Democratic and Republican views have been included for the student's benefit. Dr. Goldberg, a government teacher at H-SC, will speak on "The Nature of Political Parties and their Relationships to Presidential Elections".

Dr. Sullivan, associate professor of Speech Communications at UVA, will speak on "Political Speeches and Double Talk". His discussion will include ways politicians manipulate words and speech to sway an audience to his side.

To end the week, the S-UN has provided a light event to take some of the serious edge off of the week. "The Candidate" is a popular movie that should be of interest to everyone.

It is the hope of the S-UN that each student will take an active part in Political Week and perhaps become involved in a campaign at home or on the college campus. Talking with others and motivating each other to think about the leaders of this country should raise questions. This week is an excellent time to get answers and gain knowledge not only about the two main parties but about politics in general.

The Editor's Opinion

The upcoming election to select a national leader offers little choice to the voters. Of the two major candidates, neither has dazzled the country with his brilliance. It almost seems a shame not to have a "none of the above" box inserted on the ballot. But a decision must be made — who has the potential to do the better job? Both have lowered themselves to backstabbing, a common and expected practice but inexcusable all the same. Both have their faults: one agrees with any and everybody about everything, and one has done little to prove himself superior. Let's look at the two candidates . . .

On one hand, there is Jimmy Carter — a governor, never a Congressman or Representative. His trademark has been his smile, whether displayed appropriately or at the most serious and inappropriate times. Nominated with the Democratic platform, he has too often seemed to forget what his platform represents. He caters to the immediate audience, and agrees with whatever it proposes. When backed into a corner, he fudges ever so gracefully, exhibiting his "Carter hustle" and talking to the podium. His party platform supports gun control and limited abortion; during the last debate he hedged both issues. If elected, he promises a three per cent unemployment rate — after all, the lower the better, right? Wrong. Even the most basic student of Economics 202 knows that any figure under four per cent would result in rocketing inflation for the nation. Carter seems to forget that the four per cent figure includes students, people in between jobs, women on maternity leave, and those who do not want to work, as well as those who cannot find jobs. The promise of an openness with the American people concerning defense proposals sounds excellent on the surface. But, how many nations would appreciate a broadcast of US intentions concerning them, their allied nations, and their enemies? Foreign policy is a touch-and-go situation, and the entire population does not need to be consulted, nor is it knowledgeable enough to understand if it is told of upcoming decisions.

On the other hand, there is Gerald Ford — the now President of the United States. He stepped in at a time when Watergate clogged everyone's thinking, when unemployment was in double figures, and when foreign relationships were poor. In his acceptance speech, he promised little and has lived up to this expectation. The past two years will not be remembered as eventful. However, Ford has brought us to a time of peace, hopefully with Watergate far behind, and he has considerably lowered the unemployment figure. People like him — he has good relationships with foreign leaders. One concept in his favor is that he reflects his party's stand. The Republican platform is against gun control and abortion, and is for more localized control over the educational system. During the last debate, Ford concretely stated that he was against restrictions on buying guns, because he felt it more important to instill longer lasting penalties on those abusing the laws rather than to restrict the average citizen. He is not a great judge of character — several of his appointments have failed to live up to his expectations. His own leadership abilities are far from dynamic. However, he stands firm in his beliefs and is not threatened by Congress to change his mind. He promises only what he believes he can accomplish, even if it is very little. Few other politicians have been this honest.

On November 2, this nation will have to decide between two major candidates and several unknowns. The answer as to who will lead us for four years will not be known until then. The choices? Carter has his smile and constantly changing viewpoints and promises — but he offers something different from what we have now. Ford, already in the position and gaining in ease and familiarity with it and the nations, promises only what is realistic and does not try to be all things to all people. Each voter must decide for himself.

FOR YOUR INFORMATION . . .

An Interview With Dr. Willett

By ELLEN CASSADA

Q. WHY IS SUCH A SMALL AMOUNT OF THE LONGWOOD FOUNDATION NON-RESTRICTIVE MONEY SET ASIDE FOR FACULTY RESEARCH PROJECTS?

A. Well, actually this year there's nothing in there for faculty research projects, because we can fund faculty research projects out of state money, and so the decision was made when we moved up the number of eminent scholars positions. We asked the Foundation to give us that extra money to get the extra faculty positions. We went through the budget, and anything we could pay out of state funds, we're paying out of state funds, and anything there that you couldn't...had to stay with them. My own feeling is that this is something we continue to need to try to take a look at...It is done out of state funds and there is a faculty committee...

Q. SO A FACULTY MEMBER THAT WANTED TO DO A TYPE OF RESEARCH PROJECT WOULD GO TO THIS COMMITTEE AND COULD BE AWARDED SOME STATE MONEY?

A. Yes. Now I'm not saying that there still couldn't be something out of the Foundation if there were something unusual or the like, and one of the reasons that I have a discretionary fund is to take care of emergencies of just something of this type that's just too good to pass up...The basic thing has been...for the Foundation to spend their moneys in areas where state moneys legally could not be spent.

Q. WHAT ARE THE GENERAL DISCRETIONARY POWERS GIVEN TO COLLEGE PRESIDENTS BY THE GOVERNOR?

A. I don't have any given by the governor. They're all given by the Board of Visitors. In other words you are charged by the Board with the day to day administration of the institution. There are times that the board will sit down and very specifically say that you will do certain things and one Board may differ from another Board insofar as this is concerned. There is no one single listing anywhere. I have a job description in the faculty handbook that's approved by the Board and that probably comes closer than anything else that I could think of...as to where you could go to one place that says that these are your responsibilities, but as in any job description I don't think it's humanly possible in something a couple of paragraphs long to sit down and talk about everything that you do but any authority that I have comes directly from the Board of Visitors.

Q. ARE OTHER SCHOOLS DONE THE SAME WAY?

A. Yes...

Q. ARE OTHER ADMINISTRATORS GIVEN TYPES OF DISCRETIONARY POWERS BY THE BOARD OF VISITORS?

A. Again all of the job descriptions...in the faculty handbook are approved by the Board. Therefore that job description would obviously carry with it some areas of discretion. Beyond that in the case of staff members it may be a discretion that I would give them. In other words, it's something that I have authority over...

Q. DO ANY OF THE OTHER ADMINISTRATORS HAVE A TYPE OF DISCRETIONARY FUND OF THEIR OWN?

A—No, most small colleges in Virginia usually only have one. I am not the only one who spends out of it. For instance, all the vice-presidents have standing authority to spend certain amounts out of it. Beyond that they have to get my approval...You have all of the vice-presidents and business manager all have the authority to within limits take funds. Now one thing about the discretionary fund you have to understand is that although I control it on a day today basis, it is also under the control of the Board of Visitors, and the major single expenditures out of that could conceivably come directly for the Board itself...

Q. WHY ARE DECISIONS OF ORGANIZATIONS SUBJECT TO YOUR APPROVAL?

A — Which ones do you mean?

Q. FOR INSTANCE, ORGANIZATIONS WILL DECIDE SOMETHING AND THEN IT GOES TO LEGISLATIVE BOARD FOR APPROVAL, AND THEN TO YOU FOR FINAL APPROVAL?

A—It depends on what the nature of it is. The vast majority of decisions that any board would make I might know about them only because they send me a copy of the minutes. Now in the area of policy where again the Board of Visitors has the ultimate authority and where I have been directed by the Board to review and approve and recommend to the Board in those instances of major policy where they have to deal with it, then that is just one of the steps in the overall procedure leading to that...

Q. WHY HAVE SOME OF THE ADMINISTRATION BEEN GIVEN FACULTY STATUS?

A—I have a position paper in this...This is a policy of the state of Virginia. The governor is by legal action the chief personnel officer in Virginia and as such he has the authority to set personnel policy. He has established through an executive order a system whereby some categories of administrators have faculty rank. There is a published listing of those which comes from Richmond...This started...about 1963. It was in effect when I came to the college. At that time I think there might have been five or six categories but some of them were not broken down the way they are now...There are two fundamental reasons why, as I understand it; I think it was Governor Harrison that put it in at that time and every governor since then has seen fit to continue it. One was the concept that an institution is better served by an administrator who has an academic background, and you see an administrator cannot be appointed to this unless they meet the minimal qualifications for faculty at that institution...Secondly, the state has what you call a classified pay system which is extremely rigid. If you are serving your fifth year in a certain position, then you will get exactly that many dollars and no more, and they were finding that for your key positions that you could not attract and could not recruit on that basis. Now, there are no such limitations upon faculty salaries and therefore the governor felt that (I think the first reason was the most important reason)...to put these certain categories in this way and you've got a degree of flexibility. . . The average for administrators can only be a certain percentage. . . The state of Virginia is not unique in this. There's been a national survey which showed that the majority of states in the United States follow a similar pattern. . .

Q-WHAT DOES FACULTY STATUS INVOLVE?

A — It gives us . . . the flexibility within pay. Other than that it gives you the same privileges of any member of the faculty, no more, no less. Beyond that I think it's the type of thing that's been misunderstood...through the years...

Q-OF ALL THE PEOPLE THAT HAVE BEEN GIVEN FACULTY STATUS, DO MANY OF THEM TEACH MORE THAN ONE CLASS?

A—Teaching again has nothing to do with this. Again, this is a misconception...

"THANKSGIVING BREAK

Letters to the Editor

An Appeal

Dear Editor and members of Residence Board:

This is in response to the article on page 6 of the October 19th issue of The Rotunda (in regard to housing bicycles in the Residence Halls). Currently the only facilities for the storage of bicycles are railings or bicycle racks outside the Residence Halls. To chain your bicycle outside is to leave it open to exposure to the elements. Anyone who has any knowledge and/or respect for bicycles and their mechanics knows that this is not the best environment for a bicycle. Rain in particular is very damaging to the gears and mechanisms on the bicycle. Another factor is dust and dirt—bad for the lubrication necessary to facilitate safe and smooth operation. And let's not forget about subjecting our bicycles to the dangerous hands of the many ignorant and incompetent humans wandering around this campus.

I, for one, refuse to leave my bicycle open to this kind of abuse.

Therefore, it is housed in my suite—behind the door, where it is not going to be in anyone's way, and consequently, is not going to be a fire hazard (no more than a clothes rack). A bicycle is in most cases an expensive piece of machinery—and demands and deserves care and respect. Until such time as the college provides better housing for our bicycles, or is willing to reimburse me at the end of each year for damage done to my bicycle due to leaving it outside, my bicycle shall remain in the safety and sanctuary of my suite. I'm sure I speak for many others on campus who own bicycles. Thank you.

SAFC Contingency Fund-

An Interview With LC President

By ANNE SAUNDERS

Q — Could you give us a general outline of the fund: its purposes, why it was formed, etc.

A — Now let's make sure I know which fund you're talking about.

Q — The Student Activities Fees Contingency Fund?

A — You've got to have reserves in every fund at an institution and there are no really exceptions to it — there's got to be a back up for that rainy day when you didn't collect as much as you anticipated maybe that you would have. Now, we have some form of reserve for every fund over which we have ultimate control. The only exception to that of course is the general fund money from the state — they don't let you have a reserve there. At the end of the fiscal year everything that you don't spend has to go back to the state. But on all others that are either auxiliary enterprises or local funds we have reserves set up. Now some of them you can bring a number of funds together and have one general reserve rather than split them all up, but we felt that in the case of the student activities fees money that should be kept pure. . . and not be commingled. . . with any other funds, so it is set up totally and separately and distinct from any other reserve.

Q — Do you have an exact figure?

A — $16,055.64.

Q — Has the Activities Fees Committee been given this figure?

A — Yes.

Q — Are there any plans to reduce the figure?

A — My own feeling is that about $10,000 is sufficient to keep in reserve and therefore if there were projects that were deemed worthwhile and so forth, then I wouldn't be opposed to receiving some suggestions from the fees committee. I think other organizations ought to have input into this. I don't think it ought to be something that just originates with the fees committee, but it should go through them just as anything else would to make recommendations. . . It would seem to me that unless there were a real emergency that this would be the type of money that you don't supplement an operating budget with but you do to some special things, some one-time things that you haven't been able to do in the past. . . I'd like to see it put together too in a package instead of coming in piecemeal. I'd like to see some real thought go into it and come up with an overall package and say we need A, B, C, and D. . .

Q — Do you have any examples of how this money was spent in the past?

A — Basically there have been no expenditures out of this. This represents the lifetime accumulation of it. Now there are some exceptions to this. There have been some times. . . that we did not collect enough money from the student activities fees to make the budget so you had to do some supplementing. . .

Q — How long has this fund been in existence?

A — I don't know. I guess I've been here eight and a fraction years. . . It's certainly been this way about as long as I've been around.

Q — Does the Student Activities Fees Committee have any direct control over this fund?

A — From a legal standpoint of course, the fund, like all funds, are under control of the Board of Visitors, and I am delegated by them to exercise the actual authority over it. . . There was concern on the part of the Student Fees Committee. . . They were not getting an annual report as to how much was in this fund, and I felt that they should get it and I met with them last spring and promised them that henceforth that would be part of the reporting that was done to them and we've certainly lived up to that agreement. I certainly would be very reluctant, although I've got the legal authority to do it, to spend anything out of here without consultation with the Student Fees Committee. . .

Q — Is the money in a savings account or a checking account?

A — I. . . know it's not in a savings account. It would be a general, what they call an agency fund. . .

Q — Does it collect interest?

A — I really don't know the answer to it. I know this, that all of our reserve funds — the big reserve funds for the college — we are not by state policy allowed to make any interest on them. They accrue to the state. In other words, we have a total college reserve of 200 and some thousand dollars, and that's kept in general accounts in Richmond, and we do not earn any interest on that. That's a state policy which is mandated by the legislature which we have no control over. . .

Q — I was of the understanding that the money was in a savings account, and that the interest was reverted back to the state.

A — No, because in most of these things you can't put them in savings. Now we have some Foundation money in savings because you don't need it immediately. . . On any of the others I think it would be fairly safe to say that if you can accumulate interest you can keep it, but anything that is actually under the state in Richmond, I know we accumulate no interest on and they hang on to that. Now, whether there is any exception in what they call an agency fund, which is where this is, I don't know the answer to that. . .

Mime Is A Popular Word In Advertising Circles

Longwood Visiting Artist Series will present Keith Berger, America's most exciting performer of an ancient art, at Jarman Auditorium on Monday, Nov. 1, at 8:00 p.m. Keith is a 24-year-old mime who lives in New York City's SoHo district, and has become a new star of commercials and advertising.

Keith Berger first caught the attention of the public as a performer for the New York Parks Department on the streets of Manhattan. Some of his favorite performing spaces were around the Pulitzer Fountain in front of the Plaza Hotel, on the lions in front of the New York Public Library, and on sidewalks in front of the Museum of Modern Art, St. Thomas Church, and the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Once, on a SoHo street while "pulling" cars and "directing" traffic, Keith "built" a wall in front of a man's car, then opened a "door" so the car could go through. The man turned out to be a former executive of General Motors, and was so fascinated by Keith's ability to create illusions with cars, he told Keith to have his managers get in touch with the General Motors advertising agencies.

Keith Berger has also worked for advertisers in media other than television. Each August The New York Times Magazine features back-to-school clothing articles with photographs. Keith was chosen as the feature in a colorful, seven-page spread on "Kid's Clothes." For several days he posed with ten small, very well-dressed children in Central Park, near the Museums and churches, and around the streets of New York. Within days he posed again for a Trevira (fabric) ad in the same Sunday magazine — this time with a beautiful female model.

With all the words and all the music television has to offer, Keith Berger has created some of its most eloquent moments with silence. And for all the color available in print, this small, lithe mime, in black leotard and white face, often catches the attention first.

Whether moving or still, Keith Berger expresses the emotions of joy, surprise, fear, and wonder. Whether Mechanical Man, gorilla in a cage, or hard-shooting cowboy, Keith Berger has every eye on him.

Tickets for Keith Berger's Jarman Auditorium performance are available through Public Relations, Longwood College, 392-9371. There is no admission charge.

Wright Brothers Captivate Longwood In Recent Repeat Performance

By JO LEILI

Monday, October 18, at 8:00 p.m., The Wright Brothers Overland Stage Company captivated their Jarman auditorium audience for a successful "return by request" 2 hour concert.

The parting of the curtains opened the act with a dynamic instrumental rock-bluegrass melody and a vision of 5 duded-up men dressed complete with cowboy hats, and neat brown and black western suits, as framed against an effective old town 1890's backdrop. Referring often to their hometown of "French Lick, Indiana. . . Control yourselves now girls, you don't get out much do you!" narrator and lead guitarist Brother C. Thomas Wright mentioned his preference for the Longwood crowd "which was a stop we looked forward to!" The Band, after breaking into "How mountain girls can love" from the Cornfield Cowboys album, their second, showed a more relaxed and improved attitude toward their playing, being currently on a slower concert circuit than their last south eastern tour. Their next stop after Longwood was Emory and Henry and their performances will eventually find them situated in North Dakota. Other Cornfield Cowboy favorites included "Sweet Country Woman" and "Wild Wicked Women of the West" which exhibited some mean "pickin'" pedal steel by the grim-tight lipped teaser Rex O. Thomas.

A new album, the "Third Phonograph Album," which was produced during a home stop this week, revealed new Wright Bros.' compositions such as one "written by a hometown person Bill Wilson" called "Time to Spend." The band evolved beautiful harmonizing with images of "Time to spend . . . so lets pur some wine," followed by another rowdier Bill Wilson tune "Its been a hell of a ride!" The inspirational "Goodness Gracious. . . Great Balls of Fire!" proved a natural attempt for the band as Rex took off powerfully on lead guitar. The Wright Bros. closed the first set with a fast moving instrumental in which percussionist Steven R. Walker contributed a "short but sweet" drum solo.

Post intermission found the band warmed up and ready to introduce more new third album material. A quiet love song, "I love you. . . more than you will know," was followed by a Mandolin accompanied tune, "Blue Mule" about folklore "which is just another word for stupid tales!" The Eagle's "Despirados," featuring John W. McDowell, II proceeded a Wright Bros. favorite, "Only time for love. . . about love between a man, and a woman, and a spiritual love."

Revealing what led them to become interested in country music initially, Brother Tom led the band into a Hank Williams melody, "Goodbye Joe, me gotta go. . . on the bayou!" The act closed with a Longwood, southern favorite, "Rocky Top," exhibiting some excellent cloggers to be present in the Jarman audience, and a desire for "more good old country music" as the group returned for three encore sets.

The first encore lent from the Wright Bros. their rendition of a Civil War medley "an era of reverence," in which a father is depicted saying Goodbye to his children the night before he leaves for the war. Led by John McDowell, "Dixie," "Glory, Glory Halleluia," and "Hush Little Children don't you cry," combined to form this serious, moving American Trilogy.

The second encore, which "we don't take for granted anymore!" consisted of 3 Gospel songs "Because We Believe In Them!", From the Cornfield Cowboys Album, came the requested, "Gospel Singing Saturday Nights," the traditional "Travelin' Shoes," and naturally "Praise the Lord. . . I Saw the Light!"

NEW ROTUNDA POLICY

Beginning today, all articles submitted to THE ROTUNDA should be typed, with the inches counted. Every 35 words constitutes one column inch. Anyone wishing to join the staff is welcome. There are, however, several guidelines. Those students not contributing on a weekly basis must help with some aspect of layouts on Sunday nights. All articles must be submitted by noon on Fridays unless circumstances warrant otherwise. If there are any questions, contact the editor.

On October 28 at 1 p. m. Professor Jeffrey Hopkins (Department of Religious Studies, University of Virginia) and the Venerable Lathi Rinpoche (Abbot of the Dalai Lama's Collegiate Monastery and Visiting Lecturer in Religious Studies, University of Virginia) will present a lecture on "Tibetan techniques for mind development" in the C Room of Lankford Building.

This lecture will be "basic" in level and should be of interest to everyone, especially those interested in other ways of viewing the human mind, human psychology, and the nature of reality. Buddhist psychology is very advanced and approaches the mind quite differently than western psychology does. There will be a question-answer period after the lecture.

Hey Longwood: There's An Election Soon

"DO YOU THINK HE WAS AGAINST ABORTION?"

Debates And Campaigning Almost Over

The third and final debate between Ford and Carter was held Friday night in Williamsburg, Va. The debate was nationally televised from Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall on the campus of William and Mary. While most Virginians were more excited with the fact that the debate was being held in the Commonwealth than the debate itself, some were interested in the outcome.

While the two previous debates dealt with specific areas; domestic affairs and foreign affairs, respectively, the final debate did not limit the reporters to any specific subject. The questions were therefore varied and covered a wide spectrum of issues.

Due to the nature of the questions, and the time element involved, the answers from both candidates tended to be evasive. Several questions concerned the economic recession. When asked about the halt in national recovery from the economic recession, Ford was quoted as saying that most economists feel that a one or two month pause is healthy. He continued that the United States was far ahead of any other free industrial nation in economic recovery.

"...We are going to see unemployment going down, more jobs available, and the rate of inflation going down."

Carter retorted, "With all due respect to President Ford, I think he ought to be ashamed of mentioning that statement, because we have the highest unemployment rate now than we had at any time between the Great Depression caused by Herbert Hoover and the time President Ford took office."

When the candidates were questioned as to why their campaign tactics were leaning more toward personal attacks than political, Carter felt that Ford was responsible and Ford said that he was aware that such backstabbing had taken place but he did not intend to do it anymore. One question concerned the polls and Carter's decline. Carter said that there were several reasons for his recent decline. After ten Republican conventions, the Republican party was re-united as was their vote. Carter also questioned the validity of such polls. He said that his main concern was the poll that will be taken on Nov. 2. Ford responded that the people were picking up on Carter's inconsistencies.

Concerning gun control, Carter favored limited registration, while Ford endorsed stronger punishment for gun-law violators. The Ford-Carter debates are the second in United States history to be nationally televised and the first involving a presidential incumbent. The winner of the debates will be announced on November 2.

An obvious change in a wart or mole is a warning that ought to be heeded; it may not mean cancer, but only your physician can tell for sure, says the American Cancer Society.

Fund-Raising, Optimistic Feelings Part Of College Democratic Club Members

The College Democrats, officially organized in late September, have been working hard to inform Longwood's students about the Democratic platform and their candidate. Last week there were tables set up in the New Smoker to better acquaint the students with Carter's stands and the beliefs of the Democratic party. The organization sent representatives to Williamsburg where they took part in a fund-raising function and met with other party members to discuss future plans. The organization is planning to continue to campaign just as diligently in the next week.

Carol Henry, the chairman of the organization, expressed optimistic feelings about the organization and its future. Carol took part in organizing the group and has high hopes for the future activities. For example, after the election on November 2, she plans to start working on the Gubernatorial election.

Carol is a staunch Democrat, brought up in a Democratic family. When considering this year's election she researched both parties and is convinced that the Democratic party and Jimmy Carter is what the American people have been looking for.

When asked which she felt was the deciding factor in voting, the candidate or the party, she answered both. She feels that Carter has gone to the people and is representative of the people and she agrees with the stands of both the party and the candidate on the major issues. Examples of these stands include the "tax incentive" which Carter proposes to encourage businesses to open up more jobs for the unemployed and to discourage the job lay-offs that might occur during a recessionary period. She also agrees with Carter's feelings on reorganization of the welfare program and his stand for a blanket pardon for the draft evaders.

Carol also expressed optimistic views concerning a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress. "I think it'll be good. We'll have a President that will work with Congress. Ford can't work with Congress."

When asked about the debates, Carol stated that, for those that are undecided, they were beneficial. She also stated that, in her opinion Carter fared much better in the final outlook of the debates. She feels that Carter was a much better speaker and appeared more sure of himself, especially in the second and third debates.

For the next seven days the organization will be concerned with informing the students about absentee ballots and helping the Central Democratic party with the polls. The workers will attempt to sway the opinions of those who are still undecided and, on the day of the election, they will work on getting the democrats out to the polls. This includes calling those who have not voted and providing transportation for those who have none.

Hard Campaigning, Canvassing- Symbols Of College Republican Club Members

The College Republican Club has been campaigning hard since the beginning of school for both the college community and the town. In September, the club canvassed the campus to see how many students had registered to vote and to get input on the student's views toward the candidates. During the first part of October, they gave out information on absentee voting. This past week end they had two cars involved in the 100 car motorcade from Richmond to Williamsburg. They attended the rallies before and during the debates and finished off their trip back at Farmville by passing out literature in the local shopping centers. The club has also worked in conjunction with Washington and Lee University to canvass Farmville.

Karen Kimbrough, chairman, feels that the Republican party has more to offer the nation. When asked whether she is voting for the candidate of the platform, Ms. Kimbrough replied, "I favor the Republican platform over the Democratic platform and I think the whole history of American Politics has been a moderate form of government. That's what Ford represents to me. I don't agree with the Socialist trend of the Democratic party because it has failed in England. I think that we need a new solution."

Ms. Kimbrough also stated her views on the prospects of a Democratic President. "If President Ford loses, we will have a Democratic Congress and a Democratic President; this would destroy the check and balance. I'd like to see a Republican Congress but the Republican Party is the minority party."

Concerning the Democratic platform, Ms. Kimbrough disagrees on several issues. "I believe that liberty lies on the local level and not on the national level. That's one of the platforms of the Democratic party. The Democrats are a very idealistic party but not very practical." Ms. Kimbrough admitted that she did not agree with all of the Republican platform however, she did feel that it was the stronger of the two. "I don't agree with the anti-abortion law and I am leaning toward the gun laws. I don't believe in voting blind ticket. If the Democrats convinced me, I'd switch—but they haven't so far."

The College Republican Club plans to campaign hard during this last week. They have no plans for activities after the election.

THE CANDIDATES: ARE THEY WO

Personal Freedom, Inflation Control Makes Ford THE Choice

By DR. JAMES HELMS

Although President Ford proposed last year the highest spending levels in American history, Democrats in Congress have passed spending bills extravagantly higher than what the President recommended, thus threatening us with a new round of inflation worse than we have yet known. Only President Ford's vetoes have spared us the increased indebtedness and increased inflation. Mr. Carter has proposed spending programs which go even beyond what the Congressional Democrats have found acceptable thus far. President Ford understands that money alone is not the solution to some of the nation's problems. He also understands, as Mr. Carter does not, that inflation — an increase in prices — is the cruellest blow that can be inflicted on the nation's poor and elderly. Thus uncontrolled government spending is an issue of substance in this campaign.

President Ford stands as protection for the workingman against compulsory unionization. Mr. Carter has promised to sign a bill ending right-to-work laws which will compel workers to either join unions or lose their jobs. Thus Mr. Carter has pledged himself to the largest special interest group in the country, while Mr. Ford has taken a rather courageous stand on behalf of the individual worker's rights.

President Ford's foreign policy has brought peace to America as well as the highest prestige among nations we have enjoyed since World War II. No American soldier is being shot at and there is no draft. Only through military strength equal to our enemies can this continue. After spending much of his time in the second debate bawling American weakness, Mr. Carter finally admitted that under President Ford, America is as strong as any nation on earth. His solution to keeping us strong is to cut the defense budget.

By promising to withdraw our troops from South Korea and not to intervene if the Russians invade Yugoslavia, Mr. Carter is inviting aggression while demonstrating his ineptness in foreign affairs. Mr. Ford's record, particularly in the seemingly insoluble problems of the Middle East, has proven his capability.

Mr. Ford made the hard decision in 1974 to reduce unemployment and inflation by providing industry with incentives to open more jobs; Mr. Carter's proposal is to put those who cannot find a job on the federal payroll. The Carter plan may buy votes at election time, but it creates no real jobs and increases the tax load on those who are working. Mr. Ford's plan works more slowly, but will create productive jobs year by year without the inflation and tax problems inherent in the Carter plan. This shows a willingness to think of America's long-range needs rather than thinking of what is politically advantageous.

With two years of facing and solving difficult problems, Mr. Ford is a dependable known quantity. Mr. Carter has shifted sides so often as to confuse even some of his supporters. For instance, he said before the Massachusetts primary that he would never give federal aid to New York City, but when he reached New York City he promised full federal financial support.

Mr. Carter and the Democratic platform have found busing to create racial balance quite acceptable. Although Mr. Ford and the Republicans have been as strongly opposed to racial segregation as the Democrats, they have supported the concept of permitting the individual to choose his or her school and making it possible for a student to attend the school closest to home.

In summary, Mr. Carter's program calls for inflationary spending and increased control over our lives through federal planning and compulsory unionization; Mr. Ford is working for control of inflation and increased non-government job opportunities while maintaining the maximum personal freedom of the individual. In foreign affairs, Mr. Ford represents proven experience as opposed to predictably dangerous inexperience.

Unique Libertarian Party Parallels Itself With Whigs

Libertarian Candidate

Roger MacBride

By PHILIP NOBILE

Roger MacBride of Charlottesville is making an underpublicized, underfinanced, but extremely classy run for the White House. This former Vermont state legislator and co-creator of the TV series, "Little House on the Prairie," is the presidential candidate of the upstart Libertarian party.

Q—WHERE DOES YOUR PARTY CONFLICT WITH OTHER CONSERVATIVE PARTIES? AREN'T YOU ALL FOR LESS GOVERNMENT AND MORE FREEDOM?

A—We are not conservatives any more than Thomas Jefferson was conservative. We believe strongly in the principle that everyone's life and body belong to himself as long as he is peaceful. We believe in less government across the board. For example, we are opposed to moral legislation as well as an interventionist foreign policy. These Libertarian positions would be anathema to Lester Maddox or any other conservative.

Q—NOT TO MENTION YOUR PRINCIPAL OPPONENTS, FORD AND CARTER.

A—The debate between Ford and Carter only turns on the extent of government control over our lives and not on whether the government has this sacred right.

Q—ACCORDING TO LIBERTARIAN PHILOSOPHY, THE ONLY ETHICAL BASIS FOR GOVERNMENT IS TO PROVIDE DEFENSE AGAINST VIOLENCE. WHY IS IT MORE ETHICAL NOT TO HAVE WELFARE FOR PEOPLE WHO CANNOT SUPPORT THEMSELVES?

A—Social welfare programs are supported by politicians who take by force property that has been peacefully earned and given to their choice of recipients. I do not consider that humane or benevolent. It's odious.

That doesn't mean that if I were elected president I would jerk these programs out from under those who rely on them now.

Q—THEN EXACTLY WHAT DOES YOUR PLATFORM MEAN WHEN IT CALLS FOR THE ABOLITION OF MOST SOCIAL PROGRAMS? THAT SEEMS RATHER CRUEL TO ME.

A—There's nothing cruel about our platform. Most of these welfare programs were established by politicians trying to alleviate the adverse impact of their managed economy. It would be insane for a new administration to attack the solution instead of the cause.

We propose to eliminate government intervention in the economy with all due speed. When that happens the productive capacity of our country will rev up. The need for welfare would be abolished in a free market.

Q—WELL, HOW WOULD THE ELDERLY PAY THEIR HOSPITAL BILLS IN A LIBERTARIAN SOCIETY WHERE MEDICARE IS OUTLAWED?

A—Once you get big government out of medicine, hospital costs won't be unbearable.

Q—I THINK YOUR LAISSEZ-FAIRE PHILOSOPHY BACKFIRES IN YOUR OPPOSITION TO THE BANNING OF "SATURDAY NIGHT SPECIALS" WHEN THE PURPOSE OF SUCH HANDGUNS CAN ONLY BE VIOLENT.

A—The legislative effort to outlaw handguns is largely racist. Blacks in high crime areas tell me they need these guns for self-defense. Since they are often poor and cannot afford a Smith & Wesson, the small, cheap handgun is a necessity.

Q—SINCE LIBERTARIANS ALLOW FOR A STRONG NATIONAL DEFENSE, WHY DOES THE CIA HAVE TO GO, IN YOUR PLATFORM?

A—According to the Libertarian viewpoint, you don't manipulate other people's lives by force or by fraud. And that's exactly what the CIA has been doing abroad. Who are we to judge the methods by which political change should occur in other nations?

Q—BUT YOUR PLATFORM EVEN CONDEMNS U.S. DIPLOMATIC INTERVENTION IN THE MIDDLE EAST. WOULD YOU RATHER RISK THE WAR BETWEEN ISRAEL AND EGYPT THAT A COMPLETE AMERICAN PULL-OUT MIGHT BRING?

A—Certainly. Russia isn't going to drop bombs on us because Israel and Egypt have it out one last time. It's up to the people of the area to settle their own problems. Kissinger has bribed Egypt and Israel with $10 billion for just one year of peace. I call that wrong.

Leadership To Renew Respect Makes Carter THE Choice

By MS. LINDA HAVILAND

As America enters its third century, I find myself entering a new phase of my own political life. In the last two national elections, I have felt pressured by the lack of choice. Today I see a choice — a very clear-cut choice — between the status-quo and vision. I choose vision, for without vision this country would not have achieved greatness. I fear without vision, we may continue our spiral into mediocrity with diminishing respect from others and for ourselves and studies are proving this to be so.

I look around me at problems in this country and I am concerned at our priority setting. As Senator Walter Mondale said in the Vice-Presidential debate, the Democrats and the Republicans have projected budgets that are extremely close in cost. The question really boils down to priorities. We must all determine a set of priorities which can relate to personal as well as national interest. I know my priorities as a person and as an American citizen, and Jimmy Carter and Walter Mondale represent my commitment to those priorities. I have no need or desire to criticize President Ford, for his record speaks for itself. I simply ask as we approach this election, why not the best?

I am a social work educator. Throughout my experience, I have seen the impact of education, or the lack of it, on American citizens. I am frustrated to see education dropping further down the list of our country's priorities because it is seen as inflationary. I feel it should be the focus of our attention because of the impact it can and does have on problems such as delinquency, unemployment, and welfare.

Jimmy Carter proposes a Department of Education in order to provide a stronger voice for education at the Federal level. His programs include expanded vocational and career education, educational rights for the handicapped, and focus on the present inadequate financing, including provision of a decent standard of living for teachers. As an educator, strongly committed to the educational process, I must commend and support a man who also recognizes the educational needs of all our people. Senator Mondale is also committed to the educational needs we have and has voted against vetoes on education financing and school lunch programs. The National Education Association has endorsed the Carter-Mondale ticket, the first such endorsement in its history, because of the lack of emphasis on education by the Republican administration.

An area of concern to me is the vast federal bureaucracy with which we have to cope in America. There are hundreds of stories about the waste and duplication of services and the resultant spending which the American taxpayer must absorb. Many state and local governments are turning to businesses to help them develop economical and efficient operating procedures and effective management techniques. Jimmy Carter implemented several such measures in Georgia such as abolishing 278 of the state's 300 agencies and consolidating functions, instituting a system of zero-based budgeting, and developing a sunshine law. His first priority as President is to implement a reorganization of the Federal bureaucracy. This will cut down the departmental run-around caused by too many agencies having only partial responsibility for a specific area. This will cut down on bureaucratic waste.

Tax reform is also an area of concern to me as a middle-income taxpayer. I am tired of hearing about big businesses and wealthy individuals paying no taxes because of tax breaks, while one-third of my salary goes directly to the government. Jimmy Carter proposes a tax reform policy which would shift the tax burden from the middle class to a more equitable allocation of responsibility.

In order for our country to be an effective world power, we must focus on our problems at home. Unemployment continues to be a major problem. It also has direct and indirect effects on crime, which increases as a result; welfare, which increases as a result and causes anger on the part of the taxpayer; and mental illness, which increases as a result and also drains public funds. Unemployment is not only an economic problem, but also a human problem. Jimmy Carter proposes a system of federal intervention with emphasis on aid to private companies to develop job programs. By creating jobs, particularly in the private sector, we increase tax revenues and diminish the welfare rolls.

is also one of my priorities. We presently operate under a double standard of justice where poor and minority individuals are dealt with much more harshly than our "white collar" criminals who cost the taxpayer a great deal more. Minority groups, who made large gains during the 1960s, are seeing those gains diminished by the economic slump and the rise in unemployment. Jimmy Carter proposes justice — an overhaul of our judicial system rather than budget cuts, and focus on competence and quality, not color. Drug programs, day care centers, and improved care for the mentally ill and retarded are all areas of priority for Jimmy Carter and Walter Mondale. We can grumble about spending, but we must realize that we now spend more on incarceration, hospitalization, and welfare than we would spend in the long run for prevention. The rights of women must be included in my discussion of justice. As a woman, I do not want tokenism, I want equality and Jimmy Carter believes in that. I support the Equal Rights Amendment because it emphasizes equality under the law. So does Jimmy Carter. I support abortion on demand because I believe in a woman's right to choose according to her own beliefs and needs and because I am concerned with quality of life and not quantity. Jimmy Carter supports the Supreme Court decision because it is law and because he is sensitive to the right of each person to make her own personal choice as he has made his against abortion.

The quality and scope of health care in our country is also important to me. Jimmy Carter recognizes that our present system does not provide adequate care in many rural communities and poor urban centers. He favors national health insurance to cope with these inequities. We also need to be sensitive to the present shortage of medical personnel and begin to use the available personnel more effectively. At present, our focus is on hospitalization and acute-care service. We need to shift that focus to preventive medicine and early detection of disease in order to avoid the present high cost of medical care for treatment of such diseases.

I believe, as Jimmy Carter does, that our country cannot impose its values on other countries. Hopefully, that lesson was learned. We must also realize we cannot buy allies. Our present relationships with our allies are strained because of our emphasis on economic concerns to the exclusion of our commitments to them. We must be seen once again as a dependable ally. I am also very concerned at the emphasis we are now placing on the sale of weapons worldwide which again demonstrates our emphasis on economic factors. We are the greatest country on earth and we should and can be a vital force in world leadership. We need to be respected and trusted again and Jimmy Carter can provide the necessary leadership to renew that respect and trust.

THE PARTY PLATFORMS

Republicans

Democrats

Party Aims

"The Democrats' platform repeats the same thing on every page: more government, more spending, more inflation. . . This Republican platform says the opposite — less government, less spending, less inflation. In other words, we want you to retain more of your own money, money that represents the worth of your labors."

"Mr. Carter. . . is firmly attached to a contract with you to vast increase the powers of government. . . The price tag of five major Democrat platform promises could add as much as $100 billion to the annual cost of government. . . The total of all Democrat proposals could be as high as $200 billion. . . could raise your taxes by 50 per cent. . ."

"We do care about your basic freedom to manage your own life. . . We do care about encouraging permanent and meaningful jobs. . . We do care about your getting paid in sound dollars."

"Two Republican administrations have both misused and mismanaged the powers of national government, obstructing the pursuit of economic and social opportunity, causing needless hardship and despair among millions of our fellow citizens. . ."

"We do pledge a government that has as its guiding concern the needs and aspirations of all the people rather than the perquisites and special privileges of the few. . . We do pledge a government that will be committed to a fairer distribution of wealth, income and power."

Energy

"Immediately eliminate price controls on oil and newly discovered natural gas in order to increase supply."

Favors "accelerated use of nuclear energy through processes that have been proven safe," with more safety research on nuclear waste disposal.

"We vigorously oppose. . . divestiture of oil companies" and their breakup into separate producing and marketing segments.

"Beyond certain levels, increasing energy prices simply produces high-cost energy, without producing any additional energy supplies." Increases in 1975 law for oil prices are adequate. As for natural gas, favor some raises in price ceilings, but not total removal. Just enough to bring close to equivalent energy price for oil.

"U. S. dependence on nuclear power should be kept to the minimum necessary to meet our needs. We should supply stronger safety standards as we regulate its use. And we must be honest with our people concerning its problems and dangers. . ."

Supports divestiture of all companies.

Bar oil companies from owning competing types of energy such as coal.

Environment

Pledges to preserve "clean and healthy" environment.

Public lands to be used for multiple use, not "closed to exploration for minerals or for mining without an overriding national interest."

"Emphasis on environmental concerns must be brought into balance with the needs for industrial and economic growth."

Maximize sustained yield in forests, including national forests, using "clear-cutting and replanting where appropriate."

Pledges to preserve environment. "Those who would use the environment must assume the burden of demonstrating that it will not be abused."

Economic growth and environmental preservation are compatible.

Education

"Segregated schools are morally wrong and unconstitutional." But "we oppose forced busing to achieve racial balances" and "favor consideration of an amendment to the Constitution forbidding the assignment of children to school on the basis of race."

Favors a constitutional amendment to permit local communities "wishing to conduct non-sectarian prayers in their schools. . . to do so."

Favors child-care assistance for working parents.

Favors study to find ways to withdraw federal aid to elementary and secondary education, provided ways can be found to return to the states equivalent revenue (to compensate for any loss in present levels of federal funding.)

"Mandatory transportation of students beyond their neighborhoods for the purpose of desegregation remains a judicial tool of the last resort for the purpose of achieving school desegregation."

Favors "federally financed family centered developmental and educational child-care programs."

Calls school programs "underfunded" at federal level. "With increased federal funds, it is possible to enhance educational opportunity by eliminating spending disparities within state borders."

Miscellaneous Government

Supports automatic and mandatory minimum-sentences for persons committing federal offenses using dangerous weapons.

Supports "right of citizens to keep and bear arms. . . opposes federal registration of fire arms."

Opposes federal postcard registration bill.

Favors D. C. voting representation in House and Senate and full home rule over local matters.

Mandatory sentence for committing felony with gun.

Backs laws to control manufacture and distribution of handguns and Saturday night specials, but sportsmen can possess guns for hunting and target shooting.

Favors federal postcard registration bill, D. C. voting in Congress, full home rule.

Civil Rights, Discrimination

"There must be vigorous enforcement of laws to assure equal treatment in job recruitment, hiring, promotion, pay, credit, mortgage assess and housing. . . We reaffirm our pledge to work to eliminate discrimination in all areas for reasons of race, color, national origin, age, creed or sex and to enforce vigorously laws guaranteeing women equal rights."

"The Republican Party reaffirms its support for ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment" to the Constitution.

"The Republican Party favors a continuance of the public dialogue on abortion and supports the efforts of those who seek enactment of a constitutional amendment to restore protection of the right to life for unborn children."

"Major changes are needed to maintain the confidentiality of tax returns and Social Security records" and protect against seizure an individual's bank records by the government.

"We must insure that all citizens are treated equally before the law, and given the opportunity regardless of race, color, sex, religion, age, language or national origin, to participate fully in the economic and social and political processes and to vindicate their legal and constitutional rights."

"We seek ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment."

"We feel . . . that it is undesirable to attempt to amend the U. S. Constitution to overturn the Supreme Court decision" permitting abortion.

"We pledge. . . to protect citizens' privacy from bureaucratic and technological intrusions, such as wiretapping and bugging without judicial scrutiny and supervision."

Amnesty

"Full and complete pardon for those who are in legal or financial jeopardy because of their peaceful opposition to the Vietnam war, with deserters to be considered on a case-by-case basis."

Health

"The Republican Party opposes compulsory national health insurance (which) will increase federal government spending by more than $70 billion in its first full year (and) require a personal income tax increase of approximately 20 per cent."

"We support extension of catastrophic illness protection to all who cannot obtain it."

Opposes any research on live fetuses and legislation which sanctions ending life of the patients.

Lower health care costs by encouraging healthier life styles, ending wasteful duplication of facilities, preventive care, more out-of-hospital service but "we oppose excessive intrusions from Washington in the delivery of health care."

"We need a comprehensive national health insurance system with universal and mandatory coverage (financed by) employer-employee shared payroll taxes and general tax revenues."

Lower costs by government rate-setting. "Rates for institutional care and physicians' services should be set in advance. . ."

Talents With Department

By TRISH HOWLAND

Dr. Patton Lockwood, director of the upcoming Longwood Players Production of The Glass Menagerie, and chairman of the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts at Longwood, has many accomplishments behind him which many students are not aware of. He studied as an undergraduate at Oberlin College majoring in speech, acquired his Masters in Education and drama at the University of Virginia and completed his Ph.D. in theatre at Michigan State.

"Dr. Lock," as his students call him, has been directing plays at Longwood for 14 years, his most recent productions being The Beggars Opera, and A Doll's House from last year, and even more recent, the Players production of Twelfth Night.

One of Dr. Lockwood's many unusual talents is that he builds musical instruments. Last year he built an electric bass for his own use in Jacqui Singleton's production of "Class of 88." This year, the use of a lute was required for Fests, the Clown in the production of Twelfth Night. Since he had built a lute several years ago when he himself portrayed Feste, Dr. Lockwood began plans for his second lute. After 5-6 hours of preparing drawings, he found scraps of lumber in the set construction shop and began to build the lute. Three days worth of his spare time completed the lute facsimile, which cost less than $10 to construct. The usual price of a lute ranges from $150-$300, so the saving is quite obvious.

Concerning his current directing project, Dr. Lockwood is very enthusiastic about the cast if The Glass Menagerie. He feels that the cast has the pressure of limited rehearsals to cope with, but they are a very "relaxed group . . . hardly any tension" exists between the cast members.

As far as the technical aspects of the play, Dr. Lockwood has not had to concern himself so much with the designing. Ben Emerson has designed the fragmented set and extreme mood lighting. The most convincing set structure for the play is the fire escape and landing, which will be welded together as would a real fire escape. The use of a scrim (a gauze curtain) will effectively age the entire mood of the play which is reminiscent of the 1930's.

All in all, the Longwood Players and the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts have tremendously benefited by the knowledge of Dr. Patton Lockwood; as a director, as an educator, and most of all, as a professional in every sense.

Students Needed To Rock-A Rock-Around The Clock

For CROP Rock-A-Thon Sat., Oct. 30

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS

How would you like to sit and talk to friends, relax, have some refreshments and still be contributing to the fight against hunger? It's as easy and fun as it sounds when you participate in the CROP Rock-A-Thon at Lankford on October 30. Sign up to rock in one of the 15 rocking chairs to be stationed outside Lankford (inside if rainy or cold). Sign-up sheets are in the New Smoker and at the Wesley Student Center. If you're not in the mood to rock you can sponsor one of your friends or even your head resident to rock. All money raised in the CROP Rock-A-Thon will go to feed hungry people in the world, of which there is estimated to be 460 million.

Students and student organizations at Longwood and Hampden-Sydney are being challenged to rock or sponsor rockers to help CROP feed the hungry. Many are volunteering their time and contributions, but students are not the only ones meeting the challenge. Our nine head residents here at Longwood have agreed to rock together for an hour. Dr. James Gussett is also going to rock for CROP.

Local businesses have been asked to sponsor rockers and community members are expected to pitch in. CROP is the Community Hunger Appeal of Church World Service. It provides food for emergency disaster relief such as the recent Guatemala earthquake. CROP makes available resources, such as seeds, farm tools, wells, and windmills, so that people may learn to feed themselves. The $5 that will buy a big "everything-on-it" pizza will also buy 125 packets of vegetable seed, enough for a small village to plant a community garden.

If you are interested in participating in the CROP Rock-A-Thon, either as a rocker or sponsor, sign up on the Rock-A-Thon sheet in the New Smoker or in the Wesley Student Center. The Wesley Foundation is promoting the CROP Rock-A-Thon. Questions about the Rock-A-Thon can be directed to Betty Lewis, chairman of the event (320 Cox, 392-6780), Malinda Ayers at the Wesley Student Center (204 High Street, 392-4933) or any Wesley member. Get involved! Rock for CROP on October 30.

Cousteau Photographer Mixes Film, Lecture And Song

MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

"The Underworld Adventures of Jacques Cousteau" were brought to Longwood last week by oceanographic photographer Bill Macdonald. Four films were shown through the week, with a special lecture-film presented by Mr. Macdonald Wednesday evening. Through an interview and his lecture Bill talked of the Cousteau Society, its objectives and philosophies, and of his involvement with the society.

Bill Macdonald has been seriously involved in photography for the past eleven years. His four films and still photography, as he put it, "tell a story of what happens in the cycle of life in the ocean." In the fall of 1974, while he was doing some free-lance work, the Cousteau Society contacted him and asked him to join their team. His work included expeditions, still photography, film production and lectures.

Bill described the function of the Cousteau Society as producing "Media communication about the quality of life, the world's water system and endangered species." He added that the society sees the "oceans being threatened because of an international race to outproduce each other, a lot of greedy people that are interested in short term financial benefits at the risk of seriously endangering the environment."

When asked what the society is doing in an attempt to curb that situation, Bill explained that the society strives for public awareness. The society goes out to the public with their productions and lectures. They are involved in several long term projects, such as the research of renewable sources of energy and food, but without danger to the environment. The society promotes respect and thought for future generations.

Currently the society is working with the production "Oasis in Space." The film special is being produced in an attempt to "educate people as to the importance of a vital and healthy water system." Bill commented that the special stresses the fact that "world wide, the oceans are dying."

Bill's first expedition with the Cousteau team was the filming of the "Seabirds of Isabella Island". Shooting 127,000 feet of film, it took four months to complete the film. The film included footage of Bill's still photography.

After the Isabella Island expedition, Bill took the position of Coordinator of Special Projects for the Cousteau Society. As coordinator he is responsible for the production of lectures such as "L'Adventure Cousteau," and for fund raising. Part of his fund raising job included a tour last summer with David Crosby and Graham Nash. Reaching 23 cities and 200,000 people, together they produced "song and film to celebrate the beauty and sensitivity of the world's whales and dolphins."

Bill is planning to take "L'Adventure Cousteau" to Guam and Okinawa. While in that area he plans to begin work on another special project. He will be diving and filming at Palau, near Micronesia. Located there is a large reef area, noted as being "one of the prettiest diving locations in the world." Beauty alone is not the reason for Bill's diving expedition. Above the 20 by 30 mile reef area, American and Japanese interests want to build a $500,000,000 petrochemical complex. The complex would serve as an oil transshipment port. Bill stated, "We're going to film this to have a record of the beauty so we can use that to persuade people to fight this type of thing." He added in protest, "At some point in time you have to say 'We respect life too much to make short term gains'."

On regular diving expeditions, the divers work from two inflatable, mobile boats (zodiacs). The boats serve as platforms for the divers, and units for monitors and generators. In most cases the divers include two cameramen, two lightmen and one man to handle the light lines.

The crew of the Calypso is as specialized and diversified as the Calypso itself. Crew members are highly skilled technicians. Each member has several jobs to perform. Most of the team are French naval veterans who have worked with Cousteau for years. Calypso is supplied with dark rooms for film developing, as well as extensive biological equipment and scientific systems.

The interview was concluded with a question concerning the most thrilling aspect of Bill's work. He answered, "My biggest thrill is diving and being a part of the understanding of the life system and learning about this through working with Cousteau."

The film "The Cousteau Story" was presented in four sections. The first section dealt with the career of Captain Cousteau. It included two undersea archeological discoveries. In 1946-47 off the coast of Tineaia, Cousteau and his team excavated 63 perfectly conditioned ionic columns. The columns, in 140 feet of water, were supposed to be the result of the sacking of Athens in 86 B.C. The second discovery was of 10,000 amphora vases from a Roman vessel wreck, dated the third century B.C. Off the French coast, the wreck was submerged in 130 feet of water.

The film's second section was geared toward fun and excitement. The beautiful film sequences were of the photographic excellence for which the Cousteau productions are noted. More importantly, that section also included, in the words of Jacques and Philippe Cousteau, the philosophy of the Cousteau Society.

The workings behind the production of "Seabirds of Isabella" were shown and explained in the film's third section. And it concluded with an awe-inspiring pictorial interpretation of John Denver's "Calypso."

Bill Macdonald is an avid supporter of the preservation of the quality of life; his work reflects such. Those who would be interested in being involved in those things which the Cousteau Society represents, society memberships are available. LC Dance Co. To Present Fall Concert

By LAURA BAILEY

The Longwood College Company of Dancers will be presenting their fall concert this Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Oct. 28, 29, and 30 at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

This year's concert has a slightly different favor to it. The first half of the program is called a Dance Glossary. It is during this part that the audience will not only see but hear a visual demonstration of technical training a dancer must achieve. Also short studies in different styles of dance will be performed in the first of the program.

The second half of the program is dedicated to the music "The Carnival of the Animals." The dance is a suite that lasts approximately 25 minutes continually. The curtain will remain open during the entire performance so the audience will be able to see the workings on the stage constantly. The second half is very humorous and light in mood and one that everyone could enjoy.

There is no admission to any of the performances given and the public is invited.

All About People Highlights LC Students

The Oral Interpretation Class (Speech 403) will present a program entitled "All About People" on Tuesday, November 2, 1976 in the Studio Theater (Jarman Hall) at 1:00 p.m. As guest of the class, Mr. Owen Phillips, director of the Barter Theater in Abingdon, Virginia, will serve as a critic. The forty minute presentation will include original poetry, prose, and reader's theater by Longwood College students. Jacqui Singleton will read her own "Essay on Brown" and will participate with the class in a selection entitled "That Other Rib." In addition to Jackie, Janeen Ortiz, Debra Mero, Karen Foster, and Linda Swanson will present their own poetry.

Renee Bourgeois, Brenda Ragsdale, Allie Chaffin, and Averett Jones will add to the program with the reading of humorous poetry and prose. Definitions will be given by Pam Kidd, Robin Powell, Anne Saunders, Kimberly Spence, Beth Tanner, Ann Streat, and Pam Whitehurst. On the serious side Suzann Smith will read a powerful poem entitled "The Addict." Monologues will be acted by Trish Howland, and Jenny Grover Droncy.

Students, faculty and friends are invited to "All About People" which is free of charge. Mrs. Nancy Anderson serves as the teacher of this class, and Mr. Ben Emerson will add the dimension of lights.

Mr. Phillips, a closer personal friend of I. B. Dent, will be making an informal talk on Wednesday, November 3rd, Wygal Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. This will be a meeting of the Virginia Museum Group, but faculty and students of Longwood College are invited to hear Mr. Phillips describe his days in the theater, especially his friendship with the American playwright, Tennessee Williams. There is no charge for this program.

Music Of The Church Performed In Longwood Fall Choral Concert

The Longwood Department of Music presented their Fall Choral Concert on Sunday, October 24, in the Farmville United Methodist Church. Devoted to "Music of the Church," the two Longwood groups who performed were the Concert Choir and Camerata Singers; both were under the direction of Dr. James McCray, chairman of the music department. This year a guest choir from Douglas Freeman High School in Richmond also participated in this annual event. It is conducted by Deen Entsminger.

There were compositions performed which had been composed by each of the respective conductors, Entsminger and McCray. In the McCray work, members of the choir were sent to various places in the sanctuary and sang canonically echoes to the larger choir on the text of Ave Maria. Other composers represented by the Douglas Freeman choir included Hovhannes, Ringwald and Pooler. This was the third appearance in three years of this choir on the Longwood campus.

The Camerata Singers presented works by Haydn, Lassus, Vivaldi and Pinkham. The Pinkham composition employed an electronic tape which produced various types of electronic sounds made by a synthesizer and the Camerata Singers sang, made improvisatory sounds, spoke and even shouted their parts. Pinkham's purpose was to attempt a more contemporary interpretation of this ancient text, "In the Beginning of Creation."

The Concert Choir sang works by Charpentier, Porpora, Vaughan Williams, Mendelssohn, and Distler. The choir this year has grown to 93 members and is one of the largest all-Longwood choirs ever.

Various students were featured in the concert. The president of the Camerata Singers, Penny Trice, conducted the opening composition. Three soloists used on the Vivaldi work were sopranos Linda Muley and Therees Tkach, and alto Rene Rowland. The instrumental accompaniment for it was provided by Marie Carter, harpsichord, and Charles Berkmann, cello.

The choir president, Shelby Shelton, conducted the composition by Distler. In the Mendelssohn, the soprano soloist was Kenita Walker and featured in the longer work by the eminent British composer Vaughan Williams, Magnificat, were Anne Paule, contralto, and Susan Bernhard, flute. The accompanist for the concert choir is Janet Dollins.

Also featured on the program were organ solos by Janet Dollins and Robert Chandler. The next full concert by these choral groups will be the annual Christmas Concert which will be on December 12, also in the Methodist Church.

Longwood To Host State Tourney

The Virginia Federation for Intercollegiate Sports for Women (VFISW) State Golf Tournament will be held at the Longwood Golf Course on October 30, 31.

The tournament will consist of 36 holes stroke play.

Players from colleges and universities throughout the state will be competing for individual as well as team honors. There will be an individual winner and a school team winner. The low four scores from each school will count each day to determine a team winner.

The first VFISW State Golf Tournament held was at Longwood in 1970, also in 1971. Longwood teams have held the state title three times since the tournament started.

Playing for Longwood will be: Meg Baskerville, Gail Pollard, Nan Patterson, Teresa McLawhorn, Deanna Vanwey, Becky Webb, and Tina McCrone.

Tee-off time will be at 9:30 A.M. Saturday and 9:00 a.m. on Sunday. Spectators are welcome — come out and support the team. Each match will last about four hours, so encourage support for any portion of the time.

Some of the schools participating will be: Madison, Sweet Briar, William and Mary, Averett, Hollins, Mary Baldwin, Roanoke, Randolph-Macon Women's College, etc.

Eligible is any woman who is a full time student in a college or university in Virginia whose school is a member of VFISW. All participants must have amateur status and must score an average of 110 or below for 18 holes to participate. Any number of players from one institution may participate in any event.

No Luck For Longwood Varsity Volleyball Team In Roanoke

By TERI DUNNIVANT

The week away in Roanoke saw the Longwood varsity continue to improve their play, but they couldn't pull off the win. On Monday night, Longwood travelled to Roanoke College to take on Roanoke and Radford College in a tri-match. They dropped the first match to Radford 15-7, 15-9 despite some spectacular plays. Against Roanoke, they continued their great plays — blocking and spiking away, but the service seemed to give them trouble. Roanoke took the match 15-9, 15-3.

In Tuesday's practice, Coach Carolyn Price put the emphasis on serving. "You can't score unless you get 'em in," she says. So, they served some more. All this was in preparation for Wednesday's games at Hollins College.

Emory and Henry also came to Hollins, and took Longwood on in the first match. We took the first game 15-2, and seemed well on the way to capturing the match with an early five point lead in the second game. All the serves were going in, and Longwood was playing their best of the season. But Emory captured the lead and won the second game 15-13. The third game brought more big plays from Longwood, but they couldn't hold on and Emory took the match 15-7.

The Longwood-Hollins game was a spectator's delight. Both teams got some fabulous spikes and played some great points. Longwood's Terry Johnson, Debbie Brown, and Sue Rarip put the ball down on Hollins a number of times. Again Longwood played well as a team, but couldn't get the breaks. Hollins took the match 17-15, 15-13.

This week both Longwood teams travel to Mary Washington on Tuesday, getting the JV team back in action after a two week rest. Then on Thursday night volleyball returns to Her gym when we meet Ferrum and Liberty Baptist College. Game time is at 7:00, and lots of noise is needed. So come on over, bring a friend, and make some noise for the Longwood Blue.

Alpha Delta Pi

Oktoberfest was a success for ADP: as our Roulette game became bait for many. Before the opening of the midway, parents were invited to the chapter room for tea and cookies, giving all an opportunity to become acquainted.

Recent pledging ceremonies have welcomed six new Alpha Delta Pi's into our sisterhood. Becky Bellamy, Pat Caudle, Linda Bracey, Donna Taylor, Robin Compton, and Marsha Moore. Pledge classes began last week.

In celebration of Halloween ADP's held a costume party in the chapter room, with each of the sisters donned in original costumes. We're still wondering where some of the ideas came from!

Alpha Sigma Alpha

The ASA's are growing bigger. We now have a sisterhood of forty-two. Added to our three open bids from last semester, Gwen Koehlein, Peggy Nonroe, and Jeanne Webb, are five new open bids: Valerie Booker, Virginia Flemer, Nina McAdams, Ginny Welter, and Melissa Welter. Pin pledging for these five girls was held Monday night and they found out who their big sisters are. Tuesday, in the Chapter Room, Mrs. Allen, from Rochette's Florest, came to talk to us on flower arranging for the pledges' Intellectual Aim. Next week, for their social aim, they are giving us a mixer with the Pikas at H.S.C. Last week the ASA's traveled to Richmond for a mixer with the Lambda Chi Alphas of U. of R.

Our booth for Oktoberfest, "Alpha's Salties and Sweets," went over very well. We sold baked goods and Hub's famous peanuts. The peanuts are our annual money-making project.

Last Sunday, the sisters of Alpha Sigma Alpha honored their Mothers and Grandmothers in a Mother Patroness Ceremony. Fathers, families, friends, and alumni attended also. It was a very touching ceremony. The Mothers received long-stemmed yellow roses or Mother Patroness Pins. We served refreshments and had a slide show of Alpha activities.

Among mixers, meeting, and studies, the ASA's are preparing for rush. Everyone is busy with workshops, skits, slide shows, song practices and costumes.

Alpha Sigma Tau

The Alpha Sigma Tau's had a most enjoyable and successful Oktoberfest week end. Longwood College Mugs were sold at the AET booth, and the mugs that are left are being sold in the new smoker for 75 cents.

The AET's are also having a Round-Robin Spades Tournament, and have been having get-togethers every Thursday night.

Delta Zeta

We were happy to have had our PCD, Phyllis Favorite to visit with us the week end of the 16th and 17th. We would like to welcome our new pledges, Mimi Hancock and Gail Lilliston. Also we would like to commend Sharon Jones on an outstanding job in the Oktoberfest skits. Next week our new pledges have in store for the sorority a Lasagna Dinner.

Kappa Delta

The KD's have had a very busy and exciting week. This past week (Oct. 11-17) was White Rose which prepared our pledges for initiation. Those pledges that were initiated were Dawn Drewry, Peggy Brown, and Mrs. Bunny Melvin who was honor initiated and will serve on our alumni Advisory Board. We congratulate these three and welcome them into our sisterhood.

Our booth at Oktoberfest in which we sold chili dogs was very profitable and fun.

Congratulations also is extended to our new open bids—Andrea Harkness, Susan Barker, and Barbara Suttle. The sisters in KD are really excited to have them with us. Congratulations also to Yvonne Morrison and Pem Aaron on their engagements during the summer.

We enjoyed a picnic at the cabin Monday, Oct. 18. This coming Saturday (Oct. 23) is Kappa Delta's Founders' Day. We are looking forward to this big event as we are the founding chapter—Alpha. We are planning a coffee and inviting the alumni.

Sigma Kappa

Sigma Kappa would like to announce our two new pledges, Jacqui Singleton and Cheryl Murphy.

EK rolled to Lambda Chi Alpha at the University of Richmond last Wednesday. A good time was had by all.

During Oktoberfest week end, we held a Parent's and Friends tea in the Chapter Room. This was the first time a function for parents had been held, and it was most successful.

Sigma Kappa's involved in campus events include: Tilsia Stevens and Sussan Smith, dance company concert Oct. 28-30; Libby Durham, choir concert, Oct. 24th; and Trish Howland, lighting director for THE GLASS MENAGERIE, Nov. 10-13.

Our congratulations to Jacqui Singleton and Clare Baxter for being initiated into Alpha Psi Omega Dramatic Fraternity.

In the meantime, Sigma Kappa's are getting ready for rush, and partying until then-coke parties, October 28, and on Halloween we will be having a pajama party in the chapter room.

Sigma Sigma Sigma

Marilyn Barban, Sigma Sigma Sigma's National Field Secretary, visited Alpha chapter October 12-14. While here, she held various meetings with members and pledges.

Congratulations to Leslie Olsen who was recently selected to be in Dance Company. She will be performing in the first production which will be held October 27-29.

Last Wednesday night Tri-Sigma's had a Keg party with Tri-Kappa Alpha fraternity of University of Richmond.

Zeta Tau Alpha

The Zetas have been busy as usual. Prior to initiation, October 17, 1976, our pledge class gave us a surprise dinner party in the banquet room. This was followed by a Key Party at Sigma Nu, Hampden-Sydney. These girls are the best at keeping secrets. Those initiated were Nancy Bailey, Lynn Wolff, Peggy Bryant, Mary K. Noffsinger and Ann Tokarz.

Besides initiating our pledges, we had a special initiation this past Sunday. One of our original founders, Ruby Leigh Orgain, was present for the momentous occasion. Susan Orgain Hargrave, Ruby Leigh's niece, was initiated into our order.

We are pleased to announce that we have two new pledges, Sue Bailey and Carey Brooks. Both are outstanding girls and will be an asset to Zeta. We also have another engaged sister, Vicki Cash, who is planning for a June '77 wedding. Other honoraries include Debbie Whitt who was initiated into Kappa Omicron Phi, a Home Economics organization. Senior, Maureen Hanley, also received an invitation to join the Society for Collegiate Journalists. Maureen is currently working on The Rotunda.

For everyone interested in Flag football, the Zetas are still "hanging in there." We will be in the final games and hopefully we will add another trophy to our collection. Besides being successful in sports, we have been lucky in fund raising too. Our Oktoberfest booth with cotton candy was a big success. Thanks Trish. All is going well on second floor Stubbs.

Note: the following sororities did not submit reports: Alpha Gamma Delta, Alpha Phi, and Pi Mu.

Misery's Co., Art And Craft Shop

Features L.C. Staff, Students

Longwood professor James Silliman and Longwood students Caryn Beausoleil, Leigh Parton and Bill Whitaker are among the Virginia artists and craftsmen whose work is for sale at Misery's Co. in Farmville.

Students will recognize many of the subjects of Silliman's photographs, such as the Farmville train station and Longwood cabin. Ms. Beausoleil's work includes cloth-covered plaster animals and embroidery. Parton has paintings and prints, and Whitaker has pen and pencil sketches and wood sculpture on display.

Misery's Co. is a newly opened art and crafts shop that deals primarily in consigned art and craft work, such as pottery, jewelry, macrame, weavings, blown glass, photography and paintings. The shop is at 107 High St. across from High's and is open weekdays from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m.

"I hope more students will take advantage of a new market for their work in Farmville," said shop owner Karla Myers.

"The business of selling seems to be a neglected area in an art student's education. This is a chance for them to learn a little about dealing with a shop, consignment contracts and shop commissions."

Legislative Board Meeting Produces Much Discussion

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS
Proposals were passed, committee members approved and chairman were elected at a long but productive Legislative Board meeting on October 18. All 19 members of Legislative Board were present.

Proposals from the Ad Hoc Committee on Legislative Board Committee Evaluation were the first items on which members voted. Proposal 3 states that each committee of Legislative Board will be responsible for converting its own constitution into by-laws of the SGA. Proposal 4 states that Legislative Board will print each committee's members (phone and box no.) and function. This information will be placed in dorms and around campus so students will know who to contact on matters concerning them. Both proposals were passed unanimously.

After much controversy and discussion on Proposal 5, two amendments were passed to clarify advisor requirements and term of editor membership to Publications Board. Proposal 5 specifically states the purposes, qualification and term of membership and frequency of meetings for Publications Board. The proposal is intended to make Publications Board more effective as a promoter of student interest in the three college publications and as a liaison between publications and Legislative Board. Legislative Board passed Proposal 5 unanimously.

All proposals passed at the October 18 meeting will go into effect immediately.

Legislative Board Committee members were also approved and chairmen were elected. One new committee was formed as members unanimously agreed to make Student Handbook Editor a committee instead of having only one student work on the handbook with Dean Heinz.

Legislative Board Committee members approved on October 18 are as follows:

Organization Evaluation Comm.
+Allie Chaffin	Jr.
Janice Campbell	Sr.
Laurie Hoffman	Soph.
C. B. Brown	Fresh.
Debby Harris	Fresh.
Stacy Waymack	Fresh.

Student Handbook Editor Committee

+Lisa Zueber	Soph.
Barbara MacGeorge	Sr.
Jean Bowman	Fresh.
Margaret Hill	Fresh.
Debbie Wiedman	Fresh.

College committee recommendations to send to Dean Wells were voted on by Legislative Board members also. The recommended members of College committees are:

Bookstore Committee

Valie Peters	Sr.
Barbara Fitzgerald	Fresh.

Library Committee

Patti Carr	Jr.
Kim Foster	Soph.
Mary Louise Parris	Soph.

Academic Policies Committee

Mary Ann Hill	Sr.
Rodney Schwarm	Jr.
Sue DeLong	Soph.

(In addition to Sue Rible and Anne Ranson — already members).

Karen Kimbrough and Mary Bruce Hazelgrove will be jointly heading-up the Stuff-the-Bus contest to be held on November 16. More details about the contest will be in later issues of The Rotunda. Representatives suggested October 28 or November 4 as dates for the next press conference with President Willett.

The November 1 Legislative Board meeting will be held in South Cunningham parlor.

Longwood Elects Ford By Landslide; Political Week Debates Candidates, Issues

By ANNE CARTER STEPHENS
and ANITA CRUTCHFIELD

On Tuesday of Political Week, a debate was held between Senator Virgil Goode, Democrat from Rocky Mount advocating Carter, and Carl Roague representing the Republican party. Each debator was given 10 minutes to discuss their candidates and then 4 minutes for counter attacks.

Mr. Roague opened the debates by talking about inflation. He pointed out that two years ago, the unemployment rate was 12 per cent and now it is down to 5.3 per cent. He also said that the President has done much to cut down the federal deficit and wants to continue to do more. Contrarily, Carter is in favor and would sign bills that would increase the deficit. At the beginning of the recession two years ago, when President Ford took office, interest rates shot up, business couldn't get money to enlarge their businesses and the rise in unemployment rose. Since then, he has tried to cut spending and taxes to give money back to the private sector. By doing this, Ford leaves room for private expansion which creates more permanent jobs. Carter's plan for decrease in unemployment calls for creating federal jobs. Usually these jobs are menial and degrading. Under President Ford four million new jobs have been created in 18 months. Also, Ford wants to focus welfare benefits on those who actually need them.

Representing Governor Jimmy Carter, Senator Virgil Goode said that both candidates had good and bad points, but Jimmy Carter comes ahead in good points. He like Ford, also wants tax reform which will benefit the middle class, instead of the rich. He pointed out that Carter was in favor of energy development and wants to pass legislation to control consolidation of large oil companies. He ended by saying "Jimmy Carter offers change for the ordinary citizen."

Roague, during the next four minutes attacked Carter's evading issues. He said that although Carter favored tax reforms, he used the same tax reduction shelters. Also Carter's tax reforms as proposed would increase taxes for the middle class. Roague said, "I'm sick of Carter's avoiding issues" referring to conflicting stands concerning federal spending, amnesty. He also showed defects in Georgia's government since Carter's governorship.

Senator Goode commented that the democrats have controlled Congress for 22 years. He also said that Carter was in favor of the deconsolidation of large oil companies because of the monopoly on the coal and uranium fields. He finished by saying that Carter was in favor of more accurate tax for those who pay the most; the middle class.

For the next 20 minutes the audience was allowed to ask questions. At the end of the discussion, the debators commented on the candidates they represented.

Dr. Sullivan, professor at UVA, spoke on Thursday night of political week. His topic was "Liberty or be Crippled; Understanding the Nature of Contemporary Political Argument".

He started his lively and humorous speech with a Civil War story explaining his choice of titles. In the 1850's, a Kentucky congressman wrote to the Virginia congressman about Kentucky's non-acceptance of the end of slavery. The Virginian wrote him about a girl who was going to embroider a motto on her sweetheart's jacket, but she couldn't decide on just the right one. "Liberty or Die" seemed to be the best one, so she asked him about it. He answered by say, "Liberty or Die seemed to be too severe and couldn't be changed to Liberty or be Crippled."

This attitude is reflected in today's society; there's so much apathy, it's very difficult to get people to be committed to something.

He continued by stating that Public Politics is Public Argument. Arguments tell the attitudes of people towards people in their views. It also lies at the bottom of politics. Rhetoric-the study of dialogue, is used to impress and persuade people in these arguments. However the state of public argument had given rhetoric a bad name. President Nixon, in his inaugural speech, mentioned rhetoric several times. "If it were only Nixon and Agnew who demeaned rhetoric the present election would be simple."

Dr. Sullivan pointed out that people expect those people (the politicians) not to misuse conversation, but politicians like Carter, Nixon, and Martin Luther King all have made optimistic speeches with the general theme "The America We know..."

He continued by asking if candidates miss speeches. In a Roper survey, it was concluded that today the average voter made his decision on the candidates character rather than his stands on major issues. This was reflected in a comment Archie Bunker made on his show last week. He said he wouldn't sell wheat to the Russians who use the wheat to make bread who would buy peanut butter to eat with the bread.

Dr. Sullivan also talked about the rehearsal of candidates to take a stand. Most candidates "stay in the middle" to suit the most people. The Democratic Party has been known to write speeches based on surveys telling the likes and dislikes of people in a certain area. He said that most candidates use language to avoid major issues and issues that count are issues of character.

The news media consisted of the next portion of his speech. He showed that news telecasts were 16-20 ideas with 10 commercials in between. Reporting is not the only aspect of media's effect on people's attitudes. Emotion provoking commercials also have much affect on the viewing public, and the media is neither good nor bad in this respect. But it does have an effect on peoples attitudes. For example, Jimmy Carter won the first three primaries which got the rest of America "on the Bandwagon." This shows the way media covers things determines results and it does control peoples feelings.

The debates are the best example. Dr. Sullivan pointed out that debates can't tell all. The candidates had to choose a situation that would show their character. He also showed that the media offers no way for the Americans to argue and no chance to see an issue in reality.

After his speech, Dr. Sullivan conducted a question-answer session in which the audience questioned Dr. Sullivan's views.

A Challenge

There are very few students who manage to attend four years at Longwood College without coming in contact at some point with either Residence or Judicial Board. Whether this contact is in the form of being a board member, defendant, witness, or listening friend, virtually everyone knows something about the procedure called a trial.

Residence Board concerns itself primarily with offenses occurring in the dorms, and Judicial Board handles problems involving lying, cheating and stealing. Let's take a look at the differing natures of the cases of the two boards. Residence Board tries such violations as open house infractions (and in the co-ed dorms how many have not broken this rule, but look at the few who have been caught), drinking in public (how does one go from a hall bathroom containing a keg to a room without being in public), and leaving and entering dorms after hours (how can you confine a free adult to his or her quarters between certain hours). Compare the formal trials involving these "major" offenses with the trials of Judicial Board. Cheating, stealing and plagiarizing are the most common violations. How can you justify a board trial for illegally leaving a dorm and for cheating on an exam with the same seriousness? Granted the offenses and hopefully the penalties differ, but the stigma and overall fear of a trial are identical.

It is of no value to complain and expect changes without offering some possible solutions. What exactly are the purposes of a dorm president? Why not actively involve the Dorm Council and let them set penalties for minor Residence Board violations? For example, a violation of open house hours could receive first a verbal warning, second a written warning, and third a suspension of visitation privileges for one week end. Some circumstances could warrant a trial, but board members could decide that. This system would eliminate the need for the large number of trials, and Residence Board could concern itself with more serious and pertinent matters such as property damage and possibly small theft claims. Fewer trials would also mean that board members could work toward changing some of the archaic rules that persist. Why has no one looked into the idea of visitation hours during the week, or converting one of the high rises into a co-ed dorm with twenty-four hour visitation for those who want it? The idea of allowing beer in sorority chapter rooms has been talked about for years. Let's finalize it and go on to other things. Once upon a time there was talk of installing an investigative committee or office in the two boards, so that the chairman and vice-chairman would not be the ones to confront the accused student. Investigators could present the case to the entire board, and all would be totally objective. Granted, the chairman has no vote, but opinions are easily made known in nonverbal ways.

The Rotunda challenges the boards. In this beginning year of coeducation, make sure that penalties are not given out to set an example, and be consistent in the ones that you set. Avoid setting harsher penalties for certain students to make a point with the rest of the campus. Avoid preoccupation with trivialities to the extent of overlooking major offenses. Let's face it — there are some rules that the majority of this campus breaks, and it seems unfair to prosecute only a few. Avoid sitting on a soapbox. There are offenses being committed that need serious attention. Concentrate on these, and let the petty things solve themselves.

Commentary:

Self-Awareness Lost On Campus As Students Don't Bother To Learn

By LISA SMITH

Perhaps it is time for some straight talk about personal awareness. No—not "apathy" or "student involvement", or any of those words everyone hears from the time they step into a freshman dorm until the time they grab their diploma four years later. Those words have lost their meaning somewhere in the shuffle.

However, awareness is something none of us can afford to lose and something we can all contribute to. It can be awareness of ourselves or awareness of other people. Either way, we as a student community and as individuals need to be informed and made aware of changing attitudes in ourselves and others.

It is a known fact that Americans in general take much for granted. We have everything we need so why bother to become aware of things we do not feel we are interested in? Self-awareness seems to involve some sort of background in psychology while student awareness is something we do not have time for. This kind of thinking and rationalizing can send this country and its individuals into a deep depression and the only excuse will be that no one was "aware" of what was going on.

You may be asking yourself—What is all this leading up to? Well, there are several ways in which we can become aware of what is going on in this college community and in the world. For example, the most common topic of this year—besides the Bicentennial—has been the Presidential elections. In an effort to inform us as citizens and as voters the S-UN set aside last week to be Political Week. Many hours were spent lining up speakers and events so we could learn more about the election, the different political parties, and the answers to our questions. But it seemed everyone already knew everything about the election or we just were not interested. The latter reason is the best guess and there just does not seem to be any reason to spend all the money the Student Activities Fee Committee allows different organizations on something no one is interested in. Do not worry though students—you were not alone—the faculty and administration were not interested either.

Many students did not even know there was a Political Week. This brings us to another point. Please consult your weekly newspaper, The Rotunda. It is senseless to have a weekly newspaper if no one is going to read it.

Mass Media tells us that even if we do read the paper, it is probably about the events and topics we are already familiar with and know the most about. This brings us back to personal awareness. In order to expand our knowledge we must expand our reading and thus gain an insight into what is going on around us. We all have a tendency to shy away from things we do not know anything about, however, this is really not what is best for us.

Neither the S-UN or The Rotunda asks any credit be given to them for this service. They only ask that we take advantage of these resources and use them. We paid for them and it is an obligation that we owe ourselves to become interested in a variety of things that benefit us.

Motivation is lacking on this campus and it is up to the students to do something about it. Remember, who we are now will carry over into the years after graduation. Educated and personally aware people are greater in number in the working world.

To those who have supported the various happenings on campus and off, you are to be commended, for you have contributed to the best cause ever—your own self-awareness.

Letters to the Editor

A Letter From Chi

Dear Students, Faculty, and Administration:

Petitions for Major-Minor elections are now available. We would like to urge those of you who have been complaining for a year to take an active part in Student Government. Air your views in a direction where they will be heard. If you want to change those rules that have been bothering you for years, Get Involved. If you feel that the Judicial or Residence Board trials have been unfair, run for an office and change it.

The Student Government needs leaders. It needs people with determination, patience, and ideals. The best voice within the student body is through the Student Government. The Student Government cannot function without good leaders. Concerned leaders are essential if we ever hope to get the apathetic complaints redirected.

The student leaders of the past have worked hard to bring about the few changes that we have seen and with the added dimension of transitions with coeducation, the challenge is even greater. If we expect to continue changing and updating the rules and regulations of Student Government, we need leaders who are not afraid to take "No" for an answer.

Running for an office is not the only form of participation needed to make the Student Government work; there also has to be someone supporting those leaders. This not only includes a vote once a year, it also includes suggestions, complaints and most of all help. The Student Government cannot function if the only people working are those in the leadership positions.

We would like to urge you to consider these comments carefully and if you have certain complaints or ideas, fill out a petition and run for an office. If you don't run, at least support those who do.

Sincerely,
CHI 1977

An Appeal

Dear Students,
Please do not remove posters for events at Longwood until after the event has taken place. Then you are welcome to the posters, but please not before.

Apathy Of Students, Professors Inexcusable And Frustrating

By JO LEILI

On Tuesday evening, October the 26, I had the good fortune to witness what was to be for myself a unique and first time experience. On that night, at 8:00 p.m., in the Gold Room, two distinguished members of the Virginia political system came together to match wits and policies for a debate. Their mannerisms, speech, and issues were exceptionally lively and colorful, as well as stimulating and thought provoking. I was left after the hour and a half encounter, actually questioning my choice for Presidential candidate, who until this time I had been firmly committed to.

However, after an hour and a half, I was also left with a more overriding memory of my "unique experience," one of embarrassment, humiliation, and frustration. The total head count that night for the debate was 30. Out of a campus consisting of roughly 2,000 in the student body, this represents about a 1.5 per cent attendance. To say the least, I was amazed that during a presidential election year, one with such extreme issues and a "neck in neck" race, such a total lack of interest could be shown by the students. Was an hour and a half too much time to give up to become exposed to the talents and knowledge of these two men, who so graciously gave of their free time to come and speak at Longwood? Was that test the next day (if any?) so important that one of the representatives, Virgil Goode, actually mentioned verbally (however not maliciously) the 30 person attendance? Was the excuse inadequate publicity, even though the Rotunda publicized Political week in October 19, and October 26 issues, the event was listed on the Student Union Calendar handed out at the beginning of the semester, and fliers and a banner appeared on campus? In my four years at Longwood, after hearing four years of complaints from various organizations and sources about the general apathy of the student body, Tuesday night was the most outstanding example.

Note, though, that I only mentioned students in my above complaint. That is due to the simple fact that of those 30 persons attending the affair, not one was a Professor from Longwood (with the exception of I. B. Dent, Director of Student Activities.) Not one of the professors who for years have been preaching to the students that they "don't attend enough or any of the lectures offered," "Look a well rounded education," or "aren't exposed to all the forms of media such as the lectures on this campus," had the interest to make a showing at the debate.

These same professors,

(especially some of whom are in departments which should have been most interested in aspects of this election; and any election information), are, perhaps the same ones who have criticized the Student Union in the past, for its one sided "Lacking cultural and intellectual activities "type of program. This was brought to the attention of the Student Union, and honest, hard, effort is being put into revisions, as evidenced by political week, the Jacques Cousteau series of the previous week, and visiting artist Muriel Bach on October 12, as well as films, concerts, coffee houses, mixers, and other more social oriented events. What would have been the general comment if no organization had thought to sponsor some sort of Politically oriented event on campus for the Presidential Election year? Apathy?

Perhaps I am being too harsh, though, because Monday night's program had a doubled attendance of about 60 as compared to that of Tuesday, which while still not great is certainly better. The "improved attendance" was for the movie the "Candidate," starring Robert Redford. Oh, and the reason for the "improved attendance?" I guess it's just that Redford had to be better looking than anyone who could have spoken Tuesday night.

Responsibilities, Rules, Duties And School Activities Of Longwood Deans

By TOM HAWKE
And DEB EAGLE

Since the beginning of the first semester, many students have been aware of the presence of the deans, but they never fully understood why they occupied the luxurious rooms in the Rotunda. Many students have formulated theories pertaining to the actual responsibilities of the deans in regards to the functioning of the school. However, many questions have gone unanswered and therefore, questions still remain. In the paragraphs that follow, we have attempted to inform the students of the understood duties of the deans as compared to the duties which they actually undertake.

Dean of the College, Dr. Carolyn Wells, possessing a B.A., M.S. and a Ph.D., is supposed to discuss academic problems which cannot be resolved by faculty advisors or a department chairman, resolve exam conflicts, get permission to enroll in summer courses at another institution and to take work by correspondence. To our knowledge, this is exactly what she does. As far as discussing academic problems, as you will later see, every dean on campus does this. Exams haven't been given yet, so we can't really comment on her actions in exam conflicts. As freshmen, we haven't had the opportunity of getting permission to enroll in summer courses at another institution, which is given by her. Therefore, we can define Dean Wells as an upperclassmen-dean; that is, strictly working with the problems of upper-classmen.

Dean of the Students, Dr. Mary Heintz, possessing a B.A., M.S. and Ph. D., is supposed to discuss personal problems with the students, discuss social regulations, obtain information about sororities (and soon to be fraternities), arrange for late return of groups to campus, withdraw from college, check the activities calendar, make room changes and make changes of address.

According to Dean Heintz, her duties include counseling students with any kind of problems except academic problems, student rosters, helping students undecided about a career or major, advising them, resolving any problems concerning the dining hall, the student union, the activities calendar, but she does not serve as a disciplinarian. We find it difficult to understand how she can find time for such duties, when she is constantly engaged in some formal meeting.

Assistant Dean of the Students, Terri Swann, possessing a B.S., and a M. Ed., stated that her job was also counseling, both academic and personal. However, unlike Dean Heintz, Dean Swann has time to talk to the students about losing their contacts down the sink. Among her more important duties, are housing and dealing with problems concerning the Residence Halls. She seems to do quite well at this, as is evident by the good condition of the housing arrangements.

Associate Dean of the Students, Dr. Jan Harris, possessing a B.S., M.S. and Ed. D., carries on the same duties as Dean Heintz, which were previously mentioned.

Assistant Dean of the College, James C. Gussett, possessing a B.A., M.Ed., and an Ed. D., carries on the same duties as Dean Wells, which were also previously mentioned.

According to the Longwood College Student Handbook, p. 129, the primary function of the Head Resident is to counsel students with their personal problems. It appears that each dean of the college also has a "primary function" of this nature. Evidently, we have an intersection of these two jobs. Should we cast our Head Residents out into the cold and one day read their names on the unemployment list?

With this in mind and the evident fact that many jobs of the deans do overlap; just what do they specialize in when using so many different titles of authority? It kind of makes you wonder.

LC Actors Strike Again With Production Of 'The Glass Menagerie' To Be Staged Nov. 11-13

By SUSIE TRANSUE

Just three weeks after the production of William Shakespeare's play, 12th Night, the Longwood Players and the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts are in full swing again. This time it is Tennessee Williams' play, The Glass Menagerie. The production dates are November 10-13, starting at 7:30 in Jarman Auditorium with admission free to all Longwood students, $2.00 for guests and $1.00 for groups. The Glass Menagerie, an intriguing two-act play, evolves around a southern family consisting of a well-meaning but over-bearing mother; an insecure, crippled daughter and a son who is discontented with his family life.

All the actors in this production feel very secure with their characters and the show as a whole. Glenn Leftwich, who is portraying Tom Wingfield, the son, is a sophomore and a Speech and Drama Major. Glenn sees his character as a "dissatisfied poet" who is disgusted with the situation at home. Having many family obligations, Tom is seen as a pathetic individual that feels he will never get a break unless he makes it himself. Glenn enjoys portraying Tom and when asked how he interprets the character he said, "I do not want to analyze the character too much because it takes too much away from his true emotions, although I do see him as a selfish individual by normal human standards."

Playing the part of Amanda Wingfield, the mother, Patti Carr sees her character as an eccentric and highly strung individual. Patti is a junior and a History and English major. This will be the first time on stage for Patti and when asked how she feels she said that, "all the actors have such positive and secure attitudes about the show that I have received such good feelings which helps take away my nervousness." With Amanda's southern accent and old-fashioned attitudes, Patti believes that she is, "an elderly Scarlet O'Hara who plots alittle and will maneuver to get her way." Patti does not feel rushed or pressured and is enjoying the

LC SOCCER TEAM: A

LC Players Realize Inexperience, See Hustle As Main Asset

By MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

The men's soccer team which has been together now for little more than a month, has stopped to look at themselves and locate their mistakes, stronger aspects, and potential talent. Of the soccer players, several got together and spoke with the Rotunda. Those players were:

Richard Hunt, a freshman physics major, playing the positions of left wing and half back;

David Verkes, a freshman business management major, playing the positions of wing and half back;

John Giza, a freshman majoring in earth science, playing the positions of full back and half back; and Bill Hesse, a junior therapeutic recreation major, playing the position of full back.

When asked for the opinion of the first match with H-S, Richard commented, "I think we beat them despite the score." John added, "We played better... played good defense."

Bill agreed that "The defense played damn good." Bill also stated, "We won a lot — we won dignity." Commenting on the impression that the Longwood team made on the H-S team, Bill said, "We left them with their mouths hanging open."

The Longwood team is basically inexperienced as a team. The players realize this and are working hard to develop the potential they possess.

Speaking of the performance of the first match, which is equally applicable to the team's performance in general, Richard commented, "It was definitely our hustle that helped us — there were a lot of guys who didn't have control, but just because of their hustle they beat the H-S guys, they beat them to the ball."

Richard continued, "Despite the fact that only eight of us have really played soccer, we looked like a team that had... practiced quite a while."

John described the defense as possessing an "extraordinary amount of initiative and aggressiveness." Bill felt that the team was a "little unorganized." When asked if he saw any talent on the Longwood team, he replied, "Yes I did — very much. David and Billy, they can control the ball."

All the guys had similar praise for one player — goalie Bud Atkins. Richard noted the difference between practices and games. "During practices... he couldn't hang onto the ball, but during the game he was a totally different man — he just played fantastic."

The final question asked of the players was, "What do you think of H-S as a team?" Dave answered that H-S was "definitely a good team, but I don't think they play together as a team." He added, "They play too much of an air game." John commented that they "were disorganized as a team." Bill felt somewhat different that John concerning the team's organization. He saw H-S as organized, "They knew positions; they knew what to do, what to expect." And he added, "But they did not have the spunk, the initiative to get up and go that I felt we had."

The players are indeed excited to be playing soccer and to be playing for Longwood. It shows, they run hard, and they have done a nice job!

H-SC Players Surprised At First Meet, See Potential In LC Team

By MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

After the second match with H-S last Thursday, three H-S soccer players offered comments on the same questions asked of the Longwood Players. As members of an organized soccer team, they evaluated the teams objectively.

Player Eric Zedaker was basically impressed with the Longwood team. He commented, "There are about four good guys, they play well individually, but they're not a team yet." One of the players which he complimented was goalie Bud Atkins. "The goalies' probably the best guy on the team." Comparing the two matches, Eric stated that Longwood played a worse game the second match than they did the first. Feeling that H-S was more organized the second match, he commented that the H-S half backs carried the game and were able to get over the Longwood full backs, "The full backs didn't know how to play it." Eric also suggested that Longwood might have passed more. When asked of the potential of the team, Eric forecasted optimistically, "They'll be good once they get together."

After viewing the first match, Tom Coyle, a half back, "was impressed with a couple guys." He felt that Longwood gave H-S a good game, and added that H-S was basically unorganized. After the second match Tom believed that both teams remained unorganized, but he felt that the Longwood team "had an idea what to do with the ball." He also added, "You came a lot closer to scoring today."

Jimmy Lewis, a player-coach, commented that during the second match Longwood "didn't play as well; we played much better, we had some people that didn't play last time." Jimmy contributed the strength of H-S during the second match to the fact that they were surprised by

Longwood during the first match, "I think we were surprised winning one to nothing last week and I think a lot of people got fired up." He sees potential in the Longwood team and hopes to see it developed. He offered, "We've been talking to your coaches and we're trying to get them to keep on pushing soccer because the potential's there."

The question was asked if there was any hostility between the two teams. Jimmy answered, "H-S guys don't want to lose to Longwood guys, so there's a little pride involved." Eric added, "There are no hostilities on the field."

When the subject of Coach Williamson came up, Jimmy stated, "If you can get a coach who can take a team that's never played before and play as well as those guys can, he's doing all right."

THE ROTUNDA SALUTES

POTENTIAL POWERHOUSE

Soccer Coach Dick Williamson Sees First Season As Proving Ground

By MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

For those of you who are unaware of it, there are sixteen guys who get together every other afternoon about 5:30 at the campus school and kick a black and white ball around — they are better known as the men's soccer team.

Over the past month Coach Williamson has put together a JV team. Although several guys on the team had played in high school, others had never before played. Practices were more of a teaching and learning situation than a coaching situation. Practice was formally scheduled for Monday, Wednesday, and Friday yet the team met on their own time to learn and practice skills. The players living on first floor Tabb conduct strategy meetings everyday where the guys group together and talk soccer.

Coach Williamson, several players, and several Hampden-Sydney players were very cooperative and made themselves available to the Rotunda for comments and interviews. This is Dick Williamson's first year at Longwood; he is a Mississippi U. alumni. Speaking of the first match with H-S (the score was 1-0, H-S), the coach said, "Having only been practicing for about a month, I think we did super; we got 105 per cent play out of everybody." He added, "I think H-S was good, I don't think they were any better than we were, being honest." The coach explained that the team made some early mistakes because it is a young team. It takes a little time for the team to get to know each other, who can play what best, and where.

As Coach Williamson is new at Longwood, he did not know what to expect from H-S, but said of the first match, "We felt we could play with them and give them a fairly competitive game even though we didn't feel...we were, or should be, as skilled." Despite the disadvantage that H-S has an organized soccer team, the team played well. He faulted the team for concentrating too heavily on getting into position to shoot, rather than shooting.

There were several problems in the first match, some of which will take awhile to overcome. During the first match the coach was anxious to witness the physical condition of the guys. Because of the small number of players, substitutes were infrequent and the players tired easily. Taking that into consideration, the coach commented, "We played as well as, and sometimes better than H-S."

Commenting on last Thursday's performance, Coach Williamson stated that he did not think that either team played as well as in the previous match. He felt that our players ran hard, and that they got down to the goal, but just didn't get it in.

commented on the inexperience of some of the players. He looks upon this season as a "proving ground" for the team. The athletes are still in training and there is more teaching than coaching at this point. The team is also still in the process of organization. The coach commented, "Enthusiasm that college freshmen exhibit will off set experience." As all of the players except one are freshmen, if they stay with it, they will build a solid foundation for the upcoming seasons.

The coach sees the rivalry that is growing between the teams as healthy. Expecting that rivalry to grow, he stated, "It's already pretty intense, but that's not bad as long as you keep it within reason. kept in the spirit atmosphere rather than in a destructive atmosphere." Coach Williamson extended his gratitude to H-S for scheduling the two matches.

Speaking for the players as well as himself, he offered, "we're excited and pleased with the support Longwood has given us...we'll play better if we know Longwood is behind us." The soccer team certainly deserves all the support we can give them! (As a side comment, speaking of his first impressions of Longwood, Coach Williamson said, "I think Longwood is fantastic — one of the friendliest and warmest college campuses I've ever been on...I'm impressed!")

LC Runs Hard Game As Re-match Brings Defeat

By MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

The Longwood and Hampden-Sydney teams met for a re-match last Thursday at Hampden-Sydney. Longwood was again defeated, 4-0, but that is not to say that they did not run a hard game. H-S was prepared for the match and gave us a good game. The four goals were scored with two in each half. Those players scoring were Skip Baker (two goals), Tom Crowder, and Jay Hundley.

Longwood's team, compared to that of H-S, is unorganized and less skilled, but the efforts and energy which Longwood puts into their game cannot be measured. The team strenuously strives to better themselves with each practice and each game.

Goalie Bud Atkins deserves a great deal of credit. Four goals may have gotten by him, but more would have gotten by him if he did not possess the skill that he does. Considering the area which he has to guard, and the intense pressure put upon him, Bud played a nice game.

For a spectator on the sidelines, more than once you'll hear the co-captains' "Hustle! Hustle!" And hustle is exactly what number 33, Walter Hughes does. Much to the advantage of the Longwood team, he can run. Tommy Pultz and Richard Hunt, among others played extremely hard.

The Longwood soccer team really deserves our support, but you won't understand why until you've seen them play. The next match is scheduled for Saturday, November 6 at Lynchburg College. (10:30 a.m.) The team's first home game will be played Thursday November 11, against Southside Community College.

Student Government Elections To Be Held December 6 For All Three Boards

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS
It's election time at Longwood. The 1976 presidential elections are fast becoming history but the Student Government election process is just beginning. Bonnie Gheen announced the tentative schedule for elections at the October 25 Legislative Board meeting.

Tentative Election Schedule
October 31, Requests to Run go out.

November 10, Requests to Run are due by 10:00 p.m.

November 13, Requests to Run are posted.

November 30, Campaign Speeches.

December 6, Elections.

December 13, Representative Elections.

Susann Smith, chairman of Legislative Board, said, "If you are contemplating running for an office, don't, just run." Emily Burgwyn, vice-chairman of Legislative Board, said, "When you run (for an office) its all personal fulfillment." Emily explained that nobody pats you on the back but said, "You learn so much."

The offices of chairmen and vice-chairmen are open to rising seniors. Rising juniors may request to run for secretary and other offices. A candidate must have a 2.00 average.

Emily Burgwyn said that sign-up sheets for the committees of Student Liaison, Academic Affairs, Student Activities Fees and Publications Board will be posted in the New Smoker soon. Legislative Board representatives were told to encourage students to sign-up for these committees.

A press conference with Dr. Willett will be held on Tuesday, November 16 at 12:45 in the Gold Room. Topics to be discussed at the press conference will be printed in the November 8 issue of The Rotunda.

The Stuff-the-Bus contest, sponsored by Legislative Board, has been approved. Karen Kimbrough and Mary Bruce Hazelgrove are in charge of this project designed to raise money for the Herbert R. Blackwell Scholarship. Details about the contest will be published in later editions of The Rotunda.

Susann Smith summarized comments made by Dr. Willett at a luncheon held for Legislative Board on October 25. Dr. Willett announced that there was $6,000 available to spend on capital improvements around campus. The Snack Bar is one area marked for improvements starting in December. The improvements to the Snack Bar should be finished by the beginning of next semester. Dr. Willett also acknowledged that communications between the administration and students could be improved. Dr. Willett explained that deteriorated steam pipes are being replaced in front of Cox and Wheeler. The new steam pipes will save money by reducing heat loss. The construction on South Cunningham is directed towards fixing its leaky roof.

The November 8 meeting of Legislative Board will be held in South Cunningham at 7:00.

Four Steps Discussed In Molding Future

By MAUREEN HANLEY

Dressed in his country's robe, the Venerable Lhadu Reripoche entered the C. Room in Lankford at 1:00 on October 28th. Behind him walked Professor Jeffrey Hopkins, who is a member of the University of VA's Department of Religious Studies.

The topic that they discussed was the Tibetan technique for mind development. The Venerable would speak in his native language and professor Hopkins would interpret what the abbot was saying.

The abbot started his discussion by stating that "we are living in a time of freedom, where we have the right to practice any type of religion that we desire." He said that since we have this power now is the time to achieve whatever we want in order to improve the future." The abbot then discussed the techniques a person should use, in order to mold a better future for themselves. "The first step is to engage in a means to improve this lifetime, which is why people select a religious practice." Using this idea, the abbot then discussed Buddha and one formation of his religion, and the various forms of teaching his beliefs.

In order to save time, the abbot selected the "Teaching of the Great Vechnal," to discuss. He stated that "the welfare of others is extremely important in the Great Vechnal and the way that you train for this achievement is through the mind of enlightenment. The abbot then proceeded to discuss the earthly difference between a friend, an enemy and a neutral person. In this discussion, he explained that in this technique there is no difference between the three, because a person who is a friend now was an enemy in the past, while a person who is a friend now will be a neutral person in the future. So that "all three have helped or hurt in sometime in your lifetime, thus there is no difference. When a person has reached the point of understanding this he has completed the 1st step and proceeds to the 2nd step.

In this step, the individual "recognizes everyone as his mother and he extends his mind back through his birth stage, fetus stage and continues past his numerous lifetimes. During this time he realizes that he had an unlimited number of mothers, thus everyone has been his mother in one of his previous lives." The abbot stated that this stage is very difficult to do and it takes a great effort to achieve this point.

The third stage, a person enters, is when the individual is aware of his mother's kindness and the hardships that she has undertaken. He stated that "a mother will do whatever she can to take care of her child and that she does not think of herself. "Once you have reached this stage you should extend your kindness to others," said the abbot.

The fourth stage is when the individual develops the intentions to repay everyone for their kindness. Once this has been achieved then the person should move to the "love of pleasantness" and then the mode of cultural passion.

In the last step, stated the abbot, the individual examines himself and discovers that he is a free being. When this person realizes the power in his interior himself then he is a Buddha and the point of enlightenment has been reached.

LC Volleyball Team Loses To Mary Washington But Wins Against Ferrum And Liberty Baptist

By TERI DUNNIVANT

On October 26, the Longwood College volleyball teams again took to the road, traveling to Mary Washington for the week's first match. Longwood took some time to warm up, and dropped the first game to Mary Wash. 15-5. Then they turned it around and put it together for a win in the second, taking it 15-13. The third game Longwood played in style. They traded points with Marh Wash. and made some fantastic plays, but they just didn't hold on long enough. Mary Washington took the game 15-12 and Match.

Then the JV's came out—ready to play after a two week layoff. Freshman Kaye Carter, in her first starting appearance, ripped off ten quick service points before Mary Washington could get the ball. The points were long, but it was a short game for the JV's at 15-5. In the second game Mary Wash. came alive and started sending the ball back. LC just wasn't playing their game, and after losing Cindy Thomas to a reinjured knee, they lost some composure and also lost the game 15-6. LC got everything back together in the last game, but won the game and match in somewhat sloppy form. The last one went to Longwood 15-12. Wednesday night the varsity traveled to Jefferson Forrest High School to play an exhibition match at the school's annual volleyball tournament. They took on Lynchburg College for the second time this season, but lost in a close match in which coach Carolyn Price said she "almost had heart failure" during some points. The team's improved play was only a preliminary to Thursday's games with Ferrum and Liberty Baptist College.

Thursday night saw Longwood's varsity capture their first wins of the season. They easily took the first game from a much improved Ferrum team 15-3. The momentum didn't hold, however, as Ferrum came back in the second game leaving LC on the short end of a 15-2 score. The third game proved to be another battle with LC and Ferrum trading points several times until the Blues finally grabbed the lead and pulled out the game 15-13. The Liberty-Ferrum match followed, which Liberty took in two games.

In the final match of the night, Longwood met Liberty, again taking the first game 15-13. But as in the previous match, LC couldn't hold on in the second. They started out well, but dropped the lead and fell behind. Liberty took that game 15-8. Again the third game was the wild conclusion to the match. Longwood gave the home fans some thrills—and a victory which well deserved their second standing ovation of the night.

The final score was Longwood 15, Liberty 7.

Speaking on the week's games, Mrs. Price said, "The JV deserves a lot of credit for winning the third game from Mary Wash., because it's really hard to come back after a second game loss." She also noted "100 per cent improvement" in the varsity's game against Lynchburg, and she's looking forward to playing them again and taking the match. With both teams having won some matches, the varsity two and JV's three, and built some confidence, Mrs. Price is hopeful of a successful conclusion to the season.

The results from Saturday's Lynchburg tournament will be in next week's Rotunda. This week, on Tuesday night (tonight), Longwood plays their last home games of the season. The games are against William and Mary and Bridgewater College, and they begin at 7:00 in Iler gym. Wednesday has in store a trip to VSU in one of the annual "big" games of the season. As Tuesday's game is the last one at home, a large crowd would be marvelous. Please come out and support the teams by making lots of noise. Again we offer congratulations to the teams and hopes for continued success.

SPORT FOLLIES

By DIANNE HARWOOD

Joy has been restored in the hearts of those who withstand the winters' fury to watch those ever-loving girls who call themselves hockey players. I think a little bit of joy also arose in the girls themselves as they ripped Mary Washington 6-0 and VCU 1-0 in this week's contest.

Longwood traveled to Mary Washington College last Tuesday to take on the winless Mary Wash squad. The girls were flashing shades of their old form as they recorded 38 shots on goal and over nine minutes of penetration time. Inners Terry Voit and Carol Filo shot in three goals apiece to give LC the large margin. Objectively speaking, I must say the team looked a bit better than they had in previous outings. However, I must withhold the ultimate praise because I know the team has the potential to do better. Hopefully they are stockpiling all their talent and plan to utilize it in the upcoming tournaments.

The squad also recorded a 1-0 victory over VCU in their final home game of the season. The girls put on a good show of stickwork, footwork and teamwork as they recorded over fourteen minutes of penetration time. Terry Voit took the scoring honor midway into the first half that put Longwood on top. With one non conference game to go, the team record stands as weight wins three losses and two ties.

The JV squad ended their season with two impressive wins over Mary Washington and VCU. Linda Baunler, Debbie Kinzel, Kim Furbee and Suzanne Ash each scored once to give LC a 4-0 win over Mary Wash. The VCU game went to Longwood on goals by Courtney Mills, Linda Baunler and Debbie Kinzel, with the final score being 3-1. This gives the JV's an impressive record of ten wins, and two losses. Congrats on a job well done, baby blues.

The "play of the week" occurred last week; this prestigious honor goes to freshman Wanda Peterson, who proved that you don't have to put the ball in the cage to score. Miss Peterson was attempting a penalty flick against VPI, and although the flick went over the cage, she was awarded the goal due to a goalie infraction. A job well done, Wanda, for a job that you almost didn't do.

Player of the Week goes to the Virginia Beach Baby, Miss Carol Filo. Carol, a junior physical education major, has had just a bit of trouble scoring this year. But apparently she has found the handle, as illustrated by her three goals against Mary Washington. Nice, Carol, nice.

And now for the highlight of the column; the "Sally Custer Quip": "The drying up of Mary's Wash" and the destruction of "Virginia's Common Wealth" served as a warning of the strength with which Hurricane Longwood will be hitting the Tidewater Area next week end at the state tournament."

Tennis Record Remains Good

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Longwood Women's Tennis team has now played a total of 10 matches with various colleges. Their record to date is 6 wins, 3 losses, and 1 tie. They have defeated Randolph-Macon twice, Randolph-Macon Women's College, Mary Washington, VCU, and Sweet Briar. William and Madison have been the only teams to defeat Longwood. The one tie was with Westhampton.

Lisa King, who has been on the team for four years, is the only senior on the tennis team and played her last match yesterday against Sweet Briar. She and Mary Barrett won the deciding doubles game of the match to put Longwood ahead 5-4.

Longwood Lancers Travel To Averett For First Horseshow

By KATHIE MARTH

The Longwood Lancers' first intercollegiate horseshow was held at Averett College on October 8th. Member colleges represented were: Averett, Hollins, Longwood, Lynchburg, Madison, Mary Baldwin, Randolph-Macon Women's College, Southern Seminary, Sweet Briar, U. Va., and Virginia Intermont. Competing for Longwood's team were Kathie Marth, Debbie Cross, Brenda Wile, Megan McDonald, Kathy Castagna, Margaret Jackson, Pat Perkins, and Amy Trimmer. Special congratulations to Debbie Cross who placed 2nd in Maiden Horseshanship, and Kathy Castagna 4th in Maiden Horseshanship Over Fences. The whole team and their advisor, Miss Sally Bush, and photographer Dee Clemmer deserve recognition for a full day of participating in the pouring rain!

The Lancer's Fall Horseshow, held at Hampden Stables Friday the 15th, was a big success. Results of the show are as follows:

Debbie Cross — Advanced championship.
Kathie Marth — Reserve Advanced Championship.
Margaret Jackson — Intermediate Championship.
Dee Clemmer — Reserve Intermediate Championship.
Jane Doyle — Advanced Beginner Championship.
Patti Clayton — Reserve Advanced Beg. Championship.
Louann Gilmore — Beginner Championship.
Sabrina Wilson — Reserve Beginner Championship.

The Lancer's riding team has a schedule of horseshows yet to attend. Friday, the 5th of Nov. will have them competing up at Oak Manor, sponsored by Madison and Mary Baldwin Colleges. The following Friday will find them at Hollins, followed by Southern Seminary on the 19th.

'The Glass Menagerie'

closeness of the cast and crews.

The pitiful, young character of Laura Wingfield, the crippled daughter, is being played by a sophomore and Speech Pathology major, Bene Blake. People refer to Laura as Tom's "little sister", although she is older than he is, because of her insecure and pathetic outlooks on life. Laura is very dependent on her family and a very fragile individual who sees herself as "a piece of my glass menagerie." When asked about the character Laura, Bene replied that, "Laura is letting her crippled leg stop her from maturing and meeting people." Bene does not feel that the short span between the production of The Glass Menagerie has hurt the actor performances at all and that the cast is indeed ready for the opening night. Adding to that, Bene replied that she is normally an uptight individual but the rehearsals and the cast has taught her to relax and enjoy more.

Also enjoying himself is Alan Boone, a sophomore and a Speech and Drama major, who is playing the part of Jim O'Conner, Tom's friend. Jim is an average individual who works with "Shakespeare," Tom's nickname from work, and is a pleasant and easy-going character. Alan feels, as the rest of the cast does, that the show is coming along well and will definitely be ready for the production dates.

The cast's assurance of readiness is due to the superior guidance of Dr. Lockwood, the Director of The Glass Menagerie. By taking their scripts away at an early date, Dr. Lockwood helped the cast become more secure in their parts. He has also allowed each actor to interpret his own individual characters but if he disagrees with their interpretations, he gave them helpful hints.

Penny Trice To Give Recital Nov. 11 In Wygal Recital Hall

By SHARON KAY CONNOR

On November 11, 1976, Penny Trice, a mezzo-soprano, will give her senior recital at 8:00 p.m. in Wygal's Molnar Recital Hall. The recital will be unusual in the sense that there will be some things involved with the recital which have never been done before on a student recital.

Penny will open her recital with some movements from "Concerto Vocale" by Christoph Bernhard. These selections will be accompanied by an instrumental ensemble which is made up of Robin Dewitt—organ, Susan Bernard—flute, Nell Jones—Violin, and Charles Berkman—Cello. The use of an instrumental ensemble accompanying a singer is a first for Longwood's music department.

Susan Chambers will accompany Penny in some light English songs with guitar. By using the guitar, the songs will be performed authentically as they were in the 1500-1600's, and will be one of the unusual aspects of the recital. Penny will also sing a few Arthur Sullivan and a Johann Strauss songs. Later selections are taken from "The Hums of Pooh" which are from the story "Winnie the Pooh" by A.A. Milne.

The last part of the recital will be an operatic ensemble performing a scene from "The Marriage of Figaro,; Act III. Penny will be Marcellina who Figaro is sentenced to marry. The rest of the characters are: Don Curzio—Charles Mason, Figaro—Henry Dahlman, Count—Bill McKaig, Sussanna—Rene Rowland, and Bartolo—Robert Chandler. The operatic ensemble is the first time in Longwood's history that a group will perform with the senior.

With the ideas and work of the voice teacher, Norma Williams, and the abilities of the performers and instrumentalists, Penny's recital will be a historical mark for the music department.

OPEN HEARING ON SPECIAL AND CAPITAL PROJECTS—LONG AND SHORT RANGE: On November 3, 1976 in the ABC Rooms of Lankford from 1:45 p.m. until 2:45 p.m. interested faculty, staff and students are encouraged to attend this special hearing on projects. You are invited to make your views and your requests known to Dr. Willett and staff members who will be present. If the meeting time is not convenient, you may submit your ideas in writing to my office but get these in, please, by Nov. 5, 1976.

Residence Board Oct. 26, 1976

Dining Hall Committee Report: There will be a Dining Hall Committee Meeting Tuesday, November 2, 1976, at 3:30 p.m. in the alcove.

New Business:

1. Mary Meade Saunders has been appointed Vice Chairman of Residence Board for the remainder of the semester.
2. Cam Oglesby was elected by the Board to fill the position of Secretary of Residence Board for the remainder of the semester.
3. Sheets concerning the use of facilities after open house hours will be passed out to the students in the near future. The Chairman will be talking to the Residence Hall Councils about this.

THE CLASS OF '82'

I DON'T CARE IF THE DORM IS COED
THE INDIVIDUAL SHOWER STALLS AREN'T!

Faculty Status Granted To Administrative Personnel By State

The primary reason for the granting of faculty status to certain administrative personnel is an attempt on the part of State officials to insure that a high percentage of administrative personnel would be individuals who had a faculty background or who possessed academic qualifications similar to faculty members. This was true at the inception of the program and remains true today. A secondary purpose of the program was to provide flexibility in salary negotiations.

From the early inception of this program, a large number of administrative appointments have come from faculty rank. Many of these individuals have indicated that they would not accept such an appointment unless their faculty rank is maintained. Many administration personnel also teach a class as a part of their total institutional assignment. The accrediting agencies demand that such individuals hold faculty rank. Supervisors of student teachers shall be classified not lower than 2 instructors and advanced on academic qualifications and merit. Administrative deans, directors of student personnel services and their immediate administrative assistants who meet the professional requirements of the teaching staff may be given appropriate faculty rank as determined by the governing boards.

The program existed as far back as 1964 and has been amended a number of times, most recently in June, 1975. The program calls for persons appointed to the list of positions outlined in the attached memos to meet the minimal qualifications for entrance to the academic profession. Because many institutions have, in the past, and continue to have, some situations in which individuals with only the bachelor's degree have been employed, the Personnel Office has indicated that the bachelor's degree would be the minimal requirement. This does not imply that the same rank will always be given for the same degree. Consideration of administrative personnel has to include such factors as degree of responsibility and long-term professional training which might cause deviation from the traditional master's and doctor's degrees.

At the present time, there are 16 full-time administrative personnel, and 6 librarians who have faculty status. Of the 22 individuals involved, 20 possess at least a master's degree and the remaining two have done work on the master's degree. There have been no persons hired to positions carrying faculty status who do not possess a graduate degree since 1971.

The Longwood Board of Visitors has reaffirmed support of the State plan at meetings on February 3, 1972, and August, 1972. It reiterated its support for full faculty voting rights for these individuals and indicated its opposition to anything less than full citizenship.

According to the American Association of State Colleges and Universities' national survey in March of 1975, 53.4 per cent of all administrators nationally in state-supported institutions have faculty rank.

Enthusiasm And Spontaneity Characterize Transfer Glenn Leftwich

By MARGARET
HAMMERSLEY

There are a few new faces in the drama department this semester, and one of them belongs to Glenn Leftwich. A sophomore from Colonial Heights, Glenn attended VCU and Richard Bland before coming to Longwood. During the past two months he has been involved with both dramatic productions. He began working with make-up in Twelfth Night, and ended up landing the role of Antonio. In Glass Menagerie, Glenn will portray Tom Wingfield.

Glenn's reasons for leaving both VCU and Richard Bland were rooted in the nature of each school's drama department. He faulted VCU's department as consisting of clicks; and he felt himself slighted, "Freshmen in the department were frowned upon. . . I considered myself just as able or worthy of doing anything that anybody else was doing." Glenn left VCU before he had a chance to act, and went to Richard Bland.

Once at Richard Bland he found that they virtually had no drama department. He commented that the college had "no facilities, no auditorium; it (a production) was presented in the lecture hall and we had to improvise a lot of things because of a lack of a stage." So the Longwood drama department has been fortunate enough to recruit Glenn here.

When Glenn was asked why he is into drama he replied, "It is one of the few things I can do and enjoy; I can't see myself in a 9-5 position." Glenn said that he has been in theatre most of his life, and admitted, "I hate doing tech. . . I'd rather do tech than not be involved with the show at all, but I'd much rather be on stage."

Glenn is extremely enthusiastic about the department, the Players, and the opportunities available to him. He asserted, "I really like everybody in the department. There's more of a feeling of community here." As he is one of only a few males in the department, he commented, "You need guys in a theatre department, as much as you need females."

There are a couple of changes which Glenn would like to see eventually evolve. One change would involve receiving academic credit for productions. "I think it would be a good idea for people working on the shows to get credit for it because it does involve a great deal of time." He added, "It's more than two or three hours four nights in a row." Glenn also stated that there is "too much going on in Jarman at one given time." He hopes that in the future more facilities will be available so that a cast can always have access to a stage.

Glenn is excited with the role of Tom in Glass Menagerie, "This is the favorite role I've ever had." The character transmits a feeling of entrapment, a situation to which all can relate. He commented, "We all get trapped in situations that we don't exactly want to be in, but we're more or less liable to get in for one reason or another, and are trapped and have our creativity stifled." Glenn also noted that the character has "more dimension" than others he has portrayed.

In re-creating the character, Glenn claimed that "it is a challenge, and at the same time it is easier than any other role he has done. It is easier for him in the respect that he is "not working on any distinct mannerism." The aspect with which he is primarily concerned is "conveying the emotion (of Tom)." When he was asked how he attempts to portray that emotion he explained that he did not study the script to analyze the character with great depth. He

Dreamy Quality, Haunting Mood To Be Created With MENAGERIE

By SUSIE TRANSUE

Where will YOU be on the nights of November 10-13? Sitting in your room bored to tears and wondering what could possibly be happening on this campus? Or watching the endless continuation of re-runs on TV about violence and death? The Longwood Players and Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts have created another theatrical presentation for everyone that can stop the dreary feeling that may be going around. This presentation is the fascinating American classic by Tennessee Williams, The Glass Menagerie. For a low admission price of nothing for Longwood students, $2 for guests and $1 for groups, you can be transported into another world. So, instead of crying from boredom or watching uneducating programs on TV come and sit and if you feel so inclined, cry while you become more acquainted with the field of theatre. The curtain time for this exciting and emotional play is 7:30 p.m. and will be in our own school's theatre; Jarman Auditorium.

You will also be treated to an experience in music if you partake in this adventure as Jacqui Singleton, a senior English and Drama major, has created a beautiful and unique song for the show. She was asked to write a song to set the mood of the show and to create the dreamy quality of the glass menagerie that Laura treasures.

Her song begins in a minor key, changes to major and ends in the minor. The minor key in the beginning gives the song the dreamy quality of the play and also displays the feeling of the fragility of the glass menagerie. After this dreamy introduction, the major key creates a sense of hope for the individuals in the play, but this hope is quickly destroyed by the change back to a minor key. This final tone gives a feeling that their sadness will always remain with them. The song shows Tom's anxiety as he tries to run away from his problems. He is forced to reconsider his actions; however, because of the haunting memories of Laura. "Laura's Theme" by Jacqui Singleton is beautifully composed with vibrant music and moving lyrics and contains the same haunting quality that the play itself displays.

With an exciting cast and a unique song to set everything off, the production of The Glass Menagerie is bound to be an exciting, enjoyable evening for all. So, why sit in your room bored to tears when you could be with the many others who are out enjoying an evening at the theatre.

Letters to the Editor

A Plea To You

The indifference that prevails on this campus among students and faculty is disgusting. Most of the gripes expressed concern the lack of activities and news of interest. However, when the Student Union and other organizations plan speakers, movies and concerts to offer variety and entertainment, only a handful of individuals attend. When The Rotunda poses what should be challenging questions about student and faculty affairs, student money and the like, no one takes the initiative to find straight answers. The lack of response seems to indicate that students don't mind the outdated rules. The existence of some social regulations — or the lack of them — doesn't seem to bother anyone. Everyone appears to be satisfied with the manners in which policies and policy changes are sometimes dictated and sometimes forgotten when problems arise.

From the mumbblings and rumblings in the dorms, one could gather that students are dissatisfied with a lot of things and that one of these days the campus will arise in protest. Sure. With the lack of participation and interest, it would take a major catastrophe to unite this student body. This should not be the case. We live in a basically democratic society. If there's something that needs to be changed, change it. If there are those who want longer visitation hours, protest and fight for newer rules. If there are regulations that are unrealistic in this era of the 1970's, ask why they haven't been revised. The college has been taking reserve student money left over at the end of each year and has been putting it into a kind of restricted account, although explanations of this money differs with each individual. The Student Activities Fees Committee has no jurisdiction over this money, and they were not aware of its existence until this past year. There are questions that need to be asked about it. But, if the student body doesn't mind having its money stored for a rainy day rather than channelled back into the students, there is no need to take the time and energy to probe. There is no money set aside for faculty research projects. If the faculty doesn't care, then there is no need to ask the reasoning behind the deletion. If no one cares, then why have a student government or student newspaper? Student leaders don't ask questions just to have something to do and to look official. There is a minority who want change and some honest communications. Without a majority, however, there is no need to push. Who cares? If you do, then say so. The Rotunda will willingly and enthusiastically accept letters and commentaries from students and faculty who want something changed and their opinions known. Complaining to your roommate or over coffee at lunch does no one any good. There has to be support for the few events that are scheduled before more can be warranted. More importantly, there have to be complaints and suggestions for updating rules before Longwood will emerge into present day life. Voice yourself — try it once and see what happens. It won't hurt a bit and it just might help a lot.

Christmas Cheer

Dear Editor:

Another Christmas season is rapidly approaching — the time of year we most enjoy being with family and friends. However, for many thousands of our fellow Americans this will be a very lonely Christmas; they cannot be with their families because they are stationed overseas with the United States Armed Forces. For a large number of these young men and women this will be the first Christmas away from home.

Your readers can help make this holiday season a little less lonely for many of these young people by joining in the collection of Christmas mail sponsored by Military Overseas Mail. This is an ideal project for school classes, clubs, scouts, and other groups or organizations as well as individuals and families. For more information, please send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to MOM, Box 4428, Arlington, Va. 22204. Thank you.

Prisoners' Request

Dear Editor,

My friends and I are writing to you in hope that you may assist us.

Paul, Dave, and I are presently incarcerated at Marion Correctional Institution. We are all seeking correspondence and any outside help that we may get.

All three of us are 22 years old white males and well versed in college subjects. We wish to receive mail from anybody, no matter what their age, race, or sex may be.

We would greatly appreciate if you would run our letter in your campus newspaper. The problem behind all of this is that so many people have forgotten about their brothers behind bars.

No matter what your decision may be, we'd like to thank you at least considering us for space in your school newspaper.

Thank you for the chance!!

Current Construction Projects

Replacing the steamlines in the Wheeler Mall — Cox area has been the biggest eyesore and overall headache of any of the half dozen projects underway.

Yet, there is no current project that was more pressing than this one. Steamlines to Wheeler and Cox were deteriorating to such an extent that we figured it would be impossible to get through another winter heating system with what we had passing for steamlines! Our calculations proved true when excavations revealed even greater damage than we anticipated. This project is one-third complete and plans call for completion by mid-January 1977. There are no complications in heating Cox and Wheeler and providing hot water during the period work is underway on the new steamline project.

Another project that will create some inconvenience for everyone is an electrical project in the Tabb Circle area. Wiring will have to run under Chambers Street and under the roadway leading into Tabb Circle. As a consequence, the roads will have to be broken up in two places and some traffic (walking and riding) will be momentarily inconvenienced but not stopped. The project is necessary in order to reduce an electrical overload in the Ruffner complex that is both dangerous and inefficient. Work is scheduled to begin on October 25, 1976 and the completion date is set for early December 1976.

Plans are complete and work scheduled to begin in Mid-December 1976 on new rest room facilities in the lower Dining Hall. These rest rooms are designed to handle capacity crowds at mixers, etc., in the lower Dining Hall area. In addition, during Christmas break, work is to begin

Legislative Bd. Discussions

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS

Legislative Board members were urged to encourage other students to sign-up for committees at the November 1 meeting. Emily Burgwyn listed the committees and explained the functions of each. Publications Board, Academic Affairs, Student Activity Fees and Student Liason committee sign-up sheets are posted on the Student Government Bulletin Board in the Old Smoker.

Bonnie Gheen reminded everyone that the deadline for turning in requests to run for Major-Minor elections is November 10. She announced there would be meetings in the upperclassmen dorm to inform students about the offices and procedures for running for an office.

Suggestions for questions at the press conference to be held on November 16 were discussed. Some topics to be brought before President Willett include dress for Sunday Dinner, news about the construction going on around campus, an update on drinking rules in sorority chapter rooms, figures on the number of drops and adds this semester, and the procedure for getting the college bus. Judicial and Residence boards will also have some questions to answer at the press conference. Questions that deal with coeducation, infractions and penalties, and student counselors will be answered by Judicial and Residence Board chairmen Willa Derbin, Sally Graham, and Mary Bruce Hazelgrove were excused from the Legislative Board meeting because of a Student Teacher meeting. Rebecca Gee and Dee Donnelly were also absent.

The November 15 meeting of Legislative Board will be held in Wheeler at 7:00.

Keith Berger Keeps Audience Spellbound

By ANNE CARTER STEPHENS

Mimist Keith Berger performed his tricks of the trade Monday night in Jarman Auditorium. The audience remained spellbound throughout the entire performance with his unusual and realistic pantomimes and mimes.

To begin his performance, he mimicked a robot in which members of the audience got to participate. After this, he acted out a whole circus, from a juggler to a tight wire walker, then a flame and he even took his head off.

After intermission, he mimicked a cowboy and a scene which was called "Instant-Replay". Next, came a reenactment of a nightmare which held everyone in suspense. For the finale, he imitated a puppet and later answered questions for the audience.

He became interested in mime when he was three years old while living in Los Angeles because he was doing parts for cowboy movies and he was required to be quiet on the set. Later, he began playing in theatres and traveled with circuses around the world. He actually studied mime in the American Mime Theatre in New York. He figures he now practices from five to eight hours a day.

To achieve his great concentration when performing, he focuses on one point and through this focus on an object or movement, all else fails to penetrate his concentration.

This 24 year old now tours college campuses. He has just recently finished a Chevrolet commercial and a part in the movie "Angels".

Noel "LOIS LANE" Neill

Noel Neill will be appearing in the Gold Room Sunday, November 14, to discuss her experiences with the Superman show. There will be a question and answer period and movies of the Superman show will be shown. This event begins at 7:30 p.m. and the price of admission is $1.00 for Longwood students with their I.D. and $2.00 for guests.

on rest room facilities for the Banquet Room. The work on the lower Dining Hall rest rooms should take 8-10 weeks; hopefully the Banquet Room facilities will be completed by February 1, 1977. These projects are part of a larger Dining Hall capital outlay request that calls for replacing the Main Dining Hall flooring beginning mid-May 1977 with a scheduled completion date of July 31, 1977.

We are replacing the roof and parapet wall atop South Cunningham. This project is approximately 35 per cent complete and barring unusually bad weather this fall should be completed by December 6, 1976. This particular project has concerned us for a number of years and we feel much better now that work is one-third complete. But, like everyone else, we will be even happier to have it over and done.

Workmen are replacing the porch roof, balustrades, and a number of the large support columns in front of Ruffner and Grainger. Like South Cunningham, the roof was leaking and creating more serious structural problems than we cared to live with! The balustrades were as unstable and flimsy as loose teeth and for aesthetic reasons, had to be replaced. This project is 30 per cent complete and is scheduled for completion early in the new year.

Finally, we plan to purchase and install 950 storm windows that will be installed in Ruffner, Grainger, Hiner and Stevens. Economically and aesthetically, the College will come out ahead on this project in that we will save money on fuel through less heat loss and the overall beauty of the older buildings will be enhanced by the installation of these storm windows. A definite work schedule is yet to be firmed up on this project. It seems that each project has in one way or another managed to challenge the patience of all of us. There is no reason for any area of the campus to be "Off-Limits" in the sense of delimiting facilities or services. Those of us directly involved in this work apologize for the inconveniences and eyesores but promise a more pleasant and more attractive campus as a result of these undertakings.

Jericho Harp Sings Of Emotions And Events

By

MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

From Minnesota to "Farmington," Virginia came Jericho Harp, the attraction of the Student Union's second mini-concert last Tuesday evening. Before a crowd of approximately 30 people Jim and Tom, both on guitar, played a selection of songs varied in tone and rhythm. In songs such as "Who Loves You Like I Do Baby," they hit notes sounding a touch like Seals and Crofts, but other than that, their sound was strictly their own. The most outstanding feature of their performance was their harmony.

Their music included a little bit of everything. They went from the quick rhythm "Gonna Be a Lot of Music On the Mississippi River Tonight," to the slower, mellow "Stephen Geddis." Also included were light, humorous selections such as, "Geraldine Chrysanthamine."

The two seemed particularly impressed with Farmville, assuring us that they had been well provided for at the "Weyanoke Hilton." Upon explaining that they could find no chickens in town for their act, a member of the audience offered them a fair supply of turkeys. Having surveyed the audience Jim asked, "Do you have any sex here in Farmville?" to which Tom replied, "They send it over from Richmond."

As Tom packed the equipment after the show, Jim sat and talked about their music. The two have been together for five years, and tour basically colleges performing for audiences a bit larger than that of Tuesday evening. Jim prefers an auditorium location because of better acoustic and lighting effects. He complained that with a small audience it is "hard to create excitement," he finds it easier to control a larger audience.

Aside from the lighter pieces, Jim likes songs that convey emotions. When choosing material to perform, he looks to the content of the song rather than to the specific artist. As they prepare for a concert they arrange their music in "a sequence of emotions and events." Most of the music presented during the concert was original.

Jim and Tom do not plan to enlarge the duo, but they would like to travel with a small back-up band. In January they plan to release an album in United Artists label, and a single, "Harmless Lies."

Home Economists Attend Forum

J.C. Penny's takes an active part in education by annually conducting a forum for Home Economics educators. This year the meeting was held on Saturday, October 30, at the J.C. Penny's store in Cloverleaf Mall.

The keynote speaker was Sandi Moore, Field Education Representative from the New York Office. Ms. Moore introduced "The Big Game", a technique used to show what a consumer considers when buying items as small as a toothbrush or as large as a car. She also explained the qualities of a good educational game. Other educational materials available for loan to home economics teachers were on display. The meeting was very interesting and informative.

Longwood College representatives were Mrs. Dorothy Savedge, Mrs. Pat Fleenor, Ms. Lou Guthrie, Miss Melinda Ingram, Patsy Potts and Lumins Beasley. Longwood student teachers attending were: Jackie Person, Gay Caudle, Diane Robinson, Kay Jackson, Ashby Pollock, and Penny Harding.

ALCOHOLISM: AN OUNCE

An Introduction- Comments And Facts

"Drinking is O.K., but getting smashed and kicking in walls is not okay. Social norms say it is not okay to get smashed; you're not supposed to. That's just not intelligent or sensible."

"I see a number of kids drink until they black out at night and then start drinking again in the morning. We're so used to it being a normal part of life that we don't recognize the alcoholic."

Everybody is driving you to 'Come on drink, drink.' But you also do it because you want to get drunk, and at the particular moment it is socially acceptable to get plastered out of your mind."

"Getting drunk isn't just acceptable here—it's encouraged."

These comments come from numerous college articles written on alcohol and the campus. The views expressed make it appear that today's drinking population understands alcohol and its effect no better than people did 2,000 years ago.

Alcohol has been a source of both pleasure and destruction since the beginning of mankind. It has been commended through the ages as a source of relaxation, pleasure and conviviality, nourishing the body, restoring and preserving health. Yet, history is also a long and sad chronicle of the destruction which the irresponsible use of alcohol has wrought upon individuals, families, and societies.

The Second Special Report to the U.S. Congress on Alcohol and Health from the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, reveals that a substantial proportion of teenagers drink. Furthermore, a larger proportion of drinkers is consistently found in the younger age groups—21 to 24 years. Campus surveys report that from 71—96 per cent of college students drink.

This does not imply that the college population is composed of alcoholic persons or problem drinkers. It does mean that there is a substantial number of young people drinking who give very little thought to what their use of alcohol can mean in terms of alcohol-related disruptions and cost.

The prevention of alcoholism has become a national concern. It has been suggested that prevention programming at the college level is not worth while because drinking attitudes have already been established by the time a person enters college. However, while the decision of drinking has been made, the choice of how to drink remains. Campus prevention should focus on providing 'good role models for learning how to be responsible drinkers'.

Other reasons for doing prevention work at the college can be summarized as follows:

Drinking problems do exist on the campus. One third of a sample group of college students had had drinking problems during the previous year in at least two of the following areas: frequent drunkenness (5 or more times), social complications such as censure from family and friends, difficulties with school work, trouble with the law, or driving after having too much to drink.

Prevention means much more than just changing attitudes.

Modifications of the social environment, for example, can do much to encourage responsible drinking behavior and to reduce alcohol related destruction.

College graduates have a tremendous influence in society. It's really a chicken and egg argument: in order to get to the children we first have to get to the parents, the teachers, and to those who set our societal priorities (i.e., college graduates).

In order to see how we can prevent alcoholics and teach us how to drink it is necessary to take a little inventory of what we already know.

Ethyl alcohol is the active and desirable ingredient in distilled spirits, beers, and wines. It provides little of the taste, but all of the intoxicating effect of alcoholic beverages. Alcohol is a natural substance formed by the reaction of fermenting sugar with the yeast spores. Different alcoholic beverages are produced by using different sources of sugar for the fermentation process—beer from malted barley, wine from grapes or berries, vodka from potatoes or grain, rum from molasses, and tequila from agave (a cactus-like plant).

Distillation will also raise the alcoholic content. This is possible because alcohol has a lower boiling point than water. The fermenting mixture (the mash) is heated, and the vapor it gives off (with a higher proportion of alcohol) is then cooled into a liquid with a higher potency. Distilled beverages like whiskey, vodka, rum, and tequila typically range from 40 per cent (80 proof) to 50 per cent (100 proof) alcohol.

Now many people don't realize that drinks which contain the same amount of alcohol will have a similar effect on the drinker. That is, a 12-ounce can of beer, an average 4-ounce glass of wine, or a highball or cocktail with an ounce of 100 proof alcohol, all contain about one-half ounce of alcohol—and, others being equal, will pack about the same punch.

It is a much publicized fact that alcohol is indeed a central nervous system depressant that works like other anesthetic drugs. The rapidity with which alcohol enters the bloodstream and exerts its effect on the brain and body depends on several things:

How fast they drink. Gulping drinks will produce an immediate effect whereas sipping your drink will give your body time to burn up some of the alcohol and will not be such a "jolt" to your brain.

Whether their stomach is empty or full. Eating and then taking that drink will slow down the absorption rate of alcohol into the bloodstream and the body will have a more even response to the alcohol.

What they drink. Wine and beer are absorbed less rapidly than hard liquors because they contain small amounts of nonalcoholic substances that slow down the absorption rate.

How much they weigh. The same amount of alcohol can have a greater effect on a 120-pound person than on a 180-pound person. Alcohol is quickly distributed uniformly within the circulatory system. Therefore the heavier person will have smaller concentration of alcohol throughout his bloodstream and body than the lighter individual will.

Where they drink. The setting and the circumstances play a part in people's reaction to alcohol. For instance, if they are comfortably sitting down and relaxed, having a drink with a friend, alcohol will not have as much effect as when they are standing and drinking at a cocktail party. On the other hand, if they are emotionally upset, under stress, or tired, alcohol may have a stronger impact than normal. Also if they think they are going to get drunk then the ease and speed with which they will feel intoxicated will be increased.

If you need a
to be social,
You're not a SOCIAL drinker.

WHAT CAN WE DO?

In our society problems related to drinking occur for many and varied reasons. Some maintain that "problem drinking" is only a symptom of an underlying personal problem. While this is true in some cases, it is also a very narrow and simplistic point of view. Alcohol-related destruction involves not only persons with personal problems, but also "normal," people like us. The damage we incur is a consequence of our transportation system, our affluence, our laws, our alienation, and our educational priorities. It is an outcome of our drinking patterns, our prohibitionist history, our drinking environments, and our alcohol advertising. It is a result of all of these things and more.

To actually start a prevention method it is necessary to form a strategy. The two strategies discussed here are specific strategies and nonspecific strategies. Specific strategies deal specifically with alcohol or drinking. Nonspecific strategies have to do with broader aspects of life.

In seeking to minimize the destructive effects of alcohol abuse an attempt to change or modify behavior is being made. Thus, the personal development of an individual and the environment one lives in must be looked at.

Alcohol education and information dissemination are scoffed at by many. "It doesn't do any good," they say. And yet, since we live in a pluralistic democratic society, what is the alternative? Information centers should be set up on every campus or in a place that students and other individuals can have easy access to the material. Media dissemination efforts often play a support role, but they can also be projects themselves and can facilitate the acceptance of a later project initiative. Advertisements are too often something less than responsible, however this can be combated by putting pressure on the industry. Posters and pamphlets directed at college students can have a tremendous effect on the attitudes produced. Positive posters and pamphlets are suggested for better results.

Alcohol Awareness campaigns or a Symposium, such as the one held on this campus last week, are helpful and informative. Seminars, individual research, and academic courses in alcoholism can aid in preventing alcoholism as well as alert those who are not alcoholics.

There are considerations that are products of the environmental strategy and can make drinking more pleasurable, more responsible, and safer.

Importance of Setting
Ideally alcohol is sipped slowly, consumed with food, and partaken in the company of others in a relaxed, comfortable environment. There should be no pressure to take or order a drink: non-alcoholic beverages should be available at a party.

What foods With What Drinks?

Serving food with drinks is not only more sensible, but it also truly enhances the pleasure of both the drinks and the food. Snack foods suggest are cheese and crackers; Swedish meatballs, deviled eggs, and bite size cold cuts. Beer goes with hotdogs, eggs and bacon, baked beans and sausages.

Entertaining and Serving Etiquette

These helpful hints make a party more responsible and pleasurable.

1. Don't make "booze" the primary attraction of the party.
2. Try to make people feel at home. This does not mean that we immediately put a drink in someone's hand.

3. Encourage activities other than drinking—games, talking, eating, music.

4. Give equal time to both alcoholic and non-alcoholic beverages.

5. Food is vital.

6. If an alcoholic punch is served it should be made with a non-alcoholic base. Alcohol is absorbed faster when mixed with a carbonated base.

8. Stop serving the alcoholic beverages about an hour before the party is over. The drive home will be safer.

9. Concern for the people at the party is essential. If they need a ride home after too much alcohol then one should be offered to them.

10. Keep in mind that if the guests wake up the next morning without a bad hangover and remember the good time they had, the party was thrown in a proper way.

F PREVENTION

(Compiled By Lisa Smith)

Symposium On Alcohol Covers Variety Of Topics

On Wednesday, November 3, the first of several speeches and discussions began on alcoholism. The Symposium on Alcohol sponsored by Dean of Students' Office and Chi was informative and the topics were broad.

The Reverend Henry V. Langford, the executive Secretary of Alcohol-Narcotics of the Education Council, Inc., of Virginia Churches, discussed the effect that parents have on their children especially when it comes to setting an example. "Parents' examples are more effective than parental advice in child behavior," stated Rev. Langford.

There is strong scientific evidence that alcoholism can be inherited. However, this theory has not been proven and is no justification for any age drinker. Alcoholism is a mental, physical and social sickness and is very "contagious".

Rev. Langford talked about the beginning of an alcoholic in that many people drink to deal with either success or frustration. Children see this and learn to resent their parents and alcohol. They are neglected, gain no support from their parents, daydream, feel like a failure, and feel alienated from everyone else. The most crucial factor involved is that the children blame themselves for what their parents have done. Many of these children who live in this type of setting grow up and become alcoholics because of the guilt feelings and self-blame that they feel.

"To be reared in an alcoholic home causes more problems that have to deal with all of these problems," says Rev. Langford. These children need guidance as well as understanding.

Rev. Langford stated that it is necessary for each child in this situation to "forgive their parents" and in doing so they will find their own self-esteem.

In conclusion Rev. Langford stated that prevention of alcoholism is needed more than treatment. An "ounce of mother and daddy is worth more than a pound of psychiatry."

Dr. Marcia J. Lawton, Director of Alcohol Education Program at VCU, spoke next on the recovery from alcohol.

Dr. Lawton is a recovery alcoholic and said that alcoholism is an "equal opportunity" disease that can strike anyone.

Alcoholism is also a progressive disease and after the first drink is uncontrollable. If a person is an alcoholic for a long period of time, the disease may become chronic. If the person stops drinking it does not mean he is cured.

Dr. Lawton also stated that three factors one must consider when dealing with an alcoholic. Physiological, psychological, and sociological factors all are involved in the cause of alcoholism.

B. Johnson's book, entitled I'll Quit Tomorrow, has given sound reasoning for alcoholism. In the beginning most people drink to get high. "After they are high they keep drinking and experience a little pain. To get out of the painful state into a normal state they take another drink." The alcoholic must drink to stay normal.

Lawton also mentioned the tremendous impact that Alcoholics Anonymous has had in the world. This organization, begun in 1935, introduces 12 steps to enable an alcoholic to control his drinking. "These 12 steps are a program of spiritual recovery," stated Lawton. They are not religious but spiritual in the sense that there is something beyond yourself to help you recover.

Lawton also went into some of the various treatment techniques that are used. For her, the group therapy seems to be the best form of treatment. However, speeches to alcoholics and individual conferences are helpful too.

Halfway Houses were discussed and Lawton told of her experiences in a house such as this where she "learned a lot about people." Places that offer such treatment as the Halfway House are good chances to learn how to like oneself, communicate better with others, and learn how to control yourself.

Mr. Norman Leek led a period of questions and answers. He pointed out that alcoholism is a "complex disease" and there are many viewpoints connected with the subject.

In response to the question of becoming an alcoholic just off of beer, Mr. Leek explained that it worked like vodka, gin, or any other alcoholic beverage — it just takes more.

Is getting plastered every time one drinks, an indication of an alcoholic? Mr. Leek answered that many of these people refuse to accept alcoholism as a disease and that the dynamics of addiction are not known. Dr. Lawton noted that excessive drinking can lead to alcoholism and that a person will generally follow the norm of his group.

Mr. Leek noted also that the alcoholic must at first admit he is an alcoholic and treatment may begin. "The alcoholic behaves as brooding of the past, afraid of the future, and unable to deal with the present," stated Mr. Leek. The alcoholic must also learn to accept his own life. Leek commented that "affection and human love can help him overcome his problem." The drinking only fills a void that they are experiencing. In response to the question of how to help an alcoholic, Mr. Leek suggested the alcoholic be told the "hard facts in a loving and non-judging way. This can be done with concern."

When talking about helping the alcoholic, Mr. Leek said, "In order to help our friends and families, we need to get help for ourselves. Patience and understanding is necessary."

On Wednesday night the symposium continued with Mr. James Bock and his associate, Mr. Jim Griffer, of the Alcoholic Rehabilitation Center of Central Virginia. Mr. Bock began the lecture with some information on how one becomes an alcoholic. To do this one must "look at a person's feelings." Mr. Bock proceeded to explain based on the theory devised by B. Johnson in his book, I'll Quit Tomorrow. Mr. Johnson has created a line which includes pain on one end, euphoria on the other and normal in the middle. Mr. Bock explained that a "person begins drinking not because of any extreme feeling (such as pain or euphoria) but because he is feeling normal." So he takes that first drink and experiences nothing. A person will then drink until a "mood swing" has occurred and "he learns that alcohol does something for him and it always does."

As time goes on this person depends on the drug in order to feel good. "As he drinks things begin to happen to him because of his drinking. He begins to feel badly when he is sober," said Mr. Bock. Now his feelings will shift and there is a "free floating mass of negative feelings." The drinking becomes excessive because he feels so badly about himself.

The main point to remember when trying to treat these patients is that they have built up defenses. Mr. Bock commented that alcoholism is a "break with reality" which is basic to the sickness.

Bock also stated that the "clue to treating an alcoholic is to look at the defenses by group therapy and individual counseling." By breaking down these defenses a person can get in touch with himself and his feelings.

With this, Mr. Bock turned the program over to Jim Griffer who is a recovery alcoholic and a psychologist. Griffer pointed out that alcohol is a mood changer and that alcoholism is the third leading cause of death. Griffer pointed out also that the sole reason for drinking alcohol is because of the shift in moods. "Everyone knows it does not taste good."

On Thursday Mr. Grant Shumway spoke on peer pressures and alcohol. Mr. Shumway defined peer pressure as "pressure to do something which may or may not be one of our values."

Mr. Shumway pointed out several goals in prevention programming. The program should be informative, educational, and deal with values and with the concept of behavior.

Statistics show, according to Mr. Shumway, that every day 25 young people are killed and 125 are maimed because of alcoholism.

Do's And Don'ts In Helping Someone Close

DO

Try to remain calm, unemotional and factually honest in speaking with the problem drinker about his behavior and its day-to-day consequences.

Let the problem drinker know that you are reading and learning about alcoholism, attending Al-Anon or Alateen, and the like.

Discuss the situation with someone you trust — a clergyman, social worker, a friend, or some individual who has experienced alcoholism either personally or as a family member.

Encourage new interest and participate in leisure-time activities that the problem drinker enjoys. Encourage him or her to see old friends.

Be patient and live one day at a time. Alcoholism generally takes a long time to develop, and recovery does not occur overnight.

Refuse to ride with the alcoholic person if he insists on drinking and driving.

DO NOT

Attempt to punish, threaten, bribe, preach or try to be a martyr.

Allow yourself to cover up or make excuses for the alcoholic person or shield him from the realistic consequences of his behavior.

Take over his responsibilities, leaving him with no sense of importance or dignity.

Hide or dump bottles, or shelter the problem drinker from situations where alcohol is present.

Argue with the alcoholic person when he is drunk.

Try to drink along with the problem drinker.

It's Dangerous To Mix Alcohol And Drugs

Alcohol is a drug which can produce feelings of well-being, sedation, intoxication, and unconsciousness. Since alcohol works on the same brain areas as some drugs, it can multiply the usual responses normally expected from either the drug or the alcohol alone, if they are taken fairly close to one another. For example, alcohol and barbiturates in combination increase each other's effects on the central nervous system and can be particularly dangerous. Alcohol in combination with any drug that has a depressant effect on the central nervous system likewise represents a special hazard to health and safety—sometimes to life itself.

In the metabolic process, drugs are transformed into other substances, which are eventually eliminated through normal bodily functions. The more rapid the rate of metabolism, the lower the impact of the drug. When drugs are forced to compete with alcohol for processing by the body, alcohol is metabolized first, while the other drug remains active in the blood for an extended period of time. As a result, the drug's effect on the body is exaggerated, since its metabolism is slowed down due to the body's tendency to take care of the alcohol first. When added to the normal depressant consequence of alcohol, further depression of the nervous system which regulates vital body functions occurs. This is a serious condition that can result in death.

As a result of excessive drinking, during periods of sobriety, barbiturates or sedatives will have less effect, since these drugs are more rapidly metabolized. The results of taking the large doses and then drinking can place these persons in even greater jeopardy and can be fatal.

THE NUMBER ONE KILLER OF YOUNG AMERICANS IS YOUNG AMERICANS.

You don't mean to be. But you are. The numbers are simple.

Latest available figures show that 8,000 American people between the ages of 15 and 25 died in alcohol related crashes. And almost all the drunk drivers who caused those crashes were also under 25.

1,380 died in combat. 3,420 committed suicide. 2,731 died of cancer.

It's incredible, but one of the most dangerous things you can do is to have a few bottles of wine with friends and drive home.

You march against war. You fight for clean air and clean water. You eat natural foods. You practice yoga. You are so much for life. And you are so much against killing.

It would be unthinkable for you to kill another human being on purpose.

So then, why is this happening?

SOCCER TEAM: 110% EFFORT

By
MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

The men's soccer team has scored! Not one, not two, not three, but four goals! When?—last Saturday morning against Lynchburg College. With several team members injured, and the record of the Lynchburg team in the back of the minds of all the players, all had doubts as to the outcome of the match.

The match began with a surprising, spectacular Longwood goal by David Yerkes in the first thirty seconds of play. That fire died rather quickly, however, as the team would not play as a team, and let Lynchburg score four goals. Blame was not to be placed entirely on goalie Bud Atkins, for his needed fullback help was not available. As Lynchburg approached the Longwood goal the fullbacks failed to drop back fast enough to stop them. Lynchburg moved quicker and held their positions. The Lynchburg goals were scored by Doug McCallum (2 goals), Larry Karagenes, and Frank Ditri.

Longwood lacked the control of the ball that Lynchburg demonstrated. The players did not work with each other, and did not move the ball. Long kicks were aimed at Lynchburg's goal, yet no Longwood players were in position at the goal to pick them up. Coach Williamson complained that Longwood lacked their hustle; the reason Lynchburg scored was that they out hustled us.

A major transformation occurred during the second half of the match. The Longwood guys emerged as a team. The players displayed their best performance of teamwork. They regained their hustle and began to move the ball.

Bill Breendon was responsible for two of the three goals during the second half. His first goal came with a little help from a Lynchburg player. Bill kicked the ball toward the goal, and as a Lynchburg player jumped to block it with his head, the ball bounced off his head into the net. Bill kicked again. A Lynchburg player ran to block it but stopped when he heard the Lynchburg goalie yell, "I've got it! I've got it!"—the ball flew through the goalie's hands into the net!

Longwood's final goal was scored again by David Yerkes. With the score tied, Longwood ran hard to break that tie, but in the last two minutes of the game, Lynchburg beat us to it. Larry Karagenes scored the winning goal.

The second half also brought two injuries to Longwood players. John Giza's knee gave him some trouble, and Greg Dunn suffered a sprained ankle.

Longwood is definitely not as polished as Lynchburg, but their performance has greatly improved since the H-S matches. Had the performance of the first half been equivalent to that of the second half, we would have won the match.

Needless to say, Coach Williamson was extremely proud of the guys after the second half. Considering their injuries and the wind factor, the coach felt, "We got 110 per cent effort out of everybody."

Longwood's first home match is this Thursday, the 11th, at Campus School against Southside Community College—4:00 p.m. If we play anything like we played Saturday, the match will be something to see!

Congratulations guys!!!!

Recent Dance Company Performance Hailed As Delight In Theater

By TRISH HOWLAND

All those who attended the Longwood College Company of Dancers annual fall concert October 28, 29, and 30th witnessed a spectacle in Dance theatre that has never before been matched on the Jarman Stage. The variety in the structure of the production as well as the many styles, allowed the audience's enjoyment and most of all, an entertaining display of dance choreographics.

Under the direction of Dr. Betty Bowman, assisted by Miss Noelle Prince, the concert was divided into two major sections. The first half of the program was entitled a "Dance Glossary," which included performances in technique, idiom, style and development.

The opening selection, Bach and Lunge Technique, by Myra Kinch directed and staged by Dance Company President, Susann Smith, was a study in "the system of exercises that prepares the body." The Bach and Lunge Technique appeared to be a study in precision movement performed by the entire company as synchronized as a mirror with fifty images. This exercise obviously was a complete one, insofar as to sufficiently "warm up" every moveable part of the body. The music for the selection, composed by Purcell and was played by Dr. Robert Blasch and Janet Truitt on piano.

"Idiom," the second selection in the Dance Glossary, was a study in three "different types of dance that have particular characteristics." Included in this was Ballet, choreographed by Dr.

Bowman, and performed by Kris Sommers, Teresa Snelling, and Cheri DiButera. This selection in ballet, was, unfortunately, not one of the high points in the production. The dancers seemed very unsure of their movements, and the lighting was such that two of the dancers were merely silhouettes. The second dance style in "Idiom" was Jazz, choreographed by Miss Noelle Prince and performed by Sally Chewning, Carol Henry, Susann Smith and Bunny Wadsworth. This selection in Jazz was unusual in its attempt to combine a classical music style with a contemporary one. Although the dance was well performed, the break in the music (style and time-span) was most distracting to the audience. Last in the selection "Idiom" were three individual interpretations of modern dance. Choreographing their own dances were Bunny Wadsworth, Lynn Mabry, and Terri Williams. All three provided a very interesting and completely segregated view in styles of modern dance. Complementing the performers was the music, well chosen and well blended.

"Style," the third selection in the Dance Glossary, was defined in the program as "a distinctive manner of expressing an idea; a personal mode of performing." Illustrating "Style" were Susann Smith, Sandy Williams, and Tilsia Stephens. The three segments of "Rebirth," "Hoedown," and "Sophistication," were performed in their entirety at last years spring concert, and to cut the dances was to destroy them.

Certainly, these must have been excellent dances to choose for this selection (as they were in their original form), but the effect of the dances was totally lost in the "blending" and editing.

Closing the first half of the concert was a study in "development," which was the result of a class "elaboration of thematic material"—a study in four directions. Directed by Dr. Bowman and performed by the entire company, "Development" could have used just that—more development. The "cannon" effect was, unfortunately, not as effective as the opening synchronized movements of "Technique."

"The Carnival of the Animals," a musical orchestration by Saint-Saens, was recreated into modern dance form by the company. The result was abounding hilarity and enjoyment by the audience, and most of all, a presentation of dance which will not soon be forgotten.

"Lions," choreographed by Sally Chewning, and performed by Sally and Amy White, opened the "Carnival" with an abstraction of the greatest of all the Animal Kingdom. Costumed in brown and gold, Amy and Sally afforded the dominance and dignity of the Lion, and performed with accuracy and detail. The lighting at this point in the concert became much more significant to the dances, as a more three-dimensional effect was necessary to complement them. This was successfully achieved, and congratulations must go to Sara Jo Wyatt, for the audience never notices the lighting unless it is an active part of the dance.

The second selection in the "Carnival" was "Wild Asses," a hysterical presentation of all the characters in the Carnival. The audience, at this point, was bombarded with the surprise of animals running in and out of the stage area, with hardly any opportunity to recognize the animals. Presumably staged by Dr. Bowman, this, and the repetition at the end of the concert was one of the most delightful moments in the entire program.

"Elephants," choreographed and performed by Andre Harkness and Sherrie Barnard, was the most hysterical and well-planned selections in the entire program. The costuming, suspended hula-hoops with balloon pantaloons in pink

Relaxing Evening Provided

By Barter Director

By MARGARET HEMMERSLEY

The resident director of Abingdon's Barter Theatre, Mr. Owen Phillips, made a guest appearance last Wednesday evening. The appearance was presented through the cooperation of the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts. Speaking in the Wygal recital hall, Mr. Phillips recaptured some very special moments during his association with the Stuart Walker Repertoire, the Barter Theatre, and the Grove Theatre in Florida. In a casual, relaxed manner he filled his lecture with humorous anecdotes, much to the pleasure of the audience.

Growing up in Cincinnati, Mr. Phillips' life ambition was originally to be a concert pianist. In high school, however, his "moment of realization" occurred when he discovered that he actually enjoyed memorizing speeches and dialogue. Then deciding that it was theatre that he wanted to get into, he rather boldly affronted Stuart Walker of the Stuart Walker Repertoire, and declared his intentions. Mr. Phillips played six years with the Repertoire.

His first play with a spoken part in the Repertoire was Justice. He was the jury foreman who had the one and only line, "Guilty." Mr. Phillips remembered practicing the line repeatedly, debating with what expression to pronounce it, but on opening night he missed his cue. Also in Cincinnati he played in East of Suez with Florence Reed. One particular scene was a mob scene in which after Miss Reed recited the line, "China is closing in on me," and repeated it, several actors back stage were to begin to yell. Each actor had made up a line to scream so that it would produce the garbled, mob effect. Mr. Phillips' line was

"Hong Kong Mien Toy Chop Suey." During the performance Miss Reed read her line, and before she could repeat it, came from no where, "Hong Kong Mien Toy Chop Suey."

The Barter Theatre was created in 1932 by Bob Porterfield (a H-S alumni). As the name suggests, barter was exchanged for an admission ticket. Mr. Phillips' first contact with the theatre was in 1934 when a friend asked him to direct a play there. And there he remained until it closed during the second world war. The players of the Barter Theatre also toured. It was then that Mr. Phillips discovered what happens when one with a distinct southern accent attempts to portray Lady Macbeth.

For ten years, Mr. Phillips worked in Florida as the director of the Grove Theatre. During that time he was fortunate to work with such actresses as Shirley Boothe and Mae West. There he also directed two world premieres, Tennessee Williams' Period of Adjustment, and Night of the Iguana.

Mr. Phillips returned to the Barter Theatre, and is presently the resident director. Concluding his lecture, he recited the humorous scene from the comedy of manners, The Importance of Being Earnest.

Glenn Leftwich

suggested "Once you start analyzing it, it loses a certain something; I think for the stage, for me, just the spontaneity helps give it a certain energy and believability."

Glenn's interest and enthusiasm is something that can't be ignored, and it can result in nothing but positive gains for the drama department, and Longwood.

Girl's Basketball Team Chosen As Season Nears Opening

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

After much conditioning, drills, and hard work, 22 mostly very tall girls were chosen for the women's basketball team. They have been practicing since October 18 in preparation for their big season which begins on November 30 with a scrimmage against Liberty Baptist College. The regular season starts on December 3 with a J.V. game against Ferrum and a Varsity game against Old Dominion. Both these games will be at home.

JV Team Continues Its Winning Streak

By TERI DUNNIVAN

Longwood's JV volleyball team continued in its winning ways this week by defeating Bridgewater and VCU, leaving only one more match to complete their season. A win on Monday could give the JV's only one loss for the season, and a successful completion.

Tuesday afternoon the JV's met the team from Bridgewater in their last home game of the season. Mrs. Price noted that "both teams played extremely well against Bridgewater." LC was really up for the game, and it showed in their play. The match was quickly over as LC took it 15-8, 15-6.

The game against VCU was played in the same adverse conditions the varsity suffered, with the added complication of no substitutes. The team seemed somewhat preoccupied, but took the first game from VCU 15-9. Then they turned around and handed VCU the second game 15-4. In the final game, the lead exchanged hands several times until LC took control and ended the game at 15-3. Mrs. Price stated that "the JV played with their usual hustle" and came back after losing the second game.

Both teams travel to Lynchburg College on Monday for more volleyball. Varsity takes on Lynchburg and Va. Tech, while the JV's complete their season against Lynchburg. This will be the last competition of the season until state tournaments at Madison next weekend. So, congratulations to both teams for their wins, and good luck for a successful completion.

Longwood's Varsity Volleyball Team Wins Two More Matches

By TERI DUNNIVAN

The Lynchburg College Volleyball Tournament, played October 30, proved to be a successful one for Longwood's varsity team. Although they didn't win all their matches, LC played their best of the season. The three matches at Lynchburg plus action on Tuesday and Wednesday nights gave the team a full schedule this week, in which they added two more wins to the record.

Saturday's match against Lynchburg was the third this season. After dropping the first two, Longwood showed they could beat them in style this time. Coach Carolyn Price, noting that the tournament went well, said, "There was a lot of spirit and togetherness — and that's what it takes." Longwood took Lynchburg in two games, 15-6, 15-8.

In their second match of the day, Longwood started out well, beating George Mason's team 15-10. The second game proved another story, as LC lost it 15-7. And in the third game against GM, Longwood almost had them, but fell behind and dropped that one 15-9.

The final match was a rematch between Longwood and Eastern Mennonite, who had beaten LC in their first game this season. The first game didn't go well for Longwood, and EMC won 15-9. The second game, however, was a real battle in which both teams were serving game point several times. Eventually EMC grabbed the service and ended the game, and match, at 17-15. The team deserves a commendation for their success at Lynchburg, because play was continuous with little rest between matches.

Moving into the week, Longwood played a tri-match in Her Gym on Tuesday night. As it was the last home game of the season, the team came out ready to play. Again they showed the necessary togetherness, by handily defeating Bridgewater 15-6, 15-13. It was LC's first comeback win of the season, and they really did hang on in the second game to pull out the win.

The other team at the tri-match was William and Mary, who had no qualms about spiking the ball. They looked great in warm-ups, but Longwood's trouble came in the game. The trouble came in getting the service over the net, and LC's just wouldn't go. Their offensive and defensive play was sufficient, but the points come when you are serving. Longwood dropped the match 15-12, 15-7.

Wednesday night LC traveled to VCU to complete the week's play. VCU is undefeated in Virginia, and remains that way after Wednesday's game. Again the serve was the problem for Longwood, plus the adverse playing conditions in VCU's gym: the heat was unbearable and the ceiling kept falling on the floor. However, Longwood didn't play that well, and dropped the match 15-4, 15-7.

Panhellenic Headlines

Alpha Delta Pi

With formal rush scheduled so soon after Christmas, ADPis are working on skits and theme parties. This week-end we have scheduled a rush workshop to prepare our skit and put final touches on rush plans. Dr. Bland, one of our advisors, is planning a pizza party for us to conclude the weekend. Janie Alexander, one of our traveling corresponding secretaries, will be back this week for a visit and to help with our skit arrangements.

This past week was a time of friendship and preparation as Marsha Moore was initiated into the sisterhood.

Alpha Gamma Delta

Congratulations are in order to a number of Alpha Gamma Deltas. We are proud to announce and congratulate our new initiates, Pam Bessier and Robin Havens, and our new pledges, Anne Fournier, Dottie Labahn, Cheryl Parks, Debbie Potter, and Susan Pureau. We are also very happy to congratulate sisters Deane Davis and Debbie Squires on their recent engagements.

Scholarship is one of the important goals of Alpha Gamma Delta. Last week we had our annual scholarship banquet and awards were given to Donna Brooks, Deane Davis, Anne Hunt, Karen Kimbrough, and Karen Wills for the highest semester averages in their respective classes. Robin Havens received the Achievement Cup for the most improvement, and Anne Hunt and Karen Kimbrough shared the Scholarship Bracelet highest overall averages.

Altruism is another important aspect of Alpha Gamma Delta, and we sponsor a local family as a chapter project. Sunday, we decorated the Chapter Room with crepe paper and balloons and gave a Halloween party for the Watkins children. Some of the members dressed in costume and we all ran relay races, and played games after a dinner of home-made Brunswick stew. It was hard to determine whether the children or the members had the better time. Congratulations to Bea Naff and Debbie Squires on the success of their party.

Alpha Phi

Alpha Phis are off to a great start with a new chapter advisor, Mattie Beale, and Dr. Maria Silveira as our standards and education advisor.

We have six fantastic new pledges from open bidding. They are Lyn White, Linda Dodson, Melissa Crick (Crick), Kathy Carter, Debbie Smith and Robin Stark. On October 30, five people were initiated — Joy Webb, Peggy Ayler, Susan Hall, Becky Nunnally, and Pat Rideout. October 26 of initiation week, Father Dumminger of the local Catholic church came to talk to us about accepting responsibility as well as accepting people for what they are. Fun Night and a skit from the soon-to-be initiates was October 27 and also a party was held after initiation on Saturday night. A good time was had by all!

On October 10, our pledges held a very inspiring Founder's Day Program for the chapter. At a recent Longwood Lancer's horse show, Judy Moffitt won a fourth and fifth place ribbon. Last week our sister, Anne Ranson, was initiated into Pi Gamma Mu, the social science honorary. For the school year Kathy Kaczmarek was elected president of the Newman Club and Joy Webb was elected president of Wesley Choir.

Alpha Sigma Alpha

The AEA's were represented at Hampden-Sydney's Homecoming by Valerie Booker. She was sponsored by Kappa Sigma Fraternity and escorted by Rolfe Robertson.

Homecoming brought back ASA alumnae and a lot of memories.

Aphas are working on rush by having song and skit practices. We are looking forward to "Rush 1977."

Alpha Sigma Tau

Alpha Sigma Tau would like to welcome to the sorority their seven new pledges: Sheri Bain, Karen Balint, Carol Fleming, Debbie Joryner, Hope Kalivretos, Linda Kulp, and Kathy Leftwich. We are very happy to have them!

Congratulations to Ellie Kennedy, Mary Louise McGraw, and Cindy Sanders for making the basketball team. AET would also like to commend Sue Bona and Sally Chewing for their fine performance in the Dance Company concert.

The AET's had a costume party for Halloween with prizes for the best costume. Congratulations to the winners: first, Debbie Daniels; second, Cindy Sanders and Muffin Ames; third, Myra Gwyer, Mary Bruce Hazelgrove, and Ellie Kennedy.

Last Sunday the AET's had a Banquet celebrating Founder's Day. We were happy to have many returning alumni with us.

Kappa Delta

The KD's welcome their newest pledge — Ervie Harlow. We had many unexpected visitors this past weekend. Student teachers, Marge Whitley, Gayle Jones, and Nancy Milan were back and KD alumnae Kay Tucker, Mari-Bea Coles, Sandy Watkins, Ellen Anderson, and Debbie Sherbart came by to see us. It was good to see some of the old sisters.

Our Founder's Day coffee on October 23 went very well. For our money making project the KD's are selling light bulbs. If anyone needs any contact a KD or come to our chapter room on fourth floor Stubbs.

Phi Mu

The Phi Mu's have been very busy getting ready for a successful rush next semester. We have a new Phi, Beverly Coates. The weekend of October 8-9 we initiated two new sisters into our bond. They are Wanda Hirkland and Lynn Vickistrom. Terri Rickmond is a new transfer member of our chapter. She comes to us from the Phi Mu chapter at Davis and Elkins College in Elkins, West Va. We are very happy to have her with us. We will be selling doughnuts on December 4 to begin our fund raising projects for our sorority formal in April. Anyone interested in reserving a dozen may contact any sorority member or call 392-6891.

Sigma Sigma Sigma

The Sigma's have been quite busy these past two weeks. On October 20, Pam Fraser became our new pledge. At this time, we would again like to extend our congratulations and best wishes to Pam. Later in the week, our president, Marilyn Kibler, flew to New York to attend Cornell University's Homecoming. While there, she was chosen to be a little sister for Delta Epsilon fraternity. Congratulations are also extended to Leslie Olsen for her fine performance in Dance Company's presentation.

We would like to thank Alpha Gamma Delta and other sororities that participated in the keg party we held Friday, October 22. It was most enjoyable for everyone and the first attempt to promote sisterhood among the Greeks.

In keeping with the Halloween spirit, our money making project for October was the sale of caramel apples, which was most successful. Also, if you happened to have seen a lot of "strange" looking individuals (like Zoro or a pair of dice) roaming around on Halloween night, it was the Tri-Sigma's. In celebration of Halloween, we had a costume party and cookout at the cabin with Delta Sigma Phi fraternity from University of Virginia. The evening proved to be a most eventful one for all.

Zeta Tau Alpha

The Zetas have pulled through again with another winner. Congratulations go to Ann Gray on being chosen Hampden-Sydney's Homecoming Queen. Ann was sponsored by the Sigma Nu Fraternity with Jay Waddill as her escort.

We would also like to recognize those Zetas who have excelled academically. Congratulations, Beth Tomlinson and Teresa Wood. These girls were recently initiated into Pi Gamma Mu, a Social Science Honor Society. Teresa is currently working hard on the Miss Longwood Pageant, too. The Miss Longwood Pageant is also being aided by Mary K. McDaniel's help.

Zeta has always been a fun-loving sorority. We lived up to our title this past Halloween. Every Zeta dressed up in "rare form," and visited Holly Manor Nursing Home.

This past week our sorority held two of its annual events. On Thursday night, we had our Big-Sister-Little-Sister banquet. It was held at the Red Lion, and everyone had a good time just being together. On Sunday afternoon, our parents were invited to attend a banquet in their honor. Following dinner, there was a small ceremony, and a reception in the chapter room. It was a success and the parents had a good time.

Speech Class Tells All About People

By Margaret Hammersley

"What do you get when you kiss a guy?" "...Chapped lips." Such was the material presented in "All About People," a program produced last Tuesday by Nancy Anderson's oral interpretation class. A couple of high school groups turned out for the program along with a few L.C. students and professors.

Highlighting the program were several humorous readings. It is hard not to be impressed by the genuine talent of Jacqui Singleton. She read a witty, original piece entitled, "Essay on Brown." Humor was revealed not only through content, but also through expression. The opening quote was taken from another original piece of Jacqui, "That Other Rib," which explored the humorous, serious and often sad

Walk-A-Thon Scheduled For March Of Dimes

Plans were announced today for Charlottesville's first March of Dimes Walk-a-thon. Slated for Sunday, November 14, at 1:00 p.m., the 20 kilometer route will begin at Charlottesville High School and culminate on the lawn of the University of Virginia.

Coordinating the effort is the Inter-Fraternity Council (IFC) at the University. Assisting the IFC is the Inter-Sorority Council, the Charlottesville and Albemarle Jaycees, some eighteen area churches and nine other civic organizations, the nurses at the University Hospital, and numerous other school and University groups.

Local March of Dimes funds are earmarked for the Neo-natal Care Unit at the University Hospital. The Neo-natal Care Unit is an ambulance specially designed and equipped to carry and treat premature and sick infants.

A regular ambulance is designed and equipped for use by adults, so the bulk of its equipment is virtually useless for the treatment of babies. Because the Charlottesville-Albemarle Rescue Squad received nearly 200 calls last year for transportation of sick infants, the University Hospital, the March of Dimes, and the IFC have made the acquisition of the Neo-natal Care Unit a top priority.

The Inter-Fraternity Council has set a goal of $20,000 for the Walk-a-thon. If attained, this will make the walk the largest single event fund raising effort in recent years. This will also mean an effective donation of $16,000 to the Unit's $45,000 total cost. "Because 70 per cent of all the babies who will use the Neo-natal Care Unit are from all over central and western Virginia (outside Charlottesville and Albemarle County), and because the women at Longwood College are fairly close to many of the fraternity men at the University, we are hoping that you young ladies might want to help us in this most worthwhile endeavor," said Walk Coordinator Don Smith.

"The Walk-A-Thon effort is going rather well here, with all of the sororities participating," said Panhellenic Councils President Sharon Cadmus.

"All of the sororities are competing against each other for sponsors. The top sorority will win a keg," stated Sharon. "Panhellenic plans to set up a booth in the near future to take donations and sponsors. All the sororities need sponsors and walkers so we plan to solicit independents and townspeople," added Sharon.

Anyone wishing further information on the Walk-A-Thon may contact any sorority member.

Dance Performance

allowed the dancers freedom of movement, and equally allowed the audience much laughter. The music, with the undertone of bass throughout, was the elephant abstraction, which the dancers took advantage of in every way.

Laura Bailey, choreographer for "Tortoisoes," and dancers Teresa Snelling, Sue Bailey and Laura Bailey, deserve praise for their performance of this dance with rushed music and slow pace. All of their gestures and simple costuming made them appear to be the tortoisoes they were depicting.

"Aquarium," choreographed by Tilsia Stephens, and performed by Mary Alice Appleman, Gail Parsons, Jackie Page, and Tilsia Stephens, was a most realistic view into the oversized fishbowl. The costuming, presumably to symbolize angel, blue and gold fish, was unusual in it's effect, and with the special lighting effects, both complimented each other. The dance itself provided solo's, duets, and ensemble performing which was very calming in it's performance.

The bird selection, "Aviary," choreographed by Sandy Williams and performed by Sandy, Susan Clift, Lynn Mabry, Terrell Jones, and Susann Smith, will be most remembered for Susann's performance of the hawk, whose expression was a caricature almost mime-like.

The carnival selection entitled "Swans" was definitely the most delicate and moving one in the program. Choreographer Sharon Cadmus was obviously aware of the beauty of the Swan, and her dancers, Leslie Olsen, Petie Grigg, Kris Sommers and Sharon herself, all costumed in white with chiffon ballet skirts were the epitome of beautiful. Sharon's swan-death at the end of the dance was the most graceful of death's and is now in the file of Longwood's dance memorabilia.

"Pianists," choreographed and performed by Terri Williams and Carol Henry was delightful in comic dance theatre. Although the costumes were more penguin-like than not, the dance was well performed.

Closing the Carnival was "Fossils," a light and snappy selection choreographed by Bunny Wadsworth and performed by Bunny, Sherrie Barnard, Cheri DeButeri, and Sue Bona.

The finale, where the "Wild Ases" again recreated the bombardment of dancers and animals, and also a well stage revival of the technique illustrated in the opening of the program reiterated the preparation for the concert, which was followed by a standing ovation Saturday night, and three curtain calls which were more than well deserved. Again, this production was a delight in dance theatre and will not soon be forgotten by anyone who witnessed it.

aspects of women and love. Other notable pieces in the humorous vein were "Sex Is Not So Sexy Anymore," read by Allie Chaffin; and "Cassanova Junior Grade," read by Averett Jones.

On a more serious note, Suzann Smith read "The Addict." In addition to her reading, the use of appropriately metered background music made for an effective performance. Glenn Leftwich recited a portion of The Glass Menagerie with brilliant expression. Also included in the program were several original poems.

Produced in the Studio Theatre, there seemed more audience contact than had it been on a larger stage, and a feeling of relaxation for both the audience and the readers. The intensities of the lighting were quite effective in creating mood.

Major-Minor Elections Dec. 2 — Don't Gripe If You Don't Vote

By BONNIE GHEEN

Often some challenge or problem can be met and solved only by using the highest caliber of thinking that we can marshal. This involves looking at the appearances and coming to conclusions based on known premises. However, there is the higher dimension that we often overlook. We need to let the mind work free from bias of precedent or methods used in the past. We should learn to let our minds connect with the free-flowing intelligence available to us. This is a sound, practical way to find new, creative solutions.

Ralph Rhea

On December 2, 1976 the student body will be voting for those candidates they think will best represent them on Legislative Board, Judicial Board, Residence Board, Student Union, and the Intramural Athletic Association. The few students who stepped forward to take on the challenge of running for an office will be looking to the students for support and ultimately for their vote.

Students can find out who the candidates are and why they are running by reading the request-to-run forms posted in the New Smoker. Those running for an office took the time to fill out the forms so please take the time to read them. Campaign speeches will take place on November 30, 1976 in the Gold Room of Lankford. Candidates for chairman and vice-chairman will give a speech and those running for minor offices will be introduced. Following the speeches students will have the opportunity to question the candidates.

In the past elections those candidates running for chairman and losing have had the option of dropping down and running for the vice-chairman position. Elections Committee has amended its constitution so that those candidates running for chairman and losing will not be able to drop down to the vice-chairman slot unless the position is vacant. Elections Committee felt those running for chairman had an unfair advantage over other Candidates who are not allowed to run for any other position once they lose. Also, it did not seem fair to those candidates that chose to run in the vice-chairman position from the beginning.

Those students not running for an office can still get involved in Student Government by running for a representative. Four students from the sophomore, junior, and senior class are elected to Judicial Board. There is one day student representative. Any student interested in becoming a representative should attend the class meeting during the week of November 29, 1976.

Elections are the way to get people in office that are going to represent you the students. If you do not attend the campaign speeches to find out what the candidates views are and if you don't vote then you should not spend the next year complaining about everything that is wrong with the school. This is your chance to try and change all those things you think should be changed. The only way to bring about any kind of change is to seek out those candidates who are also interested in a change. Those members of the student body who do not take the time to find out what elections are about are the ones who are going to suffer the most in the upcoming year. This is your chance to do something about what goes on in the school. Don't let it be just another event at Longwood but rather something that is going to bring about good results for the school.

Jewelry And Metalsmithing Exhibit Comprehensive And Naturalistic

By SHARON CONNOR

The art of metalsmithing and jewelry making is on display in the Bedford Gallery through November 19th. This display belongs to Mark Baldridge, a faculty member of the Longwood Art Department who teaches crafts, metals, design, jewelry, and metalsmithing.

Mr. Baldridge's educational background in art started at the State University College at Buffalo where he attained a B.S. in art education. Then he continued on to earn a M.F.A. in metalsmithing and jewelry at Cranbrook Academy of Art. He has attended workshops at other institutions and has entered many art shows where his exhibitions have gained much recognition.

Nature influences many of Mr. Baldridge's ideas and concepts of art. He does not duplicate forms found in nature, but strives to create beautiful shapes in metal. He feels that often, like nature, his creations do not lend themselves to the human touch. Mr. Baldridge also feels that metal is the best material to execute his forms and ideas that possess him. "Metal, like any material, possesses certain inherent qualities—if it is strong and durable, and therefore can be elongated into very elegant forms that would be impossible to execute in other media. Unlike most materials, it can be polished to a very smooth and beautiful reflection that has appealed to man since the beginning of time." He finds metal extremely frustrating at times, but because of its inherent qualities, believes metal to be the only material through which forms, ideas, and expression can be created.

By sitting down in front of a sketch pad, Mr. Baldridge can begin to draw, creating an idea for metal design. For each design that is actually created in metal, there remains between one and two hundred that are never utilized. All of his work in the exhibition is original and has been worked on over a span of 13 years.

Two chess sets complete with inlaid and carved boards, wine cups, salad sets, champagne goblets, sterling and rosewood sculptures, a coffee server, salt and pepper shakers, bracelets, rings, pins and pendants are included in this visual testimony of the artist-craftsman's versatility.

Preliminary design drawings from Baldridge's sketchbook are also featured. Baldridge states that he has "attempted to make the exhibit as comprehensive as possible, beginning with the initial ideas and designs, explaining the technical aspects of creation, displaying some of the tools of the trade, and finally exhibiting some of the finished objects."

The capstone of the exhibit, in terms of the number of man-hours involved, is the "Nature's Imperial Garden" chess set—sterling chess pieces on an ornately carved rosewood board inlaid with walnut and sumac, mounted on a carved walnut base.

Baldridge estimates that he spent 1900 to 2000 hours on the board alone, with some 100 hours invested in each chess piece. This work will be used for exhibition only. It is scheduled to go next to Phenix, Arizona, and then to Seattle, Washington, for the Goldsmith's conference.

The grandeur of the chess set is balanced by the fluid beauty of the sterling and rosewood sculptures and the intricacy of the jewelry pieces, some mounted with sapphires, citrine, tanzanite, opal, and other stones.

Baldridge purchases most of his raw materials—gold, sterling, woods, stones—from New York and Michigan. The sumac used in his chess boards, however, came from a tree cut from his father's land in New York.

One display case in the gallery contains objects created during the period from 1963 to 1969. Baldridge states that they are included "to document the changes which occurred in this metalsmith's many years of working. These early pieces are generally small, two-dimensional, and aesthetically and technically simple."

Flu Vaccination

The regular "flu shots" for this year will be given on Wednesday, November 17, and Thursday, November 18, in the College Infirmary to any student, faculty or staff member who wishes to be vaccinated. Hours: 8:00 a.m. to 12 noon and 4:00 p.m. to 6:00 p.m. Charge: $1.00 per person. Anyone who has had the swine flu vaccination should wait at least two weeks before having the regular flu shot. Call 392-9331 if you have any questions. There will be an opportunity to have the shots in December if you cannot do it at the times scheduled.

Swine Flu Vaccination

The U. S. Public Health Office will administer the swine flu vaccine at the scheduled time at the local public health office in Farmville. Members of the student body may go to the public health office between the hours of 1:00 and 3:00 p.m. on any Wednesday to have the swine flu vaccination.

Another Challenge

Each meeting of the Board of Visitors brings an opportunity to raise questions and suggestions concerning the phases of college life. The concern of many, however, is that suggestions often go unheeded. What real purpose does it serve for students to form committees, research, gather input, and propose changes, when many of these changes are stifled as they go through the various channels? Student members of Legislative, Residence, and Judicial Boards carefully went through the handbook last year and suggested changes and deletions. Did any of these changes actually appear? A description of penalties appears in a listing of general terms; both Residence and Judicial Boards requested a separate listing of their penalties in their specific sections. Many regulations are outdated and unheeded and were deleted in the boards' revisions. Yet most still appear in the final handbook. What good does it do for students to gather input and propose what the student body wants? There is good communication between the boards and the administration. But communication and a sincere working together are two different ideas. It serves no purpose to speak for student involvement when ideas are overruled. Final ratification of open house hours was approved by students and Legislative Board early this semester. Has final approval been given yet? Granted, the Board of Visitors must vote on it, but is it necessary to wait until the last minute to prepare the proposal? Several ideas that have been suggested by students and considered worthy of being looked into by the boards have suddenly been dropped. Promises of "we're looking into it" are abundant at encounters with the administration, whether it be at a board meeting or a press conference. It was hoped last spring by the Student Activities Fees Committee that they would be given partial control over the contingency reserve. To date, no definite answer has been given as to the possibility of this. Varying answers are given to questions, and there seems to be a lack of simple, straight answers.

Student-administrative communication is a strong point on this campus. The potentials could be doubled if this communication was straight-forward and based on trust. The student body is not radical. It is primarily apathetic. The few who are openly involved ask questions to benefit the college, not to trick it or trap it into saying something it shouldn't. Coeducation has brought new ideas out into the open, but few changes have been proposed because of the feeling of why bother. Why should a few students stick their necks out and push for change and press for answers when the student body is not concerned enough to find out the questions? Perhaps if a genuine relationship were to develop between the students and administration, then attempts to bring change would not seem so futile. There are students willing to develop this relationship.

Judicial Board Search Procedures Business-Like And Warranted

By RUTH BOURNE

Over the past few weeks concern has been raised by students about the workings of the Judicial Board, specifically search procedures. It is the wish of the Board to clear up this matter.

In the event that a preliminary investigation warrants a search, permission must be granted by the President of the College. Before the President will grant this type of permission, he is aware of the facts brought out through a preliminary investigation. Hearsay evidence is not enough to warrant a search.

The search is conducted by the Chairman and Vice-Chairman only after special permission has been granted. The student who's room is being searched during the informal investigation is always extended the courtesy of knowing who is searching his room and the specific reason for the search. He also has the right to remain present during this time.

All proceedings of the Judicial Board are thorough and carried out in a business like manner. The student is always considered innocent until proven guilty.

The Judicial Board is a branch of the Student Government and is run by elected officers and members. If you have any suggestions for changes become involved with the Student Government and voice your opinions. Change comes through hard work and your support.

If you have questions concerning the Judicial Board contact the Chairman or the Vice-Chairman. The Judicial Board challenges you to become involved.

Legislative Board Discussions

A controversial issue was decided at Legislative Board meeting, November 8. After discussion and deliberation, the board voted to not allow a candidate who lost the chairmanship of a board in Major-Minor elections to drop to run for the office of vice chairman, unless that office is unfilled.

In other action at the meeting, Stuff-the-Bus tickets were passed out and members listened to representatives of both a men's and women's group interested in starting a fraternity and sorority, respectively, here on campus. Student Government has nothing to do with the procedures of fraternities or sororities, however, so no action was taken in respect to that discussion.

Stuff-The-Bus For Scholarship Fund

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS
All aboard the Longwood Golf Bus to answer the questions: How many people can you actually stuff into a bus? The Student Government Association is sponsoring the Stuff-the-Bus Contest to be held Nov. 16 (today), after birthday dinner. Students, faculty members, administration, and Student Government Board members will file onto the bus until it is full to the brim. Whoever has guessed the right number will win a rocking chair. In order to register your guess, (or guesses) a ticket (50 cents) must be bought and filled out. Any Student Government Board member has the tickets (Legislative, Judicial or Residence Board member).

All money raised in the contest will be given to the Herbert R. Blackwell Scholarship fund. The Blackwell Scholarship is awarded in the spring to a freshman who has shown unusual academic achievement.

So come on out after birthday dinner on November 16, buy a ticket, guess how many people can be squeezed into the golf bus and have a good time watching the results.

Placement Figures Near Completion

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS
"The 1976 Placement Report is as good as last year's," says Nikki Fallis, Director of Placement for Longwood. Ms. Fallis said that all 422 graduates have been contacted by the Placement Office and the report is in the final stages of completion for the November Board of Visitors meeting. The full report will be printed in The Rotunda after the Board of Visitors meeting.

Blue Roses And Suffering Characterize 'Glass Menagerie'

By WILLIAM C. WOODS

"When you look at a work of delicately-spun glass," Tennessee Williams has remarked, "you think of two things: how beautiful it is, and how easily it can be broken." The Glass Menagerie is, and is about, such looking and such work. Last week's production of it by the Longwood Players obeyed the author to a T—making it beautiful, and breaking it a little.

The thing is quintessential Williams: a minatory father, grown most potent in his passing, cripples a deserted wife, whose sunny memories defeat a lifeless daughter and tangle up the will of a "poetic" son. A gentleman caller fetched from the mother's past to marry the daughter's future may save them all... but he has a lady of his own, moreover lives as deep in memory as the rest. No exit. The caller, bluff and brainless, well-intentioned, underlines Laura's isolation, breaking the glass unicorn's horn only to fix it more firmly to her own forehead. Tom, the brother, curses but can escape; Amanda lives in recollection thick as day. But Laura, whose lameness is mainly a metaphor for her aloneness, has nowhere to go except to the dark at the top of the fire escape, once she's blown out her candles in answer to her bedeviled absent brother's prayer. It's all a bit pat, but it's pretty.

Like much of Williams' much worked-over work, The Glass Menagerie has an interesting history. Its origins are to be found in his short story, "Portrait of a Girl in Glass," as well as in a film script, "The Gentleman Caller," which MGM rejected in the early 40's when Williams was unhappily a contract writer there. Its roots, of course, are so deep in the playwright's life that only high art could fully cut the bonds that link family to character and history to theatrical event. Williams suffered Wingfield's shoe-store servitude in St. Louis. His own sister Rose went mad, collected glass. His father could have sat for the absent parent. His mother wrote a book to deny she was-is Amanda.

All this is worth noting, because autobiography is a young writer's worst vice, the assumption that his sufferings are worth recording his besetting vanity. Williams took the dare and won. So said the New York Drama Critics Circle Award of 1945. So has said the received wisdom of 30 years.

The play, then, is an American classic—stifle a yawn. Time has, in a way, been as unkind to it as it has been true to time's sewer. memory. The thumbprints of apprenticeship are all over this little play: the forced poetry of the prose, the unflagging faithfulness to undigested autobiography. Too, Williams' later work, with its convoy of violence and void, has busted up Laura's little animals a bit, as though to suggest that grief shrunk to the size of four cold-water walls is not emotion enough on which to found a major reputation.

And yet. The Glass Menagerie hangs on, fodder for small theater groups (few actors, single set), both footnote and keynote to a brave career. Few of Williams' other plays show his distrust of audiences or his reliance on actors more clearly; few show as quickly the core of caring and decency that give his work its claim on future fortune.

The distrust is made clear in his production notes, which call for a screen where words and images ("blue roses" and blue roses, say?) are to be flashed, presumably to remind an audience that it has been awakened to a dream. This device is rarely used in performance; Longwood correctly skipped it.

The importance of the actors is made clear in the play itself. The language is coy and pedestrian, but full of truth; thus Williams repays hardworking actors with a chance to give his play a majesty the text only outlines. (Indeed, it may be that he is our greatest playwright because he never offers more than half a play; he knows he theater has many mouths to feed.)

Unfortunately, the acting in this production was not often equal to the play. Glenn Leftwich—as narrator, brother, and son—read his role with an athletic authority that ran precisely counter to its requirements: the psychic stresses Tom Williams built into Tom Wingfield, poet on the lam, need to be expressed with neurotic delicacy, not Oedipal truculence. On the other hand, Leftwich was funny and convincing in his battles with his mother—the play's best role, given to this production's best performer, Patti Carr, the only member of the cast whose work consisted of more than one dimension.

Amanda is a difficult, rewarding character—a wholly insensitive woman whose continuing crime is to drown her daughter in her own flirtatious past. Yet she has tenacity, dignity, a passion for family that terrorizes her son and doubtless drove away her husband. Her fussiness crumbles only under the force of her own vision of romance, the "plantation life" she was bred for and denied. She is a type, but more, a personality. Williams wrote her with anger and kindness, and Carr played her with a full understanding.

The part of Laura, while pivotal, is less demanding; Bene Blake was adequate in it, and sometimes touching. Alan Boone, as the gentleman caller, offered a properly vulgar performance, but somebody should have told him that shipping clerks in St. Louis in 1945 didn't wear long hair and sideburns, not even in a dream.

Patton Lockwood's direction of the play was adroit and even-handed. Benjamin Emerson's setting and lighting, and Trish Howland's costumes, were equally appropriate.

The only really false note in the production came from the strange intrusion of a song written especially for it by Jacqui Singleton, a routinely "pretty" number that sounded like an outtake from a Barbara Striesand movie. Williams' script profits from the ambient sound of period melodies; it doesn't call to have a hole hacked in it, all action senselessly stopped to make room for a few bars of 70's sentimentality.

In the end, this offering fell somewhat short of the Longwood Players' funky, exuberant reading of Twelfth Night earlier this year; in fairness, it's a more demanding play, and if the players gave more a recollection than a finished performance, who will call that the worst way to remember a meditation on memory? Blue roses are in order to the cast and crew for their determined struggle with it.

Patron Saint Joan Of Arc — Respected Or Demeaned

By DEBBIE MOUL

She loved religion. She loved war. She loved France. She loved humanity. She had a reverent soul. She was the seventeen year old peasant girl of Domremy who led the French army into battle with the intention of driving the English from France and of obtaining the crown for it's rightful owner, the Dauphin King. She succeeded. She was Joan of Arc.

In searching for a gift that would embody these ideals of leadership, the Joan Circle, Alpha Delta Rho, finally selected the equestrian statue by Anne Hyatt Huntington, an honorary member of the sorority.

Attributing to the fact that bronze was so very expensive, the statue was given as a gift to Longwood College by the Gorham Company, publishers of the statue, and by Mrs. Huntington's husband, Archer Milton Huntington. In April of 1927, the statue was accepted by Dr. Jarman and by members of Alpha Delta Rho and thus placed on the colonnade in front of the college.

Contrary to popular belief, there exists only three original, yet large, statues of this form in the world; one in France; one on Riverside Drive; and one in Mrs. Huntington's native state. Longwood College possesses a mere four-foot copy of this statue.

It has been established that we students of Longwood College are supposed to love the equestrian statue of Joan of Arc and look up to it as embodying the ideals of life and leadership. Yet, somehow, it seems difficult to respect or idolize a statue covered with dust and dirt. If Joan of Arc plays such an important role in this particular establishment, then why hasn't there been some action taken by the administration to clear away the cobwebs that flow from her posterior to the saddle and those in her crotch?

Halloween night added the final touch when Joan of Arc was seen riding on to victory with a pumpkin on her head. Tsk! Tsk! Where is the respect?

BISEXUAL/HOMOSEXUAL:

What Is It And Why Is It

A large percentage of gossip on Longwood's campus concerns homosexuality—not necessarily what constitutes a homosexual or why a person chooses homosexuality but... who is and who isn't. Unfortunately for some, we will not be dealing with who is and who isn't, but will hopefully explain homosexuality so that people will understand it and the homosexual better.

First, what is a homosexual? According to Female and Male "Homosexuals are individuals whose sexual attraction is to members of the same sex and whose pleasures in the everyday aspects of living are enchanted by sharing them with a member of the same sex. They still remain either female and regard their partners as female, or male and regard their partners as male." This differs from bisexuals in that (again Female and Male) "bisexual individuals enjoy close emotional relationships with either sex, with crushes, infatuations, and love, which may or may not lead to pleasurable physical sexuality, depending on the mutuality of the feeling. There are a number of individuals who, over the years, grow into or out of a period of bisexuality, or who, because of societal pressures and a desire for personal, emotional stability discard bisexuality for either homosexuality or heterosexuality as a permanent life style."

There is no single cause of homosexuality. One is born with neither homosexual or heterosexual tendencies, but with the capacity to respond sexually. Personal experiences are the determinants. Family socialization has perhaps been over-emphasized as a cause of homosexuality. While it is an important factor in determining a person's sexual preference, it is not the single cause. Parents have limited control over the sexual outcome of their children. Other forces outside the home, such as experiences with peers also aids in homosexuality. If a person has meaningful, overt homosexual play during or just prior to adolescence, he or she is more likely to be homosexual. According to Female and Male "Most overt homosexuality among males occurs between puberty and age 16; most of the rest occurs before age 25. That is, the incidence itself of one or more acts occurs pretty much between the ages of 12 to 13 and 25. But the great majority of these acts do not lead either partner to become steady homosexuals. Among females, the incidence is not nearly so confined to early adolescence, but is spread rather evenly until age 30." In essence, homosexuals are homosexual because they are more attracted to members of their own sex.

Although many people experiment with homosexuality, the number of predominant homosexuals is surprisingly small. Between one-quarter and one-third of adult males of college background have had at least one overt homosexual experience, however only 4 percent of college educated white adult males are predominately homosexual. Between 15 to 30 percent of unmarried college educated females have had homosexual relationships, however the number of predominantly homosexual females in the United States is between 1 and 2 per cent.

One of the biggest problems the homosexuals must face (besides the fact that their behavior is considered socially unacceptable) is stereotyping. Male homosexuals are imagined to be "feminine" in appearance and behavior, while lesbians are pictured as very masculine in behavior and appearance... "bull dykes". Masculine-Feminine or Human states that, "Queens and 'bull dykes' do exist, but they comprise a relatively small, if conspicuous, proportion of practicing homosexuals. What possible reason would they have for being attracted to an impersonator of the opposite sex rather than a member of it? From the perspective of a sex role orientation, homosexuals are drawn to members of their own sex because they find their behavior more appealing, and/or they reject those of the opposite gender because the behaviors and attitudes characteristic of that sex are in some way offensive or repellent to them."

In comparing male homosexuality to lesbianism it is safe to generalize that female relationships evolve more from the emotions and male relationships from the physical. "Females become lesbians primarily because they find they develop more meaningful emotional attachments to other females than to males, and such relationships eventually come to be expressed in sexual terms. Unlike lesbians, male homosexuals seem to be considerably less frequently involved in long term, loving dyad. Their sexual encounters, like those of 'straight' males, are likely to be many, fleeting, and exploitative. The one night stand resulting from a pick up at a gay bar, or what one author referred to as a 'market mentality,' is far more typical of male than female homosexuals. In general their behavior reflects the masculine emphasis on sex divorced from emotional commitment; sex used for status, dominance, and so forth." (Masculine-Feminine or Human?)

Lesbianism, female homosexuality, is of major concern to Longwood (as Longwood is still a predominantly female college), and shall be the main concern of this article henceforth. "In our society (Masculine-Feminine or Human?) males have considerably more prestige, power and freedom than females. It is likely that given the higher prestige of the masculine role, homosexuality and sissiness may appear as a kind of betrayal, while lesbianism and tomboyishness may appear as more or less understandable imitations of a superior status role. This would help to explain the far greater social antipathy to the former than the latter." While male homosexuality evokes disdain, lesbianism evokes pity and a form of understanding—although this understanding does not mean acceptance.

The lesbian, like the male homosexual, has a choice of either hiding her feelings, or openly acknowledging them and suffering the consequences. In Our Bodies, Ourselves, a group of lesbians explained their situation like this: "Lesbianism is not a physical characteristic—unlike the quality of being black or being a woman. So most of us have the choice either to be invisible, by passing as straight, or to be open. If we decide to be openly gay we often become vulnerable to physical and psychological harassment. We're labeled sick, sometimes kept away from kids, maybe fired from our jobs. If we keep our gayness hidden we are constantly subjected to the insults and embarrassment of being assumed to be heterosexual: gynecologists want us to use birth control, friends want to 'set us up' with boys, men make passes at us. More important, our lives often become filled with the fear that others will find out. We may be blackmailed for money if we have it, for favors and information if we don't."

Job discrimination, which is a problem for all women is a big problem for lesbians. Since gay women have no male supporter, they are very dependent on their jobs. Lesbians are faced with double discrimination if they are openly gay. They are usually the last to be hired and the first to be fired.

In a society where a woman's main concern is catching a man, people have a difficult time accepting the fact that a woman may make an alternate choice. To willingly live without the mental and physical companionship of a man is incomprehensible. The lesbian, also destroys the myth that a woman needs a man. Woman in Sexist Society states "Lesbians are the women who potentially can demonstrate life outside the male power structure that dominates marriage as well as every other aspect of our culture."

As attitudes towards human sexuality change, so do the attitudes towards homosexuality. "While homosexuality (Female and Male) is still labeled as criminal behavior in many states, there appears to be an emerging consensus that this form of sexual behavior is no more the law's business than is other sexual behavior among consenting adults... The increasing willingness of people to identify themselves as homosexuals, suggests that the sanctions and social control mechanisms against homosexuality are rapidly breaking down, just as they are breaking down or have broken down in other areas of sexual behavior." Tangible proof of this is in the fact that psychiatrists and sociologists no longer label homosexuality as a form of mental disorder but as a deviation from the norm.

The rise of homosexuality and bisexuality has caused us, not only to re-evaluate our attitudes towards that particular subject, but towards human sexuality in general. We are now free to recognize that the forms of sexual love, or the gender, "do not matter when compared to the dignity of persons and their capacity for trust".

June

It just happened one afternoon
As we were walking home posters in hand on our way to day care for Jesse and Raphael

"Do you think you'll ever have children?"
she asked me

My mind swelled with memories of my mother asking when I wanted to settle down and have a family memories of teaching retarded children memories of wanting a baby so he'd stay with me memories of needing a child to keep the loneliness away
Thinking of my sister alone with her son
Thinking of now Thinking of who I have become of whom I live with and whom I love Thinking of loving women of loving her (June)

"Do you think you'll ever have children?" she asked me
I felt the dam breaking flooding my body and mind with warm liquid energy alive and real

HIS Story

This interview was conducted with a student of a college in Maryland. The person interviewed is a male age 20. He has known of his bisexual tendencies since high school.

DO YOU CONSIDER YOURSELF BISEXUAL OR HOMOSEXUAL?

"Bisexual, because I'm attracted to both sexes, but it really depends on the person.

WHEN DID YOU DISCOVER YOU WERE BISEXUAL?

High school.

HAVE YOU HAD RELATIONSHIPS WITH BOTH SEXES?

Yes.

ARE YOU INVOLVED IN A RELATIONSHIP WITH A MALE AT THIS TIME?

Yes.

DO YOU HAVE ANY GUILT FEELINGS ABOUT THE RELATIONSHIP?

No.

DO YOU GO ALONG WITH THE BLATANT HOMOSEXUAL ACTIVITIES, SUCH AS "GAY BARS," THE "GAY LIBERATION," ETC.?

Yes. It's not a product of the gay world, it's a product of society's pressures. There is little or no difference between gay bars and straight ones except for biological sex of clientel.

DO YOU FREQUENT GAY BARS?

Yes.

DO YOU BELIEVE IN HOMOSEXUAL MARRIAGES?

Yes. However, it would not include the typical marital goals. It would include a mutual sharing of responsibilities.

DO YOU FORSEE THAT TYPE OF FUTURE FOR YOURSELF?

No. I'm not looking for any specific future.

DO YOU SEE THE POSSIBILITY OF HETEROSEXUAL RELATIONSHIPS IN THE FUTURE?

Oh, sure! It's possible.

ARE THERE ANY ADVANTAGES IN HAVING HOMOSEXUAL RELATIONSHIPS?

Yes. There are no pressures or possibility of pregnancy. There was that pressure with a past relationship with a woman and that was one of the major reasons for the break-up.

DO YOU FEEL THAT MALE HOMOSEXUALS ARE CONCERNED MORE WITH THE PHYSICAL NATURE OF THE RELATIONSHIPS AND FEMALES THE EMOTIONAL?

Ideally, I would like to say, no; but from my experiences men are definitely more likely to be out for "one night stands" and women are more for emotional experiences.

DOES YOUR FAMILY KNOW?

Yes, but they totally ignore it. It's assumed it'll go away. I don't hide it from my family; I just don't volunteer information.

DO YOU THINK IT'LL EVER BE LEGALIZED?

Yes. That also includes repeal of sodomy laws, which involves both homosexuals and heterosexuals. But that doesn't mean society will accept it. America's too Puritanistic.

A REVOLUTION

HER Story

This interview was held with a Longwood student. The person interviewed is female and 20 years of age.

DO YOU CONSIDER YOURSELF HOMOSEXUAL OR BISEXUAL?

"I hate classifying things — bisexual, I guess. I'm attracted to both sexes."

HAVE YOU EVER HAD A RELATIONSHIP WITH A MAN?

Yes, but not a sexual relationship.

HAVE YOU EVER HAD A RELATIONSHIP WITH A WOMAN?

Yes.

WAS IT SEXUAL?

At times.

HAVE YOU HAD A HOMOSEXUAL RELATIONSHIP WITH MORE THAN ONE PERSON?

No.

WHEN DID THIS RELATIONSHIP BEGIN?

Sophomore year.

DID YOU HAVE GUILT FEELINGS?

No. If it's a relationship based on love — I don't see why there should be any guilt feelings.

DID THE FACT THAT YOU WERE AT AN ALL-GIRL SCHOOL INFLUENCE YOU?

Possibly. I think there's a lot of environmental influences.

ARE YOU STILL HAVING THIS RELATIONSHIP?

Yes.

COULD YOU HAVE A HETEROSEXUAL RELATIONSHIP NOW?

No. Its not that I'm not attracted to men, its because I'm happy the way I am. The reason I wouldn't go back is because I'm not ready to end this relationship.

DO YOU CONSIDER THIS A LASTING RELATIONSHIP?

Yes. I wouldn't be in it if it wasn't.

WHAT PROBLEMS DO YOU FORSEE IN THE FUTURE?

Social pressures — but there's nothing that can't be coped with.

DO YOU CONCEAL IT?

Yes. A lot of my friends could be hurt. If my family were to find out they couldn't accept it. Friends too, but it's more family. Really, it's nobody's business — it's private!

DO YOU BELIEVE IN BLATENT HOMOSEXUALITY? GAY BARS, GAY LIBERATION MOVEMENT, ETC.

No. I don't think it belongs in public. I don't need the sense of security of being in a group that will socially accept it. It's cheaper to buy drinks in the liquor store anyway.

DO YOU BELIEVE IN HOMOSEXUAL MARRIAGES?

I believe two people can commit themselves in the eyes of God. Personally I feel that He thinks it's all right. Homosexuals aren't going to be judged by God as a group — they'll be judged individually.

HOW MANY PEOPLE DO YOU THINK ARE GAY AT LONGWOOD?

40-50 per cent. A lot of people are overtly homosexual on this campus. I think a lot more people have entered into homosexual relationships but have not felt the need to make them public.

DO YOU FEEL THAT SEX PLAYS AN IMPORTANT ROLE IN A HOMOSEXUAL RELATIONSHIP?

The public looks at it that way. I can't speak for anybody else's relationship — but to me sex is the last thing you should build a relationship on.

DO YOU ENJOY THE SEXUAL PART?

Yeah — but I would also do without it. I don't think you can single out the sexual aspect because its just one facet of the whole relationship.

ARE THERE ANY ADVANTAGES OVER HAVING A HOMOSEXUAL RELATIONSHIP?

No.

IF YOU HAD THE CHANCE TO DO IT ALL AGAIN, WHERE WOULD YOU BE?

I'd be where I am. I'm happy.

DO YOU THINK IT WILL EVER BE LEGALIZED?

There is a general movement — in politics too — to do away with moral standards when it affects two consenting adults with the exception of adultery. It depends now on persons own moral values and conscience. I'd like to see it legalized, but it really doesn't matter.

IS YOUR RELATIONSHIP A COMMITTED ONE?

Yes. A union between two people based on love — and believing their right is a marriage — marriage means a union.

Within the United States thirty-two states have laws concerning homosexuality, sodomy, and fornication. Eighteen states have removed such laws from the books. Five states will be considering repealing such laws in the next year.

In 1973 the Michigan Court of Appeals found that the home life of two lesbian mothers did not interfere with the "proper upbringing" of their children. In the last year a lesbian mother in Texas lost custody of her children because of her sexual tendencies.

Last spring the United States Supreme Court upheld Virginia's sodomy laws.

At present, the National Gay Task Force is providing a considerable lobbying force to put through an amendment to the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to include homosexuals.

I know not why you paint for yourself such false portraits but I will not let you throw a veil over my masterpiece. I am Gay. I am your sister-brother. I grew up with you, we went to the same schools and shared the same piece of candy. You have laughed with me, cried with me, you have accepted me as your friend. I am your mother-father, I have cared for you, and loved you as you have loved me. You have accepted me as an extension of all people just as you have accepted yourself. Yet, when I dare to acknowledge to you my true self, you become judge, jury and guilty verdict all in one. Yes, I am guilty, I'm guilty of honesty and a very real kind of love. What's the penalty, I'll gladly accept it. But you no longer see me, only the stereotypes society has placed upon me. You see only the "I AM NOT", and not that "I AM".

I refuse to let you deny me my right to sexual preference, my right to choose who I may love. Love is the element involved here. To love another being (regardless of sex), as I love myself isn't to be damned, but to come to terms with my own identity as a very real existence.

We, the gay people in confidence that we build a more perfect unity, must rise up and be heard. We must become a part of the whole. We have allowed ourselves to be oppressed by "straights" into a world unbearable by even the strongest of men. We must come out of the closets into the streets, to uphold a flag in ourselves for liberty, and eliminate the malice brought upon us.

Be determined to stand up and be heard, to announce a new revolution with a whole new generation of revolutionaries. Remember that we have a purpose, and let our purpose find us as revolutionaries in a quest for moral justice.

We the people (and I emphasize we) must search for all the knowledge we can. We must refuse to let the illiteracy of others oppress us, and overcome the blinders that won't let others see that we are beautiful.

To gain this security we must seek fully to be ourselves, only to gain the rights and freedom that was ours from birth. We must not be dominated by a society so set in its ways as to deny that we are people too. We must bring about a change — We The People — The Gay People.

Sexual Preference Causes Problems

In mid-September Bob Elkins, a University of Virginia student, was called into the office of the president, Frank L. Hereford. The purpose of the meeting involved Mr. Elkins' position as a resident advisor of Hancock dormitory. The president requested Bob to resign due to his involvement with the Gay Student Union. It was felt that the two positions conflicted. Mr. Elkins did not resign and an ad hoc committee was formed to investigate the situation. This committee, made up of faculty, administration and students, questioned such people as Elkins' senior resident, the Assistant Dean of Students and Vice President for Student Affairs, all of which supported Mr. Elkins' competency as an advisor.

The decision of the committee was in Elkins' favor unanimously. This was elevated by considerable support of students, individually and in formal groups. There were even such calls as a massive resignation of other resident advisors should the final decision be a negative one. This was not necessary, the president supported the committee and Mr. Elkins was allowed to retain his position as resident advisor pending further review.

This was not the end of the case; however, there were two repercussions of the incident. Due to the publicity the student received, his family had to be told of his sexual preferences. The result was that he was disowned. He is no longer supported financially by his family.

The second repercussions was a letter written by the Commonwealth Attorney of Petersburg, Richard L. Jones. He wrote the letter both as a concerned alumnus and Commonwealth Attorney of Petersburg. Induced in his letter was a reference to Section 18-2-361 of the code of Virginia "I would think it is your duty to explain to the people of Virginia just how you on the one hand accept or permit a "gay" of "homosexual" at the University of Virginia without, in the same breath exclaiming or condoning the crime of sodomy." His comments included that a student of this type was not needed at the University.

Response to the letter and comments by Jones included a letter to the editor in the Richmond Times-Dispatch, November 11, 1976 written by Franklin E. Kameny, Ph.D.

Bob Elkins still works with the Gay Student Union and retains his position as resident advisor of Hancock dormitory. Because of the incident; however he has had to endure considerable publicity and criticism resulting in his family disowning him.

G.S.U. Receives Recognition

There is a large number of organizations concerned with the homosexual sect throughout the state of Virginia and the country. One such organization is the Gay Student Union of University of Virginia. The organization's purpose is two-fold; educating and assisting the homosexual in dealing with society as it is now and educating the community in homosexuality. The organization is in no way political, according to president, Peter Braham, it provides the gay students with a helpful guide in dealing with a straight society.

At present, the Gay Student Union has received "recognition" status from the college. They have been denied funding status and are now trying to appeal the decision.

The membership includes approximately forty active members. Its projects involve speaking to various classes about different topics on homosexuality. Their present schedule for the semester includes ten educational projects and three dances. A seminar on numerous (facets of "gay" life), is scheduled for November 29, 30 and December 1. At this time they are working on sponsoring different speakers to come to the campus in the future.

As far as acceptance within the campus, the students in general and a large part of the administration acknowledge the need for the organization. Mr. Braham describes the group as a place where gay people can meet and can become more comfortable in dealing with their sexuality, society and their peers. It is not intended to pull people "out of the closet". When asked about the future of the group, Braham stated that society's ideas would have to change and the attitudes would have to lighten for the group to obtain a higher degree of prestige; however, they should have no problem maintain status as a service organization.

Winter Fashions For Guys And Girls Displayed At Fashion Show

By SANDY HAGA

Tuesday night Longwood students got a glimpse of winter fashions for guys and girls at a fashion show in the Gold Room. The Fashion Fundamentals Class and the Longwood chapter of the VHEA (Virginia Home Economics Association) sponsored the show.

Longwood students and Baldwin's Department store provided fashions. Clothes for the classroom, college games, a skiing weekend, a Hawaiian vacation, and holiday occasions were included in the show. Terry Cochran and Becky Bass introduced the models and described their outfits. Student models were Rhonda Higgins, Beverly Harvey, Jane Tunstall, Sue Middleton, Cheri d'Butera, Dawn Capitas, Cathy Jones, Diana Nickels, Betsy Wilhelm, Sallie Pleasants, Mac Tyler, Jan Bennett, Ginny Andrews, Cheryl Jo Boys, Darlene Harless,

Linda Webb presented 20 door prizes. Gifts included coupons from McDonalds, two necklaces, a sweater, two study pillows, a plant, an earring caddy, a silver tray, an Olivia Newton John album, a flashlight, a Parker pen, and an electric clock.

Following the show there was a reception in the ABC rooms. Handmade items such as a hat and scarf set, embroidered pillows, and a rug were displayed.

Chi Phi Omega Hopes To Become A Longwood Fraternity

By TOM DEWITT

Since mid September an interested group of Longwood men have been meeting with the intent to start Longwood's first fraternal organization. It started out to be an organization of 24 members at the first meeting but dropped to only 5 at the second. However, since that time the soon to be recognized fraternity has established a nucleus of 14 men who are ready to pledge a national when the opportunity arises.

In early October the first officers for the fraternity were installed with Mike Markley as president and Jubal Ackerson as Vice-president. Little did they know that troubles lay ahead for them with writing constitutions, battling the administration with red tape, and getting the run-around from various organizations on campus. It has been just this past week with "The battle of the Legislative Board" that the administration and Legislative Board have finally recognized that there is an interest group on the campus that's not going to wait five years before the traditions of the school are challenged.

As the group continued to meet in October and the resistance from the Legislative Board and Administration continued to stiffen and go in circles (both the Legislative Board and Administration were passing the buck between themselves as to who would take the first steps to recognize us) the Longwood College Fraternal Interest Group was tired of being called such (we had still not reached interest group status) and thus established themselves as a local Alpha Chapter, Chi Phi Omega.

Since that time Chi Phi Omega has recruited Mr. Barree and Mr. Tennant to fill the role as sponsors, advisors and answering questions pertaining to taking steps to becoming a national. CPO has come a long way. Already it has been planned that Pledge classes will be held for the second semester and with these pledge classes comes the growth of interest. I doubt that Chi Phi Omega will be the only fraternity at Longwood. As a matter of fact I predict two more on campus in the next three years which shows that challenges are being made now and that Longwood by accepting the male student will experience a form of metamorphosis, a metamorphosis that will change it from a college to a university or at the least from a girl's school to a college.

Voice-Opera Workshop Held At Longwood

By SHARON CONNOR

The Longwood Music Department held a Voice-Opera Workshop on November 4 and 5 in Molnar Recital Hall. The guest artist was Dr. Genevieve McGiffert who is the Chorus Master of Virginia Opera Company in Norfolk.

Dr. McGiffert, who has much experience in opera, started working with music voice students that already had learned the music, but needed staging to complete the scenes. Miss Norma Williams and Miss Barbara Burdick, voice teachers, assigned each role to the students. Most of the roles were double and triple cast in order for each student to have the chance to work with Dr. McGiffert. After two days of intense rehearsing, adding up to approximately fifteen hours, students were chosen by Dr. McGiffert to perform on the evening of November 5. The program included scenes from Puccini's "La Boheme," Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro," and Menotti's "The Old Maid and the Thief."

Having a guest artist of Dr. McGiffert's caliber to come to Longwood is an important step forward for the music department. She not only worked with the staging, but also explained the importance of the scenes and how to motivate an audience through movements and facial expressions. Since all rehearsals were open to the public the performers had an audience at all times, aiding the learning of these techniques.

Through a lot of hard work on Dr. McGiffert's part and extreme enthusiasm and co-operation on the student's part, Friday evening's performance was a great success. Two scenes, "The Marriage of Figaro" and "The Old Maid and the Thief," were humorous and left the audience laughing. "La Boheme," being much more serious, was performed twice in order for different students to experience performing the role, and also to give a new interpretation. All three scenes showed the tremendously hard work of Dr. McGiffert and the students. Not only did the students profit from this experience with Dr. McGiffert, but the audience as well.

Racquet Repair Service Offered On L.C. Campus

With the permission and cooperation of the Longwood College Foundation Board a tennis racquet repair service is being offered to the Longwood College Community. The repair service is run by Ruth Bourne, who worked for the Classic Racquet in Hopewell this summer, where she learned to string tennis racquets.

The repair service has been set up in the Forty Love clubhouse which is used by the Longwood Tennis Team. If you have a tennis racquet that needs to be restrung or have a grip replaced, you can have it all done here, on campus, in just a few hours.

Professors, students, and tennis team members have already taken advantage of this on campus service. Miss Harris, a member of the Physical Education Department staff is looking into the possibilities of having a stringing demonstration held for some of her advanced tennis classes.

If the demand for these services proves to be great enough, it may be possible for the college to purchase a stringing machine. In this way it would be able to offer these services to the college community at cost. Students could be trained to use the stringing machine and the experience could help anyone seeking a tennis teaching job at a country club or a tennis specialty shop. It could possibly provide a job for a student seeking financial aid. The possibilities are limitless, after all tennis is growing fast in popularity and many aspects of the field are opening up.

Musician Frank Thornton Performs In Coffeehouse

By ANNE CARTER STEPHENS

Virginian Frank Thornton performed at the Student Union Coffee House Thursday, Friday, and Saturday playing both the piano and the guitar.

Born and reared in Williamsburg, he attended the College of William and Mary, majoring in English. For the last two years he has been playing as a balladeer for the Historic Area in Williamsburg, performing at taverns. He got started professionally in his music when he joined a rock band when he was a freshman at W & M. Since then he has been in 4 bands and is now on his own "because it's more secure to be depending on yourself." Since he has started his career, he's been out west and has played in motels and lounges.

This ambitious musician plans to take his musician career "as far as it will go, but he "needs to write to get there." He said that writing your own music is the only way to get alot of playing other's songs. "There are lots of good performers but not many new writers." At the coffee house he performed some of his own songs and others.

SPORT FOLLIES

By DIANNE HARWOOD

Folly I: Update and Perspective
It's 2:25 a.m., I'm enjoying the late movie from my hotel bed in Rockhill, South Carolina. I must admit, though, I never expected to see the Palmyra State. I wasn't too optimistic on the hockey team's chances of making it to the Southeast Tournament. But yet here we are; how we got here and where we are going is the topic of this article.

We got here by placing second in the Tidewater Tournament last weekend in Norfolk, Virginia. The opening game saw Longwood defeat Old Dominion University by a score of 2-0. Carol Filo had the hot hand as she scored within the first minute of the game. Miss Filo scored again in the second half to give LC its two point margin. This win put Longwood in the finals against their number one rival, the College of William and Mary.

As I stated previously, I didn't have much confidence in the team's ability to make it this far. I also have been extremely conservative with my praise — but no more. Although Longwood lost to W & M 2-0, I have never seen the Longwood squad play with such intensity and concentrated effort. I watched them sit down, state what they were going to do, and do it. They played an excellent game and should have been proud of their play.

However, the team was still a bit down when they took the field against ODU for second place. ODU came out smokin' as they scored in the first fifteen minutes, but LC's Terry Voil snapped the team lull by scoring immediately thereafter. Longwood's momentum carried over into the second half as Terries Donohue and Voit smacked in two beautiful goals to give Longwood a 3-1 victory and a berth at the Southeast Tournament.

So here we are, at Winthrop College, Rockhill, South Carolina. Unfortunately, that's as far as we will go. Longwood lost in the opening round to a very physical U. Va. team by a 3-1 tally. Longwood just had an off day; they were flustered by U. Va.'s rough tactics. But I have to hand it to the girls — while U. Va. was hooking, tripping and shoving, Longwood kept their composure and played clean, constructive field hockey.

The play-off for third saw Longwood face off against Madison College. It was a tight, exciting contest of skill and pride that saw LC walk off a 2-1 victor. Madison drew first blood; Longwood's Cathy Lowe came back with a hard drive to even the tally. With game time running out and pressure being applied to both goals, Lady Luck tapped Cathy Lowe's stick again as she popped in the winning goal. Final score: Longwood 2, Madison, 1.

Even though the squad won't be returning to Nationals, they have a lot to be proud of and I, for one, congratulate them. Cathy Lowe had an excellent tournament as she scored all three LC goals. Wing Terry Donohue turned in a top-notch performance, as did freshmen Debbie Carl and Theresa Ware. It was a long season, it was a hard one; and it was a good one. A hearty hail and farewell to our seniors Kathy Arthur, Jane Grier, Diane Connolly and Theresa Matthews. They have given four years of love, dedication, tears and hard work in the name of Longwood Field Hockey and will be dearly missed. With that, on to basketball.

Folly II: A Sporting Prophecy

Having a million and one things to do, I decided to procrastinate (again) and journey to French Gym to check out the new 1976-1977 Longwood College Basketball Team. I must admit that it was nice to sit in the balcony, observing and reminiscing. I noticed that the floor is still bad, and that the favorite part of practice is still the water break. But I also noticed a foundation — one on which a winning team could be built. There is a lot of returning experience, countered with the new blood of eight talented freshmen. A championship team? Possibly.

There are several factors that could make or break the Squad.

One that could hurt the team both physically and mentally is the injury problem. After attending one practice, I saw two carried off with ankle injuries, several taped knees, and a couple on the sidelines with crutches at their feet. Coach Carolyn V. Hodges offers comment: "The majority of these injuries are a result of general fatigue. The girls are recovering from midterms and Oktoberfest, and therefore not in top physical shape." Injuries are categorically in the hands of fate, which we mere mortals cannot control. But this is the only negative I can deduct from my observations. And that's why this season looks promising.

As I watched the dedicated souls in a heady scrimmage, I noticed the external size of the team — there is a lot of height and a fair amount of body weight. It was pleasing to see them utilizing this in a positive manner; not to push and pull their way through with it. The girls seem to be exercising aware of where they are in relation to everyone else. There seems to be more mental errors as opposed to physical ones, and those should be eventually ironed out with practice. Hopefully, this kind of control will help alleviate any kind of foul problems that might arise.

I was also keenly aware of attitudes — good ones. Every player seemed dynamically energetic; they approached the situation with a light, healthy attitude. This is a pleasing fact, hopefully the fun concept will be predominant over the "win win win" concept. There is no superficial rivalry, no competitiveness, only cooperation.

So things are looking up in the world of Longwood Basketball. "The girls have good potential and a good attitude," declares Miss Hodges, "and we are going to have a good team". She told me this so matter-of-factly, that I just had to believe her.

Soccer Team Victorious Over SVCC Players

By MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

The men's soccer team produced its first victory last Thursday defeating Southside Community College 6-0. The match was an unusual one in several respects. As Longwood had previously played against organized soccer teams, Hampden-Sydney and Lynchburg, Southside was not an organized team. That was to the disadvantage of Longwood.

Southside was in the same situation that Longwood was in a month ago and is now rising above. Southside's goalie was the only man who looked as though he had previously played soccer. The team as a whole was not a team; they could not produce effective competition.

An additional unusual aspect to last week's game was that Southside's team included several females — players. That was a disadvantage to both teams. Facing an unorganized soccer team, plus one with females, seemed to throw the guys.

Longwood played a very unusual and inconsistent game Thursday. One minute they were aggressive and the next they were hesitant. Overall we were slower than in past performances. Longwood was set up for a number of shots which they did not take. We won, yet it was not a hard soccer game.

Coach Williamson commented on the performances of both teams. He saw Southside as an unorganized team which affected the performance of Longwood, "Because they (Southside) have not played together long, they lacked the 'togetherness' a soccer team must have." He added, "It also affected Longwood's play because there was no system or style of play that was consistent. Therefore, we were not consistent either."

Commenting on Longwood's strategy the coach said, "Due to our experience in three previous games, our offensive and defensive strategy was more effective."

Longwood scored four goals during the first half. The scoring players were Bill Breedon, Richard Hunt, David Yerkes, and Todd Stebbing. Richard's and Todd's goals were their first of the season.

Goals in the second half were scored again by Richard Hunt, and Steve Nelson (also his first). Back in play was Donnie Cox who had been injured since the beginning of the season.

The next scheduled game is again against Southside, at Southside, Dec. 2, 4:00 p.m.

Longwood Volleyball Teams Close Season With Tri-Match

By TERI DUNNIVANT

On November 8, both of Longwood's volleyball teams traveled to Lynchburg College to close out their seasons. The varsity played in a tri-match against Lynchburg and VPI, while the JV's played against Lynchburg's second team.

The JV's played the first match against Lynchburg, and kept the record against that team unblemished. In all the seasons of volleyball at Longwood, the JV team has never failed to beat Lynchburg. The first game went smoothly for LC; the score was 15-12. Lynchburg started off well in the second game, but Longwood gained the lead and took the match with a 15-9 score.

This final victory left the JV team with a 6-1 record for the season and lots of hope for next year. Coach Carolyn Price, commenting on the JV's stated that "the record showed them to be one of the superior JV teams in the state, their spirit and attitude helped them many times to come from behind and win."

The varsity teams began play at 7:00 with Longwood meeting VPI. LC played well in the first game against Tech's extreme aggressiveness, and took it 15-12. But in the second game nothing worked for the Blues and Tech was overwhelming — they shut out LC 15-0. By the third game LC had regained some composure, but Tech still had a tremendous game, allowing Longwood only one point and capturing the match.

Lynchburg defeated Tech in the second match, taking them in two games. This was the preliminary to their fourth season match against Longwood, and served to psyche them for the big game; Big because Lynchburg had to win to make the trip to State Tournaments.

Longwood's normal rivalry with Lynchburg intensified this season due to the number of matches played and the closeness of the outcomes. It showed in Lynchburg on Monday night, as Longwood looked like a different team on the floor against the other LC.

The first game was an improvement, but Longwood dropped it to Lynchburg 15-8. However, the Blues rallied in the second and turned the score around, beating Lynchburg 15-9. The last, and deciding game, just didn't work for Longwood. It was a real battle, but Lynchburg got the game 15-11, and the match they needed. Longwood will surely remember this match next year.

Now that the season is over, Mrs. Price is looking forward to next year. She said she "enjoyed working with both teams, and if they all come back we'll have some kind of team next year." She noted that she thought "everybody learned a lot this season" and now they realize just what they can do. So everybody better watch out for Longwood volleyballers in the future!

Just whose idea is this, anyway?

By the time we're old enough to have children, we've been thoroughly sold on the idea.

By our parents, our grandparents, our friends and neighbors, the media, everyone.

It's hard to remember we ever had a choice in the first place.

But there is a choice. Having a child is a tremendous responsibility and an important decision. Probably the most important decision we'll ever make.

And once it's made, it can never be undone.

Just remember . . . you do have a choice.

So think about it, and do what's right for you.

American Education Week Sets Emphasis On Parents

By SHERRY HERALD

During the week of November 15-19, communities throughout the United States will observe American Education Week. The Student Education Association (SEA) on campus has tried to inform local high school students, as well as the college faculty and student body of American Education Week. (AEW) Several members of the SEA will give lectures concerning Education to local chapters of The Future Teachers of America (FTA).

American Education Week has been observed annually since 1921. This nationwide event is sponsored by the National Education Association, The American Legion, the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, and the U. S. Office of Education.

This year's theme for AEW is "Our Goal, Our Future, Quality Education." Emphasis is directed towards parents, to get involved in their children's schools and to support the teachers more. Students are also urged to participate in curricular activities. Student apathy has put a damper on today's education system.

The SEA held a tea for the faculty of the Education Department of Longwood College and the faculty of the Campus school. This was in honor of those who are trying to help teach others to be better teachers.

The Campus School has also observed American Education Week. The school had open house earlier in the month and has had several different types of activities the students participated in honoring American Education. During the week, the parents of the children at the Campus School are welcomed and encouraged to come and join the classes that their children are in. The parents and children are actively involved in their education.

Chemistry Club Honors Mr. Law

By JO LEILI

On Tuesday evening, November the 9th, a new Longwood Organization, The Chemistry Club, held its first social function, in honor of faculty member, Mr. Law. At 6:00 p.m., the club sponsored a dinner as a farewell gesture to Professor Law, who will be leaving his position as Assistant Professor of Chemistry at Longwood College, after 10 years of teaching. Mr. Law's new position will be with the Carolina Power and Light Company, in Raleigh, North Carolina. Here, he will be engaged as a Senior Scientist in the Nuclear Generation Center, and will be concerned with research, development, and safety.

Present at the dinner were, President of the Chemistry Club, Jo Leili, Vice-president, Anita Dewell, Treasurer, Brenda Williamson, Secretary, Betsy O'Donnell and members of the club. Also attending, were, head of the Science Department, Dr. Marvin Scott, head of the Chemistry Department, Dr. Maurice Maxwell, and Chemistry Professors, Mr. Jack Hardy and Dr. David Novac. Following the dinner, a cake and memento plaque were presented to Mr. Law, to thank him for years of valuable service as a member of the Chemistry Department.

Mr. Law has done research in Oak Ridge National Laboratory, the Armed Forces Radiobiological Research Institute and several other nuclear facilities. He has published many articles in technical journals, including the official publications of the American Chemical Society, the Atomic Energy Society of Japan, and the Health Physics Society. He is a staunch defender of the use of nuclear power to help solve the nation's energy problems and for many other purposes.

The recipient of research grants from the National Science Foundation, the Atomic Energy Commission, the Society of Sigma Xi, the Virginia Academy of Science, and Longwood College, Law was also awarded the Sino-British scholarship and Canadian Industries Ltd. fellowship.

A member of the Longwood faculty since 1966, Law received the B. S. degree cum laude from Canton Christian College and the M.S. from New York University. He has done additional graduate study at the Polytechnic Institute of New York, Texas A & M University, and Louisiana State University.

Music Dept. Sets Recitals

Longwood College Department of Music will hold departmental recitals on November 16 and 18 at 1:00 p.m. in the music building. These recitals are open to the public at no charge. The programs will include performances by vocal and instrumental majors in the department and some student compositions will be heard. The following students will be participating on these recitals: Kenita Walker, Julie Forrest, Laura York, Susan Brinkley, Pam Maitland, Pam McClain, Pam Bowden, Linda Muley, Diane Quinn, Anne Paule, Susan Carpenter, Charles Mason, Nelle Jones, Bill McKaig, Diane Lowman, Diane McClain, Richard Chisenhall, Susan Bernard, Susan O'Brien, Shelby Shelton, Tom Pultz and Abby McChesney.

Crovatt Elected To Lead Student Government; Several Positions Remain Unfilled

By LESLIE BOATWRIGHT

The winners of the 1976-77 Major-Minor Elections held Dec. 2 at Longwood College were:

Legislative Board

Chairman — Linda Crovatt
Vice-Chairman — Terry Voit
Recording Secretary — Myra Gwyer
Corresponding Secretary — Cam Oglesby
Treasurer — Terry Johnson

Judicial Board

Chairman — Gay Kampfmuehler
Vice-Chairman — Ann Marie Morgan
Secretary — Petie Grigg

Residence Board

Secretary — Patti K. Chapman
Student Union
Chairman — Debbie McCullough
Vice-Chairman — Becky Tuck
Secretary — Ann Johnson
Treasurer — Robin Stark

I.A.A. (Intramurals)

President — Mary Ann Gresham Orientation
Chairman — Cathy Lowe

The offices for Chairman of Residence Board and Fire Warden will be voted on again Wednesday, Dec. 8 since neither candidate running for the office received a majority of the votes. Tuesday, Dec. 7 the students will have the opportunity to question the candidates running for these offices at 7:00 in the Rotunda. "Since a majority of the student body seems dissatisfied with Residence Board this is your opportunity to find a candidate that you would like in the office," commented Bonnie Gheen, Chairman of Elections.

Because only 812 students voted in the last election, student apathy seems to be of main concern to the newly elected officers. All of the officers are enthusiastic and optimistic about getting the students involved.

Linda Crovatt, Chairman of Legislative Board, commented about this challenge. "I am remaining totally optimistic about this coming year. If you, the students will use the Legislative Board for what it was set up for, a channel for your ideas, I will work hard to see them carried out. The Legislative Board meetings are open to everyone and serve as your direct means of communicating your opinions!" Linda has three specific ideas for change. One is the creation of a survey committee of Legislative Board dedicated solely to take surveys to find out what the students want and exactly what percentage of them want it.

Legislative Board will also start proceedings for the creation of an investigative committee to be established in both Residence and Judicial Boards. Terry Voit, Vice Chairman of Legislative Board suggested that a student referral system or hot line be set up within the student body so that students with any problems will have an objective friend to turn to. Legislative Board will work to set this up as soon as possible if students express a need for it.

Gay Kampfmuehler, Chairman of Judicial Board also has some new ideas. Her main concern is to open up Judicial Board to the students by holding a Judicial Board forum for questions once a month. She is also interested in seeing mock trials reinstated in the Orientation program. This trial's purpose would not be to scare the freshmen but rather to inform them so that they will have no unnecessary fears and will know exactly what does go on in a trial. Judicial Board also intends to conduct surveys on open trials and forums. She also feels that student counselors should play a larger part in defending the students on trial.

Cathy Lowe, Chairman of Orientation also feels that a mock trial is an important part of an Orientation program. The only other big change Cathy is planning on now is to strengthen the program regarding day students and transfers. Cathy said that Orientation provides a good chance to meet freshmen and help them feel a part of Longwood.

Debbie McCullough will be the Chairman of the Student Union. She says that if the S-UN puts money into one concert that it normally puts into two we could get much better bands and student turnout would increase. This would reduce the number of concerts from two to one a semester. She also wants mixers moved into the lower dining hall and most other S-UN events held in the Lankford Building, including movies previously shown in Jeffers. Debbie McCullough presented this challenge to the students. "I'd like to ask all of you to join me in supporting the Student Union events by letting your active members know your ideas and suggestions. The Student Union is your organization and your input is what makes the S-UN a success."

Student Government is there to help you and serve you but they cannot do it alone. They need your support not only in the upcoming re-election but in the year to come.

In Reflection...

The final editorial of a year traditionally is one of reflection, and this past year has certainly provided much to reflect upon. Longwood is progressing through the transition to coeducation without turmoil. The guys for the most part are as apathetic as the girls, and the necessary channels of communication have discouraged many attempts for change. The student government leaders who have been recently elected exhibit a commendable amount of spirit and enthusiasm. If supported by the student body, top priority will be given to updating rules that have made no sense for so long.

One goal of THE ROTUNDA during the past year has been to make students more aware of various aspects of life. The introduction of special features each week was one method of increasing understanding and awareness. It was hoped that readers would survey the features and ask questions about the facts presented. Each feature was a result of much time and effort, and the reporters who compiled the facts gave of their time in order to make readers aware of the symptoms and consequences of suicide, venereal disease, homosexuality, alcoholism, etc. Morals were not thrust upon anyone. College-aged individuals should have already developed a system of morals. The selection of subjects for the special features was made on the basis of the situations that confront most students each day. It does only harm to pretend that a problem or lifestyle does not exist. Longwood may be a small college in a conservative town, but humans are humans, and this college has problems just as every other school does, no more and no less. It is the opinion of THE ROTUNDA that too many schools fail to recognize these problems and deal with them in face-to-face contacts. The special features at least made an attempt to confront situations.

We hope addresses given will be used if needed, and consequences will be considered. Interviews presented were just that — one person's opinion. Many opinions cannot be documented for accuracy. Those interviewed were knowledgeable about the subject in question and therefore should be able to make more realistic statements than someone not involved.

Criticisms have been voiced that the feature on bisuality-homosexuality has been detrimental to the future of the college. This is ridiculous. Whether people admit to it or not, homosexuality is a reality, just as are venereal disease, suicide and the need for abortion. It is the opinion of those involved in the planning and writing of the feature that to present actual definitions and interviews would be a positive step in the direction of better understanding. It is sad to see one sentence in the article taken so out of context and blown out of proportion. The administration is to be thanked for its support of the right to present special features of somewhat controversial natures. The fact that some features were presented should prove that this college is at least willing to hear about real life situations. Many colleges would never have allowed the features to be presented. The channels of communication between THE ROTUNDA and the administration are excellent, and even though they disagree with some points presented, they respect the judgment and freedom of the paper in presenting such features. If this openness is detrimental to the college, THE ROTUNDA apologizes.

Letters to the Editor

A Thank You

Dear Editor:

We, the members of the Soccer Team wish to express our sincere appreciation to the staff of the Rotunda for your fantastic cooperation and assistance this season. You have helped us in so many ways to achieve our "togetherness." Your support will always be remembered, especially when we look back at this, our first year at Longwood College.

Sincerely,
Dick Williamson
Men's Soccer Coach

Equal Time

Dear Administration,

Being a member of the heterosexual population of this campus, I would like to make a formal protest of the discrimination of heterosexuals concerning the open house hours. It has come to my attention that the homosexuals on this campus have the privilege of 24 hour visitation while the heterosexuals are not allowed this privilege. We want our equal rights!

Sincerely,
Dave Gates

Alumni Protests

Dear Editor:

The Farmville Chapter of the Longwood Alumni Association, recognizing freedom of the press and the reality of homosexuality in today's world, nevertheless, unchallenged statement by a Longwood student that she thinks 40 per cent to 50 per cent of the students at Longwood College are gay. According to these figures, some 880-1100 students at Longwood are gay.

The following quote is from an earlier part of the article, "Bisexual-Homosexual: A Revolution": "...Although many people experiment with homosexuality, the number of predominant homosexuals is surprisingly small. . .Between 15 to 30 per cent of unmarried college educated females have had homosexual relationships; however, the number of predominantly homosexual females in the United States is between 1 and 2 per cent." The discrepancy between these figures and the 40 per cent to 50 per cent figure is so outrageous as to strain credulity. Undocumented statements such as the one by the Longwood student help to create an atmosphere which leads to gossip, fear, distrust, and anxiety and should be questioned by a responsible interviewer.

The Farmville Chapter of the Longwood Alumni Association also wishes to record its objection to articles which describe the "Revolution" as though it involved a majority of American youth restrained only by an oppressive puritanism, while by their own statistics hard core female homosexuals in the United States represent only 1 per cent to 2 per cent.

Should not consideration be given to the fact that for many Americans homosexuality is a moral issue? Does not the "straight" female student have rights also? Should she not be heard from? Where is school pride?

Student Rebuttal

Dear Editor:

It seems that the subject of the Special Features article in the November 9, 1976 ROTUNDA ON Bisexuality-Homosexuality: A Revolution is one of great concern, not only to the Farmville Chapter of the Alumni Association, but also to many members of the student body, faculty and others. Let us commend the Alumni Association for voicing its opinion in such a way that it is not only forced to be somewhat sensible—but it also allows the opportunity for debate.

First, we feel it necessary to define our purpose in writing this article. To do so, we would like to restate the opening paragraph of the major article,

What Is It and Why Is It:

A large percentage of gossip on Longwood's campus concerns homosexuality—not necessarily what constitutes a homosexual or why a person chooses homosexuality but...who is and who isn't. Unfortunately for some, we will not be dealing with who is and who isn't, but will hopefully explain homosexuality so that people will understand it and the homosexual better.

Unfortunately, this is a condensed statement of our purpose. We felt that this subject, just as the other subjects we discussed in Special Features, were of concern to the students. We in no way proposed to "shock" the campus and others with an opinion by a student. To better discuss this subject, maybe restating the question as it appeared in the ROTUNDA would help:

How Many People Do You Think Are Gay at Longwood?

40-50 per cent. A lot of people are overtly homosexual on this campus. I think a lot more people have entered into homosexual relationships but have not felt the need to make them public.

First, this is taken from an interview. What that usually means is that the answers are strictly opinion. When the question was asked, there was no request for documented information in the response. This was implied in the question's wording, "How many people do you think are gay at Longwood?"

The Alumni Association, Farmville Chapter, attempts to dispute the girl's answer as "undocumented". Granted, it is. We never professed to present it as documented information. We did attempt to use documented information for a percentage of female homosexuality in the United States on a national basis. We should emphasize national. There are numerous figures which vary from national to local levels. However, attempting to compare a girl's opinion to figures used in a basically informative article is ridiculous.

As to our choice of words used in the title: BISEXUALITY HOMOSEXUALITY: A REVOLUTION—we do not feel that "Revolution" implies that the American youth is "restrained only by an oppressive puritanism..." as the Farmville Chapter of the Alumni Association states. We are referring to not a revolution but the struggle for awareness and acceptance of the homosexual and bisexual in the present society. The letter written by the Farmville Chapter supports this in its opening statement when it recognizes "the reality of homosexuality in today's world..." Probably twenty years ago this would not have been the case.

Another Protest

It is documented fact that the homosexuals and bisexuals are struggling for acceptance and awareness—the increase of such organizations as the Gay Student Union at U.V.A. and the large number of court cases involving homosexuals (we refer you to the box on page 5 of the November 9 issue and the articles in the same issue; Sexual Preference Causes Problems and G.S.U. Receives Recognition). We feel that this "revolution" does not concern society's "puritanism", rather its refusal to accept an individual as an individual. We do not profess it to be the only revolution in today's society—there are numerous movements for other minorities such as women, blacks, etc.

Finally, the Alumni Association, Farmville Chapter, implies that the statement by the person interviewed should be challenged is some sort of editorial. Perhaps our editor chose not to challenge it because she recognized it as merely an opinion—and in viewing it as such felt it unnecessary.

We never once state that homosexuality is not a moral issue, rather we hoped to bring that issue to the forefront, just as organizations and individuals have attempted to bring human sexuality to the forefront. We never state that the "straight" woman has no rights and we never tried to oppress her. Perhaps our school pride includes a realistic outlook on society and the belief that everyone has a right to his opinion.

What distresses us most is that more seem concerned with one person's opinion than the facts. If this is the only source of reaction to the article, we can do nothing but assume that the article's purpose was in vain. Not once has someone commented to us on the factual information in its proper context. The documented information seems to have been overlooked.

Yes, where is the school pride? Where are those people who are concerned with the facts rather than opinion? Where are those people concerned with an education in issues of concern to society, whether moral or not?

Thank you,
Anne Saunders
Susann Smith

Dear Editor:

As a citizen of Farmville, husband of a Longwood Alumna and Commonwealth's Attorney of Prince Edward County, I was deeply concerned and distressed to read the articles on Homo Sexuality (sic) which appeared in the issue of The Rotunda, dated November 16, 1976, for the following reasons:

First, Homo Sexual Practices (Sodomy) are and have been a violation of the laws of the Commonwealth of Virginia and are subject to prosecution under Section 18.2-361 of the Code of Virginia. Although there have been certain cases dealing with the right of privacy of consenting adults (in husband and wife situations), the Virginia Statutes remain constitutional and valid.

Second, Homo Sexual Practices are a violation of God's law (see Deuteronomy, Exodus, Leviticus, Romans), and are violative of the sanctity of marriage, the relationship of man and woman. The young lady who said that this relationship is acceptable in God's eyes has not understood the Bible.

Third, Homo Sexual Practices, together with the over emphasis (sic) on sex, when it has become an accepted practice, has been one of the causes of, or at least an indication of, the destruction of many of the great civilizations.

Fourth, Homo Sexual Practices are rejected by the vast majority of the people of the United States today. The existence of a small number of homo sexuals (40 at the University of Virginia and an estimated 40 per cent at Longwood — impossible for this writer to believe) does not warrant a change of the laws and customs of this state or nation.

It would appear that your publication has done a great disservice to the college. Although, probably under the freedom of press, you have a right to publish this material, the adverse publicity will do great damage to the reputation of the college among those in this community, as well as throughout the state, who have supported the college, who have loved it, and who may contemplate their sons and daughters attending this outstanding institution of higher learning.

Sincerely yours,
William F. Watkins, Jr.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The article's purpose was neither to condone nor condemn homosexuality-bisexuality, but rather to simply inform the students.)

HUMAN SEXUALITY FORUM TO BE HELD

There will be a Forum on Human Sexuality meeting in the residence halls on January 24-25 and January 26-27. This Forum is being sponsored by Mr. John Emmert and Mr. Jim Garrison in cooperation with the Dean of Students' Office. A number of faculty members will assist as facilitators in the discussions of areas of concern to you on the topic of human sexuality. Plan now to attend.

Caution: Exams May Be Hazardous To Your Health

By JANET COLEMAN

Most students first acquire the habit of taking exams in high school. They're pressured into it.

Students are told that in order to become a part of the "intellectual" group and find success as a student, they must take exams. They are given the following reasons for taking them: (1) Exams will make an individual a better person, wise and disciplined. (2) Exams will reveal how much an individual knows. (3) Exams are a necessary means of separating the smart from the dumb, the strong from the weak. (4) Exams give an individual an overall view of a course. (5) Everyone takes exams.

The teacher is the "pusher" and the student is the victim. Unfortunately, the student buys the idea of exams from the teacher, begins taking exams automatically, and fails to question the teacher's reasons or recognize the dangers in taking exams.

I have been a student victim for many years and have observed the unusual effects of exams upon students. During the week of exams, conscientious students are transformed into snarling beasts and walking zombies. Both their mental and physical health deteriorates.

Students suffer from eye strain, headaches, writer's cramp, tension, overexhaustion, insomnia, and restlessness. They show signs of insanity and depression. They cry easily and may become violent at times.

Some students gain weight or lose weight depending upon the individual. For instance, a student may eat constantly to remedy exam frustration or exams become so much a part of the student's life that he or she forgets to eat or is too worried to eat.

Exams may also lower a student's resistance to disease and infection. Students fail to get enough sleep and skip meals to study. The lack of sleep and proper nourishment may cause a student to be more susceptible to germs.

And if that's not enough to make a student sick, exams can also destroy a perfectly good average.

I therefore feel that the following warning should be made:

CAUTION: EXAMS MAY BE . . . HAZARDOUS TO YOUR HEALTH

Every year students suffer from exams. The usual complaints are made, but nothing is done to abolish them. However, I believe students have suffered long enough.

The teacher and professor need to be exposed as the "exam pushers." Students need to confront them with questions concerning their reasons for giving exams.

Exams do not always make an individual a better person. They do not reveal how much a student knows.

According to the editors of THE LITTLE RED SCHOOLBOOK, by far the greatest number of exams don't show what you know. They often ask the wrong questions. They may show what you've learned parrot-fashion or had knocked into you. They rarely show whether you can think for yourself and find things out for yourself.

You can't rely on exam results at all. You're not allowed to discuss the questions with your friends. You may be nervous or ill at the time. You don't get enough time to think about the questions and write your answers. So it's not the people who know most who do best in exams: it's the people who are properly organized, can keep cool and can write fast.

If exams do not accomplish what they're supposed to accomplish then why do teachers continue to give them and why do students continue to take them without resistance?

A research project or paper is a better means of giving a student an overall view of a course. It gives a student time to think and discover the information available on a particular subject.

Perhaps it is too late for students to kick the habit of exams this semester, but students should proceed with caution in the future. Exams must be replaced by a healthier form of evaluation. No one wants an ulcer or nervous breakdown before they graduate from college. There is plenty of opportunity for that after graduation.

Sounding Board Committee Needed For Suggestions

By CATY RAFFERTY

Due to the feedback of a number of students on this campus, a definite step is needed to explore the possibilities of having a committee of students. This committee would be responsible for polling the student body about their attitudes concerning changes and/or revisions of Judicial and Residence Board procedures.

The suggestion for this committee results from the concern the students feel about the present procedures of both boards. The committee would act as a sounding board for the students and take definite steps in carrying out the students suggestions in the form of proposals. The committee will help to enhance both boards images on this campus.

The committee could be composed of a number of students who sign up and are approved by Legislative Board. The committee should also have one member from Residence and Judicial Board, but who would not have the power of a vote. They could act in an advisory role in order to aid the committee in understanding the present procedures.

I would appreciate any feedback from any student. Please contact me, Caty Rafferty, Box 797, 118 Stubbs 392-3887. Thank you.

Twenty-six seniors have been selected for Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges. They were presented with certificates at a luncheon in their honor on December 6.

Nominations were submitted by department chairmen; advisers to Legislative Board, Judicial Board, Residence Board, Intramural Activities Association, Student Union, and Geist; the senior class sponsor and 1975-76 senior members of Chi. In making selections, consideration was given to the student's scholarship, her participation and leadership in academic and extracurricular activities, her citizenship and service to Longwood, and her promise of future usefulness. This year Longwood was eligible for a maximum of 35 students.

After nominations had been made by the committee, the list was reviewed by the Selection Committee. This committee is composed of the President, Vice President of Academic Affairs, Vice President of Student Affairs, Administrative Assistant to the President, Chairman of the President's Advisory Committee, and President of the Junior class. The candidates were discussed, and the names of the 26 seniors were submitted to the Who's Who office in Tuscaloosa, Alabama for final notification. Biographies of each nominee will be included in the Who's Who catalog, to be published in the spring.

McCray's Cantata To Be Performed At Virginia Music Convention

Our Heritage, a 40 minute choral cantata composed by Dr. James McCray, chairman of the music department of Longwood College, will receive its Virginia Premiere at the Virginia Music Education Convention on January 22, 1977 at 2:00 p.m. It will be the featured work on the afternoon concert to be held in the John Marshall Hotel in Richmond, and the public is cordially invited to attend. There will be no admission fee.

This major work was commissioned by the Florida Vocal Association and first performed last January in Orlando at the Florida Music Education Convention as part of their Bicentennial Celebration. The original performance was given by 700 singers and instrumentalists under Dr. McCray's directorship, with about 4,000 in the audience.

In addition to the Longwood Choir and Camerata Singers, three Virginia high schools will also be participating. They include Douglas Freeman High School of Richmond, Deen Entsminger director; Western Branch High School of Portsmouth, Dennis Price director; and Waynesboro High School of Waynesboro, Roger Zimmerman, director. Instrumentalists from Longwood will be joined by a percussion ensemble from Randolph-Henry High School, Jeanette Dameron director. The work is multimedia in scope and includes 13 dancers in the second movement, 76 slides projected on a large screen in the third movement, and a handbell choir in the fourth. The dance was originally created for this work by two Longwood Music Majors, Therees Tkach and Carole Scott. For this performance the dancers will be under the directorship of Therees Tkach. The slides were taken by Dr. Elizabeth Flynn of the Longwood Art Department.

There are four movements and an epilogue. The texts have been extracted from various sources. Some were newly created by the composer and his wife, Christine McCray.

Freedom, movement one, traces the developments from just prior to the Revolutionary War to the present. Much of the thematic and rhythmic material for the other movements are introduced in this movement. The cohesive element is a descending Aeolian scale on the text "We the People" which interrupts various textual commentaries by Thomas Paine, Abraham Lincoln, Woodrow Wilson and Martin Luther King, who see freedom as a dream.

Frontiers, movement two, is an instrumental movement... is an instrumental movement with 13 dancers. There are 11 subsections in the work, each with a particular territorial frontier. The form is that of a theme and variations. The theme has 13 notes, and there are 13 dancers, both symbolic of the original 13 colonies. The dancer's actions represent various types of expansion, exploration, civilization and the eventual need for a new frontier, with the final section titled "The Eagle Has Landed".

A Land of Dreams uses a chamber choir and the 76 slides. In this movement the music is dominated by style characteristics of romanticism and jazz with some improvisation adding to the search of dreams. This movement reflects on dreams which have and have not yet been realized and stands as a pivotal movement between the dreams of freedom in Movement I and the dreams of those killed in the wars, who, in movement IV, desperately cry out to be remembered by their loved ones.

Once There Was A War is the longest movement of the cantata, and uses all of the musicians and audience. The choir has some speaking unisons, individualized counterpoints and fragmented phrases. Throughout the past 200 years America has frequently found itself in conflict. This movement serves as a Requiem for all who have died in the service of our nation. After a series of observations about war and death, the music builds to an outburst of the opening statement of the Latin Requiem Mass superimposed upon the opening thematic material. The Latin fragments continue to grow into a 24 part texture that is reinforced by various types of bells (symbolic of freedom and death) which are sounded throughout the auditorium. After a gigantic climax of sound, everything is abruptly halted on a unison E; then, on a cue from the conductor, the audience is asked to join the remembrance by humming that final E until a cut off is given by the conductor. Today we are at peace, but, once there was a war...

The Torch is Passed is a brief epilogue based on the writings of John F. Kennedy. A generally calm atmosphere prevails after the myriad of activities in the preceding movement. In noting that the torch is passed to a new generation of Americans it is hoped that this short movement will function not only as a closing for the cantata, but also as a prologue for the next 200 years of freedom and prosperity for all mankind.

Christmas Sing December 8

By MARY LUCY WILSON And PETIE GRIGG

Bring a friend and come sing along with others in the Rotunda, Wed., Dec. 8th, from 5:30 to 6:00. Cricket, the Meshejians, Tafara, and the Newman folk group will provide music.

The Inter-Religious Council (I.R.C.) of Longwood is doing this as a way to bring the campus together to share in the wonder of the Christmas spirit. The donations of those who have participated in the "Help Stuff a Stocking" project (from Nov. 29 to Dec. 8) will be sent to the Social Services Department in Farmville. These donations will go to serve the needy children of Farmville, whose stockings would be empty this Christmas without them.

Renaissance Dinner Deemed Huge Success

Feasting and revelry, a la "merrie olde Englede," were the order of the evening at Longwood College's Renaissance Christmas Dinner on Friday and Saturday nights.

A complete sell-out by the first week in November, the event was attended by some 220 patrons each night. Initiated last year when it was offered only one night, the Renaissance Dinner created so much community interest that it was expanded to two nights this year and will probably be offered three nights next year.

Patterned after Advent Season celebrations in 16th-century England, the program of the evening included sacred and secular elements associated with Christmas. Guests assembled first in the college's Rotunda around a gigantic Christmas tree which reached above the second floor railing. Carolers located on the second floor entertained the group and then descended the stairs to lead the processional into the dining room.

Trumpet fanfares announced the lighting of large candles on each table, the Wassail Bowl Processional and Christmas toast, the Boar's Head Processional and the serving of the feast, the Madrigal Concert, the Flaming Plum Pudding Processional, and the Carol Medley in which all the "noblemen and nobeladies in the hall" were invited to join.

The performers were in authentic 16th-century attire. Musical instruments of the period were performed, including flute, harpsichord, recorder, and lute. Strolling minstrels entertained the guests as they dined.

The dining room was transformed into a facsimile of an Old English "great hall." Large felt banners depicting crowns, griffins, and other 16th century symbols, were hung around the room. The performers' table was located on a large platform in the center of the room.

The menu for the dinner combined authentic 16th century foods with modern day tastes. A prime roast of beef, for instance, was the modern parallel for the roast boar of olden times. Hot apple cider punch made by a traditional wassail recipe was served.

Dr. James McCray, chairman of Longwood's music department and originator of the Renaissance Christmas Dinner idea at the college, played the role of the "Lord of Misrule," leader of Christmas revelers. Dr. McCray was directed this type of festivity at the University of South Florida and at St. Mary's College in Notre Dame, Indiana.

Explaining some of the Renaissance period traditions for the Yuletide, Dr. McCray stated that "the large candles are symbols of Christ, the Light of the World. The punch, or wassail, was a drink served to those who went from house to house as Christmas carolers."

"The main course for the English Yule feast was usually boar, a swine readily available in the English forests in those days. Flaming pudding was served, adding to the spirit of the occasion," he said. The term "madrigal," he added refers to a type of musical composition for voices in a small ensemble as opposed to a choir.

Organ Students Tour Factory In Maryland

On November 19 seven Longwood College music majors and faculty member, Paul Hesselink, toured the M.P. Moller organ factory in Hagerstown, Maryland. The tour allowed everyone to see various phases of organ fabrication: pipe making, woodworking, console construction, windchest building, electrical wiring, and finally the initial voicing and speech regulation of finished pipework. Everyone was amazed by the complexity of the instruments under construction. The thousands of parts must all be of quality materials to insure durability and the must all be properly assembled and regulated to insure reliability of function. After seeing the actual construction process, which is for the most part hand and custom work, it became easier to understand why a moderate-sized pipe organ can cost between $65,000 and $75,000.

Mr. Ted Moller, Purchasing Officer of the firm, was the tour guide through the factory. He explained the processes of construction which were seen. Longwood students who toured the factory were: Robert Chandler, Susan Chambers, Janet Dollins, Kay Jones, Ruth Maxey, Robin Hewlitt and Shelby Shelton.

Music Majors Provide Varied Performances

Two music majors, Hank Dahlman and Charles Mason, provided musical entertainment for the November meeting of the Farmville Alumnae Chapter of Longwood College. In addition to playing guitar and singing several familiar folk tunes, they also spoke to the members about their experiences in being in the first group of males to attend Longwood in the coeducation program. Dr. James McCray, chairman of the music department, gave a brief talk about the past and future activities of the music department. The program was held in the Longwood Alumnae House.

On Wednesday, December 1, Anne Paule, Diane Quinn, Therees Tkach and Janet Truitt sang a program of Christmas music for the Farmville Women's Club which was held in their Chapter Home on High Street. They were accompanied by Robert Chandler and Dr. James McCray.

Folly I.O.D. Who?

Oh, what a night!! Signs like "You may be big and bad, but we're short and better" set the stage for the opening game of the year. The celebrated ODU Monarchs were defeated by an underdog Longwood squad by a score of 64-60.

"I couldn't be happier", stated Coach Carolyn V. Hodges. "I'm numb. The girls didn't fall apart when the pressure was on, and they were able to keep the game in hand". I couldn't agree more, and I think the fans agreed, too. At this point, I'd like to interject a comment about the fans. The home court is a definite advantage, especially with 400 emotionally charged people standing behind your every move, right or wrong. When Longwood was twelve points ahead, the fans were on their feet shouting encouragement; when LC was one point behind, the fans were standing on their chairs shouting encouragement. That's the kind of support that wins a ball game. Well, back to the girls.

Keeping with my original tradition of naming a player of the week, this week's choice was the easiest one I've ever had to make. Linda Baumbler, a junior from Newport News, Virginia takes the honor of the week. Linda played the best defensive game of her career as she was given the task to guard the 6'5" monstrosity from Denmark, Inge Nissen. Linda held the Great Dane scoreless in the first half, and I got a kick when Linda, who yields four inches to Nissen, blocked (or stuffed, which ever you prefer) one of her jump shots. Way to go, partner.

Now let's look statistically. Longwood had only five players score, but each one was in double figures. Maryjane Smith, the only starting freshman, hit 10; Melissa Wiggins shot 11; co-captain Anita Stowe popped in 12; Linda Baumbler hit 15; and high scorer for the evening was Sue Rama with 16. Another interesting factor to note: Longwood out-rebounded ODU 37-31. Even our little people (way to go, shorties!) got up for some key rebounds.

Women's basketball is still defined as a "non contact" sport. Bull. Anyone who didn't see contact needs their contacts boiled. There were 47 fouls in the game, 26 of which were ODU's. Since I passed Math III, I can confidently state that LC had the remaining 21. Both teams played man-to-man defense," stated Miss Hodges, "so naturally that leads to more fouls. But we have a strong bench, and that can and will save us".

And if all the excitement of the game wasn't enough, those of you who were alert also caught a side show in the sideline. ODU coach Pam Parsons gave an excellent demonstration of tumbling the floor exercise. Her facial and extreme expressions were priceless. A colorful person, no less.

Now for Chapter 2, the Junior Varsity story. I always like to write about the JV's because I think they never get the recognition and credit they deserve. Although the gym wasn't quite full, the emotion was just as high and the game was just as exciting as any game to be played. The squad played a gutsy but clean game against Ferrum College and emerged as a 61-36 victor.

"The girls had a slow start, but they picked it up and put it together," comments Coach Hodges. "A little bit of inexperience showed, but that will smooth out in time." The JV squad has only four returning players, but these four are solid and experienced enough to iron out the wrinkles and keep the team on an even keel. One of these four is the JV player of the week, Miss Terry Donohue.

Terry is a junior physical education major from Richmond, Virginia. Her experience showed as she was able to control the tempo of the game and settle the team when things got a bit sloppy. It is only fitting that she be bestowed with this high honor of esteem; Terry played well defensively and offensively (14 points), and besides, it was her twenty-first birthday. Happy Birthday, Puppy Dog.

I was impressed by the hustle of the JV's. They were a scrappy bunch, and the majority got on the scoreboard. Scoring breakdown is as follows: Theresa Schivone, 10; Sharon Nicholson, 4; Ellie Kennedy, 6; Terry Donohue, 14; Di Richardson, 6; Bev Hart, 4; Darlene Douglas, 4; Kitty Hughes, 11; and Debbie Brown, 2.

I think I'll step out on a limb with a prediction: if the JV's are not a "hot and cold team", and if they can fight like they fought against Ferrum, I think they will lose no more than two games during the season. Anybody want to bet?

Folly II: My New Baby

I never thought I'd see the day when I was writing about gymnastics. I'll be perfectly honest; I know as much about gymnastics as I do Australian foreign policy, which is not a breath-taking amount. Hopefully, you and I both will benefit from the information in this article and ones that will follow it. With this article, I hope to lay the basic foundations of gymnastics, and expand into more depth in the future.

Something I do know, however, is that the gymnastics team puts in an awful lot of hours and receives very little recognition. It takes years and years of dedication to master a routine or specific movement. Not too many athletes have this kind of dedication.

This year's squad, a young team coached by Mrs. Jidy MacNamee, has thirteen members, two of which are juniors and the rest being freshmen. The all-around girls work four events, floor exercise, unevenbars, balance beam and horse, with some just specializing in one or two events.

Judging (which we'll be going into more depth at a later time) seems to be a fairly difficult procedure. The top score that can be obtained is a 10.0 Judges look for difficulty, execution, amplitude ("stretch of body") composition, originality, and general impression.

Hopefully, these basic ideas will motivate you to come watch an Intrastad meet on January 17th at 7:00 p.m. in French Gym. The girls will compete against themselves (without announced scores) to get ready for future competition. "I'm confident the girls will have a good season," says Mrs. MacNamee. "The girls perform real well, and there is a lot of backup." Gymnastics is a difficult sport to master, yet a beautiful one to watch. Come and enjoy!!!!

Men Lose First Game

On November 30, the Longwood men's basketball team lost to Mary Washington College, 84-56. Longwood shot a "cold" 27 per cent (20-74) from the field and was outrebounced by the taller Mary Washington front line by a 56-28 total.

Bryan Welbaum was the high scorer for Longwood with 18 points. Bennie Shaw and David Stack followed with 8 points respectively. Welbaum was also the top L.C. rebounder with 9 and Rob Johnson had 8.

Men's Soccer Season Ends In Victory

By

MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

The men's soccer team closed out its season last Thursday with a second match against Southside. The guys won their game, but all in all, it was Steve Nelson's day with three of the five goals to his credit. Longwood won 5-0, with Dave Yerkes and Bill Breedon also scoring.

Southside had improved since the last match here three weeks ago, yet they still could not provide effective competition for Longwood. Longwood outran Southside, dominated the game, and kept the ball at Southside's goal. Both teams were playing under various handicaps, yet both shared one disadvantage — the wind factor.

At the end of regulation time, both teams decided to have a little fun. By mutual agreement the guys decided to play "just one more quarter." Both teams changed goalies and the teams went to it. After the extra ten minute quarter, as the sun was sinking down over the field, they decided to do it again! All of the members of both teams hit the field — in warm-ups, mittens, fatigues, anything and everything (that wind was cold!) and anything went!

Longwood added five unofficial goals to their score (for double figures!) and Southside one.

After the game — all four quarters — the coach commented, "All in all, it was a fitting way to end a soccer season, with a spirit of friendly competition, and just plain fun!"

The first soccer season ended with the match against Southside. Through the season the team won two matches, losing three. It was a rough beginning for the team; they had only fifteen players and were of interest group status only. The Rotunda asked several team players and their coach to comment upon the season.

Co-captain Bill Breedon was very pleased with the team's first season. He felt that the team had an "outstanding start for a first season." "... I'm surprised we did as well as we did." Bill thought that the team "improved with each game." He complimented Dave Yerkes as "a great asset to the team as a player as well as a teacher."

As Bill had previously played eight years, he was asked if he felt at a disadvantage playing with guys who had never before played. He answered that while working with some who had not played, he had the opportunity to help and to instruct those non-players, also giving him the chance to improve his basic skills.

When asked about his expectations for the next season, he answered that he would like to see some more interested guys, but added, "Working with the men we have it will still be possible to have a good team."

Also commenting upon the growth of the team and its improvement, Greg Dunn felt that all of the team showed improvement. He explained that the best method with which to improve was to play teams better than themselves.

Tommy Putz commented, "The first game brought us together as a team. It surprised us..." He added that he had not played soccer before coming to Longwood and said that he "learned to play from the other guys."

All of the team members who spoke with the Rotunda shared similar praise for Coach Williamson. When Coach Williamson came to Longwood at the beginning of the semester, he was not, and never had been a soccer coach, but his interest and enthusiasm could never show for it. The soccer players felt that the coach learned the game along with them, and anticipate his coaching next season.

Reflecting over the season, Coach Williamson remembered the uncertainties with the opening of the semester as to whether there would be a field, enough players, and especially enough interest with which to build a successful soccer team. Even as they were technically an interest group, the coach declared, "We are a team now," and he accredited that "... to the fact that these young men committed part of themselves to making it happen."

In light of improvement, the coach commented, "Looking back to September, we have improved tremendously. Not only in the area of skills, but also in terms of mutual respect, team attitudes, and character."

Questions have arisen as to whether or not the team will be able to obtain varsity status next season. The coach is uncertain now whether it will be possible, but he did say that the entire program will undergo several improvements before the next season. "Factors such as scheduling, improvement of facilities, budgeting, planning, training and practice schedules for our athletes,...will be included in the overall scope of our program."

So with two wins and three losses, the season closes until next fall. The entire team, the managers, and Coach Williamson are to be congratulated on their success. Fifteen individual freshmen developed into a team which learned to play together, and win!

Due to massive losses in mailing and extenuating circumstances, the 1976 VIRGINIAN will not be in before Christmas. The student body will be informed as to its arrival as soon as possible.

Student Government Forum Gives Insight Into Boards

By SANDY HAGA

The following student government representatives were present at the Student Government Forum on November 17: Ellen Cassada, Beth Rafferty, Susann Smith, Roxann Fox, Ruth Bourne, Mary Meade Saunders, Elaine Sneed, Emily Burgwyn, Vickie Easter, and Mary Williams. These students answered the following questions.

Q—If a member of Judicial Board is searching a person's room for drugs, but finds liquor instead is he allowed to use it as evidence?

Ruth—A—Before a person can search a room he has to have substantial proof for doing so. He must also state what he is looking for, however if other things are found in the search they may be used as evidence.

Q—Do you have to have a written warrant to search a room?

Ruth—A—No, you only have to have Dr. Willett's permission.

Q—Do members of the boards look for people who are violating the rules?

Ruth—A—No, it is not their responsibility to patrol.

Q—Where do you think the Gustapo reputation that the boards have came from?

Ruth—A—It stemmed from rumors.

Q—Can a student's personal property such as a car be searched?

Ruth—A—Yes, if it is on the campus.

Q—Are you allowed to search a room when the student is not there?

Ruth—A—Yes.

Q—Can the head resident go in a room if the student is not there?

Vickie—A—Yes. The head resident may go in the room for room inspection.

Q—How do you report a violation of residence board in co-ed dorms?

Vickie—A—Tell the dorm president.

Q—What was the purpose of Judicial Board wearing trench coats?

Ruth—A—It was not an effort to strike out at anybody, but a unifying thing for the group.

Q—Why did some of the members not participate?

Ruth—A—Some people are more reserved.

Q—Why haven't the statistics for Residence Board been in the paper?

Vickie—A—They have not been compiled.

Q—What do you think of open trials?

Ruth—A—Totally against them. It would be almost like a public display.

Vickie—A—I agree.

Q—If an accused person wanted an open trial would it be granted?

Ruth—A—No, there are not any provisions for an open trial.

Q—Wouldn't open trials be beneficial?

Ruth—A—It would probably lead to criticism of the board.

Q—Why is a student asked to give a plea as soon as he goes in to be tried? Why doesn't the board prove him guilty? Could you plead the Fifth Amendment? Would taking the Fifth be incriminating?

Mary Meade—A—It is hard to defend someone who won't defend himself.

Vickie—A—If someone is innocent he wouldn't be taken to trial in the first place.

Q—Can a person be convicted on circumstantial evidence?

Ruth—A—No.

Q—If students are innocent until proven guilty, why are they placed in the infirmary after the trial?

Mary—A—So they won't have to answer questions in the dorm.

Q—Can a student leave the infirmary if he wants to?

Ruth—A—A student is not forced to stay in the infirmary. It is only a suggestion which is offered to protect the student.

Q—If a member of Judicial or Residence Board is asked to leave a trial, can she?

Ruth—A—Yes.

Q—But some people have been told that they could not because there would not be enough people to make a quorum. Isn't a member of another board pulled in order to make a quorum? If this is so why does something like this happen?

Any student needing financial assistance is encouraged to apply. If you are anticipating receiving financial aid in any form—grants, scholarships, loans, or work-study positions—it is necessary for you to file the proper applications.

The financial aid application period for the 1977-78 academic year has arrived. Any student interested in receiving consideration for financial aid should complete and submit the necessary documents before the April 1, 1977 deadline. These "need assessment" documents and applications should be submitted prior to March 1, 1977, in order for the Financial Aid Office to receive them by the April 1, 1977, deadline. Students applying after this deadline will be considered in the order the applications are received.

Please note that a change has occurred in the need assessment document which will be used for the 1977-78 award period. The Financial Aid Form, (FAF) will be completed and submitted by all current Longwood students. This form replaces the Parents' Confidential Statement (PCS) and the Student Financial Statement (SFS). The FAF will be completed by both dependent and independent students.

In addition to the Financial Aid

Longwood College Policy Concerning Student Records

Longwood College student record policies are in full compliance with the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-380), Section 438) and the Virginia Privacy Protection Act of 1976 (Senate Bill 335). The accumulation, processing, and maintenance by the College of student data is limited to that information, including grades, which is necessary and relevant to the purposes of the institution. The personal data of students will be used only for the purpose for which it is collected. Procedures for the internal operation of the various offices at the College are established by each office staff so as to conform to the stated College policy.

Student data, whenever possible, shall be collected directly from the student; every effort will be made to ensure its accuracy and security. It shall be the express responsibility of the student to notify the Dean of Students' Office of any change of student status. Any student or applicant for admission who initially or subsequently refuses to supply accurate and complete personal information as is legally allowed may be denied admission or readmission or may jeopardize current student status. Falsification of records with the intent to give untrue information is a violation of the Longwood College Honor Code.

The College shall provide for the confidentiality and security of official student data and, therefore, will not release student information except:

(a) Public information as listed in directories and listings of student data which may include the student's name, address, telephone number, date and place of birth, major field of study, participation in officially recognized activities and sports, weight and height of members of athletic teams, dates of attendance, degrees and awards received, the most recent previous educational agency or institution attended by the student, campus or field address, dates of field experience, and other similar information. A student may inform the College in writing that any or all public information may not be released without prior consent. The College reserves the right to indicate to potential inquirers whether or not a student is currently enrolled and/or the date of attendance. In the case of telephone requests for information, the College will identify the names of current students or graduates and release the dates of attendance and the major field of study.

(b) To the students themselves.

(c) To parents or a financial institution where financial support to the student is in evidence as defined in Section 152 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1970.

(d) To a third party agency as expressly designated in writing by the student.

(e) To other agencies as required by court subpoena.

(f) In a situation of emergency in which the knowledge of confidential student information is necessary to protect the immediate health or safety of a student or other persons.

Student access to all personal records shall be permitted within 45 days of a written request, during normal office hours. All records shall be available and in a form comprehensible to the student except for:

(a) Medical records which, upon written authorization, shall be submitted to a psychologist or physician designated by the student.

(b) Confidential financial statements and records of parents as excluded by law.

(c) Third party confidential recommendations when such access has been waived by the student. Where a waiver has been given, parents as well as students are excluded from viewing such confidential information.

The College shall provide an opportunity, during normal office hours, for a student in person, a student accompanied by a person of his or her choosing, or by mail with proper identification, to challenge the existence of information believed to be inaccurate, incomplete, inappropriate, or misleading. All personal data challenged by a student shall be investigated by College officials, following established channels. Completion of an investigation shall result in the following actions:

(a) If the College concurs with the challenge, student records shall be amended or purged as appropriate; and all previous record recipients shall be so notified by the College.

(b) If the investigation fails to resolve the dispute, the student shall be permitted to file a statement of not more than 200 words setting forth his or her position, copies of which will be supplied at the student's expense, to both previous and subsequent recipients of the record in question.

(c) If a student wishes to make an appeal of the decision, he may do so in writing to the President of the College.

The names, dates of access and purposes of all persons or agencies other than appropriate Longwood College personnel given access to a student's personal records shall be recorded and maintained. Student records are retained by the College for at least one year after completion of work at the College. Permanent academic records from which transcripts are derived are maintained indefinitely. A student may request and receive information concerning the record of access to his personal information file.

Ruth—A—I don't know. I don't remember telling someone that he could not leave.

Q—Why can't student counselors sit on on a trial?

Vickie—A—The counselors are for the students and might hinder or sway the deliberation. It is protection for the student.

Q—If the purpose of Review Committee is to review a case, why aren't they allowed to hear the student give his position in the case?

Ruth—A—The committee is objective and is given the facts.

Q—If a student wanted to appear could he?

Mary—A—No. The committee reviews the board decision when suspension is recommended.

Q—When something goes to Review Board is it a review or re-trial?

Ruth—A—If a plea of innocent is accepted nothing is done. If the plea is rejected the review board has the right to approve the decision and review the facts.

Q—What does Legislative Board do?

Susann—A—Students elect the members and it is up to those who are elected to go back to the students and find out what they want.

Q—Why can't Judicial and Residence board send out questionnaires to find out what students want?

Ruth—A—It is the boards' responsibility to go to the students and find out what they want.

Q—Do you feel as chairman or vice-chairman of Residence or Judicial Board that you can objectively present a case that you investigated?

Ruth—A—Yes an investigator would be an asset.

Q—Do you see the possibility of an investigator in the future?

Ruth—A—Yes.

Q—Do you think you act in the best interest of the student or the administration?

Ruth—A—Student.

Q—Could a committee of students get opinions of boards and carry out proposals? Would they have the authority to go to Legislative board with opinions?

Susann—A—Yes.

Q—Would the proposal of a group of this type be considered?

Susann—A—Yes. Students need to get involved in student government.

Submit the winning nickname and win an official Longwood Rocking Chair.

The Intercollegiate Athletic Council (IAC) is conducting a contest to determine a nickname for Longwood and its sports teams. Students, faculty and staff are eligible and entries must be submitted by Friday, December 19. An individual can submit as many names as desired but only one copy of each name. There will be a box in the new smoker for entry blanks. The IAC will evaluate the entries and choose the winner.

Geist Recognizes Juniors, Seniors

By DAVID GATES

Wednesday January 19, Geist, Longwood's honorary leadership society, held its annual Geist Recognition Assembly. Every year a number of juniors and seniors are tapped into membership as recognition of their outstanding scholarship, leadership and service. The ceremony consisted of speeches by members of Geist, and the lighting of the candles representing the qualities of integrity, humility and intellect in an individual. A bit of mystery and much joy were added as the new members were introduced and tapped.

First to be tapped were the honored seniors, beginning with WILLA DERBIN, who was a Colleague and is a member of the Heritage Club. A member of Alpha Gamma Delta sorority, she has been on the dean's list and was selected for Who's Who.

KATHY RIGGINS was Freshman Oktoberfest Chairman, and a Colleague. She has played varsity basketball and is now the Senior class President. She was selected for Who's Who and is a member of Alpha Gamma Delta sorority.

ANNE RANSON has worked with the Student Union and is a member of Alpha Phi sorority. She was selected for the BOV Distinguished Service Award and for Who's Who.

ROXANN FOX is currently playing varsity basketball and is a member of Delta Psi Kappa honorary. Selected for Who's Who, she has served as Chairman of the Student Union, and is currently the Senior Representative to Legislative Board.

KIM WHEELLESS was an elf for Freshman Commission, and a Colleague. She is a member of Tafara and was the Senior Oktoberfest Chairman.

DEANE DAVIS works on the Curriculum Committee of the College. She is a member of Alpha Lambda Delta honorary and is the treasurer of Alpha Gamma Delta sorority.

JESSIE BRUCE, a day student, has worked with Legislative Board. Last summer she held positions on Judicial Board and was recently selected for Who's Who.

MELODY FOWLER was a Colleague and served as secretary of her junior class. She is a member of Alpha Gamma Delta sorority.

Then there were the juniors starting with LINDA CROVATT, who was an elf for Freshman Commission and has been an Oktoberfest klown for three years. She was recently elected Chairman of Legislative Board.

The new secretary for Geist, KAREN KIMBROUGH, is a member of Alpha Gamma Delta sorority and Alpha Lambda Delta honorary. She is also active in the Concert Choir and the Longwood Players.

SARA JO WYATT was the president of her Freshman Commission, and a Colleague. A member of Delta Psi Kappa honorary, she was recently to be Chairman of Residence Board and is Geist's new Oktoberfest Chairman.

DEBBIE McCULLOUGH has served as a Student Assistant and was elected to the position of Chairman of the Student Union. She also was chosen as Treasurer of Geist.

Rush Means Excitement, Work To Both Sororities And Rushees

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS

"I love it! . . . I hate it! . . . Lots of work! . . . Lots of fun! . . ." Those were just some of the comments that were heard around campus during Rush '77. There was a sense of excitement and expectancy in the air during formal rush for almost everyone involved, rushees and rushees alike. Rushing is 'the system by which sororities select and pledge new members,' according to the booklet given to each rushee, Meet the Greeks. Of course, rush means different things to different people. For most sorority members rush is a time for meeting hopeful rushees, dressing ridiculously for skits, preparing for parties, deciding which girls to choose and then wondering, "Will she choose us?" For most rushees rush is a time of meeting smiling sorority members, dressing just right for parties, preparing some item of conversation for all those parties, deciding which sorority to choose and then wondering, "Will they choose me?" Above all, rush makes everyone feel somewhat rushed!

Each rushee had her reasons for going through rush. For the majority of rushees the desire to be part of sorority life was the motivation for going through all the introductions, songs, skits, and tours of the chapter rooms. Suzie Mason, a freshman rushee, said she went through rush because, "I wanted to join a sorority and wanted to know the people in the sororities."

For many rushees rush was a chance of learning more about the mysterious Greeks, and seeing for themselves if they wanted to be labeled with A's or K's, T's or D's, S's or Z's. "I wanted to see for myself what they were; you just can't go follow what people say," said sophomore rushee Laurie Hoffman. Elise Canty, a sophomore rushee, said that she went through rush this semester because "I didn't go through it freshman year . . . everyone said it was a lot of fun, and I wanted to see what the different sororities were like."

Still, for other rushees, rush was an opportunity to make new friends. Susan White, a freshman rushee, said, "I wanted to meet new people, have fun, and have something to do. I like it . . ." Another freshman rushee, Anne Carter Stephens, commented, "They all seem so close together. I've met new people and seen people I've never seen before."

Getting involved . . . those were the key words for sorority members. Rush took a great deal of planning, organization and elbow grease. "We've done a lot of work," said Debbie Hernandez (Zeta Tau Alpha). She continues to say that the hard work paid off because "it creates such a good spirit for meeting new people." Joy Webb (Alpha Phi), explained that the work "also helps to settle conflicts in the sorority, bringing members closer together . . ."

Some rushees feel that all the smiles and tours of chapter rooms' party small talk with sorority members is put on (Nobody could be that sweet to me). Mary Louise McCraw (Alpha Sigma Tau) does not agree, "Everybody's really enjoying themselves. Everybody's putting forth something special, it's not a front."

In answer to the question, "What do sororities look for in a rushee?" Mary Louise said, "We have a group of individuals. We look for something good and vibrant in each person."

The Panhellenic Organization ties all the sororities together and coordinates the policies and activities of rush. Susan Morris (Sigma Sigma Sigma), was this year's rush chairman. There were 88 people signed up for rush and Susan was not pleased with the turnout, ". . . only 80-some people compared with 150 in past years, but you have to take into consideration that the number of open bids last semester put a dent in it (rush) this semester." She added however, "I still feel it's a better idea to have rush during second semester." She explained that by second semester, freshmen knew their grade average, and knew that they needed the minimum 2.00 GPA to be a sorority member.

Tonight

Join an unforgettable journey into the world of ESP! Established hypnotherapist and author of the subject, James J. Mapes, will entertain in his program, "Powers of the Mind" tonight in the Gold Room. For only one dollar (two dollars for non-students) you can experience telepathy and mind control. "From the moment he steps on stage he sweeps his audience into the fascinating world of the 'sixth sense' revealing their innermost thoughts with sophisticated humor."

Dr. Frank's Sherwood Bonner

Now Published And Available

By SANDY WILLIAMS

Dr. William L. Frank, Chairman of the English Philosophy Department, has recently had published Sherwood Bonner, a biographical and critical analysis of one of the South's first women novelists. Dr. Frank's account of Bonner (Catherine McDowell) includes background information on her life and career, excerpts from her works, and appraisal of her contributions in the field of American literature.

While completing Ph.D. requirements in English at Northwestern University twelve years ago, Dr. Frank's interest in Bonner began in the form of his doctoral dissertation. He had primarily planned and had begun his dissertation as a critical assessment of a Walt Whitman book; but Frank remarked, "There seemed to be no way to conclude it because of the enormous amount of material involved." However, one of his dissertation advisors had discovered that there was a vast amount of unpublished material on Sherwood Bonner in the Mississippi archives. Dr. Frank began from there.

"A good bit of traveling, a good bit of digging, and a good bit of cooperation" were all major factors in an accurate portrayal of Bonner's background. Dr. Frank began his work at an extreme disadvantage in that most of Bonner's short stories and initial publications had been destroyed in a fire in 1877. However, after some "detective work," Dr. Frank was able to do a fantastic job. He placed a minor article in a literary journal requesting assistance from any possible independent sources. Several people and libraries had retained some of her stories and manuscripts probably because of her close association with Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, her literary sponsor and advisor. The Cossitt Library in Memphis had several of the original travel articles which she had had printed in The Memphis Commercial Appeal. Through the cooperation of two surviving great-nephews, Dr. Frank uncovered a box of letters, notes from Longfellow, Christmas cards and a diary. A tedious job of deciphering was necessary to "decode" the diary because after Bonner had filled the pages horizontally, she turned the book on its side and wrote cross-wise. Dr. Frank's wife, Angie, helped him a great deal on that particular project. Therefore, the bulk of his research was uncovering such primary sources as these. Dr. Frank remarked that the eighteen months of preparation "were all really a matter of tracking down every possible lead."

Dr. Frank added that not much further research was required to transform his dissertation into his book. His major change was to cut portions of Bonner's biography and to expand the critical analysis. For those interested in acquiring a copy of Sherwood Bonner, the Longwood Bookstore has a supply. Rush

Important people during rush were the Panhellenic Rush Counselors. They were sorority members chosen to help rushees with questions about sororities or rush procedures. Rush counselors took their groups of rushees to the rush functions, but did not participate in any sorority rush function. Since the counselors were to be objective in their dealings with the rushees, they were not to wear their sorority colors or to promote their own sorority.

Everything during rush led up to the climatic WALK. By that time rushees had made their decisions on whether or not to join with the Greeks, and sororities had made their decisions of their new pledge members. In the two week period of rush there were disappointments mixed with laughter, and even bits of happiness mixed with tears.

Rush '77, like the rush periods before and the ones to follow, was an anxious time, a happy time and most significantly, a time of making new friends.

Freshman Males Protest

Carter's Grant Of Amnesty

By I.K.E. STONEBERGER

They're not burning buildings anymore. Administration halls are free of chanting protesters. The sit-in is out.

Though rioting and other forms of violent protests no longer plague the college campus, there are still issue-conscious students willing to voice their opinions.

At Longwood College there exists a group of non-violent protesters who go beyond the usual conversation in the dormitory or the informal debate with their fellow students.

What are they protesting? Amnesty is the topic and they are not carrying signs or marching. I asked Tom Curtin, a Freshman resident of S. Ruffner, what his reaction was to amnesty granted recently to Vietnam war draft evaders.

"It was wrong!" Curtin replied. "Too many people died over there who went out of respect for duty," he said.

Curtin is only one of a group of men who reacted in disfavor to President Carter's pardon. Four more Freshmen from S. Ruffner, Charles Elinsky, Steve Hanmer, Rob Johnson, and Roy Wright, together with two men from S. Cunningham, Frank Palumbo and Rick Henshaw, wish to express opposition to amnesty.

And express opposition is what they've done. Their opinions have hardly gone unnoticed. From Pairet's, Inc., in downtown Farmville, some members of the group have purchased shirts which bears the slogan on the front, "50,000 DIED HONORABLY," and on the back, "1-21-77 CARTER SAYS PUSSYS COME HOME."

Mr. Elinsky feels that amnesty is a mistake. I asked him why. "If there should be another war, there would be no one to fight it. Because of this action, anyone who does not want to fight is justified."

"He is legally right but not morally right!" says Mr. Johnson. "Just think how many more job demands this will create. And the Vietnam war veterans have been hassled enough," he added.

Mr. Wright feels that Mr. Ford had a better solution when he granted amnesty to those evaders who would return to the U. S. and work their time off "doing something useful."

In memory of the 50,000 who died in Vietnam, they have seen that L.C. is observing a protest to the pardon, as in New Hampshire, by flying the U. S. and state flags at half mast. These men feel that it is a "slap in the face" to the more than 28,000,000 veterans still living today. None of the seven protesters are war veterans themselves, however.

"We wanted to air our personal protest quietly," states Mr. Hanmer, "since most of the people we've talked to have reacted in disfavor of the amnesty."

And in a final protest to Carter's actions, they have vowed to join the college Young Republicans.

Plans For F.M. Station Continue

THE ROTUNDA,

Tuesday, February 1, 1977

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Within the next two weeks, application for Longwood's first 10 watt educational FM station should be enroute to the Federal Communications Commission (FCC). The Board of Visitors will be the licensed owners of the student staffed operation which will broadcast within a five mile radius for approximately six to eight hours a day, tentatively slated between 2 and 4 in the afternoon and 6 to 12 in the evening. The first program will hopefully be aired in September. A student group, the Longwood Radio Association, along with a faculty advisor, will oversee the organization and operation of the station. It will be non-commercial and although top 40 and "progressive" formats will be integrated into the program scheme, the primary focus must be on servicing the educational needs of those in the station's listening area.

The license application will be filed through the Virginia Public Telecommunication Commission which encouraged Longwood to proceed carefully in planning their approach to the station. Once the VPTC approves the station, its lawyer in Washington, D.C. will submit the application to the FCC. The VPTC suggested that Longwood consider the educational services a larger station might provide in the future. The possibility of in time becoming part of the Public Broadcasting System (PBS) was also discussed. The advantages of PBS membership include access to PBS program material and use of their new service.

The station has many more outlays than the obvious expenses of equipment and electricity. Since the control room on the third floor of Jarman is already equipped, the largest cost will be the purchase and installation of a tower and transmitter, estimated at $3,000. Additional future costs may include payment of royalties for records played (usually at a reduced rate for an educational station), subscription to a record service to supply the record, fees to a news source (either a wire service or a newspaper tie-line) and costs to maintain remote lines to various locations on campus so that the station can broadcast college events live.

Financial support of the radio at this time comes from private funds. Departmental allowances will cover operation and equipment expenses though it is possible student activity money might fund specific extra-curricular "recreational" broadcasts.

The members and officers of the LRA, George Bennett (station manager and president), Larry Follwell (vice-president, corresponding secretary Susie Transue, recording secretary Thomasine Harris and public relations representative Penny Robinson, are seeking formal recognition by the college. The LRA's monthly meetings are posted in the daily bulletin and all interested students are invited to attend. The station's faculty advisor, Dr. Patton Lockwood, has estimated that a minimum of 20, and as many as 40-50 students will be needed to run the station. This would allow the work to be parceled out and enjoyed by all who participate. Although a third class broadcasting license is needed to operate the board under federal law, this license is not difficult to obtain. Most people should be able to master the necessary fundamentals of the FCC in about a week. Board operation is the only function which requires a specialized knowledge of communications. The radio station does need "specialists" in other areas though, in order to make it work. Technical people, sports announcers, program coordinators, students to work in public affairs, script typing and secretarial personnel, writers and production people, announcers, music commentators, public relations agents and students to work on programs of specialized interests are needed to make these waves have meaning to you. The radio station should help to unify the campus by creating a common outlet for expression, and a platform where students can take advantage of their individual abilities to educate and entertain each other.

Black Culture Week Feb. 6-12

By DEBBIE MOUL

Are you interested in what your fellow students are doing? Do you need a break from studying and can't decide what to do?

Your solution, Black Culture Week, February 6-12, is now underway. The theme for this year's program is "People in all Directions Come Follow Us . . . On Our Ebony Odyssey." The Afro-American Student Alliance has been working diligently since Oktoberfest to put together something that would appeal to the entire student body.

Valerie Davis, President of the Afro-American Student Alliance, urges the student body to come. They need your support. Valerie says that if the students come, "We promise they won't go away disappointed."

Entertaining events have been scheduled for this week. They are as follows:

Sunday, Feb. 6: A show of Gospel Music. Three groups are to perform. Wygal Music Building at 7:30 p.m.

Monday, Feb. 7: A one-act play, "Corners," will be presented in the Studio Theatre; written by Jacqui Singleton and performed by members of the Afro-American Student Alliance at 7:30.

Tuesday, Feb. 8: A fashion show will be held in the Gold Room at 7:30. The theme for the show is "Fashion Flair."

Wednesday, Feb. 9: Another play by Jacqui Singleton, "The Game," will be presented in the Studio Theatre at 7:30.

Thursday, Feb. 10: A Variety Show, "To Be Young, Gifted and Black," will be held in Wygal at 7:30.

Saturday, Feb. 12: There will be a dance in the Gold Room from 8-12. The band is "Standing Room Only." Tickets can be purchased from a club member or at the door: $3.00 a couple or $2.00 per person. The band has played at the Coliseum with "Rare Earth." It is a ten-piece band from Richmond.

Contrary to popular belief, Black Culture Week is not closed to blacks only. Valerie asks everyone to come and have a good time. The Afro-American Student Alliance meetings are open to anyone and Valerie invites anybody to attend the meetings on Thursday evening at 7:30.

Off, Off Broadway Plays

Presented By L.C. Players

By GLENN LEFTWICH

February 23-26, the Longwood Players will present four Off Broadway plays from the late sixties, with the theme of "Love and Destruction." The plays include, It's Called a Sugar Plum, by Israel Horowitz; Birdbath, by Leonard Melfi; The Unexpurgated Memoirs of Bernard Margruder, by Jules Fieffer; and Motel, by Jean-Claude Van Itallie.

Even while the underlying theme is "Love and Destruction," several other topical and social issues are dealt with and examined within these plays. Whereas these mentioned issues may not be new to the audience, the presentation may very well be. These plays, directed by Douglas M. Young, should prove to be both enlightening and entertaining to the inexperienced as well as the avid theatre-goer.

Cast in It's Called a Sugar Plum are Buddy Bourne as Wallace Zuckerman, and Linda Kulp as Joanna Dibble.

In Birdbath, Karla Myers plays Velma Sparrow, and Glenn Leftwich plays Frankie Basta.

The Unexpurgated Memoirs of Bernard Margruder stars Alan Boone as Bernard, and Reeny Manley as Naomi.

The cast of Motel includes Jacqui Singleton as the Motel

Keeper, Jennifer Deane as the Woman, and Glenn Leftwich as the Man.

The assistant director for the shows is Barb Espey, and Vicki Mann is the stage manager.

The set, designed by Ben Emerson, employs the use of a thrust stage in which the audience sits on the stage itself, surrounding the action on three sides. It should therefore be obvious that a limited number of seats are available so plan to come early. It should also be noted that due to the explicitness of the language in some of the plays, this presentation is recommended for mature audiences only.

Glenn Leftwich In Keysville This Week

By JACQUI SINGLETON

Glenn Leftwich, a well known and very well accepted addition to the Longwood stage, is extending his talents to Keysville with the Daniel Players' production of Death of a Salesman.

Glenn, who most recently appeared in the Glass Menagerie, finds the two plays to have many similarities. Biff Lowman who Glenn portrays in this show, like Tom Wingfield, seeks to find himself in a world of disappointment and illusion. "Biff is in a situation where he can overcome his anxiety," comments Glenn, "but he keeps returning home, where it all started."

The dates of the Daniel Players production are February 3, 4, 5 at Southside Community College, Keysville.

Jazz, Blues, Rock And Roll

In Porrazzo Concert

By PAM KELLETT

The Johnny Porrazzo-Thunderbay concert (Feb. 27) was a great success—for those who showed up. We gave them a small, but grateful audience.

Thunderbay was an amiable four-member band from Mary Baldwin College. They played almost an hour of familiar music as well as several talented pieces of their own.

The Johnny Porrazzo Band

really came on strong with good jazz, blues, and rock and roll. They played hard and carried the audience off with their rock star—charisma. All five musicians, with Johnny doing vocals and piano, gained many admirers that night.

For the many who missed the concert, you missed something good. For those who went (and undoubtedly enjoyed it), don't smoke too many roses!

FROM THE EDITOR . .

Well, it's a new year and a new semester. It's that traditional time to make new beginnings, resolutions. New beginnings and resolutions, however, are noteworthy only if they prove beneficial in one way or another.

As the Rotunda faces a new semester there will be a few changes and a few new beginnings. The primary change, that of the editorship, has already occurred, hopefully very subtly. The change in editors however, does not mean that drastic changes will fast and furiously follow. As incoming editor, it is neither my position nor my desire to discredit the outgoing editor or her work. It is rather my position to uphold, and improve where possible, the quality and standard of the publication.

As has previously been standard, the Rotunda will continue to publish material in an unbiased, non-slanderous manner. Any opinions expressed within the publication will be those of the editorial and writing staff, and may not necessarily reflect those opinions of the student body or administration. To ensure productive and effective communication, the Rotunda welcomes letters from the student body. Letters must be typed, signed and submitted to the editor by the Friday before the publication date. All letters may be subject to editing.

As editor, it is my primary objective to present newsworthy material in such a manner as to increase readership. In the staff box located on the editorial page, the name of the editor is placed above the other numerous names of staff workers. The greatest aspirations of an editor cannot materialize without those numerous staff workers, many unmaned. Any change which I hope to instill cannot be effective without their aid. Who comprises that group of staff workers? You. And the Rotunda needs you. Any person interested in working with any aspect of the paper, please feel free to contact me.

To produce a responsive publication, I need to know what the student body needs and would like to see in their paper. If you work with me, the Rotunda can work for you.

Pardon Me, Please

By IKE STONEBERGER

"You have given me a great responsibility—to stay close to you, to be worthy of you, and to exemplify what you are. Let us create together a new national spirit of unity and trust. Your strength can compensate for my weakness; and your wisdom can help to minimize my mistakes."

Pres. Jimmy Carter
Inaugural Address 1-29-77

Since the President's announcement on Friday, January 21, granting a full, complete and unconditional pardon to all Vietnam draft evaders who were not involved in any acts of force or violence, there have been many sounds of vocalized distress.

Those not included in the pardon, deserters, are receiving support from Carter critics who claim that the pardon fell too short, a direct opposition to those who criticize him for going too far.

The arguing can go on. There are many who sympathize with the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, seemingly conservative Republicans, and the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing the Southeast Asia in their protest of Carter's priorities.

The word priority is used in order to protest Carter's immediate attention to these law-breakers. An emotional reaction to the Vietnam "war" and the results of U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia have created a conflict, it seems, among Americans, a conflict which has already spoiled Carter's plea for unity, and unity is but one of Carter's favorite words.

Amnesty (another one of those words), in the Greek, means "not to remember". Ironically, those least remembered are the dutiful U.S. citizens whose tragic ends are still unknown. Carter's first commitment, then, should have been to those POW's and MIA's who have not been given any other options or "pardons".

Pardon the political criminal, pardon the war, pardon the misfortunate draft evaders, Mr. Carter, but when you said that "our government must at the same time be both competent and compassionate", pardon those of us who question your compassion.

Just before semester break, an underground paper appeared on campus. The single mimeographed page seems to have been a very limited edition, since few copies are now to be found, and no second issue has followed. Nevertheless, the event is significant.

For one thing, the flowering (and fading) of such a publication is in the best tradition of journalism in a free society: the spontaneous birth of a people's paper in response to a felt need not being met by an established instrument; in this case, the ROTUNDA. Us.

On the other hand, the fact that the new paper's producers declined to put their names to their work is in a somewhat less noble tradition; and the fact that they wrote only on issues that have been well-covered by the Rotunda suggests a reason why the paper may not have reappeared.

Still, it was basically a healthy sign of student commitment and concern—attitudes the Rotunda shares and, indeed, seeks to embody. So our message to the underground is simple: by all means, write for us!

We have the same message for the whole Longwood Community. We have a new editor, a substantially new staff, and a number of new ideas we hope to test in weeks to come. At the same time, we're conscious of our debt to the conscientious work done by the departing editor and her staff—aware that we build on a tradition of responsible and inventive student journalism.

So it's an ideal time for all of you to renew your own involvement with the Rotunda, to occasionally write for what we hope you read. It makes more sense than hijacking a mimeograph machine. And yet—if we should fall down on the job, we hope a secret sheet will mysteriously appear to tell us so.

Notes From The Underground

Silk-Screen

Sexism

Last week, several male students were actively protesting President Carter's amnesty decision by wearing some rather striking T-shirts around campus. (Their goals — and garments are covered elsewhere in today's paper.) While we welcome signs of political awareness on this quiescent campus, and actively support the right of citizens to speak out as they please on public issues, we couldn't help being a bit taken aback by the T-shirts' choice of language.

Seeking to heap maximum scorn on the excused draft resisters, the wearers of the shirts chose a term meant to suggest that the worst way to insult a man is to equate him to a woman — and via a reductive vulgarism at that. It seems strange that the protesters, showing such awareness of one social issue, should simultaneously show such blindness to another — that of sexism — particularly at a time when their predominantly female community is making an effort to welcome the men, as equals.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor,

After reading the negative comments in the last issue pertaining to the article on Homosexuality, I, as a homosexual, would like to take the opposite view and express my sincere appreciation to you and your staff for the article. I think it offered a lot of insight on this controversial topic and was totally open-minded. I thank you.

The comments made by the replying persons uncovered their ignorance on the subject of homosexuality not referred to as the law but as a real part of this world, state, and school. At Longwood and almost every other institution of higher learning there are a great number of homosexuals. The comment was made by one person that there are only 40 gays at the University of Virginia. This is obviously a figure referring to the overt homosexuals that live their life openly. What about the others that haven't chosen to share their lifestyles with others? This question is probably what led to the girl's comment that stated the presence of 40 per cent to 50 per cent homosexuals on Longwood's campus. Not everyone chooses to be open with their thoughts.

Before I go any further into my comments, "I'd like to make myself perfectly clear" on something that was not brought up in the special feature on homosexuality. Homosexuals are not out to get anyone so the people who have fears need not worry. We won't attack you, I promise. There is no reason to distrust or fear homosexuals anymore than one would distrust or fear a straight person. Please, if you don't believe anything else, believe this. We don't want you to join us anymore than you do.

I was thoroughly disgusted with the comment that the small percentage of homosexuals "does not warrant a change of the laws and customs of this state or nation." Do we have to have a majority to be recognized as legal? If so, why are there states that have legalized homosexuality? Are we a majority in those states? This statement seems to be a contradiction to many other governmental rulings and shouldn't be considered a valid statement but merely an opinion. I express my sorrow to Mr.

Watkins for his lack of true knowledge and feelings.

In reference to the comment that stated "doesn't the straight female have rights too?": to me this seems to be the crux of the whole problem. Straight females possess all of the rights and we have none. The article was not written to hear the comments from people uneducated on the topic of homosexuality but to give the students realistic comments from the viewpoints of experienced persons. Maybe to promote equality the Rotunda will run an article on heterosexuality in the future. Speaking of the "equal time" I'd like to close my opinions with a comment on this letter to the editor. I found the complaint on discrimination of open house hours for heterosexuals very amusing but true. Try confronting residence board with the topic. I'm not saying you'll get anywhere but it's worth a try.

Again, in my opinion the main purpose of this special feature wasn't to inflict a fear into students and others but to inform them of the reality of homosexuality and help those

THE 1975 - 76 YEARBOOK IS NOW BEING PUBLISHED AND WILL ARRIVE IN MARCH.

South's Sherwood Bonner Is Revived By Dr. Frank

By SANDY WILLIAMS

Meet Sherwood Bonner: "One of the South's first women novelists and local color writer of some achievement...who by the time of her death in 1883, at the age of thirty-four, had published one novel, a serial novelette, and a sufficient number of short stories in such periodicals as Lippincott's and Harper's Monthly to justify a two-volume collection." This relatively unknown literary figure has recently been revived through Dr. William L. Frank's critical study, Sherwood Bonner.

Frank's book, while quite "readable," is primarily an informative work containing facts and interpretations. Therefore, the exposition's probable audience would be those with intellectual interests or those acquiring reference material.

The organization which Dr. Frank utilized is a logical one in that the first portion deals with Bonner's background and environment, the middle section includes a discussion of her fictional works, and the concluding chapter acknowledges appraisals from various critics.

To give a full account of Bonner's life was an impossible task because the author had to rely mainly upon her diary, which covered only the year she was twenty, and her autobiographical works. However, Frank successfully revealed how her cultural and recreational environment molded her personality which, in turn, molded her writing abilities. Dr. Frank intentionally elaborated on Bonner's Negro nurse, "Gran'mammy" who was undoubtedly the strongest single influence on her writing. "Gran'mammy" was not only responsible for the origin of several stories, but was also usually the central figure or narrator in the Negro dialect tales. Another most interesting fact that Dr. Frank brings out is that "although Joel Chandler Harris is credited with using the first Negro dialect for its humorous effect, Bonner was writing dialect stories for Lippincott's Magazine at least four years before Harris' first Uncle Remus story appeared in the Constitution." Through the biographical background, Frank also demonstrates how the Civil War was a determinant in her lending a degree of realism to her otherwise humorous works.

In chapters three, four, and five, the discussion of fictional works includes the Dialect Tales, Suwanee River Tales, and the uncollected tales. Quick plot summaries, inherent qualities, and brilliant illustrations are all included in the discourse. One of the most colorful illustrations is from "Aunt Annik's Teeth":

'I has gummed it fur a good many ye'rs,' said Aunt Annik....'I owns ter havin' five natural teef...but dey shirks battle. One ob dem's got a little somethin' in it as lively as a speared worm...anudder is in my top jaw, an' ain't got no match fur it in de bottom one; an' one is broke off nearly to de root; an' de las' two is so yaller dat I's ashamed to show 'em in company, an' so I lif's my turkey tail ter my mou' every time I laughs or speaks.'

In the final chapter, Dr. Frank assesses the worth of Bonner's material through recent estimations as well as through her contemporary reviews. By the author's comparing proposals and criticisms, a successful and convincing consummation results.

I felt that Dr. Frank produced a very thorough and interesting study. However, to me, the greatest single effect of the book is that Dr. Frank successfully achieved his goal of portraying Sherwood Bonner as "a minor but noteworthy transitional writer between the schools of Local Color and Realism."

Shadow Catcher

Important And Neglected American Recognized In Documentary Film

By DAN CORRIE

"I try to bring art and science together," Donald Sutherland reads the words of Edward Curtis for the sound track of Teri McLuhan's The Shadow Catcher. A visual counterpoint begins of sharp clear color desert scapes reacting with old, sometimes unfocused, black and white glass plate photos. The soundtrack is a blending of Donald Sutherland's reading from Edward Curtis' journals and Indian drum beats and chants.

Curtis, who died in 1930, was a much important, much unnoticed photographer and anthropologist. His life-long and utterly consuming ambition was to record in minute detail the vanishing life-style of the American Indian. To accomplish this he mortgaged his home and possessions for money. He described himself as working from the time he arose in the morning until he went to sleep at night, seven days a week, thirty-one days out of most months. He wrote, "We sleep when we can no longer work." He unremitting urgency finally led to the break up of his marriage. It also led to a beautifully bound encyclopedia of the American Indian. Curtis was an old man when the twentieth volume was completed and he had feared that he would not live long enough to complete the work he had furiously attacked for a lifetime. Soon after completing the last volume he died a pauper.

About two hundred expensive leather and gilt sets of the encyclopedias were printed and immediately flown to rare book rooms of renowned libraries where they were forgotten.

Teri McLuhan, a young and attractive woman, quit college at the age of seventeen. She then joined the Canadian equivalent of the Peace Corps where she came in contact with many Indian tribes. Later at a university she stumbled across the Curtis encyclopedia.

To make the film Ms. McLuhan and Robert Fiore, her cinematographer, followed Curtis' footsteps throughout the United States recreating his travels. One of the sharpest fascinations of the film was the juxtaposition of old Curtis prints with modern shots of the same places. The only difference between the two was the technical qualities of the photographic equipment. The desert places seemed exactly as they were when Edward Curtis preserved them.

The film includes several interviews, Curtis' daughters, now elderly women, some of Curtis' helpers and associates, and several elderly Indians volunteered insight into the character of Curtis.

At one point in his life Curtis tried his hand at filming with The Land of the Headhunters. The film was anything but a commercial success and could perhaps at best be called a pseudo-documentary. Many cuts from this old film were edited into The Shadow Catcher along with modern shots of the same places. At times the fairly long excerpts grew tedious, yet were enlightening. Included in the old excerpts was a film of an actual Indian snake dance of which Curtis himself was a participant.

When Ms. McLuhan was asked how she came to find the old Curtis films she answered, "I happened to find them in a garage in California." She restored and copied the old disintegrating nitrate films.

The visuals of The Shadow Catcher are much heightened by the sensitive readings from Curtis' diary which spanned from his lowpoints, when he was too physically exhausted to leave the bed for weeks at a time, to his high points, such as his procuring the financial aid from J.P. Morgan and his praise from Theodore Roosevelt; and included his contemplations in between. Roosevelt wrote to him, "No one is doing more important work than you are... preserving for history that which in a decade will have vanished."

The Shadow Catcher is an efficiently made documentary. Time is not wasted in presenting the material. Enough time is allowed to give the viewer a feel for the man and for his work, as well as for the country and people with whom he worked. Photography and soundtrack are both uncluttered, unobtrusive and serve to achieve the sought for effects.

The Shadow Catcher was released in 1975, premiering at the Whitney Museum of American Art. It has been shown on public television and in England, France, Italy, Germany, Russia, Holland, Sweden, and Switzerland. This film and Ms. McLuhan's books serve the important purpose of recognizing and making known a very important and very neglected American.

Creativity And Variety Accent Art Exhibit

By PAM KELLETT

In keeping with Longwood's fine program of art exhibits, the new semester has started out with a real eye opener by the husband and wife team of Nancy and Jack Witt. This latest show which is on display now in the Bedford Gallery (January 20—February 16) is a real visual pleasure.

The show is dominated by Nancy Witt's large, characteristically smooth oil paintings, done with photographic clarity and detail. Sea Scape and unusual still-lives have a mysterious dali-like quality which is most attractive; an ocean outside a window trickles into a jar within, breaking waves eerily repeat themselves on an unfinished puzzle, a sandy beach turns to wood and a photograph extends its boundaries into the abstract. Natural colors are used with paint-by-number clarity; a technique which adds to the realism used in the bizarre subject matter. Her abstractions represent the familiar, yet they contain vast mystery.

Another attribute noticed in her portraits is the use of inserts and projections on the canvases. These 3-dimensional aspects lend themselves effectively to the level of surrealism on which her paintings are based. They almost seem to present the thoughts of the subjects.

Jack Witt's contribution to the exhibit deals most in small scale bronzes and pentel drawings.

The sculpture with the exception of two beautifully sensitive life size busts, projects familiar feelings and common situations. They executed in a light, modest, soon-to-be-classic style frequently used by sculptors today. These pieces represent the kind of art that people are buying from artsie-craftsie boutiques to decorate their family rooms. It's fun to look at, but can be easily dominated by more dynamic works.

The pentel renderings show an exquisite use of color and are characterized by a delicate Japanese style of perfection. They are very bright images of nature glowing with the beauty of simplicity.

It is obvious that the two artists create in different spheres and that their work creates a sharp contrast when displayed in the same room. One cannot help but be dominant over the other, but the individual viewer is the judge of which. There are things in this show to suit a wide variety of tastes; it's a versatile arrangement should be enjoyed by everyone.

Radford Highlanders Crush L.C. Men's Team, 130-59

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Tuesday, Jan. 25, the Longwood men's basketball team took on the Radford Highlanders. Radford was taller and more experienced, but Longwood certainly put up a strong fight (L.C. does have 5 players who are 6 feet or over, the tallest being Wade Geoghegan at 6 ft. 5 in.) Even though the score was 130-59, the Longwood team never gave up. They showed good hustle by getting 12 steals during the game compared to Radford's 7 steals.

The L.C. men made some good moves to the hoop, but couldn't sink the ball. Compared to Radford's 57 per cent shooting from the floor, Longwood made only 32 per cent of their shots. They were also out-rebounded 39 to 16. Our high scorers were Jimmy Yarbrough with 21 points, Benny Shaw and Brian Welbaum, each with 10 points.

There was plenty of enthusiasm from the on-lookers who cheered their team's persistence during the rough game against Radford, the best team the L.C. men have played against yet.

During half time, the gymnastics team showed their agility and skill by tumbling and somersaulting. The fans enjoyed their performance very much. The men's basketball coach, Dr. Allen McNamee said that he would like to have more half time entertainment at all the games in order to give the college's different groups a chance to show their talents to the student body.

Another treat for the crowd at the game was a group of musicians playing assorted instruments. Included in the band were: Tom DeWitt, playing the Jew's Harp, Norman Harriss, on the banjo, Henry Bear, blowing on the jug, Walter Hughes, tapping the spoons, and Tommy Pultz, on the harmonica. Also George Bennett was playing the morratic. (This group just got together the night before the game and came to amuse the fans and practice a little. They hope to have a concert sometime and plan to add a guitarist, Charlie Mason.)

The Men's Basketball team (with a record of 0-5,) has previously played five games against colleges Averett, Mary Washington, Richard Bland, and Ferrum.

The team is composed chiefly of Freshmen and Sophomores. There are only two juniors, James Braxton and Wade Geoghegan. After semester break four more members were acquired who have really helped the team. Wade Geoghegan, Greg Gilliam, Jimmy Yarbrough are transfer students and James Braxton was previously enrolled.

Coach McNamee cited several reasons for not having won any games yet. First, the team is just getting started and does not have the experience of established teams. He also said that his team needs to do a better job of shooting. So far their field goal total percentage is around 30 per cent, which isn't very good. Another problem his team has is in defense. They need to keep the other teams from scoring on them as much as they have been.

McNamee feels that his team has the potential to improve and win against Mary Washington and Averett in the upcoming games. He feels his team's field goal average can increase up to 45 per cent. Already the team makes around 68 per cent of their free throws.

Next year the basketball team will definitely be better; this year's players will be more experienced. Also many men who have applied to Longwood for admittance next year have expressed interest in playing on the team. There is the prospect of Longwood joining the NCAA Division 3 and also the coach is looking into local conferences and national affiliation. If Longwood joins the NCAA, as many small colleges in Virginia have done, there would be no special scholarships for athletes. Instead they would be eligible for aid due to need as any other student. At present, the players are on the team through interest alone, without any special aid for playing basketball.

Coach McNamee said that his team should not be evaluated solely on their win-lose record. As the old cliché goes, "It doesn't matter if you win or lose, but how you play the game". Our guys certainly put a lot of effort and work into their games. There are 7 more matches left to be played before the tournament. McNamee stated that the fans really help the team so please come out and encourage our guys at their home games! Their next one is Feb. 2.

Swimmers Concerned Over Swim Team Cancellation

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Longwood College's swim team, which was designed as a special interest group and has been practicing five days a week for about a month, has been disbanded. Student coach Ellie Filmore said that the cancellation was due to "a lack of commitment" on the part of the members. She also said that the Department of Health, Physical Education and Recreation went out of their way to help her organize the swim team, but they had decided that to have a team this year, there would have to be enough members so that one person would not have to be in 4 or 5 events. HPER also set up times when the team could use the pool and helped to seek a sponsor, John Emmert, the Episcopal Campus minister.

One of the male team members, though, felt differently. He believed that the school should have done more to push for the team and should have recruit people with swimming experience. He said that a capable coach and veteran swimmers were necessary to develop a good team.

According to one woman team member, the team's roster fell from 20 members to only about eight or nine. She expressed the feeling that there was a lack of interest within the student body and that people just did not have the time to devote to the team.

When this year's team was disbanded, the scheduled meets, most of which were to have been at home, had to be canceled.

Last year's swim team, under the direction of Mrs. Carolyn Price, was ranked second in the state in the small college division. At the start of their season, they had 20 swimmers but by the end of the season the total dropped to only twelve. The 1975-76 team swam in eight meets. Coach Price stated that there would not have been any team last year, if, in the beginning there had only been twelve interested participants because 15 members on the team is the minimum required in order to score points in the meets.

Ellie Filmore and both team members expressed the hope of having a strong co-ed swimming team next year, since this year's team contained only four or five guys and not enough overall members.

Previews

By Margaret Hammersley
You'd never know it, but the spring semester is here. And with the spring semester comes tennis, lacrosse, and if all goes well, wrestling.

Mrs. Harriss, coaching tennis, tells us that team hopefuls are working out now, testing their times. Any student interested in the spring team is asked to contact Coach Harriss.

The names of all students trying out will be listed in a ladder arrangement, with the names of the fall team members heading the ladder. Official tryouts and eliminations will occur within the first two weeks of February. Six team members will be selected; they must play both singles and doubles.

Coach Harriss has confirmed the following schedule:

March
24 Hollins A 2:00
25 Christopher Newport H 3:00
28 VCU A 3:00
30 Southern Seminary H 3:00

April

As of now there are no definite plans for a men's wrestling team, yet interested persons are working to make it happen. Miss

Hodges has told us that the petition for a wrestling team, which would be of interest group status, will be presented before the IAA on February 9.

So there it is, a preview of the spring sports — should be exciting!

SPORT FOLLIES

By DIANNE HARWOOD
FOLLY I: Catching Up
 Sit back and relax; prop your feet up. Sip on a Schlitz if you want. We have a lot of catching up to do. Junior Varsity basketball will start us off.
 It's very difficult to report on a game not seen. I have got that problem. It is also difficult to remember pre-Christmas games, but c'est la vie. The JV took to the floor December 11 and squared off against Bridgewater College. Forty fair minutes later the Longwood ladies emerged a 63-36 victor. My spies say the game was "OK" so I guess you can formulate your own action-packed thoughts. Freshman Darlene Douglas led the scoring column with thirteen points. With that win, the JV's headed home for Mom's cooking, Christmas spirit and a well needed rest.
 The JV's first game back was with the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. The girls floundered with a slow start, and were furthermore hindered with five technical fouls called for improper numbers. And did this stop the girls in blue? Heck no!! At halftime they held a comfortable 27-18 lead. But when the second half rolled around, I saw something that I hope I never see again from a Longwood team ... the girls sitting on their lead. The UNC-G teams pulled within four points, but time ran out before they could get closer. Fuzz Schiavone popped in a last-second basket that gave the team a 58-51 win. By the way, 'ole Fuzzy turned in a nifty twenty point game, with sophomore Debbie Brown contributing eighteen.
 The next JV game saw the girls avenge an earlier loss to Madison, this time defeating the Duchesses by a 49-46 tally. The first half was one of those see-saw affairs, with LC up top at the end of the first half by five points. Longwood was sporadic in the second half, but was able to pull it out of the fire. Doin' OK, JV's.

 Now for the scoop on the varsity. Back again to pre-Yuletide. BridgeH20 fell victim to Longwood by a score of 58-40. "The girls played as well as they needed to, but by all means it wasn't their best game," states Coach Carolyn V. Hodges. I can let the girls off the hook on this one — it was exam time and the girls had gone quite a while without a ball break. And they too went home to mom, spirit and R & R.
 As for the game with UNC-G, it would be most fitting to describe it as a commercial script for Geritol. "See these poor, tired, pitiful basketball players," says the Geritol Man. "Just one teaspoon a day will put life in their bodies and form in their play." (Get the picture, fans?) I said to myself, "Self, do they know what a rebound is? Do they know how to defend an outside shot?" The 35-32 halftime lead should not have been — I was surprised to see them on top. The second half was ditto; with 5:45 left in the game, LC had a 57-56 lead. The teams exchanged a few baskets until LC had a 67-66 lead with ten seconds remaining. UNC-G got a fast break but missed the shot on the buzzer, which gave Longwood its third win of the season. Linda Baumler was high with nineteen points, Sue Rama followed with eighteen.
 Hartford Community College was the next victim. LC took a 86-37 (sic) decision over the small college. Can't say too much about that one.
 Longwood's first loss of the season came at the hands of rival Madison. Again, the girls just couldn't maintain their game as they hit hot and cold spots throughout the first half. Nevertheless, they were six points ahead going into the second half. But Madison's team came out hot; they held Longwood scoreless the first five minutes of the second half. Madison outscored LC 44-25 in the last twenty minutes giving them the 68-55 win. Longwood's scoring column was fairly balanced; Maryjane Smith hit eleven while Melissa Wiggins, Linda Baumler, Sue Rama and Anita Stowe came through with ten each.

 To add insult to injury, Longwood was swamped by Virginia Tech by a 59-47 score. I think it was the general consensus that the girls "just didn't play well." Maryjane Smith had the only hot hand and finished the game with seventeen points.
 The team record is now 4 wins and 2 losses, with over half the season yet to be played. - Hopefully the girls can pick themselves up and continue with the winning tradition of Longwood.
FOLLY II: Still a New Baby
 The gymnastics girls traveled to North Carolina last weekend for a tri-meet with the University of North Carolina and Duke University. The girls put on an impressive show as they placed second in overall competition with 97 points. UNC placed first with 127 points and Duke brought up the rear with 63.
 Junior Bunny Wordsworth seems to be the all-around standout as she consistently placed high in all four events. Bunny's top score came in the floor exercise with a rating of 7.1. Other high scorers in the floor exercise were Kim Furbee with a 6.45 and Lisa Haynes with a 6.4. The balance beam and uneven bars seemed to be the most troublesome for the girls as scores of 5.3 and 6.15 respectively were the top tallies on those apparatuses & by Bunny Wordsworth).
 Vaulting seems to be the big point-getter as D. D. Kirkpatrick placed second with a 8.1 score. I have had the opportunity to watch D. D. vault, and I must say that I was extremely impressed. Margie Quarles and Debbie Kinzel each scored a 7.6 to finish the high marks for Longwood.

Legislative Board Holds First Meeting In 1977

By DEBBIE WEBB

Legislative Board had its first meeting of the 1977-78 year Monday, Jan. 24, with chairman Linda Crovatt presiding. In one of the first orders of business, it was decided that forms will soon be sent out to all on-going committees concerning short and long term goals.

The first press conference will be held this afternoon in the Gold Room at 12:45. It is especially important that any student who has questions concerning Longwood or who wishes to present ideas should plan to attend Dr. Willett will be meeting with the Board of Visitors soon after the press conference, and could present items of concern to the board if necessary.

Tentative plans are in the making for distributing some of the money in the Student Activity Fees Contingency Fund. As the title states, the fund comes from the student activity fees collected from each student and is used toward something to improve college life for the students. Ideas under consideration now are legs (side curtains) for Jarman, a universal gym, and bike racks around the campus, such as at Lankford, Grainger, Jarman, and Tabb Circle. If anyone has any further suggestions or feels there is a need for something on campus that might be considered, they should contact Legislative Board.

In one set of elections, Dr. T.C. Dalton and Dr. James Gussett were re-elected as advisors for the board. In another school-wide election held Jan. 25 concerning offices left vacant at the end of last semester, the results were: Vice Chairman of Residence Board, Jackie Hall; IAA Vice Pres., Kim McCann IAA Sec., Carol Felo; and IAA Treas., Linda Baunler.

Legislative Board meetings will be held every Monday night at 7:00 in the Lankford Reading Rooms. All interested students, whether desiring to present a new idea or just to find out what goes on, are invited and urged to attend.

With our next issue (Feb. 8), the Rotunda inaugurates a regular consumer advice column, a joint project of the paper and the Department of Home Economics. Questions on all relevant topics are welcome — everything from requests for a cake recipe to demands for an investigation of book prices, from hints on how to vacuum your room with your mouth to advice on changing a tire — or buying one. Address your pleas and gripes to the Rotunda, Box 1133. Answers will be published as information and space permits.

New Scholarships Available

During the 1977-78 academic year, 10 new Granville P. Meade Scholarships will be offered to qualified applicants. The Scholarship will be awarded in an amount not to exceed $500 for freshmen and $400 for sophomores, juniors, and seniors for tuition and required fees for a regular college session. Applicants are required to have been born in Virginia, and must currently reside in Virginia, as well as attend a Virginia college.

Applications must be filed with the division superintendent in the county or city of the student's residence. In addition to the application, the student must submit confidential letters of reference from at least 4 people not related to the applicant, including the applicant's high school principal and the division superintendent, and an official transcript of your college work.

The application deadline for this scholarship is April 1, 1977. Recipients of the scholarship will be notified by July 13, 1977. The Granville P. Meade Scholarship is renewable and past recipients are encouraged to apply. Applications are available in the Financial Aid Office, Tabb 107.

Longwood's First Fraternity In The Making

By STACEY SMITH

The activities of a sorority are a common day occurrence on Longwood College campus, but now students have the activities of a fraternity to note. Last semester a group of interested Longwood men originated the local fraternity Chi Phi Omega. Since then the group has met with the national fraternities Phi Delta Theta, Sigma Phi Epsilon, and Alpha Tau Omega. They have decided to become a branch of Sigma Phi Epsilon.

The fraternity now known as Longwood Colony, will be considered as a colony and the men as pledges, until they meet national standards and can obtain their charter. This period can take from a month to two years while they organize and build membership. At the present time the colony has fifteen members who were initiated January 22 at the Richmond Sigma Phi Epsilon headquarters.

Why do the men want a fraternity on campus? Mike Markly, one of the main founders of the organization, "wants to provide a Greek system for Longwood guys." Through past fraternal experience he has been able to start the group on the initial arrangements and processes. The group feels that the fraternity will promote unity and brotherhood among the Longwood men. Larry Medler hopes that "the fraternity will bring more male interest to Longwood."

The Colony has no permanent facility but meets in rooms of Lankford on a weekly basis. They will not be eligible for a chapter room until January. Chris Herring explains, "Eventually we would like to have a fraternity house, but we don't see it in the near future."

Dues are not an important concern to the men. Shawn Barret believes that "Dues are a small investment for the experience and enjoyment of brotherhood."

The fraternity will be having their rush on a three week basis. The first informal rush party was last Wednesday. Dwight Smith explains "With the situation as it is now, it is impossible to run a formal rush."

The next step will be to check grade point averages of those that attended the party. The established members will make bids and invite prospective members back to the second party. There they will explain more detailed information about the fraternity. The third week will be devoted to initiation. After initiation all of the members will remain pledges until the colonization period is ended and the fraternity becomes a chapter of Sigma Phi Epsilon.

The group's main objective at the moment is to build membership and work toward national level. In expressing their desires for the future, Tom DeWitt feels that "The sororities have a good system and organization and if fraternities on campus can organize anywhere as well, then we will have a well rounded Greek system."

Dr. Hooker Films Virginia Artist

By DAN CORRIE

The broad shouldered woman in jeans, a bandana binding back her hair, leans into the air hammer, pushes, lets off, pushes again. Gray dust and chunks of rock spit into air. The heavy Virginia drawl of Conway Thompson, Virginia artist and Longwood teacher, fills the soundtrack "... your work is much open to criticism, especially if it isn't in the mainstream — whatever that is — of American art."

Charlotte Schrader-Hooker, Longwood cinema studies and film making teacher says of her film about Conway Thompson, "The purpose of this film was to know and understand Conway's work. Virginia artists are much neglected and misunderstood. Often art is neglected by a public that just doesn't understand what the artist is trying to do."

The film continues. Dreamy passages from Charles Ives drift in and out of the soundtrack mingling with the bicker of the air hammer. She continues, the film cuts, zooming. Stage by stage the film follows the entire progress of a piece of sculpture from clay model to finished polished product. The voice of the artist drifts in and out discussing her art.

The film, Charlotte Hooker's first, was shot in Prince Edward, Hanover, Cumberland and Buckingham Counties, took nine months and a few thousand dollars of Charlotte Hooker's own money to make. She says, her voice characteristically low and careful, her words slow, "I did the whole thing without any instruction. I made every mistake possible. I remember when I was working on the soundtrack. I worked all day and nothing would go right. I went home and cried. The next day I went back to it and was quite happy with the way things turned out. I had to teach myself everything as I went along. I just kept going till I got where I wanted to go."

Dr. Hooker studied cinema theory and took her M.A. in Cinema Studies from New York University last year. "I see this film as the first in a series on Virginia artists. I'm working now on an animated film and perhaps might make a fiction film. I just want to make short movies that I can control myself without interference from others." With a sly half grin she adds, "I want to become a rich and famous film maker."

The documentary film is efficiently put together and well integrated. No material is wasted in the twenty minute film, yet the shots are unrushed. The camera lingers on subjects and landscapes to capture the rural Virginia atmosphere. Besides discussing art, Conway Thompson is filmed leisurely talking with her rural neighbors on her scouting missions for interesting archaic tools and objects to incorporate into her art work, which ranges from her rural agrarian series' wood constructions elegiac of her own people and native rural environment, to modernesque flowing stone abstracts

"I wanted the film to take in the artist as a whole, including the artist's philosophies as well as the actual working processes. Any real dedicated artist is a hard worker. They don't lay in an apartment all day drinking beer and occasionally dabbing a few brush strokes. They have to work hard on an everyday basis. I want this film to get at that."

Four prints have been made of Sculptor from Dry Creek. It will be screened on E-TV in Richmond this spring. Copies will be bought for the Virginia State Film Library. It will be shown next month at the Museum of Modern Art in New York. Dr. Hooker also plans to market it independently.

James Mapes Mystifies And Amazes His Audience With Powers Of Hypnosis

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Do you recall last Tuesday evening...the strange and bizarre events which occurred in the Gold Room when James Mapes presented the amazing "Power of the Mind"? This performance proved, by various demonstrations of hypnosis, that it is possible for the mind to overpower the body.

Before the show, Mr. Mapes previewed his talents in the dining hall during dinner. At that time he hypnotized six people; while they were under hypnosis he told them that when he bit into a lemon in the evening's show, they would have the irresistible urge to take seats on the stage and fall asleep. That evening, needless to say, all six walked on stage shortly after he bit into the lemon.

With the opening of the show, Mr. Mapes immediately asserted his power over the audience, making them relax and concentrate. An early demonstration of his perceptive power was performed upon eight people on stage. He asked each of them to draw or to write whatever they wanted on a piece of paper. After thirty seconds the drawings were shuffled and handed to him. Without any verbal or facial clues, he was able to return all the drawings to their owners simply by looking into the owner's eyes and by feeling the body heat in the owner's hands.

In numbers during the night, approximately twenty people were hypnotized. While under hypnosis they were made to do many unbelievable tasks. Renee Vene was told that her nose was rubberized and that it was fun to play with, so she pulled and swatted at her nose for about half an hour.

Jennifer Belegas was made to forget entirely the number seven. When she tried to count her fingers, she could count no higher than six. She then believed that her seventh finger was missing, and taking the microphone in her hand sang a song about losing and finding her finger.

Buddy Bourne could not remember his name and Mr. Mapes told him that it was Peter Rabbit. When the audience laughed at his new name, he defended it angrily.

Highlighting Two Rather Comical Moments

At one point Mr. Mapes told those under hypnosis that when they awoke, they would see the audience completely in the nude. Facial expressions ranged from shock to delight when they awoke. They were then put back to sleep and were told that this time when they awoke they themselves would be undressed. Believing themselves to be "sans" clothing, there was a mass effort to hide behind the stage curtain away from the eyes of the audience.

An assortment of people in the audience fell into a deep slumber prompted by Mr. Mapes, thus falling prey to his suggestions. For example, he caused these persons to feel an electric shock in their seats and convinced them that the shock was caused by those sitting next to them. Other examples included two people from the audience who believed themselves to be a King-Fu artist and a jungle woman.

Melanie Koch, one of the individuals who was in a hypnotic state said that she had felt very comfortable and relaxed. She explained that she could hear every word that Mr. Mapes said and was aware of the things she did, like being one of the "champion tap dancers." She experienced no embarrassment on the stage, but was slightly embarrassed afterward because she did not know how she appeared to the audience.

Tommy Pultz, who participated in the show, remarked, "It was all in the head. You had to concentrate." He said that he does not really remember a lot that happened to him, but that he had fun." While he had been in a trance-like sleep, he said that he could hear everything that went on but that he could not open his eyes. He just felt loose and under Mr. Mapes's power.

Tommy was one of the students who got stoned off a cigarette and remained that way until midnight. He said that the experience was exactly like being stoned. His final comment was, "If I had not been there, I would not have believed it!"

Two spectators remarked that they could think of no way to describe the performance except that it was like a dream. They had no doubts that everything they saw had actually happened, and that there were no tricks involved. They both agreed that it was the "best entertainment" they had seen at Longwood, and thought it was well worth the admission fee.

Mr. Mapes brought up the possibility of a seminar on hypnosis at Longwood later in the year. Many people think that this would be interesting and that they would like to participate.

While performing hypnosis, Mr. Mapes was very careful to watch his subjects closely to ensure that there was no trauma. He was always in complete control of the situation and had the ability to keep the audience enraptured. Those who missed the "Power of the Mind" lost the chance to view an unforgettable performance.

Preparations Now Being Made For The Miss Longwood Pageant

By LISA TURNER

Upon learning of the upcoming Miss Longwood Pageant, any reporter's first impression would be it would be a puff assignment, worthy of about six inches of writing and a few good-sized snickers. After all, everyone knows that beauty pageants are generally reserved for those girls with cute smiles, and very little intellectual ability. This has been played upon by several movies, among them a satire called Smiles. (What judge is going to care that Miss Third Floor Curry's hobby is reading about microeconomics?)

After talking with a few of the very dedicated and definitely unscattered-brained people who are in charge of preparing for the night of April 2, it was realized that those ideas should probably go the way of other out-of-date stereotypes.

About 20 girls have already submitted their applications in time for the February 1 deadline. In order to qualify, each girl must be sponsored by an organization on campus, such as a sorority or club. She must be between the ages of 18 and 28, single, and be "of good character and possess poise, personality and intelligence" according to the official rules and regulations. A preliminary judging will take place on the 14 and 15 of this month, with the objective of limiting the number of final contestants to twelve or fifteen girls.

What will the judges be looking for in this preliminary? The final 12 will have to have quite a bit more going for them than pretty smiles and long eyelashes, according to Gwen Haymaker. She and Jackie Lawter, who was unavailable for comment, are in charge of the preliminary judging process. Equal emphasis will be given to talent, poise, appearance and an individual four minute interview with the judges. What kind of talents do the contestants plan to offer? According to Gwen, there will be a lot of singing and dancing, some gymnastics, and one of the contestants is planning a rifle routine, certainly a pageant first.

A luncheon will be held on Tuesday, the 8th, to acquaint the girls with the rules for the upcoming judging and with each other; hopefully they will begin to feel more comfortable with the whole situation.

A lot of people don't realize how much work goes on behind the scenes. This pageant is not something that can be taken care of in a few hours of spare time. If you ask Tilsia Stevens, General Chairman of the production, she will probably reply that she hasn't had much free time since she took on the responsibility more than a year ago. She began working on this year's production in earnest at the beginning of the school year, and claims to be much wiser now about all of the fine print and little problems that accompany this sort of a venture. There are franchise fees to be paid to the Miss Virginia pageant. (Miss Longwood will continue on to the Miss Virginia Pageant and the Tobacco Festival this spring; if she is successful in her quest for the state title, she will then be eligible for the Miss America pageant, which most will recognize as the "big time".)

Tilsia says it has taken her two semesters to get everything together. As part of her job she arranges dates, meetings, and oversees her committees

Pianist Gary Wolf Gives Recital And Workshop

By Iker Stoneberger

Dr. Gary Wolf of the Florida Technological University is a rare personality. The program notes from his recital, given in Molnar Hall on Friday Jan. 28, credited him with "a rare combination of scholarship and artistry." In an interview with Dr. Wolf on Saturday, Jan. 29, the Rotunda discovered the meaning of this credential.

"I think what they (the critics) mean by this is that I work by technique, musicianship, and by style," Dr. Wolf stated. "Those three things are important to the artist," he said.

The artistry of Dr. Wolf is indisputable. The recital, which featured a major work from Albeniz, Beethoven, Brahms, Granados, Orreaga-Salas, and Ravel, delightfully attested to his talent; "a highly gifted pianist," say the critics.

More of Dr. Wolf's scholarly side was seen on Saturday, Jan. 29, during a day-long Piano Master Class in which seventeen piano students participated. Dr. Wolf moved about the stage, prompting his students, much like a diamond cutter supervising his apprentices.

The Master pianist worked almost feverishly over the pupil, a pace necessitated by the large number of students and the small amount of time allotted to each one. The pattern was set. A pupil was introduced, and, after moving to take his place before the piano, the student, in turn, introduced the piece he was to recite. The audience listened. Dr. Wolf listened, observed, and made notations. After a brief applause, the piano student awaited criticism.

Standing behind the pianist, Dr. Wolf rendered mini-lessons on technique, using various terms such as pulsation, MTD (Mental Technical Division), "octave skip", and many others. The audience as well received tips on fingering, positioning the arms, wrists, and the like.

The instruction, interspersed with amusing and often insightful anecdotes, often consisted of counting, singing, or snapping. "Would you try this section once more?" Dr. Wolf requested. In a matter of minutes he was able to analyze and describe each problem. While watching him work with each student, one could see that Dr. Wolf had developed a flair for attacking immediate problems and easing them home to the piano student.

"One learns to teach by teaching," explains Dr. Wolf in an interview after the workshop. He feels that two important tools to the piano teacher are "conscious analysis" and "listening".

"We're not training anyone to be a concert pianist anymore," stated Dr. Wolf in a brief lecture on the art of accompaniment. "As a soloist we may want to play well, but the field for pianists is in ensemble playing," he added.

As a prelude to the week-end of piano recital workshop, the film "Harpisichord - Building In America" was shown in Wygal on Thursday, Jan. 27. By the title alone, the film would appear to have been an unlikely preview of the events which followed the next two days. Viewers, however, received pertinent information on the history of the harpsichord, its importance in the development of 18th century music, and the art of constructing the instrument. Two important items extracted from the film are the availability of kits, which provide inexpensive means of constructing replicas of historical instruments, and the opinion of Mr. William Dowd, an American harpsichord builder, that "the harpsichord will replace the piano in virtually every home in America." The Rotunda solicited a response from Dr. Wolf.

"In lieu of what I know about harpsichords, they are coming back and growing in popularity," said Dr. Wolf.

He agreed with harpsichord builder Frank Hubbard that "it is a field which allows one to enter historical research." Hubbard, in the film, also stated that "there are no conflicts between technology and art in building the harpsichord."

Though America is standing in the threshold of a revival of the harpsichord, we need not fear that the piano will disappear, at least as long as there are artists of the caliber of Dr. Wolf.

As Dr. James McCray, chairman of the Department of Music, said at the conclusion of the Master Piano Workshop, "I guess we can describe a master class as simply observing and working with a master teacher." And Dr. Gary Wolf can add that compliment to his long list of credits.

Players prepare for evening of Off Off Broadway

Off Off Broadway

Production Crew Busy

By GLENN LEFTWICH

As production week for the Longwood Players' Off-Off Broadway one-acts moves closer, Jarman is once again filled with the familiar sound of hammering, sawing and occasional cry of frustration. The frustrations are due to some of the problems this production presents.

Since these plays were originally done on a thrust stage, the director, Douglas Young, elected to also make use of the thrust stage to give the plays the "feel" of an off-off Broadway theatre.

The set, designed by Ben Emerson and built by the stage craft class, makes use of a thrust stage in which the audience will be seated on the stage itself and surrounds the action on three sides. Working with a thrust stage causes problems not encountered on the more typical proscenium stage. Even though there are problems on a proscenium stage not found on a thrust stage, there is more or less an equal degree of difficulty, but this production offers the student the opportunity to work on both.

Since the audience is seated on the same level as the actors, the most obvious problem is visibility. The scenery must be small enough to fit in the set without being crowded, and since the audience is so close the furniture and props must be built more accurately. Lighting the set presents problems also. Since the audience is sitting around the actors, the stage must be lit from all sides. Therefore more lighting instruments are needed. The director of a show being done on a thrust stage also runs into problems because the actors must relate to all of the audience and the set at the same time without neglecting any of the playing area.

In conversation with Ben Emerson, he said that, technically speaking, Motel is the most interesting of the four plays. Due to the violent nature of this play, breakaway furniture must be made as well as furniture that will support weight for a while and the break. Three huge dolls are also being made which will contain the actors in this show. They are not realistic—they are grotesque characters with the bodies made of foam and the heads being sculpted from clay and then cast with latex.

Problems? Many. Every show

produced involves a great deal of problems. But problems are to be overcome. Rest assured that the technical workers of the Longwood Players will, as usual, defeat these problems and will have done another outstanding job with time to spare. Performance dates are Feb. 23-26 and it should be noted that due to the explicitness of the language in some of these plays, this presentation is recommended for mature audiences.

chairpersons whom she chose in September. Pat Nuchols will produce the pageant, Kathy Laffe is business manager, and Theresa Wood is director for Longwood Pageant Productions, Inc. (Realizing that there is a corporation begins to give one a sense of the complexities of the activity). Tilsia is the first to admit that she has a good, hard-working staff.

Tilsia also readily admits that she is a perfectionist. "I want everything to be right. I take so many notes... it's the little remembrances that can be vital."

On the preliminaries, Tilsia notes that she has looked through seven of the applications personally, and that contestants seem to be "well-rounded and well-talented, and comfortable. They seem to be outgoing—that's very important."

In the past, the preliminary organization has not been very strong. If the preliminaries are not strong, the pageant will not be strong. The most important thing is organization. "Tilsia seems to be very pleased with the work of Gwen and Jackie thus far."

She is not sure how many girls will end up as finalists. "It really depends on the quality of the contestants," she says.

Tilsia has a very strong idea of what the girl who is chosen as Miss Longwood should be like. "She must be very well-rounded!" (Tilsia is very decisive about this point). "She should be well-spoken... would you say 'well-versed'... she must possess poise, personal charm and appearance, be talented, and have some

Alpha Psi Omega's 7th annual drama symposium was success for those few who braved the 9:00 a.m. waking hour last Saturday. Speakers predominately from VCU's drama department and the Peninsula Civic Ballet were featured. The day was split into two segments with Joe Martinez and Carol Steinke speaking on stage combat and costumes respectively. Also, the listeners were treated to a performance of the Peninsula Civic Ballet under the direction of Mary Marshall. The ballet is made up of fourteen dancers ranging in ages from 8-23.

The group convened again at 1:00 following lunch and a banquet for speakers and Alpha Psi Omega members. Brad Boynton started the afternoon speaking impromptu on set design for a shoe string budget. Sound for the theatre was Cameron Granger's topic following next on the program.

The central theme of the day was directed to serious drama students, learn your craft. They were advised to seek all courses and outlets on the subject and research. Contrary to past years the students were not deterred from entering the over-crowded field, but rather research and become proficient in the art.

The day was concluded with one of Jacqui Singleton's one-act plays, "Cafe". The cast included Glenn Leftwich, Barb Espey, and Audrey Simms. The play was light and obvious in tone capping off the day. Those students of theatre who passed up the opportunities offered in the day are not serious in intent. As usual the Longwood campus displayed their usual apathy to outside resources. Hopefully if the symposium is to continue in its serious vein in bringing together the talents it has been able to gather in the past, campus interest must heighten.

Yearbook Staff

Understaffed

By LISA TURNER

Longwood's '75-76 yearbook will be distributed in March, for those who are worried about having been forgotten. A later announcement will be made as to arrangements for picking up your copies of the Virginian.

Progress is already underway on the '76-77 issue, according to Linda Crovatt and Rennie Bruno, this year's co-editors. They face their first deadline around March 15, and are stuck with an unusual problem—lack of people to work on the yearbook staff. "We really need help," acknowledges Linda. Both editors and Mr. I. B. Dent, director of the Student Union, stressed the need for experienced personnel to help out with layout, art work, photography, and the like.

Still, with all the problems and confusion that always surround the beginning of any new task, Linda is hopeful about her new job. She is particularly enthusiastic about the cover work done by Linda Baumer, and notes that the theme for the annual will most likely be "change". One change should be immediately evident to anyone who picks up a copy of the annual—it will be full length (9" x 12") instead of the customary (8" x 10") and has been cut down to about 252 pages.

There are a few other problems confronting the staff; the administration has no current list of organizations on campus, which makes covering everything a bit complicated. Both Linda and Rennie encourage students to submit black-and-white photos of events from last semester for inclusion in the annual.

Three hundred subscriptions have already been sold. A box with information about the new subscription campaign follows.

Guys Like Wheeler
And Cox Too

By TOM DEWITT

As was overwhelmingly evident last week, a large portion of Longwood's female population is involved with sorority life. Last week, the eleven sororities engaged in the traditional activities of rush. There were nightly parties, dinners, skits, and the like. Sorority sisters labored to present a socially attractive package to hopeful pledges. Rushees were anxious and excited; in short, the prevailing atmosphere was one of anticipation.

The distinctive emphasis of rush was social, yet let it not be thought that all sorority activities are social. Throughout the year sororities undertake various charitable and community activities.

Beginning February 12 and running through the week, Phi Mu will sponsor a Bowl-a-Thon. Similar to other sponsored contests, the Bowl-a-Thon operates on the sponsor system, that is, one person is sponsored by many. The sponsored party bowls three games and collects from those sponsoring her. All proceeds from the Bowl-a-Thon will be contributed to an extremely worthy organization, the Virginia Lung Association. The association uses such contributions in furthering research programs in respiratory diseases.

Phi Mu is asking you to use your energies in such a way as to help those unable to help themselves. You don't bowl? Then sponsor one who does bowl. When you consider the cause, what better way to spend a couple of dollars? The contest is open to all Longwood students.

Phi Mu, who crusades frequently for the Virginia Lung Association, is to be commended for its' noteworthy undertaking. As it took hours of preparation for rush, resulting in unanimous success, the Bowl-a-Thon will also require many hours of involvement. Please, spare a bit of your time or a bit of your money to make this contest a similar success.

The beginning of the fall semester of 1977 will mark a full year that the male has resided on the Longwood College campus. This will also mean that the majority of the Longwood males will be upperclassmen, and they will have the right to pick the residence hall they wish to have as their dorm for the 1977-78 school year as stated on page 11 of the Longwood Bulletin). As of this time, space has been allotted for the males to move into Frazer again, but no other dorm.

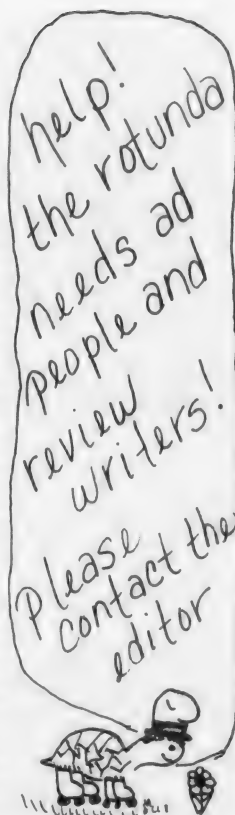

Stubs Hall is strictly sororities only, and so the decision not to let males occupy a floor in this dorm can be understood. But what about Wheeler or Cox? It is obvious the females living in these dorms during the present semester object to men living in these dorms next year. As a matter of fact, one Wheeler resident stated, "They would never be able to build on an additional floor by next year, so, sorry."

Maybe the administration is not aware that males want to move into Wheeler and Cox, well... "I don't want to move into Frazer next year if I can help it."

Kevin Bedsworth, a Physics major stated, "Next year most of my classes will be in Stevens and I'll be spending a lot of time there. To me, it would be a lot more convenient to live in Wheeler." When Kevin was asked why he wouldn't live in Frazer he replied, "I don't like the inadequacy of the tacky, little, one cinder block thick, rooms and their unreliable elevators. The air conditioning is alright, but I lived in Tabb this year and survived."

This seems to be the general attitude of the up-coming, male sophomores. Greg Dunn plans for classes at the North end of the campus and also chooses Wheeler. Whit Stoddard and Henry Bear feel the same as Greg, and hope for a possible room as well.

It may be possible that the administration has not yet decided which dorms will be open to the upperclass males, or that they just haven't released their decision to the school. In any case, the male hopes that they will not use any partiality or contradict the fine Longwood traditions that the handbook and catalogue preach, must be maintained.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Veteran's Views

Dear Editor,

After reading the two articles which appeared in the Rotunda on February 1, 1977 in protest of President Carter's pardon for all Vietnam draft evaders, I would like to voice my support for the President's actions. The only fault that I can find in the pardon was that he didn't include Vietnam war deserters. The pardon was long overdue for men who believed strongly enough to chance going to jail or even giving up their country. The time has come for all of these men to come home.

I noticed that the students who were interviewed are not Vietnam veterans or even old enough to have been affected by the draft. They have never been confronted with the possibility of being drafted to fight in a war... a war that Congress wouldn't support and would not consider legal... a war that wasn't important enough to bother winning.

As a Longwood student and a decorated Vietnam veteran who spent the better part of two years in military hospitals after leaving Vietnam, I feel that I am correct in my view and entitled to express my heart held feelings.

I do not think that all of the "50,000 died honorably" did so willingly. I would truly like to know for whom and for what they and my friends died. Was "peace with honor" worth 50,000 of this country's finest young men who died in the prime of their lives?

Also, I thought the choice of words that was used in the protest statement on the shirts was in very poor taste.

Thank you,
Rod Schwarm

Carter Support

Dear Editor,

After reading the Feb. 1, 1977 edition of The Rotunda, in particular the articles on amnesty, I would like to have my views represented and raise some questions. Basically, I believe Carter did the right thing in granting amnesty to the draft evaders who were not involved in any acts of force or violence.

I would like to know what makes Mr. Elinsky think that if there were another war, there would be no one to fight it. The President has quietly granted amnesty after every war, although it has never become a big issue. I also think there will always be a certain amount of the people who think war is a great fun thing, or may be just their duty, and feel obligated to get out there and kill.

I also question Mr. Johnson's concern over what is morally right. Mr. Johnson does not believe it is moral for one to evade the draft and be allowed back into the U.S. Mr. Johnson, do you believe the war was moral? The Vietnam War, as all wars are, was fought immorally. The war crimes committed by our own American GI's are atrocious. I could enumerate on these crimes, but I suggest to understand the seriousness and depth of the war crimes, you read the chapter on war in Susan Brownmiller's Against Our Will. If you think that what the Nazis did to the Jews is disgusting, read what the American GI's did to the Vietnamese. Then ask yourself who did what was morally right.

All of the young men protesting found amnesty to be a "slap in the face" to the more than 28,000,000 veterans still living today; while Mr. Johnson also stated that the Vietnam war veterans have been hassled enough. It seems to me that although the war was rough on them, many of them seem to be living in the glory of the "old war days." My uncle, Capt. John Fellows USN, was a POW for a number of years, where he suffered greatly. I have seen his wife and him fly off to Las Vegas, Puerto Rico, and other various places, all expenses paid (flight, hotel, meals, and even spending money). He is a very good speaker and loves to tell audiences his stories of torture, which he is often paid to do. He does not seem to be running into any hassles now and should not feel insulted; America has done what it could for him. He did what was right for him, and those who went to Canada did what was right for them.

I would also like to add to these T-shirt wearing protesters, that I think that the wording of their shirt is in poor taste and very tacky, as well as sexist.

As for those who question Carter's compassion, I question the compassion of those many American GI's who raped, killed, and dismembered the bodies of many helpless pleading women and children villagers in the hundreds of My Lai type incidents. How compassionate is that?

I believe that we should raise Longwood's flag in observation of Carter's decision to do as the presidents before him have done, and allow the draft dodgers back to their home. This immoral war is over and probably is best forgotten for awhile.

Sincerely,
Lisa Fellowes

Atlanta Ballet Company To Perform February 13

By SANDY WILLIAMS

An outstanding cultural event is soon to take place at Longwood. The Atlanta Ballet, one of the finest professional ballet companies in the country, will perform in Jarman Auditorium, February 13, at 8:00 p. m.

As the United States' oldest company, the dance group is noted for their many accomplishments. In 1970, the National Association for the Regional Ballet named them a "Major Company." The Atlanta Ballet is one of four out of four hundred to receive such an honor. Moreover, in 1973, then Governor Jimmy Carter, signed a proclamation initiated by the Georgia State Legislature proclaiming them "The State Ballet Company of Georgia."

In June of 1973, the artistic director, Robert Barnett, formed the Atlanta Ballet Touring Ensemble, which is comprised of ten principal dancers. The touring ensemble is a member of the National Endowment for the Arts Dance Program. The traveling group has had a varied program since its inception. In addition to performances throughout the Southeast, the touring ensemble participated in the 1974 Alaska Festival of Music in Anchorage. This was the first time a professional ballet company extensively toured the state of Alaska.

Though the dancers have acquired a great amount of fame, one of their main goals is to entertain and to inform those individuals who are not knowledgeable in this area of the art world. In conjunction with the National Endowment for the Arts and the Georgia Council for the Arts, the Atlanta Ballet Touring Ensemble completed its second annual community tour of Georgia. The Company has visited as many as seventeen small towns throughout the State, introducing dance to some of the more remote parts of Georgia. During these tours, the dancers find time to stop at places of confinement to dance before audiences with little or no exposure to the outside world.

Longwood is fortunate to have signed such an acclaimed and talented dance company. Hopefully, on February 13, everyone will take advantage of this educational and cultural event.

Pageantry And Scenery Highlight The Pallisers, PBS' New Serial

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

"Love?" snarls the Duke from his glass of claret, "Love?...I thought we were talking about marriage." And so begins the saga of Glencora McCluskie and her stock-merger marriage to Plantagenet Palliser in the PBS' episodic presentation of Anthony Trollope's novel The Pallisers.

This new addition to the library of television novels, chronicles the romantic and political fortunes of an elite circle of high society during the late Victorian Era. Contemporary British novelist Simon Raven adapted the gigantic 4,400 page work, organizing the action and character relationships and modernizing the dialogue into a workable television script that will air for a sequence of twenty-two episodes.

The first segment, presented Monday, January 31 began with the proverbial ill-fated marriage of "frivolous" Glencora McCluskie to the noble, but boring, Plantagenet Palliser. Palliser's uncle, the Merrill-Lynch of matchmaking, threatens to cut his potential heir off from his estate unless he marries the socially and financially affluent Glencora. Plantagenet, in need of economic backing to run for public office, reluctantly ends his intellectual relationship with Lady Dumbello and agrees to propose to Glencora. The Duke assures him that in time they will grow to love one another. If not, after she bears him a few sons he sees no reason why he can't find satisfaction elsewhere—provided that he is conscientious of "keeping scandal off the drawing room carpet and into the shrubbery where it belongs."

There is no question as to whether Glencora will accept. Her guardian, Lady Hofferlop and her back-gate sidekick have already decided that she will not disgrace "the good family name" by becoming involved with that gambling, philandering, but dashing, Burgo Fitzgerald. Glencora submits and moves from melancholy resignation to a fantasy-like determination to be a dutiful wife to Plantagenet.

Passion and restlessness eventually overwhelm her sense of duty. Metric-minded Plantagenet cannot understand why she is bored with their European honeymoon, nor does he know what to do to appease her. The arrival of her cousin Alice Vassor and her party (including Alice's ex-fiance George, who is Burgo's closest friend) takes care of Glencora's unhappiness and Plantagenet's problem of entertaining her. Through George she meets Burgo at a fencing exhibition and the old flame is burning again.

Three-time Emmy award winner, Susan Hampshire, plays the role of Glencora. Her combination of physical delicacy and headstrong vivaciousness suit the part of the empassioned young aristocrat. Philip Latham, in the role of her husband, Plantagenet Palliser, acts as a soft spoken yet stern compliment. Generally, most of the characters presented so far are credibly portrayed. The only characterization that seems a little strained is that of Burgo Fitzgerald. The problem here is that the actor is physically distracting. He appears to be too young to have been as notorious as the other characters describe him.

The production itself is visually exciting. The splendor and self-indulgence of the Victorian elite is depicted in a costumed and scenic pageantry of color and movement. Having been four years in the making, the production reflects a great sense of care in historical as well as dramatic perspective. Raven's co-ordination of plot and rendering of modern dialogue have conquered the "time warp" that often makes older, vintage works cumbersome to the modern reader.

The introductory and episodic supplements by British stage actor Sir John Gielgud also help to clarify historical, social and political points.

Try to catch this series. It is an entertaining, personal glimpse of the Victorian Era in which people, much like ourselves, lived and loved.

Dick Tracy, The Daddy Of All Cops And Robbers

By JAN TURNER

"Just throw 'em in jail and let 'um-rot"-you can open almost any newspaper and read another exciting episode of Dick Tracy, the daddy of all cops and robbers. The square-jawed, plain-clothed cop is merely an imaginary figure in most of our minds, but when we sink down in our chairs and silently root for our hero, we know that somewhere there IS a cop such as he.

Dick Tracy was born on September 1, 1931, to the Chicago Tribune. It was the original police comic strip. His inventor was Chester Gould, a man who worked diligently for many years and didn't make it to the top until Tracy came into the world. Gould needed a little help along the way, and he got it from his boss, Joseph Patterson. Patterson believed the comic strip was important to all people, and he saw to it that Dick Tracy became a full-fledged policeman.

The original name for the strip wasn't Dick Tracy, it was Plainclothes Tracy, a name made up by Gould. It was changed later to the present day title by Patterson. He assured Gould that the new name would enhance a larger audience. What he said appeared to be true and still is today. It runs in over five hundred newspapers and the readership probably exceeds a hundred million.

The comic strip has an interesting history behind it. Why was Dick Tracy ever created? For quite some time, Gould had been angered by the inconsistency of the police force, and the fact that criminals were still stalking the streets at night. He was even more disgusted with the way that the hoodlums performed their unchallenging tasks. So, he made up a hero-cop who would take the crooks into custody and MAKE the charges stick. Villains such as Flattop and Flyface committed crimes that sent chills up the spines of everyone. And oh yes, Dick Tracy had a soft spot left in his heart for the one and only, Tess Trueheart.

The violent conflicts that had previously occurred in outer space and the jungle were now alive in the streets of our own country. And Mr. Tracy was there to save us all from harmful needs and grotesque robbers. Dick Tracy joined the police force because gangsters had murdered his fiance's father right in their own home. This was the first murder ever in a comic strip. The blood and guts that engrossed us all often caused some newspapers to drop the episode. But it was usually restored as soon as it was cleaned up a little.

Tracy's hook nose and square jaw are familiar all over the world. Every other police comic strip owes him something, such as a thank you, because without the invulnerable Dick Tracy, they never would have the stigma they do today. We all realize that in these busy times we rarely have a chance to relax and daydream about the almighty hero, but it's nice to know he's there just in case.

Victory At Last

By DEBBI NORTHERN

The Longwood men's basketball team upset Southside Community College 90-65 for their first victory of the season on Jan. 29. In the beginning, with SCC down by only a few points. The L. C. team and fans sensed victory when Longwood pulled to a 52-39 lead at half time.

Foul trouble plagued both teams. Longwood had 3 men foul out of the game in the second half. There were a total of 39 fouls in the first half, 26 against Longwood and 13 on Southside. In the second half there were only 30, eighteen of which belonged to Longwood.

Southside had a lot of trouble controlling the ball. They were called for traveling and double dribbling quite often.

Longwood showed much skill in taking command of the game. Their shooting percentage of 41 per cent was an improvement over previous games. The high scorers were Greg Gilliam with 22 points and Jimmy Yarbrough with 18 points. Both teams made good lay-ups, and Longwood made 78 per cent of their attempts.

Coach McNamee said that the shot selections in the other games have been poor and he has been encouraging the guys to pass to men closer to the basket. He stated that in this game the players had more patience and did a better job of moving the ball.

But on Monday, Jan. 31, the men lost to Ferrum by the score of 112-65. Ferrum's 7 man team worked well together and anticipated each other's moves effectively. They passed well and were able to make some good baskets. Several of the team members scored by dunking the ball.

Longwood could not seem to get points on the board, giving Ferrum an early lead which they retained throughout the game. At half time L. C. trailed by 30 points. Longwood was only able to sink 38 per cent of their field goal attempts. Jimmy Yarbrough lead the scoring with 20 points and Brian Welbaum had 12. Ferrum was able to practically shut out Longwood under the boards, only giving them 18 rebounds. Brian Welbaum got 7 of them.

McNamee commented that Ferrum just out executed Longwood. The coach felt that L. C.'s defense was good; their press worked causing Ferrum to have 22 turnovers. But Ferrum's defense also pressured L. C. into giving up the ball 38 times.

Longwood has had some injury problems lately. Several of the players have shin-splints and ankle problems. Jimmy Yarbrough had to leave the Ferrum game with 3 minutes remaining due to a troublesome leg.

The team's most exciting game took place on Feb. 2 against Mary Washington. Longwood had lost to them earlier in the season by 28 points when they went to Fredericksburg.

In their home game, the score was 33-25 in favor of Mary Washington coming into the second half. Our guys came out fired up and began to cut down the lead. Finally L. C. caught up and it became a very intense ball game. With 13:39 left in the second half, a technical was called on the MWC bench. The guest's lead was cut to only 4 points after the free throws. Jimmy Yarbrough tied the score by making a lay-up and sinking two free throws awarded to him.

The crowd rose to its feet in the excitement and roared as their team caused turnovers by playing great defense, which helped give them the lead.

Due to mistakes in the final seconds of the game, Longwood retained a 3 point lead and won their second game of the season, by a score of 67-64. Our guys deserve a lot of credit for never quitting. In the Mary Washington game, they used many types of defenses, a 1-3-1 zone, a 2-1-2 zone, and a 1-2-1-1 full court press which helped cause MWC to turnover the ball 24 times and create 17 steals. Longwood lost the ball 28 times.

The leading scorers for the game were Jimmy Yarbrough who had 17 points, Greg Gilliam had 14 points, and Benny Shaw with 13 points. L. C. put in 40 per cent of their field goal shots and had 68 per cent from the free throw line.

Coach McNamee was extremely proud of his team for making a second half come-back to win the game. He said that their changing defense and offense created the pressure needed to offset Mary Washington's height advantage.

The men will be on the road for the next two weeks, playing Ferrum and Radford. Their next home game is Feb. 22 against Southside Community College.

Women's Fencing Gaining Experience

By DEANNA VANWEY

The Fencing Team, coached by Miss Sally Bush, is looking very good this season. Although it is a very young group, from the matches they have competed in already this season, they have shown that they are fighters and have the potential to be a championship intercollegiate team in time. Right now, though, they need to get a little experience.

Members of the team include Susan Sparkman, a sophomore and the only returning player, Francoise Aubry, a senior and freshmen Missy Walker, Alda Brown, Cindy Morris, Angie Anthony, Laurie Delong, Sara Camacho, and Mary Diller.

The team played in many tournaments before their season started that were individual other than team events. Included in these tournaments were the Washington, D.C. Open, the Women's State Foil Competition and Longwood's Fencing Open. In all three of these Susan Sparkman placed and Alda Brown reached the semi-finals. In the Women's State Foil Competition Cindy Morris and Missy Walker also reached the semi-finals.

There has only been one intercollegiate match in which Longwood has participated in so far this season. This was a Quad-meet against the strong and highly experienced N.C. State, Lynchburg College and R-MWC, who is Longwood's old time challenger at this sport. Longwood lost against all three, but gave a good showing.

Longwood has two more home matches this season. On February 16 they play R-MWC and on February 21 they play Lynchburg. They should both be very good matches. Come out and support your fencing team.

SPORT FOLLIES

By DIANNE HARWOOD

FOLLY I: A Child No More

My previous articles have often made mention of "my new baby" the gymnastics team. Well, the "baby" came of age last week as the tumbleweeds upended defending state champs VPI & SU in a tri-meet at the University of Virginia. In the frosty U.Va. gymnasium, the Longwood Ladies amassed 69.75 points to better Techs' 66.90 and U. Va.'s 64.25. Longwood outscored both teams in floor exercise, vaulting and bars, but failed to place anyone in the beam. (Have to work on that one, girls!)

In this meet, each school entered four performers per event, the top three scores going toward the team totals. In most meets, four all-around gymnast plus two specialists are entered, with the top four out of six scores counting toward the final team total. Longwood took a first and second in vaulting; Margie Quarles with a 6.25 rating and DeDe Kirkpatrick with 5.85. Lisa Haynes placed first in floor exercise with 6.65 and Kim Furbee followed with a close second place score of 6.25. First place in the unevens went to LC's DeDe Kirkpatrick with a 6.45; Wendy Oliver placed third with a 5.75.

This spunky group of rascals are coming up in the world — a mark of a well-coached squad with dedicated participants. They are young and spirited; confident but not cocky. Hard work and dedication has brought them this far; hopefully it will take them further at the state meet in February. No predictions, no promises; just a little bit of practice and a little bit of prayer.

FOLLY II:

It was a so-so week in the world of basketball at ole LC. The weeks' campaign saw Longwood topple VCU by a 82-63 tally. VCU never posed much of a threat; I think the LC "iron poor blood" was contagious (thank goodness). Longwood held a comfortable 49-27 halftime lead in a game that saw all LC players on the scoreboard. Sue Rama lead the Longwood scoring column with 23 points.

The week end took Longwood to the backroads of North Carolina, and unfortunately a backseat to the NC teams. The JV's were the only victors on the trip as they stopped the East Carolina JV's by a score of 65-55. The first half was a see-saw battle with neither team being able to post a substantial margin. With 9:24 left in the game, LC went up 49-45 and was not to be headed again. With the help of freshman Kitty Hughes' 19 points, the JV record moved up a notch to seven wins and one loss.

The varsity bit the dust as they were defeated by the Lady Pirates 89-80. Longwood was off to a slow start, not being able to contain the ECU penetration. Anita Stowe had the hot hand and kept the team within striking distance. With 7:42 left in the first half, Longwood tied it up and the teams exchanged baskets for the remainder of the half. The second half was a problem. Longwood hit several minutes of hot and cold shooting, and unfortunately more cold than hot. The killer instinct was lacking despite the high scoring game. Anita Stowe hit for 19 points, Linda Baumbler for 18 (plus a game high of 21 rebounds) and Maryjane Smith chipped in 17. I thought both teams played well, and this was a good example of sportsmanship at its best. The ECU squad was very hospitable, now contrast that with the N.C. State team. Don't get me wrong; the State team is worthy of its national ranking (ninth). But that doesn't explain their lack of humanism. These people were tacky from the word go. But back to the subject.

The LC-State game started with a bang as each team chose a run-and-gun offense. State had a definite height advantage and used this to deny Longwood the second and third shots under the basket. The end of the first half saw Longwood trailing the Wolfpack 38-30. The second half was a bumper-Longwood couldn't score and couldn't keep the State team from scoring. State outscored Longwood 62-18 in the second half, making the final score Longwood 48, N.C. State 100.

The JV didn't have too much luck either as they dropped their final game of the season to a much taller State team, 83-50. Debbie Brown and Terry Donohue got into early foul trouble and had to be taken out, which took away what bit of height we did have. The JV's were also plagued with hot and cold spurts, which conclusively doesn't win games. Nevertheless, the JV's finish the year with a 7-2 record, and thanks for not making my prediction wrong. Fine season, girls.

Miss Burton Provides Insight Into Rec. Therapy

By MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

If any of the recreational therapy majors were uncertain as to the nature and the rewards of their field, those uncertainties were instantly dissolved last Thursday by Miss Julie Burton. Miss Burton, a recreational therapist with the Chippenham Hospital in Richmond, talked with recreational therapy and physical educational majors, outlining the program with which she is involved.

In an informal atmosphere, stopping to answer questions as they arose, Miss Burton described the environment in which she works. The Chippenham Hospital is a new and private hospital, considered a model for community health complexes, with every imaginable facility. Of the programs available, psychotherapy, group therapy, hydrotherapy, occupational and recreational therapy, the audience was particularly amazed with the scope of the recreational therapy program.

Miss Burton warned the girls that when they got out into the field, the ideal situations presented in text books very rarely exist. She illustrated her point by comparing the virtually non-existent facilities in Tucker Hospital, her first place of employment, to those unlimited facilities existing at Chippenham. Also emphasized was the needed creative capacity of a recreational therapist. In a situation where the recreational facilities are limited, the therapist must be extremely creative, yet creativity is also needed when an abundance of facilities is available.

The audience responded with excitement to Miss Burton's experience. She made no pretense as to the amount of work involved in such a program, but her enthusiasm attested to the resulting satisfaction and rewards in such a program.

Judicial And Residence Board Procedures

By TERRI VOIT

Judicial Board and Residence Board would like to provide the student body with more insight into the Judicial Board and Residence Board procedures. The following information concerning the procedures was provided by Gay Kampfmüller, Chairman of Judicial Board, and Sara Jo Wyatt, Chairman of Residence Board.

Judicial Board Procedures

When an infraction of the Judicial Board code has been reported to a member of the Judicial Board, the chairman and vice-chairman conduct an informal investigation with the accused student(s). If the informal investigation deems it necessary for a trial, the accused will be requested to appear before the Judicial Board for a formal investigation.

During the formal investigation, over which the chairman presides, the facts gathered from the informal investigation are presented to the Judicial Board. The student is given the opportunity to present her case (at which time a student counselor may be present), and then the board members may question the student to clarify any discrepancies.

After all testimony has been presented, the board members deliberate among themselves upon the decision. Excluding the chairman, each board member has the right to vote on a penalty. Once a decision has been reached the student and counselor are called into the room and presented with the verdict.

Residence Board Procedures

Infractions of the Residence Board code are reported to the Chairman of Residence Board who then contacts the vice-chairman. These two board members conduct an informal investigation of the accused student with the vice-chairman presiding over the investigation. If the informal investigation deems it necessary for a trial, the student will be asked to appear before the Residence Board for a formal investigation.

During the formal investigation, the vice-chairman presides and presents the facts gathered during the informal trial to the entire Residence Board. The student will give her testimony (at which time her counselor may be present), and the board members will be given an opportunity to ask questions to clarify any misunderstandings.

After all testimony has been heard, the members of Residence Board deliberate among themselves to review the facts and decide upon a verdict of innocence or guilt. If the student is found guilty, the members, excluding the vice-chairman will then vote on a penalty for the student. All members of the board have a vote in these decisions, and once the decision has been reached, the vice-chairman will call the student and her counselor into the Board Room and present the decision and penalty.

The student has the right to make an appeal of any decision handed down by either Judicial or Residence Board. This appeal must be presented in writing to the chairman of the Appeals Committee. Any student who wishes to make an appeal of the decision by the Appeals Committee, may do so to the President of the College. If a Student wishes to appeal a decision of the President of the College, she may do so to the Executive Council of the Board of Visitors.

In the past, there has been controversy between and among the students concerning Judicial and Residence Board procedures. You, the student body, have read the procedures for these two boards—IS THERE NEED FOR A CHANGE? YOU TELL US!

Legislative Board Urges Student Input

By DEBBIE WEBB

As most of you remember, last semester and before there were rashes of false fire alarms being pulled in some of the dorms. The Legislative Board is presently looking into ways to prevent this from occurring in the future. Everyone's help would definitely be appreciated.

Students are needed to work on the Help-Out and Evaluations committees. If anyone is interested, they should contact either Linda Crovatt or Terry Voit.

Plans are being made at this time for Student Government Day to be held in the spring. Senior Billie Brightwell is chairing the committee for the day, and there is the strong possibility that the event will actually cover two to three days. This will allow the students and faculty to spend more time together, which is the main purpose of the activity.

The Student Government retreat for next year will be held approximately two weeks after the academic year has begun. It will be open to the entire student body. The delay in the retreat from previous years will allow students to become settled and give them time to think about items they want to discuss.

Longwood has returned to the idea of a head table in the Dining Hall. At this time, the people sitting at the Head Table are the chairmen of Judicial, Legislative, and Residence Boards, the vice-chairmen of Legislative and Residence Boards, the editor of the Rotunda, IAA Presidents, and the chairman of Student Union. The actual table is the same one as before, the first one on the right as you enter the dining hall. All of these people plan to be at the table at 1:00 every afternoon if possible. In this way, students, faculty, and administration alike know where to find these students to talk to them.

An effort is being made to utilize the hall presidents more. On February 14, after Birthday Dinner, all halls in all dorms will have hall meetings. The purpose of the meetings is to get input from you. The students, concerning anything that needs to be discussed. From the meeting, the hall president will take the ideas to the dorm president, who will take them to Legislative Board. Everyone is urged to attend their hall meeting on February 14, and get their ideas into action!

As you may have noticed, the press conference scheduled for Feb. 1 was not held. Other activities posed conflicts; however, the press conference will be held later this month, so hold on to your ideas and questions.

Students are reminded that they are invited and urged to attend Legislative Board meetings. They are held in the Reading Rooms on Monday nights, at 7:00 p.m.

The deadline for contributions to the GYRE is February 18. For further information, or to submit art or written work, please contact the GYRE editors, Box 1135, or call Janeen Ortiz at 392-9248.

A Variety Of Talent Displayed During Black Culture Week

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS
And DEBBIE MOUL

Last week across the nation Americans observed Black Culture Week. Longwood College actively participated in the event by bringing to the surface the talent of the college black students.

Throughout the week, talent manifested itself in various ways. There were dramatic productions displaying the talent of those acting and producing. Others expressed their talent through music and dance.

Aside from the talent of the performers, the talent of those poets, playwrights and musicians authoring the original material should not be neglected.

One-Acts Display Student Playwright And Student Talent

"Do not lump us together . . . We are individuals." This is the plea of "Corners," the first of the two one-act plays by Jacqui Singleton presented during Black Culture Week. "Corners" was presented Monday, February 7, in the Studio Theater. Laurie Jones, Paulette Daniels, Sharon (Kool-Aid) Miller, "Charlene Wilbourne, Louise Nowlin and Renee Anderson made the dialogues come alive as the audience listened to the story of black Americans.

From Africa to slavery, from slavery to emancipation, from emancipation to the struggle to be truly free Americans —

"Corners" touches painfully yet proudly on these moments of American history and black American heritage. It is the design of the playwright within the play to "present varying degrees of black awareness," but as the play ends, the audience knows "the real knowledge comes in knowing individuals."

"For Those Who Aren't Allowed To Play the Game!!", the second of the one-acts, was performed Wednesday, February 9, in the jam-packed Studio Theater. The plot centers around Willi (Audrey Simms), and her twin brother and sister, Clifford (James Braxton) and Clarisse (Anna Butler). Since their mother's death two years ago, Willi, Clifford and Clarisse have been trying to make it on their own. Willi is a neighborhood attorney, while Clifford and Clarisse still attend high school. Willi attempts to be the mother figure for two "independent" teen-agers. After a morning of particularly loud arguments with Clifford and Clarisse, Willi finds herself being advised by her sympathetic, but nosey neighbor, Roberta (Allie Chaffin). Roberta tells Willi that she should stop being the referee and start "playing the game."

Playing the game leads Willi to some interesting experiences. She meets Clarisse's 25-year-old boyfriend, Ernest (James Yarbrough). Ernest tries to move in on Willi and is promptly kicked out. Clarisse is both jealous and hurt.

Meanwhile, Clifford is falsely accused of stabbing a white boy at school, but Willi says he must find another attorney because she's not going to defend him. When the stabbed boy's mother, Mrs. Reynolds (Susann Smith) and her attorney, Mrs. Grace (Barbara Brogaon) come to interrogate Clifford, Willi stands up for her brother and sends Mrs. Reynolds and Mrs. Grace home.

Soon Clarisse comes home after realizing that Willi was only trying to protect her from Ernest, who was a real "punk". Willi Clifford and Clarisse are once again a family.

"For Those Who Aren't Allowed To Play the Game!!" brought laughter and sympathy, and a great deal of applause.

In a conversation after the play, Jacqui said that she had written both plays during Christmas break. "Corners" was written especially for Black Culture Week. Certainly both plays added to the observance of Black Culture Week, just as every Singleton production has added to Longwood College life for all students.

Varied Talent In Production And Presentation

The Afro-American Student Alliance provided much charm, style, wit, and drama during two of the scheduled events for Black Culture Week.

By SANDY WILLIAMS

Get ready to sit back, relax, and savor the music of the promising William Parker. This lyric baritone will be performing tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Wygal Building. The admission is free.

Whether he sings opera, in recital, or with orchestra. William Parker is always praised for the art and beauty of his song. This talent has secured his winning many singing contests all over the world. As a soloist in the United States Army Chorus, he began to garner prizes in various competitions.

In 1971 Mr. Parker received first prize in the Paris International Singing Competition and also the special Poulenc Prize. In addition to his two years in the roster of the Vienna Volksoper, Mr. Parker has sung with the Operal du Rhin in Strasbourg and in broadcast opera performances in Paris.

Because of Parker's wide experience and past history of success, this event, sponsored by the Visiting Artist Series and the Student Union, should prove both moving and eloquent.

The Ebony "Fashion Flair" presented Wednesday night in the Gold Room exhibited various ensembles for an evening out with your man, a casual Sunday lunch or an evening at home. The styles of modeled clothing ranged from a gray pin-striped three-piece suit to a balck, yellow, green, and red tent style sundress tying at the shoulders.

Many of the ensembles displayed were through the courtesy of Cato's, Leggett's, and Baldwin's department stores. Other modeled clothes were created by the girls themselves. Valerie Davis created one fashion, and Laurie Jones created three of the charming outfits displayed.

Piano music, emcees and colored lights added the final touch to the lovely presentation.

A touch of wit and drama surfaced Thursday evening in the student directed variety show, "To Be Young, Gifted and Black." Anita Cameron introduced the acts, which ranged from melodramatic and reverent poems about salvation and identity, to the sophisticated ladies, Charlene and Kool-Aid, who freely strutted their stuff on stage.

Alpha Kappa Alpha, Longwood's Newest And First Black Sorority

By DEBBIE MOUL

Much recognition has been given to the new male colony, Sigma Phi Epsilon, but the attention should now be focused on Longwood's new sorority, Alpha Kappa Alpha. AKA, a service sorority was founded in 1908 at Howard University in Washington, D.C.

Several individuals have worked diligently since last March to get AKA on the campus, and having been successful, AKA was pledged and initiated last Sunday. There are now twelve black members, Sharon Miller, "Kool-Aid", is the president of the sorority, and Lelia Austin, Doreen Nunnally, Betty Reed, Beulah Bolden, Brenda Hamlett, Cheryl Bailey, Thomasine Harris, Audrey Simms, Grace Hardy, Allie Marie Chaffin and Connie Barbour are acting members.

AKA's colors are pink and green and the flower is the pink tea rose. AKA is known nationwide for singing, a part of a black sorority's culture. On February 19th, the sorority will receive their chapter name.

Although there have been many trials and tribulations, AKA is here to stay!

Works Of Bob Dylan Being Offered On Campuses Across The States

By RUSS SMITH
(CPS) — "Twenty years of schoolin' and they put you on the day shift," whined Bob Dylan in 1965. But now Dylan himself — after fifteen years of myth-building and paying literary dues — is being put back into schools, as Dylan seminars spring up on campuses around the country.

It doesn't take a fortune teller or gypsy from Desolation Row to know that the next generation will find Dylan's words bound between Viking cloth covers, stacked 300 high in college bookstores, right next to Rimbaud and Whitman. In the coming years, it will be the professors and critics who were raised on Dylan that will be determining what is of "Literary merit," not their crotchety teachers who rejected "the youth's voice of the sixties."

"Anyone who thinks Dylan is a great poet has rocks in his head," snorted a University of Vermont English professor in 1965, summing up academia's attitude towards Dylan (himself a University of Minnesota dropout).

Not so long ago just a handful of maverick teachers were quoting Dylan's words, mostly graduate instructors who led clandestine discussions in seedy coffeehouses, seeking a respite from an outdated curriculum of a stuffy English department. Or the draft resisting music teacher who almost lost his for goading seventh graders into a secret verse of "Blowin' in the Wind."

Today, Dylan is not only taught by legions of teachers throughout the country, but is thought by some to be the major poet of our era.

In the last two years, courses dealing with Dylan have been offered at such diverse colleges as the University of Southern California, the State University of New York, Johns Hopkins University and Dartmouth College.

At a recent meeting of the Modern Language Association in San Francisco, fifty scholars, almost all young English professors, gathered to discuss "The Deranged Seer: The Poetry of Arthur Rimbaud and Bob Dylan," and how Dylan's view of women has evolved from "macho posturing" to "reconciliation of the sexes."

"I always use Dylan in my poetry classes, it's the most popular section of the course," says Belle D. Levinson, professor of English at SUNY at Geneseo. "Increasingly," she adds, students are more familiar with Dylan's songs, mostly because he's being taught in high schools."

Levinson emphasizes the

"crucial links" between the poetry of Dylan and the French Symbolists, particularly Rimbaud and Baudelaire. She lectures about the similarity of Dylan's and Rimbaud's psychic trips, how both "were drained by drugs and came out with changed senses of perception." Their poetry is that of "evocation and experience rather than description." Levinson often compares Dylan's "Mr. Tamborine Man" to Rimbaud's "The Drunken Boat" since both poems are surrealistic, drug induced, mystical journeys.

At Geneseo, two of Levinson's colleagues taught an interdisciplinary course on the music and poetry of Dylan that drew scads of student raves.

The chairman of the Modern Language conference, Patrick Morrow of Auburn University in Alabama, agrees that Dylan's time has arrived in "higher learning" but stresses that it's mostly the junior colleges and state schools that are leading the trend. "Popular culture has not been accepted by most major colleges yet," he asserted. Morrow himself taught a pop culture course at USC which he found was extremely popular with students.

Morrow, praising Dylan's eclectic taste in literature, explains, "Dylan is powerful because he has the vision to seize the spirit of a movement, much like Yeats."

William McClain, professor of German at Johns Hopkins in Baltimore, was tickled when a few of his students "uncovered direct parallels in the writings of Dylan and playwright Bertolt Brecht. "It's wonderful to know that the words and moods of Brecht are available through Dylan on the juke boxes of America!" McClain said.

And at Dartmouth College, where a seminar called "The Songs of Bob Dylan" was offered last fall, Bob Ringle, a biology major, remarked, "It was one of the best courses I've had. I was somewhat skeptical at first, not knowing much about Dylan, but I found that some of his songs recreated the themes of Browning, Blake and Rimbaud."

Dylan is only the latest in a long succession of renegade writers who were scorned by the literati of their day. Rimbaud was detested by the Parisian men of letters in the early 1870's, and was running guns in Asia before cultists succeeded in legitimizing his poetry. Whitman's masterful Leaves of Grass was banned for its "obscene and immoral

Dr. Sydnor Finishing Second Film Documentary

By DEBBIE MOUL

Dr. Charles Sydnor, Assistant Professor of History at Longwood is in the process of completing his second historical film documentary, dealing with the American occupation of postwar Germany. The one-hour film deals primarily with the role that the United States foreign policy played in Germany in the development of the Federal Republic of Germany. The program covers the period from 1945 to 1949, and should be completed in the studio in about two weeks.

The documentary emphasizes the transition in postwar American foreign policy. It examines how the United States, under the leadership of General George C. Marshall, took its own initiative and decided to pursue, independently of the Soviet Union, a policy designed to reconstruct Germany, both economically and politically.

The documentary is based on interviews with major participants in the American occupation of Germany, those individuals instrumental in formulating and executing United States foreign policy. They include General Lucius D. Clay, the military governor of the American zone in Germany; General Ahril Harman, the director of the European Recovery Program; John J. McCloy, President Roosevelt's assistant Secretary of War; Ambassador James W. Riddleberger, General Clay's State Department political advisor; Ambassador Robert D. Murphy, also one of Clay's political advisors; and Ambassador Earnest A. Gross, the deputy assistant Secretary of State.

Dr. Sydnor's primary source for his work was his own knowledge. Secondary sources were secured from the National Archives Building in Washington, D.C. He is continuing working with Al Moffett, who is currently the Director of Communications for the Virginia Farm Bureau Federation in Richmond.

Dr. Sydnor's initial film documentary, a biography of Hitler, is hoped to be aired on national television sometime this spring, but it could be deferred and scheduled for the fall television season. It will be shown in such cities as Harrisonburg, Roanoke, and Annandale.

Once again, many congratulations are to be extended to Dr. Sydnor!

Longwood Pageant

Judges Chosen From Area

By LISA TURNER

Preliminary judging for the Miss Longwood Pageant began last night and will continue tonight. At this time, five judges will select 10-12 finalists for the April 2 pageant. They will do this on the basis of stage personality and poise, a short talent presentation and individual four minute interviews with each of the 20 contestants. The preliminaries are closed to the general public, so the results will be announced next week.

How are the judges selected? According to Brenda Williams, Judges Chairman, the five judges for the preliminaries are chosen from qualified people in the area. None of them are affiliated with either Longwood College or any of the contestants. Judges were chosen by the pageant staff, which considered their backgrounds, their experience in judging or knowledge of music, dance or fashion. The five selected for the preliminaries are not the five who will judge the pageant itself.

The preliminary judges are Mrs. J. Stokely Fulton (a local dance instructor), Douglas Kilpatrick, Richard Vaughn, Mrs. Robert Carter (an area merchant), and Dr. Albert Elmore (from Hampden-Sydney College).

One very important thing the girls are competing for is a chance at one of three scholarships. According to the Miss America pageant's instructions for judges, the winner will not be merely a beauty queen; most importantly she must be intelligent, dignified, and possess poise and several other important qualities.

The Longwood College Foundation has provided a $500 scholarship for the winner of the pageant. Long College Productions, Inc. will present two scholarships, $300 to the first runner-up and $150 to the second runner-up.

College Republicans Attend State Convention

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Longwood College Republicans recently chartered with the College Republican Federation of Virginia. Pat Jones, one of the Longwood Republicans, attended the convention which took place from Feb. 4-6. On the club's behalf, she accepted an award which was conferred upon the Longwood Republicans as the Best New Club of the Year.

The convention assembled to draw up and approve a platform, part of which was sent to the Virginia State Legislature. Convention speakers included Senator Marshall Coleman and Delegate Wyatt Durrette, who are both seeking the Republican nomination for Attorney General; Senator Joe Canada, who intends to run for Lt. Governor and Lt. Gov. John Dalton. The keynote speaker was Richard D. Obenchain, the former co-chairman of the Republican National Committee. He spoke about the up-coming elections.

Last semester the L.C. Republicans actively campaigned for Ford by working with the Farmville Senior Party, canvassing with Washington and Lee, distributing fliers conducting surveys and working with the mock elections. They also encouraged students to vote by absentee ballots.

speaking. This semester the club will be revising its charter, raising funds, and preparing for the November elections. A meeting will be held tonight at 7:00 in the Honors Council Room in Lankford.

Team Loses Both Games

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

On February 5, Longwood's men's basketball team traveled to Hampden-Sydney to take on the Tigers and on February 8 they went to play Ferrum. Longwood was unable to win either away game. Coach McNamee said that his team just did not play well. Both H-SC and Ferrum hurt Longwood on the boards by getting the rebounds and taking 2nd and 3rd shots. They were able to out-shoot, out-rebound, and out-defend L.C. causing us to lose the ball 38 times against H-SC and 16 times against Ferrum.

McNamee remarked that Longwood's shot selections in these games were better than they had ever been. The team was getting the ball down the court quickly and taking lay-ups to play the best offensive ball game of the year. Even though Longwood hit 46 per cent to 48 per cent of their shots from the field, their foul line shooting was not up to par. Also the "little men" on the Longwood squad, Jimmy Yarbrough and Bennie Shaw pulled down the most rebounds in the H-SC game in which Longwood was defeated 132 to 59.

Longwood only took eight team members to play the six man Ferrum team. Ferrum hit most of their shots and penetrated Longwood's defense to set up a half time lead of 59 to 30. The final score was 123 to 64.

Lately there have been several team members who have been sick and this hurt Longwood in the last two games.

This week Longwood has two games. One is away at Radford on February 17 and the other is at home on February 19 against Averett. Coach McNamee believes the Radford game will be tough, but he thinks his team is definitely capable of defeating Averett.

Longwood's Riding Team Gains Varsity Status

By DEANNA VANWEY

Longwood's riding team, that has in past years been an interest group, gained varsity status this week from the Virginia Region of Intercollegiate Horsheshowing Association. Coached by Ms. Sally Bush, this team did very well last fall and is looking forward to a good season this spring, also.

The team's first show of the season will be this week end at the Barracks, in Charlottesville. This show is sponsored by the University of Virginia Riding Club and starts at 11:00 a.m., Saturday morning.

The team this spring consists of five riders, Debbie Cross, Dee Clemmer, Marg Jackson, Megan McDonald, and Julie Tracy. All five are experienced riders and should do very well.

There will be four other shows this spring. Competition in these shows consists of eight divisions. Eligibility requires the rider to have scored in previous matches. Various Longwood riders are eligible for various classes, according to their past performances.

The best of luck to these riders! Please come and show your support.

Skilling Isn't just fun, glamour and excitement. It's health, fitness and happiness too.

Skiers really know how to live. And knowing how to live is one of the secrets of a long life. To live better... to live longer, means taking the simple care to exercise well. Because regular exercise is the only way to keep all of your 600 muscles in shape. Especially the most important one — your heart.

So, check into skiing at a ski area or shop near you. Or hike, or bike or play squash or swing a tennis racket. Join the people going for the good life.

SPORT FOLLIES

By DIANNE HARWOOD

Folly I

The sun was shining on the Longwood athletic teams this week as the gymnastics and basketball teams both escaped contest, with narrow wins. The gymnastic girls scored 104.65 points to Appalachian State's close 100.85 and William and Mary's 83.4. Each squad entered six girls in each event, four all-around and two specialist. Of the six competing, the top four scored went toward the team total.

The balance beam crew gave the strongest performance yet with Debbie Kinzel taking first place with 7.75. DeDe Kirkpatrick scored a 6.5; Bunny Wadsworth scored a 6.25. Margie Quarles took second in vaulting with a 7.9; DeDe Kirkpatrick placed third with a 7.75 rating. In floor exercise, Kim Furbree and Bunny Wadsworth tied for third with a 7.5. The unevens were the weak spot this week despite DeDe Kirkpatrick's 6.75 second place finish. Miss Kirkpatrick also took second place in all-around competition with a total 28.3 points. The next gymnastics meet is Saturday, February 19 at 2:00 in French Gym. East Carolina University will hopefully be the next to fall. Box scores later, on the basketball.

Bars: Kirkpatrick — 6.75; Wadsworth — 4.65; Oliver — 4.65; Kinzel — 4.25; Bona — 3.15; Cress — 2.7.

Beam: Kinzel — 7.75; Kirkpatrick — 6.5; Wadsworth — 6.25; Cress — 5.5; Stenfaniga — 4.65.

Vault: Quarles — 7.9; Kirkpatrick — 7.75; Kinzel — 6.85; Dunivant — 6.35; Wadsworth — 5.95; Cress — 5.75. Floor: Furbree — 7.5; Wadsworth — 7.5; Kirkpatrick — 7.3; Hanes — 7.2; Kinzel — 5.5. All-Around: Kirkpatrick — 28.3; Wadsworth — 24.35; Kinzel — 24.35; Cress — 20.85.

Folly II

The basketball team got back in the winners column (bravo!) this week with a 79-77 thrilling win over Radford College. Its been a while since the space queens have showed us what they are capable of, so this victory is a relief to all.

The first half was all Radford as they controlled the boards and the nets. The fast tempo was slowed only by numerous fouls that hampered each teams performance. Radford held a 43-31 lead at the half, but the big story is the second half. Longwood started out with its normal coldness, until freshman Courtney Mills made her first (and possibly last) appearance in the game. Miss Mills provided the spark the LC team needed as she promptly came up with two steals that were converted into scores and then drove for the basket herself. Mills left the game shortly thereafter with a reoccurring knee injury, but the LC girls were on their way. The game was tied at 64-64 with 6:49 left in the game and was an exchange game until the buzzer. With six seconds left in the game and Longwood up by two, Mary Louise McCraw was tied up at the Radford end. Radford controlled the tap and took the shot, but a Linda Baumler block prevented the score, giving LC the 79-77 decision. Sue Rarna was high (point-wise) with 26, followed by Anita Stowe with 18.

With the state tournament three weeks away, things are getting interesting. The "weaker" teams have upset the "stronger" teams, and vice versa. The state title is up for grabs. Seedings are next to impossible. What it will boil down to is who plays the best ball on a particular night. Just hope Longwood plays the best ball.

Fencing Team Needs Support

By Deanna Vanwey

Longwood Fencer's again suffered this week from lack of experience. They competed in a tri-meet Saturday against William and Mary and Clemson, and a dual meet Tuesday night against Madison. Against all three teams Longwood looked strong. Statistics just do not show how very close the matches were.

Against William and Mary, Longwood lost 3-13. The high scorer of the meet first team was Susan Sparkman, who won two out of her four matches. On the second team, who lost 2-10, Sara Camacho and Mary Diller were high scorers.

Against Clemson, Longwood lost 4-12, but actually the match could have gone the other way easily. The first three bouts of this match went to label, which is a match point in which the score is even and the next touch determines the bout. Against Susan Sparkman was high scorer for the first team. The second team lost 5-11. High scorer for this team was Francoise Aubry, who won three out of her four bouts.

Tuesday night, against Madison, Longwood looked the best it has this season. After fourteen bouts the score was tied 7-7, then Longwood faltered in the last two bouts, losing 7-9.

February 21 the fencers have a match against Lynchburg at home. It might really help the team if it had a little school support. The match starts at 6:00 p.m., please come.

Talent-Not A Weekly

Happening At Longwood

FROM THE EDITOR . .

Alas, the problems of coeducation. To hear some people talk you'd think that coeducation has yet to happen at Longwood, but like it or not, it is a fact. Men are living, and will continue to live on campus. The will continue to share classes with women, and they will on occasion eat at the dinner table with women.

Yes, the intergration of males and females has occurred; unfortunately, the resulting atmosphere is a little less than aimiable. Obviously, the men on campus would not be here unless they wanted to be here; no one twisted their arms and they were well aware that they were among the first resident males. What they did not expect was resentment. There is no reason why the men should be subjected to such resentment.

It seems rather sad that within a college community comprised of male and females of supposedly mature ages, that the two sexes cannot live in accord. The hostilities stem from various reasons, yet to those females who hope that through public hostility you will drive the males away, don't take yourselves too seriously. Should you succeed in turning away a few males this year, be assured that there will be more males next year.

The college has changed from a single sexed college to a coeducational college, and it is unlikely that the change will reverse. As with all major changes there will be some transitional changes. The solution to the immediate problem, however, should be evident. We are all here together and we must learn to live together. If you should prefer to think of it as an educational experience, learning to live in a given situation, do so. Think of it as any experience you like, but please, let the bickering and resentment end so that we can all go on to better things.

Last week Longwood, as well as other colleges, celebrated the culture of black Americans by observing and participating in Black Culture Week. To those participants in the week's events, I'm sure that it was as educational as three hours of a week's lectures in any given class. To all students it should have been a time of awareness, of the realization that black culture and black talent does not merely emerge during one week of the year. It should be particularly easy to be reminded of such talent when the students of Longwood are constantly in the midst of the accomplished Jacqui Singleton.

It seems that Jacqui has tried her hand in just about every medium of self-expression. Her success has been marvelous and there is no way to predict what future success awaits her. Jacqui, as a single individual is to be admired. She stands as a constant reminder of the talent and artistry which is present at Longwood. Praise for her, and others like her, should not be limited to only one week of the year.

Behavior Questioned

Dear Editor,

We have just returned from the Saturday night Coffeehouse featuring Jon Ims. It was a shame that a gifted performer was received in such a manner. Unfortunately, the worst of it is that this night's audience was considered the best behaved. We were astounded when he referred to this night as the quietest of the three.

The audience was loud from the beginning, laughing and talking through most of his songs. To those of us who appreciated his music, this was most disturbing and very embarrassing. When he attempted to silence his hacklers, they were either too drunk or too dense to notice that his comments were directed at them. The final insult came when he was asked to perform other people's music instead of his own, when he himself had so much to offer.

We can only hope that in the future our guests will be received with more respect.

Social Rights

Dear Editor,

Is Longwood taking a step forward with the Men or a step backward with the Women? The women of Longwood have too long been oppressed and with the new male population at Longwood we feel a drastic need for a change in our social rights. Having the men at Longwood had been the only positive change ever but, are we allowed to enjoy it — NO! Why should it matter how long you keep a male in your room if it is alright with your roommate and suitmates? Believe it or not the world does not stop turning at 1:30 a. m. and begin again at 2:00 p. m. on the week ends. If your thoughts of open hours don't coincide with this, I am sure someone will be there to remind you! Longwood women have a lot of growing up to do in minding their own business, they could learn a lot from the Longwood Men. Must everything go on in secrecy at Longwood College? If not "You have 24 hours to turn yourself in!"

Defense Statement

Dear Editors,

Two weeks ago, in the Rotunda, there appeared an article entitled, "Silk-Screen Sexism", written by a non-student advisor of the paper. It stated that the choice of wording used on the T-shirts by a group of Freshman males, who were trying to show their opinion on the amnesty decision of President Carter, was vulgar as well as sexist.

I would like to state some of the facts to correct this comment. The statement that was so upsetting was, "1-21-77, Carter says, Pussy's come home". For some reason, you thought the word pussy was used so as to suggest that the worst way to cut down the draft resisters was to equate him to a woman.

As one of the T-shirt wearers myself, let me set you straight. The definition of pussy we used means pussy as in "pussycat", and pussy cat is a synonym for coward. It comes from the old military expression, "are you a tiger or a pussy cat?", such as a fighter or a coward. If you read anything else into this, then you're the one with the dirty-minds. Besides that, I'd think you, as an advisor, would know the words and their meanings.

I'd like to state a personal opinion that is more serious than the wording of a shirt...the draft itself. I don't believe any person deserves the freedom he has in this country if he is not willing to fight for it. Our country was engaged in a shooting war, even though undeclared, and our government elected by the people, committed us to it. If the individual citizen is to be allowed to decide what is a good war or a bad one, our country could not survive. The condition where people decide which laws to obey is the ultimate in individual liberty.

It may sound good but it is defined as anarchy. You can say you don't like the way the government is spending it's money on food stamps, building highways or supporting Israel. If you protest you don't pay your taxes, should you be pardoned? There's no difference. I believe Carter was wrong and still is. The people he should be taking care of are the Vets and MIA's.

Thanks
Tom Curtin

The World Of The Black Artist

Jacqui Singleton: Resident Artist

By SANDY WILLIAMS

Nine years ago she was writing "piddling little love stories that didn't make much sense" and had only begun taking piano lessons. Today, since high school, she has had a play broadcasted on an educational station, had an essay published in a national magazine, written lyrics and composed the music for several of our college plays, mastered five musical instruments, and has had many of her plays staged at Longwood for the students and townspeople. This unique and talented individual is Jacqui Singleton, a Norfolk native, who is a senior English-Drama major.

Miss Singleton started writing plays while still in high school. In 1973, her senior year, Miss Singleton's creative writing teacher noticed her exceptional writing ability and suggested that she try to have her play, "Through a Crack in the Wall," broadcasted on a Norfolk television station, WHRO. The local education station accepted it.

Her playwriting did not stop there. She has written twenty-three plays since entering Longwood. In the acting class, every student is required to direct a play as a final project. For the past three and one-half years, they have produced Miss Singleton's. In the past week, two more of her plays were staged: "Corners," a narrative with a cast of five, was given Monday night and "For Those Who Aren't Allowed to Play the Game" was held on Tuesday. This was an opportune time for those unfamiliar with her productions to be introduced to them because, as usual, they were a success.

Miss Singleton not only writes plays, but she also actively participates in them. As a member of the "Longwood Players," she has either had an acting part or been a crew member for every Longwood production since she has attended college.

There are many other genre in which Miss Singleton demonstrates her writing ability. While still in high school, she had an essay entitled "Oreos," published in a national literary magazine. She also enjoys writing romantic or nature oriented poetry. She even has a continuous poem, "Essence," which she never ends but she keeps adding to it.

Miss Singleton is also a whiz at writing, composing and singing songs, and at playing musical instruments. In the Longwood production of "Midsummer Night's Dream," she played the bassoon. She wrote "Old Lace and Lilacs," a song used for "Restroom at Rosenblooms." However, her biggie was the song "Laura's Theme," which she composed for "The Glass Menagerie." This selection as so spectacular that Owen Philips, the director of the Barter Theater in Abingdon, requested that she tape and send it to Tennessee Williams. The instruments she has mastered are the piano, flue, bassoon, drums and guitar.

Miss Singleton does not merely use her musical talents to accompany plays. She played her guitar and sang for two weeks at the popular "Mousetrap," a night club in Charlottesville.

Dancing should also be included in Jacqui's wide range of accomplishments. Last summer, as a member of the drama staff at Camp Louise in Cascade, Maryland, she served as choreographer for the musical, "Oliver." She also acted as the music director for their production of "Pajama Game."

Naturally she plans a career around her many talents but wants first to receive her master's degree in fine arts in directing and playwriting. Following graduation, her choices of schools are Florida State or the University of California, Davis Campus.

When asked the secret to a possible career in these areas, she responded, "It's important to get as much circulation as possible." She is well on her way because besides putting her various talents on public display, she has made three appearances on the Becky Livas Show, a local TV program in Norfolk.

We are fortunate to be in the presence of such an outstanding colleague.

Lorraine Hansberry...

"A Challenge To Artists"

By JACQUI SINGLETON

Besides her having been a gifted woman of unlimited abilities, Lorraine Hansberry has been noted as a free-thinker, a woman who was not afraid to speak her feelings as well as write them. Background material on her life is somewhat limited but on October 27, 1962, at Manhattan Center at a rally to abolish the House Un-American Activities Committee, Miss Hansberry spoke to artists all over the world about their own ability to make noticeable changes in a troubled country. And even though her speech contains very strong political overtones, the underlying theme of a challenge to all artists cannot go unemphasized.

Lorraine Hansberry was born in Chicago to an upper class family. Her father was a wealthy businessman and former United States Marshal. She graduated from the University of Wisconsin, where she gained practical knowledge of dramatics from university and community theatres. At the age of twenty-seven, she wrote A Raisin in the Sun, which, directed by Negroes and performed by an all-Negro cast headed by Sidney Poitier, became a Broadway hit, won the

New York Drama Critic's Award for 1958 and was produced as a motion picture by Columbia Pictures. Miss Hansberry died of cancer in 1966. Two years later, excerpts from her published and unpublished works were performed in an off-Broadway production called To Be Young, Gifted, and Black.

In her speech at the Manhattan Center, Miss Hansberry cited instances wherein the American people can become detached in the world.

"...we can get to the place where we read only the theatre or photography or music pages of our newspapers. And then we wake up one day and find that the better people of our nation are still there where they were when last noted them..."

She went on to talk about where artists are in the contemporary struggles. Some have made notable contributions. Some of the more serious actresses such as Shelly Winters and Julie Harris have associated themselves with some aspect of the peace movement and numerous other celebrities have made significant contributions to various groups and organizations. But where are the vast majority? In their studios so consumed with the idea of trying to find the meaning of life that they neglect the goings on of the world around them. In the contemporary arts, the rejection of the immediate world is no longer a mere grotesque threat, but a fact. Among her contemporaries, Miss Hansberry stated, the search for the roots of war, the exploitation of man, of poverty and of despair itself, is sought in any arena other than the one which has shaped the artists themselves.

One must guard against becoming a puppet for public and political opinion. There are wrongs done as well as heroic deeds and neither of these realities can be over-looked due to what happens to be fashionable to sing, write, or paint at the time. Miss Hansberry suggested that since everyone has the right to freedom of expression they must rise and exercise the rights we are defending. "We must paint them, sing them, and write about them."

Today Miss Hansberry is no longer with us but her philosophy and strength as an artist and most important of all, a black woman, will remain eternal in the heart of every artist who ever desired to someday touch thus change the world.

Prize Winning Annie Allen

We do not want them to have less.

But it is only natural that we should think we have not enough.

We drive on, we drive on.

When we speak to each other, our voices are a little gruff.

These powerful words come from a collection of poems entitled Annie Allen, composed by Gwendolyn Brooks. These poems enabled her to win the Pulitzer Prize in 1960, the first black to receive this award.

Annie Allen is truly deserving of the Pulitzer Prize. Annie Allen contains recollections, beginning with her childhood and continuing throughout her adult life, as a black living in a white world. She was frustrated, bitter, and angry at the way that blacks seemed to suffer such humiliation in their lives. She began writing whatever she thought she knew, or experienced. "I was to be a watchful eye, a tuned ear, a super-reporter," Miss Brooks has said.

Her strong will and determination grew out of her expressions. After reading Annie Allen over several times, it's emotional and thought provoking feelings may ignite guilt within the reader. The poems that Gwendolyn Brooks has written are not only jottings on paper, but they were put there because she felt her people were lost in a myriad of others. We can learn from them, and can also hop over on the other side of the fence for awhile.

Nobody is furious. Nobody hates these people.

It is only natural, however, that it should occur to us

How much more fortunate they are than we are.

It is only natural that we should look and look

At their wood and brick and stone

And think, while a breath of pine blows,

How different these are from our own.

False Fire Alarms: The Joke Is Over

By DEBBIE WEBB

Why Longwood is so lucky, no one knows. And if that's luck, we can well do without it. In contacting representatives of other colleges in the state, we find that we are singularly blessed in this area. The topic: false fire alarms. Having to pile out of your dorm at 2 a. m. in the rain because someone is having a little fun is not many students' idea of a good time. Aside from the inconvenience, there is a danger factor involved. When you have to quickly (but safely) go down 10 flights of steps for the third false alarm in one night (even in one week), tempers are hot and unfortunately, someone may get hurt.

Longwood College supports the Code of Virginia concerning false fire alarms.

"18.2-212. Calling or summoning ambulance or fire-fighting apparatus without just cause; maliciously activating fire alarms in public building. — Any person who without just cause therefor, calls or summons, by telephone or otherwise, any ambulance, or fire-fighting apparatus, or any person who maliciously activates a manual or automatic fire alarm in any building used for public assembly or for other public use, including but not limited to, schools, theatres, stores, office buildings, shopping centers and malls, coliseums and are as, regardless of whether fire apparatus responds or not, shall be deemed guilty of a Class 1 in misdemeanor. If a student is caught or suspected of setting a false alarm, he or she will be brought to trial before Residence Board. If found guilty, the student will face possible suspension from school.

Most of you reading this article are not the ones guilty of these offenses. You, like a large percentage of the student body are tired of being awakened in the middle of the night for a bit of fresh air. If one of your friends wants to pull an alarm for a joke, please discourage them. You'll be doing all of us a great service, and perhaps keep someone from being hurt.

Unfortunately, most of the measures that could be used by the college to catch an offender are very expensive. If anyone has any suggestions on how to alleviate the problem, please contact either Residence Board or Legislative Board. If we all work together, maybe we'll be able to sleep better at night — uninterrupted.

Legislative Board Asks For Student Suggestions

By DEBBIE WEBB

Every three years, each organization on campus must have its constitution revised and/or revoked on by Legislative Board. The purpose of this is to delete any clause which is no longer applicable, and to add in any that have developed since the last revision. Legislative Board began its meeting, Monday, February 7, by approving the Lynchons constitution as amended.

Sophomore Katy Rafferty will act as chairman for the Organizations and Evaluations Committee, with freshman Pam (C.B.) Brown helping her. The new chairman of Help-Out committee is Kim Furbee.

Student Government Day is tentatively set up for March 2 and 3. More details will be given later as plans are finalized.

Legislative Board is sponsoring one of its freshman representatives Debi Kinzel, for the Miss Longwood Pageant this spring.

It is hoped that everyone attended their hall meeting last night. The purpose of the

By LINDA CICOIRA

With respect to the article in last week's Rotunda concerning the housing of upper class male students, Dean Heintz was questioned as to what consideration the matter is presently being given. It is her opinion that additional residence hall space may be needed in the near future for the male students. However, it is not known whether Cox or Wheeler will be considered.

When asked what her view was on the hostility of some female students in these dorms, Dean Heintz concluded that their views also have to be considered.

When questioned as to the possibility of an all male dorm she answered, it just isn't possible at this time.

Three current residents of Cox, Maria Corbin Ann Fournier, and Lee Bruno, agreed in opposition of the idea, saying, "We don't want them in Cox, but we do agree that they should have living quarters on this side of campus. However, we women should have a choice between co-ed or an all girl's dorm and Cox's choice is all girl's." Lee and Ann added, "Why can't the state do something about their lack of housing? They brought the guys here."

meetings was to get ideas and questions from you, the students, about things that need to be changed or revised. It is only through working together, with everyone's support, that changes can be made.

Please don't forget about the Press Conference in the Gold Room Thursday, February 17, at 12:45. Come armed with questions and/or ideas!! Here's your chance to find out.

If you have an idea or suggestion and don't know who to give it to, use the suggestion boxes located around the campus (at the Information Office, the New Smoker, Dr. Willett's office, and by the Snack Bar). From there any suggestions will go to the proper authority, whether it is student or administration.

If anyone has any suggestions for changes or improvements in Orientation, you can send them to Cathy Lowe, Box 576.

Everyone is invited to attend any Legislative Board meeting. As always, they will be in the Reading Rooms in Lankford, at 7 p.m. on Mondays. Hope to see you there!

No Decision Available On Additional Male Housing

When asking another resident of Cox a different kind of reply followed. T. Jones said, "I think they have every right too. I don't think they should be confined to Frazier. It's degrading."

Carol Lewis, former chairman of residence board and present residence of Cox said, "Let them come. If they have guys in this dorm I would want 24 hour visitation. I couldn't have that I'd rather let them stay where they are."

passages." And Ezra Pound's poetry was proclaimed "incoherent, the work of a madman."

This slow acceptance is probably no surprise to Dylan, who has an acute sense of history and always plays his cards right. His songs are like a newsreel of the sixties and seventies, filled with the movements, fads, slang and personalities of the time, songs that were made to be examined thirty years after they were written.

Dylan will most likely be a grandfather by the time they teach "Advanced Blonde on Blonde" at Oxford, but as he once said, "I'm still gonna be around when everybody gets their heads straight."

Longwood Instructor's Play Produced In D.C.

By JACQUIS SINGLETON

Mr. Douglas Young, assistant professor in the Department of Speech and Drama here at Longwood, has recently had his play Miss Doris Anderson for the Works-in-Progress program at the Back Alley Theatre in Washington, D.C. The program, which started this season, consists of performances on week nights for an invited audience, community based organizations, artists, and arts groups. Material performed consists of new plays not yet ready for major stage production, scenes from classical or contemporary repertory to "showcase" actors or directors, poetry readings and improvisational or developing materials from the Back Alley's teen acting company.

Mr. Young's play, which was published in the Winter, 1974 edition of Southern Theatre magazine, was the first offering under this new program. The play was based on an article written by celebrated columnist Nicholas Von Hoffman dealing with a real-life incident of a black woman caught in the throes of a bureaucratic society. We follow Ms. Doris Anderson through the bureaucracy as she is shuttled from office to office trying to abort an eviction. In her attempts she is dragged off to jail, sentenced before an "unhearing" judge and thrown into a mental hospital where she is kept busy scrubbing floors until she realizes that playing the game is the only way to survive. And keep a roof over your head.

As for Mr. Young's opinions of the production, he finds that the comic treatment of the bureaucrats is the only misinterpretation presented. The audience, who critiqued the play, were very supportive. However, they thought Miss Doris Anderson to be too naive for a thirty-five year old woman. Mr.

Young states that because of the quality of the critics, and audience, the playwright could learn immensely and receive valuable experience.

Mr. Young was a Shubert Playwriting Fellow at the University of Virginia in 1968-69, where two of his full-length plays received productions by the University of Virginia Players. He is a native of Salisbury, N.C., and was a reporter for the Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News before receiving his master's degree from University of Virginia. He is currently completing his Ph.D in Theatre from Florida State University. He has had plays produced in Denver, Colorado, and by the Theatre Wagon Repertory Company of Virginia.

I'm sure we would like to extend our hardy congratulations to Mr. Young and wish him much future success with his playwriting pursuits.

Dr. Hansard To Lecture In Jeffers Thursday

By SANDY WILLIAMS

Dr. Sam L. Hansard, professor of animal nutrition at the Comparative Animal Research Laboratory at Oak Ridge, Tennessee, will speak on fetal-maternal mineral nutrition this Thursday, February 24, in Jeffers Auditorium at 7:00 PM.

On August 17, 1976, Dr. Hansard received the coveted Morrison Award which is presented annually to a member who has made outstanding contributions to animal science through research and teaching. In the forty year history of the award, it was only the second time it had been given to a southern scientist.

Dr. Hansard has also participated in several international symposiums, received numerous awards, and written more than 300 articles for publication in scientific journals.

Male Housing Dominates Press Conference

By BILLY ROGERS

Dr. Willett held this semester's second press conference last Thursday, Feb. 17. Linda Crovatt, Legislative Board Chairman, opened the conference by presenting a list of questions compiled by the students to Dr. Willett. With the exception of the question of male housing, the questions and answers were a repetition of earlier press conferences.

Male housing on campus seemed to be the highlight of the hour long discussion. Dr. Willett seemed open for opinions as to where the male population should reside next semester. Several people, both male and female, voiced their ideas and it seemed that each had his or her own plan as to which cubby-hole the males should occupy next. Dr. Willett was uncharacteristically attentive throughout the discussions. Some of the male dorm students present from Tabb expressed the opinion that next year they would like to occupy French Dormitory leaving Tabb and South Cunningham open for incoming freshmen. Most of the male freshmen on campus now take distaste in the idea of moving to Frazer.

Another plan expressed by the men would place the upcoming upperclassmen in Cox and-or Wheeler. Some of the females present looked unfavorably upon the idea of males moving into Cox because, in their opinion, the females should have the option of moving into a single sexed dorm. Presumably these females forgot that Curry, Stubbs, French, N. Cunningham and Main Cunningham would remain single sexed.

Also there was a long dissertation by a male day student suggesting that the males are trying to exercise their right to get a foothold in every dorm. Dr. Willett quickly dispelled this idea saying that none of the male dorm students on campus had expressed this or any related idea to that effect.

The only other new item of any interest brought out at the press conference was the determination that drinking in the hallways and chapter rooms is not against the Virginia Code, but against college policy.

Sophomores Invite You To Sophomore Weekend

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS

Good times are coming when the Class of '79 and their friends get together during Sophomore Weekend! Erin Lee and Kathy Mullooly, co-chairmen for Sophomore Weekend have been hard at work, along with other sophomores, in order to bring the best Sophomore Weekend ever.

Sophomore Auction, on Wed., Feb. 23, is only the start of much sophomore activity. Cinda Holt and Jackie Page are co-chairmen of this event. The auction will be a great place to get good buys on baked goods, souvenirs, and crafts, so everyone will want to be present when the selling starts at 7:30 p.m. in the ABC rooms of Lankford.

Friday night means the week end is here and the Sophomore are planning to do it up right! A mixer will be held in the Gold Room and the ABC rooms of Lankford, Fri., Feb. 25 from 9 p.m.-1 a.m. The band will be "Casper" from Richmond featuring a wide variety of music including selections from the Beatles, Linda Rondstat, K. C. and the Sunshine Band, and many others. Admission is $1.00 with Longwood I.D. and $1.50 with other I.D.'s.

Saturday, Feb. 26 a concert featuring "Warren and Bodle" and "Allwood Ark" will be held in the Gold Room. "Warren and Bodle" were at Orientation this past summer and have been requested by many who heard them then. This concert is being held in cooperation with S-UN, and promises to be an entertaining evening. The concert will be held from 7:30 - 11:00 p.m. and cost will be $1.00 with I.D.

A Sophomore Open House for Parents and Friends is being planned for Sunday, Feb. 27, in the Commons Room. All sophomores are invited to bring their parents and friends for an afternoon of original talent provided by our own sophomores. Coffee and cake will be served from 1:30 - 3:00 p.m.

Sophomores are urged to volunteer for helping out with work at the mixer or concert. Every sophomore is needed to make Sophomore Weekend a success. Also any sophomores interested in being in the Open Mike Entertainment for the Open House on Feb. 27 are encouraged to work up their acts. Contact Kathy Mullooly or Erin Lee for more information. Get ready 'cause Sophomore Weekend and good times are coming!

DR. MICHAEL LUND.

South Atlantic Bulletin

Publishes Work By Dr. Lund

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Dr. Lund, professor of English here at Longwood, has had his first article "Isabella and the House of Esmond" accepted to be published in the "South Atlantic Bulletin". The article, tentatively slated for the magazine's spring issue, explores the question of truth in fiction through consideration of narrative point of view and character genealogy in William Makepeace Thackeray's novel THE HISTORY OF HENRY ESMOND.

HENRY ESMOND, a historical-romance set in the early 18th century, is presented through the memoirs of Henry Esmond written in his retirement estate in Virginia as he looks back across time and an ocean to his life in England. The aspects of birth and lineage in the novel provide a firm situational lattice on which Thackeray entwines the individual circumstances and the characters' reactions to them.

Henry's confusion in love of both his aunt and his cousin, his discovery of his legitimacy and consequent inheritance, and his involvement in the Esmond political tradition of aiding the Stuarts all indicate the importance of genealogy as a supportive, organizational structure. Esmond, as the narrator, realizes, at least to an extent, the impact that his descent has upon the nature and course of involvements in his life and attempts to disengage himself from the family ground. After his cousin Beatrix runs off with "James III", the young Stuart pretender Esmond hoped to install on the throne after the old queen's anticipated demise, Esmond denounces Beatrix and the Jacobite political cause. He relinquishes his inheritance as Lord of Castlewood, pledges himself to his Aunt Rachael and leaves with her for America with the intention of leaving his legacy behind.

Thackeray scatters the facts and relationships of the Esmond family through the novel. Dr. Lund gathered and arranged these facts chronologically (historical-political data) and genealogically (Esmond family tree) to check the accuracy of Esmond's narrative. The element of truth in narration isn't as large a problem in works related by omniscient or multiple narrators. The omniscient narrator, by definition, is the novel's assumed vehicle of truth. In a novel of many narrators the truth is sought by superimposing the various accounts, getting a composite picture of what happened.

The problem in HENRY ESMOND is that Esmond himself is the only story teller. By assembling a concrete standard of measurement, the Esmond family tree, Dr. Lund was able to make certain grounded observations about the character of Henry Esmond.

The English Victorian consciousness of birth, observes Dr. Lund, stems from the feudal order. This concern for lineage is evolving with the emergence of the middle class. Thackeray picks up this theme here, in the process of transition, looks at these inherent forms and the extent to which they govern Victorian life. "The heritage of the 'house' becomes the embodiment of this question — will it be torn down and rebuilt or simply patched on to?" Dr. Lund feels that it is not just the "house" itself but an inheritance of a frame of mind and social customs. Henry Esmond realizes enough of the impact of his lineage to move to America. What he doesn't see is that he cannot fully escape his legacy — in transplanting himself he has taken, in his own sense of "Esmond", a branch of that heritage of the parent tree.

Dr. Lund pursued his A.B. at Washington University in St. Louis and continued his studies at Emory University receiving both his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees there. His interest in Dickens and Thackeray began, in fact, in graduate school. He sees an important connection between philosophical questions of our time and those of the Victorian Era. It is almost as if by self-consciously asserting our "progressiveness" by dissociation from the Victorian period, we overlook one of our strongest identities with it. "In many ways" says Dr. Lund, "19th century England is 20th century America. By considering problems Victorians had with their past we get some insight into our own age. Problems of our age have become so complicated and involved that the search for a solution can be seen in simpler terms of an earlier age."

"Music Is More Than Sound, Music Is Also Sight"

By IKER R. STONEBERGER

"Notation is my life's blood," says Dr. James McCray, Chairman of the Longwood College Department of Music.

Talking with him in his office, he said, "I have always been interested in how other people (composers) try to communicate with their music. As a conductor, I'm trying to recreate what others have composed."

And it seems that musica notation is the key element of communication from composer to conductor to chorus.

Those who attended the Faculty Colloquium Series last Wednesday, February 16, in Molnar Recital Hall, gained better understanding of Dr. McCray's involvement in musical notation as some 6 faculty members, students, and other colleagues learned a lesson in "New Choral Notation of the Twentieth Century."

Believing that "every civilization is the synthesis of Man's conquest of life," Dr. McCray is a man who looks at choral music as another form of communication by which man tells his own story.

McCray says, "Music is more than sound. Music is also sight." To exemplify this statement, the audience was treated to performances which illustrated the nature of Twentieth Century choral notation.

Sophomores Kenita Walker and Audrey Evans sang "Duet for Two Cats" by Rossini (accompanied by Sophomore Janet Ramsey). With a text which consisted entirely on the word "MEOW," Walker and Evans demonstrated how vocalists may produce the sounds of cats, taking direction from the musical notation.

Dr. McCray's Freshman Theory class performed the piece "Sound Patterns" by Bernard Brans. With sighs, whispers, pops and other sounds which may be politely categorized as noises, the choral group "sang" their way through another characteristically modern choral arrangement.

In defense of his "multi-media" technique used in most of his choral concerts, Dr. McCray says that one "must not negate the element of space." A choral concert under his direction may involve choreography, slides, or percussion.

"That which separates music from the other arts," says Dr. McCray, "is the element of time." We learned that it is perhaps the only distinguishing characteristic, however, after the demonstration Wednesday night.

"Music is like reading a murder mystery," he says. "You don't know what's going to happen until the story is over. The conductor, the chorus, and the audience need to know what is going to happen. And that is the purpose of notation," he adds.

With this "master teacher" composing, conducting, and teaching at Longwood College, we must agree with Dr. Wells, who said, "Dr. McCray is the epitome of what we mean by quality education."

New Ad Hoc Committee To Review Exam Policies

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS

Exams! Seems like everyone has something to say about them and now there is the Ad Hoc Committee to do something about them. Dean Carolyn Wells formed the Ad Hoc Committee to study the Length and Nature of the Examination Period because examination policies haven't been studied since May 1967. The committee held its first meeting February 3, 1977. Dean Wells opened this meeting by stating that the length of the exam period was to be the main thrust of the committee's work but she hoped the committee would feel free to explore other changes in the exam period.

Since that first meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee on Exams, both faculty members and students have been asked to contribute their suggestions about the length and nature of the examination period. These suggestions will be compiled and discussed at the next committee meeting on February 24, 1977.

Dr. Massie Stinson, chairman of the committee explained the concern about the length of the exam period. He said that since the last examination study in 1967, Longwood has gone to a fall semester that starts in August and ends in December instead of January and also a shorter spring semester from Jan. to May. This change has resulted in a problem with the college calendar in getting enough teaching days. Presently there are 13½ weeks of teaching days, whereas prior to the change to the August-December fall semester and January-May spring semester there were 14½ to 15 weeks of teaching days. Therefore, the committee is examining the question of shortening the exam period and other alternatives in order to add more teaching days.

Dr. Stinson also said the committee would look at the differences in the philosophies of what exams are all about (for example, some instructors give tests on the final section of class study, while others give comprehensive exams).

Dr. Stinson said the committee hoped to submit its recommendations "possibly by the faculty meeting in April." The guidelines for exams are found in section 6.2 of the Faculty Handbook and Dr. Stinson said, "The committee has been charged by the Dean to study this... and to update the statement in the Faculty Handbook." Even if the committee's proposals on changes in the exam period were submitted by April, the changes would not go into effect for this semester's examinations. Any changes in examination policy, as any other policy changes, would have to be approved by the faculty, then Dean of the College, then President of the College and finally the Board of Visitors. This means the possible changes in the length and nature of the examination period would probably go into effect next fall or spring semester.

Members of the Ad Hoc Committee to Study the Length and Nature of the Examination Period are: Dr. Robert L. Banton, Mrs. Sandra A. Bollinger, Dr. Mary G. Cristo, Dr. Elisabeth L. Flynn, Dr. Paul S. Hesselink, Dr. Letta J. Holman, Dr. Maurice P. Sneller, Linda Maxey (Sr.) and Mary L. Parris (Soph.). Each committee member would be willing to listen to suggestions pertaining to exams and bring them to committee meetings for consideration. The Faculty Handbook states in section 6.2, "Final examinations are a necessary and desirable part of the teaching process." So while the Ad Hoc Committee may not be able to get rid of exams entirely it may be able to somewhat shorten the process for all concerned!

Finalists Selected For Miss Longwood Pageant

By LISA TURNER

Preliminaries for the Miss Longwood Pageant are over at last, and twelve finalists have been selected. They are Susan Barker, Linda Chalkley, Terry Cochran, Dorothy Deane, Robin Havens, Gayle Hawkes, Kathy Moore, Kathy Murphy, Kim Nickols, Cheryl Parks, Sue Seaborn, and Jeanne Webb.

All of the finalists were supported by sororities. Tilsia Stephens, General Chairman of the Pageant, noted that many of the contestants are usually pledges for sororities.

Tilsia said that the preliminaries went "extremely well. Everyone was very pleased with the outcome." She was especially glad as this was the first time that the preliminaries were held over two consecutive nights (last Monday and Tuesday evenings), and she hopes that the Pageant committee will continue to use the more extensive preliminaries in the future.

Jackie Lawter, who worked on the preliminaries with Gwen Haymaker, was pleased with the competition this year; she said that the girls were very talented.

If Tilsia was pleased with the outcome, several of the finalists were even more so. While most of those interviewed admitted to having been quite nervous, they were also very excited. Most of the girls thought that the night of the talent competition was the hardest. The only person to disagree with this was Kim Nickols, who used to play the guitar for a singing group in high school.

Many of the girls played musical instruments; some sang, some did modern dance routines, one girl gave a talk on Elementary Education, and one girl performed a rifle spinning routine.

The finalists met with three of the pageant directors on Thursday afternoon to discuss the upcoming pageant. Sandy Williams is in charge of the production number, Pat Nuchols is producer of the pageant and Theresa Wood is the director. Their real work won't begin until the week of the pageant, although they have already begun preparations.

The Pageant committee faces no enormous tasks in the near future. There are the usual little details to be taken care of, and the programs are due at the printer's at the beginning of March. They will feature the Judges' resumes and pictures, and short biographies accompanied by photographs of the contestants. An emcee from Richmond has already been hired, and the final judges have been selected, although their names are unavailable at the time.

Student Talent Featured At Coffee House

By DEBBIE MOUL
And MARGARET
HAMMERSLEY

The lights were off, the snackbar was packed and beer cans lay scattered on various tables. "All right Stacy!" Applause heightened and the audience was ready for Thursday evening's coffeehouse to begin. Emcee Ann Johnson mounted the stage. "With no introduction needed, Stacy Waymack." Stacy, a freshman, was largely supported by her fellow freshmen.

Stacy's performance was dominated by her original talent; she composed the score of "Instrumental," and the score and lyrics of "Bowling Alley Queen." "Bowling Alley Queen" was written about and dedicated to Stacy's roommate Cindy, who "has got an arm that's really mean."

Stacy's soft and pleasant voice stirred the audience's emotions as she quietly sang "We're All Alone," dedicated to Shawn Barrett.

Talent abounded when freshmen Robin Rowen and Renee Roland performed a set together. In beautiful harmony the two sang Carole King's "Will You Still Love Me Tomorrow?" Individual talent emerged as both girls sang solo at various intervals during the set. Several songs performed were original. Robin's vocal expression and moving lyrics touched the audience as she sang "Standing Free."

For an encore, following the audience's shouts of "MORE! MORE!" the two girls sang their winning song for the Freshman Class Song Contest. (It seems ironical that the two would sing the lines: "What would you do if I sang out of tune, would you stand up and walk out on me?")

Musical talent and wit both were revealed by freshman Charlie Mason. In a relaxed and carefree style he sang a mixture of country, bluegrass and pop songs. Breaking into John Denver's "Grandma's Featherbed," he received hand-clapping accompaniment from the audience. He finished his set with an original song based on true experience, "The Grounded Boy's Blues."

When it comes to Jacqui Singleton, what can you say that hasn't already been said? Longwood just can't get enough of her talent. Performing a 40 minute set, Jacqui sang mostly original work. Although "Christopher Robin" was not an original piece, her adaptation certainly was original. She ended her set with what she refers to as her theme song, from "The Class of '88."

Kelley Helm, sounding a touch like Joni Mitchell, finished the evening with a variety of songs. Her emotional lyrics dealt with personal relationships and friendships.

Open Mike proved overwhelmingly successful, being enjoyed by artist and audience alike.

Learning Opportunities Offered By S-UN

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Have you ever wanted to know about all those assorted parts under a car's hood? Or how a solar heater and cooker are built? Well, now you have the chance to learn about these topics and several others during the Experimental College sponsored by the Student Union Feb. 21 thru March 4.

The classes include items which are not usually taught in the college curriculum. Anyone, even persons not from Longwood, can participate. There is no credit offered, it is just for fun.

So far five classes are being offered. Preparation For Marriage is to be taught by Jim Garrison and John Emmert. A basic course on Auto Mechanics will be instructed by Kevin Bedsworth. Only one class is scheduled for Solar Energy, but if there is enough interest, Fritz Reins will extend the course. Mr. Reins is also offering Organic Gardening.

On Feb. 22 at 7:30 in the A. B. Rooms of Lankford, Classic Comedy Night will be held. It will feature three old time great movies, "The Adventures of Tarzan," a 1921 film with the classic Tarzan, "The Heart of Texas Ryan" which is a silent western, "Putting Pants on Phillip," a 1927 film starring Laurel and Hardy. Then on March 10 "Mark of Zorro" with Douglas Fairbanks and "Return of the Vampire" which is a 1943 thriller starring Bela Lugosi will be shown. There is a small admission fee to see these entertaining films. Debra Barksdale is in charge of these movies.

Donna Booth, Lisa Fellowes, and Robin Stark, who are in charge of the program, hope that many students and other interested persons will participate. This is your golden opportunity to learn something new and exciting.

With the number of available outlets through which students can voice their opinions, suggestions and complaints, the prevailing tone of voice is still one of discontent. There are various outlets available, and they were created specifically for the student.

Every week The Rotunda prints minutes of legislative board meetings. At the close of each article Debbie Webb announces the location and time of the next meeting, and invites all to attend. Legislative board meetings are not closed, that in fact would defeat the entire purpose to obtain student input. For legislative board to effectively work for the students it must hear from the students and no one can honestly complain that he was uninformed of the open invitation and meeting times.

Residence board meetings are also open meetings. The board meets every week in a different location. A schedule of meetings times and locations have been posted on every floor in every dorm and elsewhere around campus. Students are free to participate in any discussion that arises during meetings.

Should students be unable to attend board meetings, but have something specific to say to the board chairmen, Linda Crovatt and Sara Jo Wyatt are available daily at 1:00 at the head table in the dining hall. Other board representatives may also be available. The purpose of head table to have various student leaders together at one time and available to the student body.

For problems concerning the general state of affairs at Longwood, the student liaison committee meets with the Board of Visitors twice each semester. The committee members are appointed, but that does not stop students from confronting them with ideas. The committee needs to be aware of the concerns of students to present those concerns to the Board.

The one outlet which is probably used the least is the Press Conference. Press Conferences are always announced ahead of time and scheduled in a time slot when no classes are held. The time is deliberately designed as such so that the greatest number of students will be available to attend. Such an event allows the student to pose questions directly to President Willett or to other administrative persons present. In answer to the complaint that nothing is ever said at Press Conferences, yes, sometimes this is true. In solution to this problem, there would be something said if the students who have something to say would attend.

The Rotunda also lends itself to the comments of students. The space available for Letters to the Editor is done so specifically for use by students. Students may air opinions on issues contained with the paper, or issues which they choose to bring up.

Instead of gripping to yourself and complaining about all the inadequacies at Longwood it would be more advantageous to use that energy to present ideas to the proper people at the proper times; there are certainly the opportunities to do so.

H-SC Imposes Themselves

It's too bad that the girls at Longwood College can't have a closed keg party on their hall without the H.S. boys feeling left out. It is understood that on those cold and lonely Saturday nights the H.S. boys need something to do, but to come in force and invade a girl's hall, spitting and fighting, and throwing beer; really fellas.

It is also understandable that when a small elderly lady greets them at the door that their masculinity is immediately threatened. Of course the boys had no recourse, being backed into a corner by Miss Marshall, than to get belligerent, but then Miss Marshall would not be in the position she's in if she had not seen a little immaturity now and then. It is a shame that the spoiled little brats at H.S. have lost all of their privileges at H.S. and now they intend to see that Longwood loses theirs.

With the upcoming arrival of Mr. Bunting to Hampden-Sydney, it shall be interesting to see if he will indeed retain the H-S "Christian character" (quoted from Randy Evans' "Excited About Virginia Return" in the February 11 issue of The Tiger). If last Saturday evening's performance is an example of the Christian character which H-S is so proud of, it should be hoped that Mr. Bunting can influence a change in character rather than to retain such character. For Longwood's sake may it be hoped that a "new spirit" is truly on the way to H-S.

Commentary

Visitation

By TOM DEWITT

One of the hottest issues going around the campus lately has been one which relates to the possible new visitation hours. It is to be hoped, that sometime in the near future, they'll be passed, but until that time they'll only offer new promise of change that may one day occur.

Bud Adkins favors 24 hour visitation on weekends and likes the hours 7-11 p.m. on weekdays. He feels that the only flaw in the hours may be an invasion of privacy on those who don't favor the change.

When asked why he felt this way he replied, "It's kind of hard for this campus to experience a change like this so quickly. Maybe, to be fair, a compromise could be reached where either a 24 hour weekend or 7-11 on weekdays system could be established."

This seems to be the way the majority of the campus males see it, 24 hour visitation, but reached slowly so as not to throw the school in over its head. However, it's also not to be overlooked only because its existence is only within a few petitions.

One possible idea for next year could be to convert the high rises (or just one) to this system. Then those that don't favor the ratification of the visitation hours can live in a dorm where the visitation hours weren't forced upon them because they constituted of a minority of the vote.

Though the idea comes on thick and heavy and many have their opinions and hopes, 24 hour visitation must first go through Residence Board and then to the Administration. It may be an issue or a possibility now, but only an idea later.

recalled I would now be a citizen of Canada because I can't see that taking another human being's life is moral. No matter what the reason.

Sincerely,
Jim Peace

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

MALE SUPPORT

Dear Editor,

I would like to say something in favor of our Longwood men. I was walking to class the other day and saw a sign hanging from Main Cunningham's Annex. It concerned the basketball record of the Men's Basketball Team and was very harsh and degrading. In my opinion, those guys need our support, not our criticism. They are doing well considering it is their first year together, not to mention that none of them are on a basketball scholarship nor came here intending to play sports. Perhaps if more of the student body attended the games, this would encourage their performance. It is sad that some people cannot overlook their own pride and resentment, and be considerate of other's feelings.

Also, I would like to remind all of us that each student at Longwood pays the same tuition. We are all equal. Just because this was a female college, does not give the girls in this school a right to feel superior. If one exercises a mature attitude, the men and women on this campus can live in the same dorm without conflict. As a resident of Frazier, I speak from experience.

IMMORALITY

Dear Editors,

In the past few issues of The Rotunda the topic of President Carter's amnesty to draft dodgers has been discussed. It seems that the freshmen boys are of the opinion that every American male has the duty to put his life on the line for every battle, skirmish, or "war" any where in the world. It does not matter whether or not the people of the country have asked for help to save their "democracy" or that Congress does not feel the incident is important enough to be classified above advisory capacity.

The last time anyone in this country fought for "the freedom he has in this country" was during World War II. It just so happens that my father served during that war along with the "Police Action" of Korea and the "Military Advisement" in Vietnam (twice). To this day he still can't understand what the HELL we went to Korea or Nam for!

The only true accomplishment of Vietnam was the death of many young men. If that is what these "boys" want to praise I think they need to reassess their values of life.

The draft ended the year that I was eligible and my number was 109. If the draft hadn't been

Off, Off Broadway Thrives On Vigor And Enthusiasm

By JANTURNER

We have all heard about that glamorous walk down Broadway, being able to go in any theatre, sit down, and disappear into a world other than our own; a world usually consisting of fantasy, imagination, and people who didn't seem to fit into the human category. But along came a new type of theatre, one so different from what we had expected that it took quite a while to catch on. This new theatre was called Off, Off Broadway, and it started in the mid 1950's in New York City.

It began as a group of plays that were experimental. These plays freed the playwright, actor and the audience from the usual restrictive limitations of the already established theatre. The audience participates directly in Off, Off Broadway plays. They can cheer, they can boo, and most of all they can enjoy these plays because they are able to relate to the actors and actresses in real life situations.

Off, Off Broadway had a very unified style, each play was more similar to another one, than being different from all the others. All the writers worked in the same area, below fourteenth street in Manhattan. Any place that was available was used to present these plays. Sometimes you could go to a cellar, loft, bar, or even a storefront to witness one. These places were always small, which meant there were many technical limitations. The city authorities objected to the use of nonlicensed space for public occupancy, and even more to the people who put the plays on. Off Broadway plays were very radical and unorthodox, and the audience loved every one of them.

By the middle of the 1950's, a woman named Julie Borasso had founded the Tempo Theatre. She introduced the works of Ionesco, Genet, and Ghelderode. Since this type of theatre was so new, it didn't catch on, and Julie's theatre had a short stay. It wasn't until a group called The Living Theatre, which was founded by Julian Beck and Judith Malina, moved to Fourteenth Street and Sixth Avenue that started a new movement. This group started a whole new, exciting era in theatrical world.

Their second production, "The Connection," handed something to its audience that it had never been offered before. Its style and language was similar to their own, it was completely contemporary. The theatre in which it was presented was only a small, second-story loft that could seat one hundred and sixty people. Forced intimacy was created. The audience was able to relax and participate, and the musicians were onstage instead of being locked in a pit. Critics usually shaped people's opinions of plays, but they were beginning to be ignored.

"The Connection" received bad reviews, but it did succeed. Critics, journalists, and even the public realized that something was happening. "The Living Theatre became the center of the United States' avant-garde," says Poland, author of Off, Off Broadway. Near the end of 1963, the Internal Revenue Service charged the theatre with back taxing, but it still held on. The Becks had to serve short prison sentences, and afterwards they packed up along with their troupe, and left the country leaving the Living Theatre behind.

But such an impact had been made from this group that it wouldn't be long before another theatre would be formed. The foundations still existed. These plays formed a new experience, for both the audience and the people who created it.

The specific needs of certain communities were met by these independent theatrical organizations. When they first began, they started out with no money whatsoever, and every one who worked did so because of true devotion. New theatres were formed, as it was expected. Some of these were The Genesis Theatre, The Playwright's Unit, The American Place Theatre, and groups like the Theatre of the Ridiculous and the Performance Group.

With the founding of the Genesis Theatre, church funds became available. Over a period of time, private donations and large foundation grants enabled small drama workshops to come about. There were three dynamic and charismatic personalities that were at the root of this accomplishment: Cino, Judson, and La Mama. They kept these theatres alive and well. Even though these theatres were similar, they each performed plays that were appreciative to the arts and mankind. This was more or less a golden age in drama. A united group was formed with people who had the same ideas, ambitions, political feeling and most of all, the same appreciation.

Off, Off Broadway was, and still is, an audience-oriented theatre. Since the great age of the American Music Hall and the melodrama, there has never been such real audience devotion and influence. There is an open relationship that exists between the actors and the audience. REAL people are upon that stage acting out REAL situations; the audience can appreciate this relationship. "Why should the stage limit itself to visual objects when it can encompass so much more?"

In the late 1950's though, serious trouble appeared. The theatre fell into a severe economic state. Broadway was heading in the same direction as the big Hollywood Studios. Fewer plays were being produced and each production was more expensive than the one before. Hollywood had a goal to produce super productions with all-star casts. Off, Off Broadway was beginning to find itself in the same position. In 1960, it cost as much as $15,000 dollars to produce a nonmusical play off Broadway. Playwrights in the United States were now only standard, varying in quality, not form.

A lot has changed since then. The off Broadway plays are more popular now than ever, and will continue to grow and expand. The plays started out with nothing, but people who had such a love for the theatre that they wanted to share with everyone. A new strength was produced to the world of drama, one that would be almost impossible to damage. All they had to depend on was the very vigor and enthusiasm that was to MAKE it work. A new acting and directing style was the result. Impressionism and expressionism were the keys to its success, and the devoted people behind it. This type of theatre was not planned -- it was evolved. A person has to have a special place inside of him that is reserved for the theatre in order to truly understand what has been said.

Should we thank Cino, Judson, and La Mama for keeping it alive, or should we accept the theory that these plays resulted from the limitations placed on them? There are no answers really. There was just a group of dedicated workers and a group of dedicated playwrights that came along at the same time and emerged into something that will live on.

Survey Of Western Art To Be Studied In Europe

By STACEY SMITH

Longwood College is offering an exciting art program, to be conducted this summer in Europe! The program entitled "Survey of Western Art in Europe" or Art 320-321, will give students the opportunity to see the historical cities of London, Paris, Florence, Rome and Madrid. The students will also have an advantage of being able to study original great works of art. Dr. Elisabeth L. Flynn, Associate Professor of Art History, will be conducting the tour and giving "on the spot" lectures.

One of the highlights of the expedition will be a rendezvous at the Arch of Titus. This fascinating arch, built in 81 A.D., was created in honor of the Emperor Titus for his capture of Jerusalem in 70 A.D. It is a single Roman imperial arch with an attic story (top of arch) that displays the excellence of Roman lettering. Two well preserved relief panels, located on the interior of the arch, are major monuments of Roman Imperial sculpture. One panel depicts the Emperor Titus riding in triumphant procession, in his chariot while the goddess Nike holds a victory wreath over his head. The other panel illustrates the carrying of the spoils of Jerusalem back to Rome.

After the group observes the arch, they will then explore the Forum, the area around the arch, and tour other Roman buildings. The students will feast their eyes on the city of Caesar and observe the fateful spot where Caesar met his death.

Any student will profit from this study tour for it offers insight into fields of Philosophy, History, English, Science and Art. Dr. Flynn has found from previous trips that an experience such as this "opens minds of students to a new world."

This class should prove to be interesting and exciting. It is a learning experience and a self-enrichment program. Students will have free time to use as they wish, and may adventurously explore the unknown world that they have read about.

Students who are interested in embarking on this Survey of Western Art in Europe are advised to contact the Art Department. The deadline date for signing up is February 28. So everyone hurry and make plans for a stimulating course and an enjoyable summer.

Exhibit Reveals Multi-faceted Talent

By PAM KELLETT

Anna Marshall, a senior art major, has a bright new art exhibit now on display in the Lankford reading rooms. In prints, paintings, drawings, and even photographs, she shows the many facets of her talent.

Her prints include examples in linoleum, lithograph, serigraph, and etching. The lithograph entitled "David" is a beautiful interpretation of the famous biblical sculpture. In a moving display of etchings, Anna uses a well executed variety of faces to depict phases in life which all circle around a central print called "Friends." Another prominent print in the show is a beautiful serigraph of the puffin, entitled "Les Oisenx de Mar."

Anna's paintings speak for themselves; the most sensitive is a water color-pastel resistance called "Rosenberg." An interesting effect was also achieved in "Fuchsia" which is painted on three separate canvases.

Photographs, in both black and white and sepia tone depict relatable moods, as in "Serinity" and "Isolation" while others depend more on design and use of space as in "Seeing Double" and "Movement No. 2."

The variety of media used lend something for every taste, and the common situations upon which her works are based, lend something for everyone to easily relate to. Fellow students and faculty members alike, should come see what they think.

Young Longwood Team Defeated By More Experienced Radford Club

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

On February 17, Longwood College travelled to Radford where, after a fierce struggle, Longwood succumbed to the Highlander's efforts. The score was 113-66, which was a definite improvement over the previous game with Radford in which L. C. lost 130-59.

Jimmy Yarbrough, the game's high scorer, shot 31 points from the floor and the foul line to set an impressive Longwood record.

"The game was really physical," stated Coach McNamee; "The officials called the game very loosely." He also said that the L. C. team played well against the taller Radford team, composed chiefly of juniors and seniors. Longwood brought the ball down the court quickly, hit the open man and took good shots. Due to their superior height, Radford was able to block several of Longwood's shots. Longwood sank 32 per cent from the floor.

Defensively, Longwood had trouble pulling down the rebounds. They played a man to man defense and used a half court press, but were not able to cope with Radford's fast breaks.

Fencing Team

Wins Two

By DEANNA VANWEY

Longwood's fencing team won both of their meets this week. These were their first victories of the season and were against some very good teams.

The first match of the week was against University of Virginia. In this match the first team won 9-7, receiving only 50 touches and scoring 64. Susan Sparkman was the star of the evening, winning all four of her bouts, which was an all match record. One of these four bouts was won against a former Virginia Divisional Foil Champion, Henrietta Dibreil (1975-1976). In this match the two were tied in labele and Susan came out winning. In Susan's fourth bout, if she had lost, U. Va. could have tied the meet, but Susan came through again, winning 3-5. This brought on many cheers of jubilation from both Longwood squads.

Others on the first team that did well against U. Va. were Alda Brown (3-1), Missy Waller and Angie Anthony.

Longwood's second team also beat U. Va. The score was 8-8, but Longwood's lower number of touches received broke the tie. Longwood only received 56 touches to U. Va.'s 60. High scores for this match were Franciose Aubry and Cirdy Morris.

One point of interest is that Longwood is getting much more consistent in winning after the bout has reached labele. This is one thing that was really hurting the team at the first of the season, but things are really looking up.

Longwood also beat Randolph-Macon Women's College this week. The first team won this dual meet 10-6. The high scorer of the meet was Missy Waller who won all four of her bouts and only allowed seven touches against her.

Upcoming fencing meets are February 18, against North Carolina State (away) and February 21, against Lynchburg College (home). Keep up the good work team!

Longwood Loses Physical Game With Averett

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Longwood men's basketball team played host to Averett in an exciting game which took place Saturday, Feb. 19. The Longwood guys were truly motivated and played one of their best games of the season.

Early in the first half Longwood took the lead and set the game's tempo. Averett, though, soon caught up and both teams began trading baskets. L. C. kept the pressure on and was able to keep Averett from shooting.

Towards the end of the first half Longwood was not taking high percentage shots, nor were they defending as well as they had been. Averett swept past them to lead 47-32 at the half.

The second half began with Longwood trying desperately to regain the lead, but even as they crept closer, Averett again pulled out in front.

Frustration and tempers ran high in this very close contest. During the second half a fight broke out between the Averett and Longwood teams, bring the L. C. reserve off the bench to defend their teammates. Both teams were awarded a technical shot. Bryan Welbaum sank Longwood's free throw, but Averett was not able to pick up the one point. Coach McNamee felt that this show of temper was uncalled for. He said it resulted from hostilities dating back to the first confrontation between these two teams when Longwood was badly beaten in an away game with Averett which contained a lot of contact.

Jimmy Yarbrough, the game's high scorer, fouled out of the game with 1:09 remaining. He had 19 points. Brian Welbaum was next with 18 points. Longwood shot 40 per cent from the floor compared with Averett's 50 per cent. The leading rebounders were Bryan Welbaum, James Braxton, and Wade Geoghegan, who each had four.

Longwood played a strong game, showing team spirit and enthusiasm. Their loyal fans shouted enthusiasm throughout the game. Unfortunately Longwood made some mistakes and were not able to pull the game out in the end.

The final score was 85-69 in Averett's favor. Averett found Longwood much improved since their Dec. 8 game in which Averett defeated Longwood 105-57. McNamee was not disappointed in his team's play, but was disappointed that they did not win.

Another home game is scheduled for Feb. 22 against Southside Community College. Preceding this game, the Longwood faculty will take on the Southside faculty in what should prove to be a very interesting match up.

Longwood

Riding Team

Looking Good

By DEANNA VANWEY

The riding team accompanied by Hampton Stables owner manager, Mr. Fred Linton did very well at the University of Virginia Intercollegiate Horse Show this last weekend. Out of a total of 11 colleges and 65 riders this is how Longwood placed:

Debbie Cross, 2nd in flat, 5th in fences.

Julie Tracy, 6th in flat, 6th in fences.

Margaret Jackson, 3rd in flat. Dee Clemmer, 6th in flat.

Megan, the fifth official rider, did well, but did not place. Kathy Marth, an unofficial rider for Longwood placed 3rd in fences.

The team's next show is February 18 at Sweet Briar. The Virginia Internment is February 25 and the Southern Seminary Junior College Invitational is April 8. Regionals are April 15 at Virginia Internment.

Next year there will be a team of 10, instead of five, for intercollegiate competition. All students interested in the team should sign up for PED 115-04 at fall registration. Try-outs will be held immediately after returning to school and all who are cut will drop the class. If interested please, in preparing your fall schedule, keep Tuesdays, from 2:00-4:30 all semester free. All intercollegiate shows are held on Friday afternoons, so also keep this in mind in your scheduling of next year.

IAA BRIEFS

Basketball Intramurals are in progress. Mon-Thurs., 5:00-9:00.

Bowling intramurals will be completed this week.

Starting soon — Coed Intertube Polo — Individual Swimming.

I.A.A. meetings are open to all students and are held Wednesday evenings at 6:30 in the I. A. A. room, Lankford.

SPORT FOLLIES

By DIANE HARWOOD

Folly I:

The Longwood College Womens' Basketball Team took two out of three this week as the season turns into the home stretch. With two conference games left, the girls should enter the state tournament on the lower half of the ranking ladder.

Longwood handled Lynchburg College with ease as they took a fifty point win, 86-36. It was a dull game from the word go as Lynchburg couldn't handle LC's height and playmaking. Sue Rama came out high scorer for Longwood with twenty-two points, followed by Linda Baumler's seventeen. This game was good for the old morale, but didn't do too much to improve the LC aggressiveness or intensity.

Out came the bat-wings this past weekend as the team literally flew to Rock Hill, South Carolina, for the Winthrop College Invitational. This was a good experience for the girls as they were able to get a taste of elbows and jabs outside of Virginia and North Carolina. East Tennessee fell victim to Longwood in the opening round by a 82-63 tally. The girls played like the Virginia weather (hot one minute and snowy the next) but were able to hold a respectable 40-25 point lead at the half. This lead increased to twenty points in the second half, but then Longwood's lack of intensity allowed ET to pull within nine points with 2:42 left. Luckily, for the girls pulled themselves and the game out of their frozen state for the win. Sue Rama took top honors with twenty-one points followed by Maryjane Smith's eighteen.

The second round saw the College of Charleston stomp Longwood by the score of 97-74. Charleston had a good day and Longwood had a bad one; C of C went up by as much as forty points. Longwood made several comeback attempts, but they were stifled by the Charleston shots that just wouldn't quit.

Maryjane Smith chipped in twenty-two points in the losing cause followed by Sue Rama's twenty-one.

This week finds the girls traveling to Norfolk State on Tuesday and the University of Virginia on Saturday (with no love loss for either team). If the team can control State's big gun Vivian Green and can tolerate Virginia's free-for-all style (complete with elbows, cheap shots, and coach Dan Bonner's mouth) the squad should be able to walk away with two more wins under their belts.

Folly II:

The Gymnastics Team gave the home crowd fans something to cheer about as they outflipped, out jumped, and out kipped East Carolina University by a score of 92.14 to 49.51. The meet began slowly, and the crowd didn't get into the action until DeDe Kirkpatrick and Margie Quarles came up with two tremendous vaults that earned them first and second place, respectively. Now with an attentive audience, the girls gathered steam as they went in to the second event, the bars. Wendy Oliver gave a first place performance with a 5.16 rating, followed by DeDe Kirkpatrick with a 4.7. The LC Tumbelweeds also took a clean sweep with the beam, with Vicky Stefaniga taking first, Debbie Kinzel taking second and DeDe Kirkpatrick placing third.

It is obvious that the girls perform better in front of the home crowd; this has no better illustration than their performance in the floor exercise. The girls pranced, danced, strutted and bopped to modern tunes and into everyone's hearts and the scores proved it. Once again the girls took all top honors by placing in the top three slots.

This was the first gymnastics I have seen in its entirety, and although it doesn't have the fast pace of most team sports, I departed with a positive attitude. It is truly a team effort, no one person can win or lose the meet. There is no one star; no one individual that outshines all the rest. So hats off to the shining stars (all of them) of the Longwood College Gymnastics Team.

Tennis And Lacrosse:

The Power Of Positive Action

By DIANNE HARWOOD

It's that time of the year again when approximately fourteen individuals take to the tennis courts and approximately thirty-four individuals take to the lacrosse field. Each hopes for a winning season, a starting position, and a good beginning suntan. But most of all, each hopes to find the fellowship of fun and competition. Surprisingly, the participants of these two sports have difficulty in reaching these goals. Why?

Tennis took a new approach - a ladder was set up and the individuals were to challenge among themselves for the top positions. When it became apparent that a small few were taking advantage of this self-discipline, the concept had to be returned to the "4:00-6:00" practices. Lack of interest and enthusiasm? I doubt it; it is hard even for the most dedicated athlete to work out consistently on his own. Besides, the girls wouldn't even be on the ladder if they didn't care.

Lacrosse? A different story. I think the general problem here is the lack of a new approach. Straight drills for the first two weeks; the seasoned players get bored. But what about the beginners; the ones who are potential good players? Remember, players of the world, if someone didn't take the time to teach you, where would you be now?

Questions are many; complaints are an everyday way of life, answers are few. Athletes, funnel your gripes into the proper channels. You are old enough to organize; you are old enough to change. Just remember you are also young enough to learn, young enough to put constructive criticism in proper perspective. Now you have no excuse. You can be successful.

Alpha Lambda Delta to Initiate 36

By SNADY HAGA

On February 27, thirty-six freshmen will be initiated into Alpha Lambda Delta which is a national honorary society on campus. The initiation will take place at 2:30 in the ABC rooms. Parents of the initiates have been invited and all faculty, administration, and students are also welcome to attend. Mrs. Parrish, sponsor, Dean Heintz, Liaison Administrator, and Ann Johnson, current president will preside at the initiation. The new officers who will also be initiated are: Alice Clay, president, Karen Shelton, vice-president, Cindy Cumins, secretary, Beverly Harvey, treasurer, Janice Wettstein, editor, Raye Rector, historian and Sherri Harrison, Honors Council representative.

Membership in Alpha Lambda Delta is open to all freshmen who obtain an average of 3.5 or above. Freshman who have obtained a cumulative average of 3.5 or above at the end of the current semester will be initiated in the fall.

Alpha Lambda Delta is sponsoring one of its new initiates, Deanna Deane, in the Miss Longwood Pageant.

Kappa Delta Pi Membership Drive

A membership drive for Kappa Delta Pi, Longwood's education honorary society, is now underway. Qualified applicants must have a 3.2 cumulative average, and a 3.0 average in education courses. Juniors must have completed, or be in the process of completing six semester hours in education. Seniors must have completed, or be in the process of completing twelve semester hours in education. All applicants must have also completed three hours of either psychology 240 or 250.

As all applicants must be either Juniors or Seniors, they need not be strictly education majors. A student in any major who plans to teach may apply if the above criterion have been met.

The tentative date of initiation is the first of March. Dues are $15. Anyone feeling qualified is asked to contact Judy Cash at box 246, or phone 2-8041.

Legislative Board Busy With Plans

By DEBBIE WEBB

We hope that no one missed the Legislative Board meeting Feb. 21 because they couldn't find it. Due to the Miss Longwood pageant preliminaries in the Gold Room and Reading Rooms, the board meeting was moved to the Day Students' Lounge.

The Organization's and Evaluations Committee has a new member. Sophomore Kathy Scott was voted in the board. Anyone else who would like to work on the committee should contact Terry Voit.

Many thanks to everyone who submitted a suggestion for the nickname for Longwood. Twelve names were selected, and soon the student body will vote on these 12 and select three. Then, the InterCollegiate Council composed of students, faculty, and administration, will decide on one of these.

The Elections Committee also acquired three new members. Anna Marshall, Mary Williams, and Debbie Northern were voted in to help with the committee. Elections Committee thanks them for showing their interest. We hope everyone was able to attend their hall meetings last Monday night. More importantly, we hope you found some benefit in it and presented ideas of questions about things that concern you.

Student Government Day is planned for March 23. If not already done so, lists will be going up soon in the New Smoker for students to sign up to work a particular individual on the faculty, staff, or administration. Please sign up and become a part of this important and informative day. See how the "other half lives" and works.

Many thanks from myself and whoever else was on campus week-end before last — no false fire alarms all week-end long! Let's keep it up!

A committee has been formed to organize the fall retreat planned for the beginning of next semester. Senior Debbie Webb is chairman, aided by members Karen Kimbrough and Ginger House, Juniors; and Wanda Peterson and Laurie White, Freshmen. Any suggestions would be appreciated.

It was great seeing so many people at the Press Conference last week. Several important issues were brought up and discussed. As Dr. Willett tried to emphasize, a press conference is not to decide on issues or ideas, but to bring them up and discuss them so that they may be looked into further. When the next press conference rolls around, please make every effort to attend. Most of the deans are in attendance and many of your questions can be answered there.

Don't forget our meetings — Monday nights — 7 p.m. — in the Reading Rooms. See you there!!

One-Acts: Powerful And Provocative

By RICK VAUGHAN

In bringing an evening of Off-Off Broadway to Jarman stage, director Douglas Young provided the Longwood community with a unique opportunity to experience one movement in modern American theatre. This movement reflects the rebellion and upheaval in modern society. The four one-act plays presented are powerful and provocative.

Mr. Young used one of his favorite tricks, seating the audience onstage, to effectively establish a sense of the intimate surroundings in which these plays were originally produced. The audience enjoyed the intimacy as it experienced and reacted as a unit, and also recalled the difficulties of intimate theatre as it stumbled over lights and strained to see.

The evening began with songs sung and played by Jacqui

Singleton, Reeny Manley and Glenn Leftwich, a good way to begin any evening, whether of theatre or not.

The first play, "It's Called a Sugar Plum," by Israil Horowitz, with Buddy Bourne and Tinda Kulp is a somewhat tedious, if occasionally amusing, exploration of the shallowness of personal relationships in modern society.

It was followed by "Birdbath," by Teanard Melfi, with Glenn Leftwich and Karla Myers, in which two powerful characters tell each other about their lives, revealing defenses and strategies for coping with modern life.

"The Unexpurgated Memoirs of Bernard Mergendeiler," by Jules Fieffer, with Reeny Manley and Al Overton, is a short, amusing look at our feelings about sex, and at what we wish were our feelings about sex.

The fourth play, "Motel," by Jean-Claude Van Italic, with Jacqui Singleton, Jennifer Deane and Glenn Leftwich, sends the audience home with a not very pleasant look at American society and its direction.

The effectiveness of modern theatre was lost without strong actors. Al Overton and Reeny Manley both presented their parts well. Quite superb performances were given by Glenn Leftwich and Karla Myers in "Birdbath." Mr. Leftwich has an understanding portrayal, overcoming the subtle difficulties of playing a drinking character. Ms. Myers gave the most detailed and studied character performance the Longwood stage has seen in years.

It was a complex production and gives the audience a chance to laugh, to cry, to feel fear.

Housing Decision To Be Reconsidered

By DIANE LOWMAN AND
RENNIE BRUNO

A recent administrative staff decision stated that Cox dormitory next year will house: ground floor — upperclass males, first floor — upperclass females, second floor — freshmen females and third floor — freshmen males and Frazer dormitory will house: second and tenth floors — upperclass men; third through ninth floors — upperclass women. This decision was not well received by everyone on campus.

"We the undersigned students of Longwood College feel that it is unfair to limit upperclass female housing in Cox dormitory to one floor. We have no negative feelings toward upperclass males being housed in Cox. However, we feel that the demand for upperclass housing in Wheeler and Cox will not be satisfied by the present proposal. We feel that other arrangements should be made for the overflow of incoming freshmen."

These are the words of the petitions circulating around the campus by concerned members of the student body. The basic problem is housing the overflow of expected freshmen next year. The administrative staff that made the decision have such arguments as:

- 1) The Longwood policy is to keep the freshmen class together by housing them in the same proximity.
- 2) Anyone who is dispossessed of her room would be upset.
- 3) The expected overflow of freshmen (number-wise) would most nearly fit into Cox.

The primary argument against housing the freshmen in Cox is concerned with taking three floors from Cox, thus closing off sought-after space from the student body. The dorms on the "main" campus include Tabb, French and the Cunninghams — all freshman dorms; Stubbs — a sorority dorm; Wheeler — upperclass females (housing 176 people); and Cox.

Other arguments against housing the freshmen in Cox include:

- 1) The upperclass women's feeling that they should have priority over incoming freshmen.
- 2) Rising sophomores feel that with all the occupants of Cox flowing to Wheeler, their only option is to move to the other side of campus, Curry and Frazer.
- 3) The Wheeler inhabitants who presently have no roommates will be left behind in room draw because the Cox homesteaders have first option after regular homesteaders, and in order to keep the same lifestyle, they must go to Wheeler.

The alternatives include such possibilities as:

- 1) Placing the overflow of freshmen in Curry and Frazer where they would be together, leaving those dispossessed occupants in the high-rises with many floors of the same lifestyle from which to choose, instead of almost entirely shutting off an important dorm on the "main" campus.
- 2) Room draw remaining the same, but opening up all dorms on campus to upperclass students (male and females still living in separate halls) and filling the empty spaces with incoming freshmen, which would completely integrate the classes.

Members of the staff have been approached in order to exchange opinions. In most of these cases, the staff members were under the impression that students had been given a chance to speak out at the Press Conference. Actually, only the question of upperclass male housing was released to the student body. The placement of overflow freshmen in upperclass dorms was never considered.

Another point that the staff stressed was that they didn't believe that life in the high rises in conducive to freshman living. The other side of that point includes such views as:

- 1) Freshman will make the effort to communicate with as many people as possible regardless of where they live.
- 2) The freshman will meet their close friends through outside activities, and not simply through living on the same hall. Most of the staff now seem ready to listen to both sides more carefully and reconsider the decision.

President Willett has agreed to listen to a committee of Residence Board members, suggesting that an alternate placing of next year's freshmen should be considered. The administrative staff will take the recommendations made into consideration and will make a final decision on housing at the staff meeting on March 3.

Beth Tomlinson- After Miss Longwood 1976

By LISA TURNER

Since all of the work on the Miss Longwood Pageant leads up to choosing a contestant for the Miss Virginia pageant, perhaps a story on what this year's winner might expect is in order.

Beth Tomlinson is Miss Longwood 1976. She recently gave an account of the grueling, but worthwhile schedule that a Miss Virginia contestant is subjected to.

After being chosen Miss Longwood last March, Beth began receiving more instruction on the Virginia pageant, which was held in Roanoke in July. Most of the time between pageants was spent perfecting her modern dance routine. (Beth is a physical education dance major who has just returned from student teaching last semester.)

The week of the Pageant was busy but "not as hectic as I'd thought it would be," according to Beth.

Beth was not without a familiar face from home, as Mrs. Margaret C. Golubic accompanied her as chaperone. Each of the girls must have a chaperone, and a sponsor is allowed as well. Contestants are never allowed to do anything without the permission of their chaperones; because of some problems with strange people in the past, the girls are not to answer the phone, the door, or be left alone for anything but the briefest period of time. In addition, the chaperone must accompany the girl down to the hotel lobby for engagements. Once in the lobby, the contestant is placed in the charge of a hostess. This hostess is a prominent woman in the community who is responsible for seeing that the girls get to their engagements on time. Girls are not allowed to speak to any men whatsoever, without her chaperone or hostess present. This may be a little hard for the girls to get used to, as it applies to fathers and brothers too but it is for the protection of the girl. According to Beth, the final judges are not announced until the Wednesday preceding the event, and the girls want to avoid being charged with trying to influence a judge at all costs.

Beth claims that she was not worried at all during the Miss Longwood Pageant "I just never considered doing it just to win... so I wasn't too nervous." She wasn't afraid of the audience because she saw them as "mostly just friends."

Once the pageant began, Beth was left with little time for philosophizing; almost all of the day is taken up with scheduled appointments, promotion and pageant preparations. One day the girls spent the entire morning and afternoon at a shopping mall, then found they had 20 minutes to prepare for a formal cocktail party. Beth said that she was sure that a lot of this was planned deliberately to see how much the girls could take. "After a while though, we got used to it... the next week I got back and always felt like 'well, where do we have to be next?'"...

The Miss Virginia pageant can be a very costly one. Beth did not have that much trouble meeting expenses for evening gowns as her mother sews very well and made some of the gowns. One night Beth and her father sat down and figured how much they had paid in expenses for the pageants. "It was more than the scholarship money," Beth noted, "easily several hundred."

Well then, was it worth it? Beth wasn't sure at the time of the contest but has realized since that she gained a lot. She is the happiest with her new self-confidence. She feels she can now talk more easily with people she doesn't know, or that at least it is not painful anymore. She admitted that the pageant had been a great learning experience, not just because of the new people and situations she was exposed to, but because of the new things she learned about herself. She claims to be more aware of the changes in herself, of her increase in self-confidence. During the pageant, she feels people expect you to have self-confidence, and she found that she could live up to what they expected.

She felt that the pageant was a real study in self-discipline. "You have to be on your best behavior at all times. You have to be friendly, outgoing even when you're exhausted, you have to be poised. It is very hard."

Beth says she had begun to notice little changes in her carriage, her walk, her way of looking at herself. She says that learning to be poised under stress has been very valuable, particularly in her student teaching and job interviews. She felt more comfortable in front of her class, and understands how much little gestures can convey to them. She has learned how to present herself, and this is very important when a first impression counts so much.

The Question Of Big-Name Bands

By ANNE CARTER STEPHENS

Have you ever wondered why Longwood never has any good concerts like Loggins and Messina or Seals and Croft or England Dan and John Ford Coley? According to Mr. I. B. Dent, Director of Student Activities, there are a number of reasons.

Cost is the main drawback for big name concerts. Approximately one-third or $20,000 of the Student Activities fees goes to the Student Union to run it for one year. S-UN makes up the remaining costs by selling beer and cokes at dances and charging small fees for admissions. Unfortunately a big-time band costs anywhere between 20-25 thousand dollars which would put the S-UN "in the hole" without any money for the whole year to sponsor coffee houses, free lectures, dramatic entertainment, free movies, Wheels or Mini-Concerts. Also, if Longwood did have the big-name concert, there are the problems of space and cost. Jarman can only seat 1,200 people which means only one-half of the student body could fit into the auditorium. Since only a certain number of people can go, it would cost approximately $19 per person in order to break even. Also there would be the problem of finding a band that suits everybody's taste. "We can't blow all our money on one big concert that only a few people could see and enjoy," commented Mr. Dent.

"The best way to get a good concert is to find a band on their way up," added Mr. Dent. Longwood belongs to the National Entertainment Campus Activities Association (NECAA) which has a regional convention in the fall and in the winter. At these conventions, act "showcases" are held which enable people to hear and see an act. The acts are then "blocked booked" by several colleges in one area which cuts down on costs with travelling and freight, and the act is usually $500-1000 cheaper for each college than if booked individually. The acts are also helped by this system because each college rates the performance which is recorded in the booking magazine, "Program." If the ratings are high other colleges will book the acts, too. Most of these bands, according to Mr. Dent, are on the way to the top and have already recorded at least one album. "The acts have to be good because the ratings count. You aren't assured of a good concert with a big name band."

Johnny Porrazzo's Concert was booked by NECAA. Mr. Dent saw the act at the Regional Convention and booked him along with Madison and Radford. He was a hit at the National Convention last week, and Mr. Dent hopes he will come back again next year to Longwood. Tom Chapin (who was booked by 135 colleges) along with Glass Moon, T&M Express, Wright Brothers and Rosewater Blue were also booked with ratings from "Program" and the Acts showcase.

A frequent question asked is, "Why not go in with Hampden-Sydney?" Mr. Dent said that even if we went in with Hampden-Sydney, we still wouldn't have enough money to book someone in the 5-10 thousand dollar bracket like England Dan. Also, there would be the problem of where to have it. If it was held at Hampden-Sydney, Longwood students couldn't find enough transportation to Hampden-Sydney.

Mr. Dent also commented that if the concerts held now were supported better, there would be enough money to have a big-name band. "If Gene Cotton (who now has a top 20 song on the charts), and Meisburg and Walters are packed when they come here on March 23, there would be enough profit to bring somebody big. With attendance the way it is now, I wouldn't put any more money into it."

Campus Student Arrested

By MARGARET
HAMMERSLEY

Saturday evening, February 20 at approximately 10:00 p. m., William Rogers, a Longwood student was arrested for drinking in public. The Campus Police picked him up in front of the Rotunda and took him downtown to the municipal building.

According to Billy, he was indeed sitting on the sidewalk in front of the Rotunda drinking a beer. Campus Police spotted him and informed him that he could not drink in public. Billy asked the police to take his two unopened beers, they would not. He had one empty beer can beside him.

The Campus Police left Billy and his beers on the sidewalk. They drove around the block to find him where they had left him. The three arresting officers picked him up and took him to the town jail.

Bail was placed at twenty-five dollars. After raising bail Billy was allowed to return to the College. A hearing was scheduled for last Friday, February 25 when Billy and the basketball team were out of town for a tournament. Billy was informed that if he forfeited bail for his fine and court costs, he would not have to appear in court. He did so.

At the College, further disciplinary action was taken. Billy has been placed on administrative probation, in effect till March 1977. The probation means that he will be given no further warnings for any offense. Any additional violation will result in expulsion from the college.

R.A. Applications Now Available

Applications for student positions as Resident Advisers to freshmen are now available in the office of the Associate Dean of Students. Interested students should submit a completed application to the Associate Dean of Students by March 7. Resident Advisers are assigned to freshman halls and are expected to be available for 15 hours per week. The Resident Advisers report to the Associate Dean of Students and responsibilities include service to freshmen who wish assistance with their adjustment to college, serving as a source of referral, and attendance at in-service training functions. The present salary is $55 per month for nine months.

Longwood Players To Travel With Story Theatre

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Over the first few days of Spring Break when many of Longwood's "liberated" will be turning the TV dials—or over in the sun—a small band of Jarman gypsies will be vaning their way to their next engagement of crow calls and reflective cardboard crowns. This spring, eleven adventurous souls from the Drama department, including director Dr. Patton Lockwood, will take the Paul Sill's production, "Story Theater," on the road.

The eight actors, (four male, four female) will assume the roles of a kaleidoscope of fairy characters ranging from a peasant king to an infamously flustered chicken. In keeping with Sill's tradition of "Story Theater," set and theatrical lighting will be underplayed, the actors relying chiefly on their own characterizations supported by the use of a variety of generalized props that will represent the identities of the different roles.

Longwood Players will sponsor the production and transportation of the 50 minute show to be presented in six high schools around the state. Linda Carwile, Lisa Pellis, Merle Phelps, Reeny Manley, George Bennet, George Hughes, Buddy Borne and Glen Leftwich will be performing multiple roles in Roanoke, Norfolk, Richmond and Farmville, wrapping up the tour after a few days break, with a performance on March 21 in the Gold Room at Lankford. Kit Orsey will be stage manager in charge of technical preparations and properties.

Jacqui Singleton and Reeny Manley will be the company's musicians, creating a guitar and recorder ensemble. Jacqui is writing a new series of songs based on the themes of the individual tales that will be worked in between the stories as a kind of musical interlude.

If getting up and coming out of yourself to perform in front of an audience seems like a potentially nerve knarling experience, think about sacrificing a few precious days of Spring Break to do it in—not to mention the preflight of one hour rehearsals running through mid-term week. Merle Phelps, while admitting that it is a demanding experience, felt that the rehearsals and different roles each actor has to play make it, "not harder, but more fun." Punctuated by a series of well coached crow caws, she added that through the spontaneity of the show she has found an outlet for "constructive letting go... its not like work at all."

The company will also be available after each performance to answer any questions or comments if time allows students to remain. Jacqui feels that the tales biggest attraction to the high school kids will be their freshness: they're like "suped-up fairie tales with contemporary quips." She expresses the group's enthusiasm to travel with the show in observing that, "with different places there is a sense of newness, and adjustment to different (types of) stages."

Be sure to catch their last performance March 21 in the Gold Room—in and until then, "break a leg" "Story" people, and happy trails...

"Longwood, What More Can We Say"

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Class of 1980 will present Freshman Production Thursday, March 3, in Jarman at 8:00 p. m. There is no admission and everyone is invited to come see the talented Freshmen at work.

Essentially, the Production is a skit which is cast, written, produced, and managed entirely by volunteers of the Freshman class. Its purpose is to create class unity and provide entertainment. This year's skit is entitled "Longwood, What More Can We Say." There are two sections. The first shows the Longwood of the 20's through 40's when the rules and activities were much different than today's. Then there is a segment dating from the 50's to the 70's which features a dance segment to an Andrew's Sister Song, the preferred male list from Longwood 1960, and modern, times with a male fraternity on campus.

Almost 50 freshmen are participating in this event, helping in all the necessary phases, such as lights, sound, costumes, and make-up.

Sue Transue, Freshman Production Chairman and director, said, "The Freshmen are working hard together this year. This (Freshman Production) might not be a Broadway Production, but the Freshmen have gotten into it with their hearts and souls." Karen Kreger is her assistant director.

Refreshments will be sold at intermission to raise funds for the Freshman Scholarship. The Freshmen hope there will be a large turnout to complement their hard work and originality.

Glenn Leftwich To Audition In Theatre Convention

By STACEY SMITH

Glenn Leftwich, a Longwood College sophomore and Drama major, will be participating in the South Eastern Theatre Convention. The Convention will be held from the first to the sixth of March in Norfolk's Holiday Inn Scope.

Glenn explained that the convention will consist of auditions, lectures and workshops for the high school and college student. Those who wish to participate must pre-register and organize a one minute dramatic reading or act, and prepare to sing a selection of their own choice.

Acting directors from up and down the coast will be present to observe the auditions and judge the talent. After the first performance, the directors will have the option of requesting that a participant perform again. The directors will have a "call back sheet" on which they can put the number of a performer, that they would like to see again.

These auditions could lead to a contract from a director for summer stock, which is anything from a part in a production to crew work, to a full time contract.

Glenn has pre-registered and already has his auditioning number. He has not decided on his performance because he does not want to over study the part. He explained that if he gets a bid on a contract he would be willing to go with any company and consider any job in the theatre, yet, his preference is acting.

Glenn is the only person from Longwood who is actually auditioning but six to seven others are going to observe. He is excited about the convention and no matter what happens Glenn says he is going to have a good time.

The Arts: The Drama

The World Of Improvization

By JAN TURNER

As you are seated in the theatre, the stage curtains part and a number of brightly dressed figures appear before you. Something exciting is about to take place. The actors and actresses aren't dressed in modern day garb, but in costumes depicting an earlier age. The one thing that is so different from a usual performance is that this play is unrehearsed, it is all improvisational. They are only given their cues before the performance, and the rest is up to them. This traveling group of actors and actresses are called the Commedia Dell'Arte, which means comedy of artists.

Actually developed in the late fifteenth century, this theatre group didn't become professional until the early sixteenth century. It has been very difficult tracing them back that far because there are no scripts available. All of their dialogue was improvisation and included mime, acrobatic stunts, tricks, soliloquies, slapstick, romance, dance and music. They travelled all over Europe and earned what money they could. Fairs and festivals in market places or castles attracted their appearances.

The plays were based on old Greek and Roman comedies, usually plays of Plautus and Terrence. They contained many plots concerned with mistaken identity, conflicts between old husbands and young wives, rascality, and even tender romance. But marital infidelity had the others well beaten, for it was the most popular. There were many love triangles, and ridiculous situations arose from them. The subject of these plays really showed human weakness exposed by a sharp, but playful invention.

The actors were brilliant; they had to be for the performance's success. Being prepared to pick up lines from other characters and instantly respond was the outcome of their constant teamwork and devotion. Each person had their own character and remained the same one, refining it as the years went by. The characters were traditional ones, such as the sweetheart, braggart, knave, dupe, and old man. They made many wisecracks, speeches, and played tricks on each other.

There were two types of characters in the Commedia Dell'Arte; the comic and the straight. Comic characters performed the most important parts, while the straight characters were the ones interested in love and made romantic interpretations. The characters varied within the different companies. The most famous comic character was Arlecchino. He was more or less a numbskull servant; a simple man but full of pranks. One of the most amusing was Harlequin, who was a dancer and acrobat. He captured the imaginations of writers, musicians, and artists for centuries. Others included Pantalone, the Captain, and Pulcinella.

It would seem only right to put the lovers in the comic category, but they were just the opposite. Lovers were the "straight" characters. All their talent lay in their faces. They were usually played by men of wealth and of "good" family. The love scenes were so far-fetched though, that they were absurd and almost unbelievable. Famous lovers included Fabio, Ottavio, Silvio, Flavio, and Leandro.

And, maybe to your amazement, women WERE allowed to participate in the Commedia-but only in France were they welcomed. It wasn't until the eighteenth century that they were allowed to perform on stage in the Papal States. The "nice" women, the ones always in love and very desirable, were called the Innamoratas. They wore no masks and were usually dressed in high society's fashion. Flaminia, Lavinia, Aurelia, and the most famous Isabella, were the Innamoratas of their time. However, there were also "bad" women-women that were extremely buxom and used outrageous words. The name for these girls was the Soubrettes, including Olivetta, Smeraldina, and the ever popular Columbine.

The scenery was portable and could be carried along with them wherever they went. It consisted of a stage, curtain, and any stage properties they might have needed. The actors entered onto the stage by way of small ladders that were placed on either side. Fireworks, colored lights, and fountains with colored water were used to make the play even more exciting.

To hold all of this talent together and produce good shows, the actors had to be familiar with each other's style. They often intermarried, and the acting tradition was handed down generation after generation. The Commedia influenced all of Europe for two hundred years. The plays were seen by all classes of people and were a universal success. Music and pantomime made their performances clear, even to those who couldn't understand their language. They were always on the move, as they were sought out by churches and civic authorities in many places.

Nearing to the end of the eighteenth century, Commedia Dell'Arte was losing its popularity. It just didn't appeal to the same people as it did before. But it did influence important writers such as Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, Moliere, and George Chapman. The Commedia gave us the famous characters Harlequin, Columbine and Pierrot. They had reflected the ancient mime that started in Greece hundreds of years before. They brought to the world of drama something new and exciting-something that had been unexperienced. The theatre owes a lot to these early troupes, and it is good to know that the Commedia has been revived again for our enjoyment. Will they survive? An answer isn't at hand at the moment, but let's hope so!

Minstrel Man

CBS Explores American Theatrical Form

By SANDY WILLIAMS

Revisit the fascinating era of black minstrelsy by viewing the dramatic musical special "Minstrel Man," a "Mobil Showcase Presentation" to be broadcast Wednesday, March 2, 9:00 p.m. on the CBS Television Network.

Filmed on location in Mississippi, "Minstrel Man" is the drama of two brothers, Rennie and Harry Brown, born into the minstrel tradition. Though they are captivated by it in their individual ways, together they wanted to change it from within.

Why change it? Well, there was the drudgery involved in traveling from city to city in search of fame and money and there was the humiliation of their song, dance, joke, and dialogue acts not being well received by the audience. However, in "Minstrel Man," Harry, the dancing, singing hustler, and Rennie, the ragtime pianist, change the face of American music by overcoming the demeaning sneers, and coercing their fellow performers to laugh with the audience.

Because American minstrelsy was a type of stage production which flourished from early 1800 to early 1900, it was one of the oldest settings for Black professionals. Legend and fact showed that Blacks were responsible for the embryonic stages of American minstrelsy, and that many were involved in musical contributions as to form, style, instrumentation and performance practices.

The overall form of the show resembled an operetta in that its main elements of dance, spoken dialogue, and song were similarly written. While the operetta was most related to the opera because of its quality of music drama, the minstrel show was not necessarily a story, but rather a series of events arranged into scenes and acts.

The special stars are Glynn Turman, Ted Ross, Stanley Clay, and Sandra Sharp. Fred Karlin, the music director, composed original music for the film which also features actual songs from the minstrel stage. The dance sequence was prepared by the Tony Award-winning choreographer, Donald McKayle.

This drama about Negro minstrelsy, America's only native theatrical form, should be extremely entertaining in addition to being historically significant.

Persichetti Featured In Music Symposium

By IKER STONEBERGER

The halls and the classrooms of Wygal are filled with enough activity to tire anyone other than a music major. All that rushing around is something more than routine.

If you were to walk into Wygal Hall today you would sense a change in the pace (it's faster than ever), a feeling of expectancy, like the dare-devil who reaches for the electric barbed-wire anticipating the charge he'll receive from it. The entire Music Department is preparing for a distinguished visitor.

The Longwood College Department of Music is presenting a "Contemporary Music Symposium" with the visiting composer Vincent Persichetti on March 3 and 4, in Wygal Hall.

Dr. Persichetti began his musical life at the age of 5, first studying piano, then organ, double bass, tuba, theory and composition. A virtuoso pianist and organist, he combined extraordinary versatility with an osmotic musical mind, and his earliest published works, written when he was 14, exhibit mastery of form, medium, and style.

Over the years, Persichetti has been accorded many honors by the artistic and academic communities, including Honorary Doctor of Music degrees from Combs College and Bucknell University, and Honorary Doctor of Fine Arts Degree from Baldwin-Wallace College and honorary membership in numerous musical fraternities. He has appeared as guest composer at Swarthmore College, Hopkins Center Congregation of the Arts, and Aspen Music Festival and is an advisor to the MENC-Ford Foundation. The events surrounding the premiere of his "Lincoln Address," which appeared on TV and other news media, helped to focus worldwide attention on Persichetti's music.

Persichetti has composed for nearly every musical medium. More than 95 of his works are published and many of these are available on records. His piano music comprises a complete body of literature in itself. His unusual feeling for poetry has produced numerous vocal and choral compositions of remarkably high literary and musical quality. His greatest solo vocal work is undoubtedly Harmonium, an impressive cycle of 20 closely interrelated songs to poems by Wallace Stevens.

The Rotunda was able to secure a tentative schedule of activities for those two days. It is evident, by the schedule below, that Dr. Persichetti will be a well-utilized resource while on the campus of Longwood College:

Thursday

9:25 a.m. Discussion with Freshman Informal Class

10:50 a.m. Informal time with student composers to look at manuscripts

1:00 p.m. Formal Forum Lecture

2:40 p.m. Working with students on their works, songs, vocal solos, etc.

7:00 p.m. Dress rehearsal for Friday's concert, excluding band

Friday

9:10:00 a.m. Meet with students performing Persichetti works

10:00 a.m. Talk to Sophomore

Theory class

11:00 a.m. Work with Camerata Singers on E. E. Cummings choruses

1-3:00 p.m. More time working with student composers and performers

4-5:30 p.m. Rehearsal with band

8:00 p.m. Concert with reception to follow

The concert Friday night, March 4, at 8:00 p.m. in Molnar Recital Hall, will feature some of Persichetti's major pieces performed by Longwood College students and faculty. Some highlights of the program will include "Four Cummings Choruses" Op. 98, "James Joyce Songs" Op. 74, and "Emily Dickinson Songs" Op. 77 for those with literary-musical tastes. His "Poems for Piano" Vol. I Op. 4, performed by five Longwood students, and "Sonata for Harpsichord" Op. 52, performed by Dr. Hesselink promise to show the fine qualities of the composer as well as the performers.

Of special interest will be the final piece on the program, "Pageant" Op. 59, performed by the Longwood College Concert Band and the Randolph-Henry High School Concert Band. This will be the first formal concert featuring the newly organized Longwood Concert Band.

All activities for the two days and evenings are free of charge and are open to the public. There is, however, limited seating in Molnar Hall, so it is advisable to obtain a reservation if you wish to witness two events: The visit of a great artist-composer, Vincent Persichetti, and the performance of his works.

Artmobile

Masterpieces Of Pre-Columbian Art

By LISA TURNER

"Masterpieces of Pre-Columbian Art" is a new exhibit featured by one of the Virginia Museum's Artmobiles, which will arrive at Longwood on March 7-8, in the Bedford Building Parking lot.

Pre-Columbian art is a relatively new field of art study. It is a predominately 20th century phenomenon; most of the knowledge has been gained from recent study of architecture and artifacts. Finding these has been somewhat difficult as South American cultures have sometimes migrated, leaving few traces of their previous settlements, and the art which does remain is subject to climate, the effects of time, devastation and theft. Although all archaeological finds are supposed to belong to the government for distribution to museums, some pieces are lost along the way.

Included in this collection are sculpture, ceramics, textiles, jewelry, metal-work, and woodwork. The objects in this particular exhibit represent a variety of Pre-Columbian cultures, and are related to predominantly symbolic and religious functions. According to Edway Jones, exhibition assistant in charge of this particular function, "In motivations, Pre-Columbian art is closer to the art of the Middle Ages than to any other tradition in European culture."

However, "New World artists were not overly concerned with naturalistic representations of the world around them, they transformed objects and beliefs into imaginative images of their unique cultures."

Pre-Columbian refers, obviously enough, to early American civilizations before they were affected by Spanish conquerors and other outside influences. Their ancestors migrated from Asia over the Bering Strait some 35-50 thousand years ago. Pre-Columbian cultures varied a great deal, both from nearby civilizations and contemporary art in Europe. Present knowledge of Pre-Columbian art is actually a "brief glimpse" into their world, according to Jones, as not much is known about their development as a whole.

Most of the high civilizations of the pre-Columbian period spread from central Mexico south to Central America and down the tip to what is now Columbia, Ecuador, and Peru. The Olmec and Chavin civilizations were among the earliest; they were already considered "ancient" by the time of the Incas and Aztecs. (1400-1600 AD) The Chavins flourished in Peru from 500-300 BC; There is one piece of Chavin art; it is a small vessel in the form of a seated man. (Whenever possible, Pre-Columbians gave human and animal characteristics to their artwork.)

The Mayan culture provided most of the pieces in this collection; there are two vases, a bowl and a relief fragment. The Mayans lived in Mexico. A very advanced culture, they disappeared before the first Gothic Cathedral was built in Europe.

A serpent head carving in a relic of the Aztec culture of Mexico. The Aztecs are perhaps the best known of the Pre-Columbian cultures. A proud and very warlike nation, they were conquered by Cortez in the 16th century.

The Incas were another advanced culture. They lived around the time of the Aztecs, but were much more peaceful. A drinking vessel from this age remains in the collection. The Incas too were devastated by the Spanish; this time at the hands of Pizarro.

According to Jones, the destruction of the Aztecs and the Incas terminated the development of Indian culture in Mexico and South America.

Story Theatre-Theatrical Simplicity

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Once upon a time, 1970 to be exact, Henry Penny, Ducky Daddies and Turkey Lurkey waddled down the "Great White Way" into the Ambassador Theater in a production that NY Times critic Clive Barnes called "a play for people who plays." The show, "Story Theater," is a collection of fables, songs and fairie stories adapted for the stage by director Paul Sills.

Sills approached the delivery of such tales as "The Bremen Town Musicians," "The Master Thief," and "The Golden Goose" through the familiar manner of the bedtime story. Actors are both the characters as well as their narrators, speaking of themselves in the first and third person. This technique seems to have an unusual potential to enhance a sense of intimacy between the audience and the actors. The actors, by virtue of their "telling" of the story, acknowledge the audience, encouraging their imaginations through a mixture of character dialogue and mime. The opening of "Henny Penny" in which Henny Penny, pecking the ground and begins to speak, is a good illustration of these three techniques:

HENNY PENNY: This is the story of Henny Penny. One day Henny Penny was out in the barnyard pecking for corn when all of a sudden, something hit her on the head. "Dear me, the sky is falling. I better go tell the king."

This type of theater depends, to a large extent, on the individual actor's ability to produce an image. There is no elaborate scenery. Costume interpretation aims at representations of the character through the use of certain cliché props and accessories such as a crown and staff for a king or an apron and bandana to denote a peasant girl. The technical simplicity makes the actors' roles that much more demanding. The responsibility of convincing the audience without the visual aides of scenery and elaborate lighting compels the actors to exaggerate the characters in an extremely kinetic portrayal.

Absence of scenery also implies that there is little visual preoccupation for the members of the audience who may become restless or disinterested. Thus another qualification for an effective "Story Theater" player — he must be able to maintain both a high sense of energy and a relatively fast pace.

When asked what type of audience "Story Theater" is directed toward, Dr. Lockwood, director of Longwood's "Story Theater" touring production, pointed out that it is "deeper than just child-like amusement." He also shared a personal feeling of his own, derived from the observations of psychologist Jung, about the nature of many children's stories; "in mythology and folk stories can be found archetypes which are fundamental to the nature of man and reveal certain basic truths about him."

"Story Theater" was created to bring life to those classic stories to entertain and maybe in the process, suggest the messages that lie behind them. What type of people appreciate the trials and tribulations of a paranoid chicken squawking about, of all the absurdities, the sky falling? Those people, according to Clive Barnes, who are sensitive "to the difference between childlike and childish."

Men Lose To Southside 58-55

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Longwood men's basketball team, in their second game against Southside Community College, made a poor showing Tuesday, Feb. 22. Their loss to Southside set their season's record at 2-11.

Longwood got the fast breaks, but were just cold when it came to shooting. Their shot percentage of about 15 per cent for the game proves this.

At the end of the first half, L. C. was down by five (27-22) despite the good drive shown by the team in the last minutes of the half to try to cut down the visitors' margin.

The only bright spot of the game was Longwood's defense. They kept pressing Southside causing turnovers and used a 'tight zone in the second half. This kept Southside from scoring for several minutes.

In the second half of the game, Longwood managed to tie the score 35 all. Both teams then had a slump when neither of them could put points on the board. L.C. fell behind again but trailed by only two points in the last seconds. Despite the rally, Longwood was defeated 58-55.

The game was very physical, with a few fists being thrown. The referees, who were not used to working with each other, disagreed on several calls. They aroused the onlookers' wrath when they made, what appeared to be some bad calls on Longwood. This does not mean to say that they called a poor game since in reality Longwood got many breaks also in regard to the foul situation.

Coach McNamee felt that his team should have won the game. "If we hold a team down to only 58 points, then we should definitely win." The team, though, just could not get itself together. Southside was able to get results by hustling down the court. McNamee felt his team was just overconfident and not mentally prepared for the game.

They definitely did not live up to the caliber of their performance against Averett, when they played a marvelous offensive game, not an entirely defensive one.

Best Offensive

Game Of Season

By BILLY ROGERS

On Thursday, February 24, the Longwood Men's basketball team ended its season's play at the Bluefield College Invitational Tournament. Longwood was eliminated in the first round of the tournament by the stronger Bluefield team. Longwood did, however, cut loose its best game of the season losing, 134-93.

Coach McNamee said the team had the best offensive game of the year, shooting 51 per cent. Jimmy Yarbrough had L.C. record 46 points, but as Coach McNamee pointed out, "It could not have been done without teamwork; we really put it all together offensively."

Longwood

Has A Men's

Fencing Team! ?

By DEANNA VanWEY

Yes, Longwood does have a men's fencing team. It was an interest group, until last spring, when it got its intercollegiate status. Due to lack of enough participation, right now it is an individual group competing with only the foil and sabre. Next year the team expects to compete quite a bit more and also add the epee to its weapons for competition.

This year's team members are: Steve Frank, who acts as captain of the team, Charlie Mason, D.J. Lindsey, Dave Yerkes, Larry Frost, Norman Harris, Randy May, and Bill Breedon.

The team's first match was against Lynchburg College last week, which Longwood lost 9-0. Only one team member, Steve Frank, has ever fenced competitively before, so with a little more experience the team should start looking good. So come out and support the team.

Women's Fencing

Loses Two

By DEANNA VANWEY

Longwood's women's fencing team had a rough time this week. They played the University of North Carolina and Lynchburg and lost both matches.

Although Longwood did give University of North Carolina a good scare, they came out losing 10-6. Most of the matches were very close, University of North Carolina was just the more experienced team and got ahead.

Against Lynchburg College, Longwood lost 9-7. What really hurt Longwood in this match were the duals that went to labele. Out of eight matches that went to labele, Longwood only won one.

The team's next match is March 2 with UVA. Seasonals start March 4, at George Mason University.

Southside Takes Faculty Game

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The male Longwood faculty got a rare chance on February 22 to demonstrate their athletic abilities when they took on the Southside Community College faculty in a basketball game.

At first the Longwood faculty seemed disorganized compared to the Southside team, who looked as if they had a few practices together. The only time the Longood team practiced was on Saturday afternoon.

But as L.C. got warmed up, their passes and shots began to get better. President Willett was hot from the corner for a while and Dr. Lund popped in a turn-around jumper. Unfortunately, their defense just could not stop the Southside drives.

Of course, Southside had some lucky breaks. Take, for example, the bomb pass that went through the hoop — too bad it was one of the baskets on the side of the court.

All in all the faculty team composed of President Henry Willett, Dr. Michael Lund, Dr. Vernon Alexander, Dr. Hightower, Dr. James McAvaddy, Mr. Mike Barree, Mr. George Bristol, and Mr. Mitchell, did a good job. "Coach" Dalton called the plays from the sidelines. D. J. Lindsay and Dave Stack were the referees.

Some of the L.C. team members had not played basketball in years and enjoyed this opportunity to play. Several of the Longwood faculty said they would like to play a re-match game NEXT year.

Southside led at the half, 34-19 and took the game 54-31.

Wanna Play Some

Competitive Basketball?

By DEANNA VANWEY

The basketball intramurals, sponsored by the IAA, are in progress right now and could really use some more participation, so if you want to play, get in touch with your dorm or sorority IAA representative.

In the tournament, so far, many teams are in the running. Some of the better looking teams right now are North Cunningham, South Cunningham, and Frazer, although many others could easily catch up in the competition.

These intramurals are run entirely on the volunteer basis and the people that have been refereeing, Kathy Forthhuber and Cheryl Harisston, who organized it, should really be recognized for all their hard work.

The best of luck to all the teams. The Championship game will be played March 9.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

During the next two weeks there will be many and varied cultural events well worth taking advantage of. For this reason pages four and five, which usually contain editorials and reviews, have been devoted to the arts, the languages of man.

Within the reach of every student, and at no charge, the events cover most of the arts. The music department is sponsoring a music symposium featuring composer Persichetti; the art department is featuring the premier of Dr. Hooker's film, "Sculptor From Dry Bridge," sponsoring the artmobile next week, and sponsoring the exhibit of contemporary prints in Bedford Gallery. The Commedia being presented this afternoon by the Virginia Museum should prove to be lively and entertaining to all. For those interested in theatrics, this is just the beginning — catch the CBS special "Minstrel Man" tomorrow night, and the Theatre West Virginia's performance of "She Stoops To Conquer" next week. And there's more!

This is an excellent time to be exposed to the arts, an art which you are familiar with, or an art which you'd like to break into. The opportunities are there, asking to be taken advantage of.

By DIANNE HARWOOD

Well, sports fans, it's back to the drawing board for the girl's basketball team. The squad dropped their last two games of the regular season to Norfolk State and the University of Virginia, thus dropping them to a lowly seventh place (out of eight teams) in the state rankings. And it's a damn shame — the girls have the potential of state champions. Goodness only knows what is keeping them from reaching their potential.

The loss of Norfolk State should not have been. The girls held a 34-26 half-time lead, and lead up until the final minutes. With 1:56 left in the game, Longwood was up by two, 60-58. However, fifty seconds later, the tables were turned and State had the two-point edge, 62-60. The Spartannes finished off with a last second jump shot to end the game in their favor, 64-60. Sue Rama and Maryjane Smith were high point-getters for Longwood with sixteen and fourteen points, respectively.

And the game with U. Va.? A bit unusual, to say the least. LC shot a poor 29 per cent from the floor, but U. Va. didn't do too much better. The officials were "terrible" (the word I would have liked to use would have been deleted), but that is no excuse, either. Linda Baumber and Sue Rama had three and four fouls respectively at the end of the first half, and they, along with Melissa Wiggins, left the second half with five (sic). Longwood hit six foul shots to Virginia's nineteen. U. Va. had a 41-25 half-time lead, and increased this lead early in the second half when LC could only score five points in the first seven and a half minutes. Longwood towered above the Cavaliers; yet were out-rebounded 68-57. Final score: Longwood 56, U. Va. 77.

The state tournament starts Thursday, and Longwood will square off against Norfolk State. For all the loyal fans who have remained loyal, it will cost you a dollar or two to get in. So since the majority of us are majoring in extracurricular activities, come on down Thursday or Friday and watch the game of basketball "at its finest."

Scorecard: Longwood vs. Norfolk State

Sanders: 1-0-2; McCraw: 1-2-4; Wiggins: 0-0-0; Baumber: 5-1-11; Brown: 0-0-0; Henshaw: 1-0-2; Stowe: 3-1-7; Donohue: 0-0-0; Fox: 1-2-4; Smith: 6-2-14; Rama: 7-2-16.

Longwood vs. University of Virginia

Sanders: 1-0-2; McCraw: 1-0-2; Wiggins: 0-0-0; Baumber: 3-2-8; Brown: 0-0-0; Henshaw: 3-0-6; Stowe: 5-1-11; Donohue: 0-0-0; Fox: 0-0-0; Smith: 5-1-11; Rama: 7-2-16.

Big-Name Bands

Incidentally, Gene Cotton, who was here two years ago while on his way up, is coming back at a discount to Longwood because he likes the school, its people and its hospitality.

"Students don't know what they're missing by not coming to a concert. Through the activity fee, they are paying for half of the concert anyway, so why not enjoy your half? If you don't know what kind of music the band plays, listen to the radio station in Crewe, which does plugs for the bands, or stop any S-UN member, or come by the office. We have to charge something for these concerts because our budget doesn't allow for all expenses, it isn't fair to blow all the money on a concert that only a few people like, and there is the expense of housing, food, tickets, and crews for the concert. The money isn't easily made up."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor,

In reference to the Rotunda article on "Male Housing Dominates Press Conference," by Billy Rogers, what alternative is going to be left to the nonsorority girls who wish to live in a single-sexed dorm? The choices given were Curry, Stubbs, French, North Cunningham, and Main Cunningham. Stubbs is a sorority dorm. French, North, and Main are freshman dorms. Men, consider the fact that many of you do not wish to live in a high-rise dorm, so why would nonsorority, upperclassmen girls who wish to live in a single-sexed dorm choose to live in the high-rise? The article regarding the press conference leads one to believe that a high-rise dorm is the only choice left.

Until the male population at Longwood is large enough to justify the need for a male floor in each dorm, it stands to reason that male housing will only be available in a few dorms. The gripe of wanting to move into the most convenient dorm is legitimate but, possibly a little ahead of its time. I do not believe any new minority in any given situation can demand complete reform to suit their needs immediately, unless of course, the needs are of a critical nature. Constructive change that offers the most benefit to everyone normally takes time.

Sincerely,
Tricia Whitehurst

Dear Editor,

I am writing this letter in regard to your failure to publish my Dec. 1976 Letter to the Editor in which I supported Mr. Watkins' letter that opposed publicizing the perverse ways of some of Longwood's students. In my letter I stated that a normal Longwood student should not be subject to possible ridicule and discrimination by relatives, friends, and prospective employers because some of their colleagues publicize their sexual invertness.

I am displeased that a long unsigned invert's letter was published in the February 1 issue of The Rotunda with no opposing views being printed. The Rotunda is not supported by gay students only. I hope that from now on The Rotunda will serve not only minority groups, but all of Longwood's students.

Sincerely,
Dennis Hevener

Legislative Board

Student Government Day Is Thursday

By DEBBIE WEBB

At the present time, Legislative Board is going over two constitutions of organizations on campus. Any new organizations or one who has not had its constitution reviewed in three years is reminded to present the constitution to Organizations and Evaluations committee.

The list of suggested nicknames are still being compiled, and should be out some time this week for voting.

Everyone is reminded of the 90-day moratorium on key parties in the dorms. The ABC Rooms in Lankford may be used by scheduling with the Director of Student Activities, and the Cabin may be secured by contacting the Department of Health, Physical Education and Recreation. Any suggestions on this topic should be submitted to Residence Board.

It is hoped that anyone interested in participating in Student Government Day has signed up on the lists in the New Smoker. If anyone still needs to sign up, he should contact Billie Brightwell, 2-8593, immediately.

Please don't forget the meetings, Monday nights, 7:00 in the Reading Rooms!!

Student Government Day Brings Change Of Pace

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Pssshh-SNAP, a jean and sneakered student peeled the metal ring off the top of the Coke can, shooting a sticky fizz across the blue tablecloth and an unclaimed spiral notebook. Administrative members and students weaved in and out of "hellos" and passing banter as they guided cups of swaying coffee soda cans and sweet rolls over to the "E-shaped" arrangement of tables.

This is how Student Government Day began early Thursday morning. Students and administration met in the banquet room for the first of the day's activities to acquaint students with the duties of the various administrative posts and with the people who hold them. The group at the 9:30 Staff Meeting quietly sipped, chewed, and watched Dr. Willett as he welcomed the students and made brief comments on the budget and student enrollment. Following his general address the open floor discussion moved something like a checker game, an adequate number making a point or announcement, a few choosing to pass, the others "crowning" the initial statement by reiterating with a question, comment, or suggestion. They plodded steadily through the Physical Plant's "Spring cleaning" program, student insurance, financial aid, Senior Banquet preparations and an announcement in catalog insertions for the next school year. The point was served, and the volley was "up for grabs" when the question of housing was raised. Students primarily carried the discussion here, contributing observations on dorm life from personal experiences in both freshman and upperclass living situations, with an interjection from one of the deans, on the statistical and administrative aspects of the various suggestions. In listening to one another's views both sides were exposed to enough different types of input to realize that there is no single basis on which to base the decision of student housing. After asking if there were any further comments, President Willett closed the meeting shortly after 11 o'clock.

From there students had chosen to spend the day with a particular member of the staff left to spend the hour before lunch talking in their office, visiting the art exhibit or accompanying them through some of their daily routine. At lunch students and administration "broke pizza" together in one of the Longwood "species" most natural habitats—the main dining hall. The atmosphere consisted of the usual fare of meal-time clatter; forks clanging from pot shots at the silverware stackers, the dull clack of plates as the waitresses cleared the tables and the knitting of a few hundred "pass mes'" into many different conversations.

I met Mr. Dent, Director of Student Activities there along with Sara Jo Wyatt who was his student observer for the day, and followed along with them to his office in Lankford. Activity "headquarters" would probably better describe Mr. Dent's workroom, as his job far extends the limits of four walls of office space. Here amidst a giant licorice twist of black electrical cables and theatrical lamps heaped in a corner and a low circular table wadded with PROGRAM magazines and entertainment catalogs, Mr. Dent handles the paperwork and telephone receiver that result in a concert, trip, or S-UN sponsored program.

Sitting at his desk, a picture of a snarling jungle cat behind him on the pale cinderblock wall, he leaned back and extracted a calendar from a pile of papers off to the side. This, he explained to us, as he held up the month of March which looked something like the gameboard of "Chutes and Ladders", is the most effective type of organization as opposed to the desk tablet of individual days. The overview, the complete picture, things in relationship to other things; this seemed to be his entire approach to his work. Besides booking a band on stage, he arranges the distribution of publicity, transportation, pre-concert preparation (setting lights, providing adequate dressing rooms, if necessary) lodging and reception of the artists. In the case of "Rotagilla" who performed here last week, he housed the entire band for the night in his own home.

While the telephone is one of Mr. Dent's most valuable means of connection, (he phoned in the ticket information for the Gene Cotton-Meisburg and Walters concert while Sara Jo and I were there), it can be one of his biggest time tie-ups. An agent called to promote an act for a time in which other activities had already been booked. After discovering the man's "line" and price range, Mr. Dent seemed interested and exchanged names that he might get in touch with the agent for next year's activities program, again looking ahead—stashing resources for the future.

He explained to us that one of the basic functions of his job is to "weed out what goes to Debbie MacCollough." Good material goes into the S-UN box which Debbie goes over and takes to the S-UN meeting after which it is returned to him with comments that the students have made. "S-UN is trying to move away from total entertainment," he explained, thus the promotion of experimental college, documentaries and Artist Series which incorporate both information, culture and entertainment formats.

When asked of his reactions to Student Government Day, Mr. Dent was enthusiastic over the program and of our being there with him. He felt that students "staying all day long is good," (Sara Jo and I were with Mr. Dent for a relatively small portion of his day; about 2 hours total, mostly in the afternoon.) He was especially impressed with the student input at the Staff Meeting earlier that morning, "the students weren't quiet at all." Susann Smith who had wandered in toward the latter part of the afternoon (P.S. his office is very conducive to wandering in) had a comment to add to that, "students were more concerned this year." Sara Jo agreed, observing that "the added interest (was) created because of the controversy... more students wanted to talk."

Student Government Day ended in the banquet room where students and administration sat down once again to discuss the experiences of the day over Thursday's menu of meatloaf and shrimp chowmein...

Residence Board

Chairman Resigns

By

MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

Last Wednesday, March 2, Sara Jo Wyatt, chairman of Residence Board, announced her resignation. Her reasons for resigning are seeded in religious convictions.

Sara Jo commented that the job was "nothing that I could not handle; nothing that I would not like to continue to handle if I thought that was where I should be." She added, "I felt God was calling me to leave residence board and I am trusting Him to lead me this way, though I don't understand all that it will involve."

Sara Jo's resignation will take effect as soon as a new chairman is elected. Betsey Crupper, head of Elections committee, is working now to get petitions out, and she hopes that the election can be scheduled for Thursday.

New Athletic Facility In Sight

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

In the near future, Longwood might have a new gym facility building. The 3½ million dollar bond passed in the Virginia House of Representatives last month and on March 3 passed in the Senate. The next stage is a voter referendum to approve this bond. The voters will decide the facilities future in November.

The site of this facility, if approved, will be on "the hill," between the highrises and the Lankford parking lot. The proposed building depth is 237 feet. The entire complex, including tennis courts and parking lot will encompass 686 square feet.

Plans for this project have been drawn up since 1972, but due to lack of appropriations nothing further has been done. Of course it would have been less expensive to build it five years ago and since that time the cost has probably about doubled.

The facility plans call for a gymnasium which has a divider to split it into two teaching stations when necessary, a swimming pool, offices for the physical education faculty, class rooms, and laboratories. Alterations since the 1972 plans include co-ed locker rooms and showers and devices such as ramps for the handicapped.

Dr. Peele, vice-president of Administration, emphasized that the physical education facility was for academic and teaching purposes. Since Longwood has a large number of physical education majors, this project was given higher priority by the state as an education facility. Without this classification, the bond might not have even passed the Virginia legislature.

If things go well at the election, the architects will make whatever revisions are necessary and if approved by the Art Commission, bids will be opened to the contractors. It may take from 30 days to six weeks to get the bids in. The selected contractor will then order the necessary materials and begin excavations. The building might possibly be completed in two years.

Freshman Production Huge Success

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The time clock was turned backwards March 3, when Freshman Production looked at Longwood's past. A large crowd enjoyed the many skits acted out by the Freshman class. First though, the Red and Whites got a pleasant surprise as Sally Red and White made a dramatic entrance from the ceiling before the show. Earlier she had been kidnapped by the Green and Whites.

The first scene showed what trouble the 1920's through 40's Longwood student got into, such as playing cards, taking showers past 7:30, and not being in bed by 10:30. "Chi" made a ghastly appearance to chastise the rebellious student, who cowered in her bed promising to change her ways.

Also there was a dance routine and an infirmary skit done in the first scene. The infirmary skit comically showed the student's terror of being taken there.

The '50's era was covered by dances to some "oldies but goodies," such as "Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy." "Chi" again came out of hiding to show that Longwood traditions, like not stepping on the CHI symbols, should be taken seriously.

In the 1960's scene, the trials of dating at Longwood were explored. The male visitor was not well received if he was not on the "Approved Dates For Longwood Ladies List" and all the young couples had to be well chaperoned.

Finally in modern times, the rowdiness of the first male fraternity at Longwood was dramatized. "Campus Police" made their appearance to quell the noisy group, but failed. This spoof had "Nighty Watch" confiscating the beer and starting where the frats left off.

The show ended with a touching, original song, sung by the Freshman class, which was dedicated to the Class of '78, their sister Red and Whites.

The audience enjoyed the performance and gave it a standing ovation. Sue Transue's hard work as Chairman did not go unappreciated by the Class, who presented her with flowers and a gift. The night was a success for the Freshman Class.

A Circle Of Children

Education Drama To Be Aired

By BRIDGETSCHERZ

A two hour drama "A Circle of Children" will be aired on CBS Thursday, March 10 at 9 o'clock. Starring Nan Martin, Jane Alexander and Rachael Roberts, it is based on the autobiographical account of Mary MacCracken in her experiences as a volunteer at a school for emotionally disturbed children. Ms. Martin, who portrays the director of the school, expresses the gist of the drama: "The play gives dramatic insight, in a hopeful way, to the dilemma faced by disturbed children, their parents and the adults dedicated to helping them. . . in the process, it makes strong statements about some other contemporary riddles, including women's rights."

Besides being a genuine observation of the interaction between the teaching aides and the children, "A Circle of Children" explores two sketches of the individuals who work with them. The drama traces the awareness and strengthening of a lonely society matron as she finds in her work with the children, the courage to resolve the problems that have thwarted her own emotional growth. The school director, on the other hand, is fighting battles of a physically larger realm — the frustrations of bureaucracy, public apathy and the constant need of materials and funds to "give the handicapped children a reasonable chance at life."

"She Stoops To Conquer" In Jarman Tonight

By SANDY WILLIAMS

Oliver Goldsmith's "She Stoops to Conquer" is one of the greatest comedies in the history of the English theater. It was first produced at Convent Garden in March of 1773; however, tonight, at 8:00 p. m., exactly 204 years later, the Theatre West Virginia will present this hilarious restoration comedy in Jarman Auditorium.

Restoration comedy, which was revived by Goldsmith late in the eighteenth century, is the period name for the comedy of wit or comedy of manners. Its concern is to reveal the manners and conventions of an artificial, highly sophisticated society by reflecting upon this social group's outlook on life. The characters are more likely to be types than individualized personalities. In "She Stoops to Conquer," several stereotyped individuals immerse: Mr. Hardcastle, an English gentleman; Kate, his headstrong daughter; Tony, Kate's spoiled but sickly stepbrother; and Marlow, Kate's reluctant suitor.

Though the plot in this type of comedy may involve clever handling of situation and intrigue, it is less important than the atmosphere, dialogue, and satire. In "She Stoops to Conquer" as in other restoration comedies, the prose dialogue is witty and finished which lends intellectual appeal. The satire displays the follies and deficiencies of the typical characters who somehow fail to conform to the conventional attitudes and manners of the elegant society of the time. Another distinguishing characteristic is its emphasis upon an illicit love duel, involving at least one pair of witty, often amoral lovers. The "love game," in this case, is played by Kate and Marlow.

Goldsmith's graceful, fluent style can easily be detected even though the play is comic in nature. Once it was said that Goldsmith was "an unbroken failure in everything that he tried to reach by study or effort: he tried law, medicine, the church, and teaching, and failed in all of them; the only thing he succeeded in was literature." Perhaps his success in this area is due to his humane, humorous, and whimsical personality that is so strongly stamped on his works.

The conditions of society in Goldsmith's world on which "She Stoops to Conquer" is based may have long since ceased to exist, but the plot's gaiety and the dialogue's raciness continue to be amusing. Goldsmith's charming play, which has entertained audiences for years, is being brought to the student body by the Artist Series.

Longwood

Computer Service

By DEBBIE MOUL

Longwood College acquired its first computer in 1973. This computer was used primarily for administrative work; payrolls, budgets, student academic system reports, student information and student accounts. The results of all these systems to the student were grademakers, class rolls and bills. After initial applications, other administrative reports were added because the computer then allowed reports that previously had not been possible. In 1974, a financial aid system was added.

Academically during this time, the computer was only used for Fortran in the math department and as an aid in introduction to Data Processing in the Business Department. With the addition of new faculty members with a broader understanding of how a computer can be used in curriculum, plans were made to increase the academic computing beyond those modest beginnings.

In this current academic year, approximately ten per cent of the student body will be exposed to the computer as a problem solving tool. There is now a communication link between Longwood College and the University of Virginia for the purpose of providing the Longwood students with computing power beyond what was installed in 1973. This communication link takes the form of three tele-type machines and the basic knowledge needed by a student to use the equipment is minimal.

Longwood has plans to add additional tele-type machines by the fall of 1977. There are also plans to offer additional business language courses. Cobol is the common business-oriented language.

Early Childhood

Conference Scheduled

By BRIDGETSCHERZ

Saturday, March 26, the Longwood College Department of Education and Psychology will sponsor a Conference on Early Childhood to be held at the Campus School. Ms. Margaret Skutch, Director of the Early Learning Center in Stamford, Connecticut will be the featured guest speaker. Ms. Skutch, who has appeared on both radio and TV, has an interesting and distinguished array of accomplishments in the field of early childhood education. These include the establishment of a kindergarten program for the Buchannon, W. Va., School System, consultant to the "Follow Through" programs and public school systems in S. Carolina, Kentucky, California, New Hampshire and Ohio, and formation of a Child Care Center for the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company. Her writings include "Environmental Flexibility for Preschoolers," published in PHI DELTA KAPPAN and "To Start a School," co-authored with Wilfred G. Hamlin.

The conference will encompass a collage of lectures, workshops and displays integrated along the theme of education of the "primary" child. Participants will choose two from the following selections of hour-long workshops: Classroom Management, Techniques and Strategies for the Immature Primary Child, Learning Center Circus, Classroom Puppets and The Third Side-Parents. The itinerary for the day will include: 8:00-9:30 Registration, Open House, Exhibits, Refreshments 9:30-10:45 Major Address — Ms. Margaret Skutch 10:45-11:00 Exhibits 11:00-12:00 First Series of Workshops 12:00-1:00 Lunch in Lower Dining Hall 1:00-1:30 Exhibits (Choice of One) 1:30-2:30 Second Series of Workshops (Choice of one)

A $5.00 registration fee will cover conference materials, lunch, and refreshments. There are only 400 spaces, so interested students are encouraged to stop by the Education office in Hiner as soon as possible to pick up a registration form.

Gene Cotton To Welcome You Back From Break

By STACEY SMITH

On the evening of March 23, the popular hit recording artist, Gene Cotton will appear in Jarman. Gene, who has appeared on American Bandstand and Mike Douglas is probably best known for his top 20 hit "You Keep Me Running," which is also the title of his fourth album.

He is a native of Columbus, Ohio but now resides in Nashville with his wife and three children. He has been to Longwood before and was a big success. Along with his musical talent, which students enjoyed, they were impressed by his ability to relate to the audience. Jo Leili observed from Gene's previous performance that "Cotton projected throughout the evening a genuine appeal to, and warmth for his audience. Even more noticeable however, this artist treated his Longwood College listeners to a number of highly personal opinions described with a clear objective honesty and sincerity as are rarely found in today's musical performances."

Since his last performance at Longwood, Gene has become in great demand. Soon he will be taping for the Grand Ole Opry. It should be an exciting event to have such musical talent at Longwood. Also, the duo Meisburg and Walters, will be appearing with Gene on March 23. The group composed of Steve Meisburg and John Walters, play a combination of "country pop with folk." Charlie Hunter, music director for WOMA in Taelahassee says, "We think of their music as new country music, not to twangy, and the type that appeals to the younger crowd."

They met in a coffee house several years ago and in 1974 they decided to combine their musical talents. Then after some frustration and disappointment, in 1975 they released their first album, SEE THE MORNING BREAKING. Since then they have enjoyed success from songs such as "High Country," labeled a hit by Billboard magazine and Record World and have 3 albums out, the latest titled "Just like a recurring dream." But says Catherine Setzer, "as far as success goes they'd rather be respected in music circles than be a huge commercial success."

Meisburg and Walters have just recently signed with Variety Artists International and have made concert performances with Pure Prairie League, a recent sell out success, Ike and Tina, Mel Tillis, Jerry Reed, Asleep at the Wheel, Sugar Loaf, and others. Catherine Setzer, "Newlook" observes, "Now, new friends and old fans flock to wish them well. Listeners, excited by their music, write to thank them. In concert, whistling, whooping audiences give them standing ovations.

Literary Festival Announced

By DR. QUENTIN VEST

This week the GYRE announced its schedule of visiting poets and novelists who will read and discuss their works at Longwood during a week-long festival of the arts at the end of March. Whereas last year the festival honored established superstar Robert Penn Warren, this year the accent is on youth. Of the five important authors who will participate, two are under thirty with the other three not far beyond. Yet they have already gained wide reputations as forces to be reckoned with. Taken together they make a kind of living anthology of the state of American poetry — and shed some light on American fiction, too. The list includes two native Virginians, a member of the college faculty, and a recent Longwood graduate.

Jeffers Auditorium

On Tuesday evening, March 29, at 8:00 in Jeffers Auditorium, Dabney Stuart, author of five books of poems, two novels, and a critical study of Russian novelist Vladimir Nabokov (the man who wrote the controversial LOLITA), will read. Stuart's book of poems for children is already well-known to many Longwood students. His newest book, just out, is ROUND AND ROUND, a cycle of ballads.

Lankford ABC

At 1:00 on Wednesday, March 30, in the ABC rooms, there's a double feature. Two highly-gifted young poets will share the 90 minute program. Gregory Orr, whose two books, BURNING THE EMPTY NESTS and GATHERING THE BONES TOGETHER, have won wide recognition, will be joined by Dara Wier, who will present poems from her brand-new book BLOOD, HOOK & EYE, which will be out this Spring. The appearance of Ms. Wier gives Longwood the chance to honor one of its own graduates.

On Thursday, March 31, at 3:00, in the ABC rooms, novelist and journalist William Crawford Woods, author of THE KILLING ZONE and the newest member of the English department, will present his first public reading in the area. Professor Woods has also contributed work to ROLLING STONE, VILLAGE VOICE, THE WASHINGTON POST, and PENTHOUSE.

That same evening, at 8:00 in the ABC rooms, poet Henry Taylor, another native Virginian, will close out the festival with a reading. Mr. Taylor's books include THE HORSE SHOW AT MIDNIGHT, AN AFTERNOON OF POCKET BILLIARDS, and his translation of CHILDREN OF HERAKLES.

Of special interest to anyone interested in writing is that each of the visiting authors will conduct seminars or workshops in Grainger for interested persons. These small gatherings will provide student writers with the chance to get professional advice and guidance. Anyone who would like to participate should contact Dr. Quentin Vest of the English department. Dr. Vest will make one or two samples of each participant's work available in advance to the discussion leaders. There is no charge for any aspect of the literary festival.

Further details about the festival will be made public in the coming weeks.

Commedia Performs Before

Enthusiastic Audience

By JACQUISINGLETON

Slapstick comedy and professionalism were the key ingredients that blended together to make the performance of the Virginia Museum Theatre Commedia dell'arte troupe a success. The company performed a scenario entitled "The Dentist" to a sparse but enthusiastic audience last Tuesday at 12:45 in the Gold Room. They presented many of the old stock characters such as the braggart soldier, Captain Spavento; the lovers, Isabella and Lelio; the comic servant, Pedrelino, just to mention a few. The troupe performed maintaining a fantastically high energy level from their entrance until the end of the show and raised it even higher by involving and playing frequently to the audience.

At 2:30 that same afternoon, several of the company players directed a workshop for all interested students which took place in Jarman studio theatre. Warm-up exercises, mime, and improvisational techniques were the focus of the workshop, which was thoroughly enjoyed by all who attended.

The Commedia experience was one not soon to be forgotten by the Longwood audience and we look forward to many future performances.

concerns itself with the dual aspects of the Black musician: the creation of new Afro-American style music and its influence on the European-based musical traditions of the United States.

Southern, born in 1920 in Minneapolis, the daughter of a teacher father, received both her B. A. and M. A. from the University of Chicago by 1941. In 1961, Southern received her Ph. D. from New York University. After studying piano at Chicago musical College, Boston University, and Juilliard Institute, she is now Professor of Music and Afro-American Studies at Harvard.

In addition to her teaching and writing careers, Dr. Southern has been a concert pianist since 1940 and has received notoriety with such honors as a Citation from - Voice of America for activities in promoting Black music and culture, in addition to an achievement award from the National Association of Negro Musicians. Both rewards were received in 1971.

The Music of Black Americans: A History traces the course of Afro-American music from musical practices in West Africa, that musical heritage which the Black man brought with him to the New World. The chief emphasis of the book is placed on the Black creators of music, discussing those contributions of some 360 composers entertainers who reach across the great time span from early African heritage to the 1950's and late 1960's.

Dr. Southern writes, "I have not tried to make explicit a definition of Black American music. My concern has been with all music created by Afro-Americans. By gathering together the strands that have made up the fabric of the music in the United States — the folk songs, popular vocal and dance music, religious, theatrical, and concert music — I have tried to provide a solid and useful basis for discussion of the question of its definition."

Perhaps as a preparation for Dr. Southern's visit and lecture, "Folk Roots of Black-American Music," her book The Music of Black Americans: A History may be helpful. The college community will be ready, in any event, to receive this distinguished scholar.

New Colleagues Tapped

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Many nervous freshmen expectantly awaited the tapping of the 81 1977 Colleagues Tuesday, March 1 in the Rotunda. The evening began with the 1976

FROM THE EDITOR . .

During the recent commotion of housing assignments, the question of the use of Residence Board as a means of obtaining a personal goal has arisen. Because of the opposition to the housing of freshmen in Cox, Dr. Willett asked Residence Board to acquire a committee comprised of a cross section of dorm students to meet with him to discuss the original housing decision. The Residence Board Chairman called a Residence Board meeting to announce that there would be dorm meetings to elect students to serve on the committee.

During that meeting, the Cox dorm president took it upon herself, without the knowledge or the understanding of the Chairman to change the purpose of the dorm meetings from the election of students to the signing of petitions. It would seem that the cancellation of the dorm meetings would have been more appropriate than allowing a board member to use Residence Board to secure signatures on petitions for future use by a private group.

The petitions read:

"We the undersigned students of Longwood College feel that it is unfair to limit upperclass female housing in Cox dormitory to one floor. We have no negative feelings toward upperclass males being housed in Cox. However, we feel that the demand for upperclass housing in Wheeler and Cox will not be satisfied by the present proposal. We feel that other arrangements should be made for the overflow of incoming freshmen."

Should the student body be tolerant of a private group, headed by a board member, using a board to achieve a personal goal?

Looking back, the Residence Board Chairman has realized that it was a mistake not to have cancelled the dorm meetings when it was determined that the elections would not be held. Having admitted her (Residence Board Chairman) mistake, would it not be reasonable to expect the Cox dorm president to do the same?

A Rotunda will not be published

Tuesday, March 22, the week we return from break.

A special edition, however, will be printed

Look for it!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor,

We, the Green and White Gang of the Class of 1979 would like to explain our reasoning behind the recovery and captivity of Sally Red and White. This is not an apology, we are not sorry and feel no regret for what we have done. We have maintained throughout these past three weeks a spirit of fun and competition. We had hoped that the Red and Whites would have done the same.

Sally was recovered by two Green and Whites from the Longwood Estates at 10:25 a.m. on February fourteenth. She was hidden on campus until nightfall, then removed to an off-campus residence. Our original plan was to return her to the rising sophomores during this year's senior assembly. A letter was sent to the junior class president, assuring the Red and Whites that no harm would come to Sally, and that she would be returned. However, the Reds grew impatient. Rooms were searched and pressure was applied—but we still maintained our secret. Finally, the Reds sent a letter to three of us, "pleading" for their friend to be returned for the dress rehearsal of Freshman Production, and especially for the singing of "We Believe in Freshmen". As much as we wanted to abide by our original plan, it was agreed that we, too, believed in freshmen. Therefore, Sally was lowered to her sovren protectors the next night, the night of Freshman Production. (By the way, congratulations to the freshmen on a job well done.)

At this time, we would like to bring out several points: first and foremost, that this was done in the name of fun and class competition. Unfortunately, the Red and Whites didn't see it this way and were rather wofly about the whole thing. We are aware that part of this feeling was due to misunderstandings on both sides. We hope that we are not the only group that still believe in this type of class competition. Secondly, we had our pride involved — it was our understanding that this was the first successful "kidnap" of Sally Red and White in eight years. We went to a lot of trouble to get her; we went through twice as much hassle to keep her.

We would like to reiterate again that this was done for FUN. We believe class competition between greens and reds still exist. We, the Green and White Gang, have drawn closer to each other and to our class, and in an abstract way, feel it has brought the Reds closer. We also believe that it will take a lot to give and take on both parts to get a complete communication of feelings.

In closing, we would like to quote one of the clues found on February fourteenth: "Hope you had fun, it was intended that way: but watch over Sally, because we'll try again another day".

Sincerely,
The Green and White Gang remind everyone that tradition in classes still exists and the Class of '79 is mighty alive!!!!

Dear Editor,

We realize that by the time this letter is printed a final decision will have been made concerning the housing of incoming freshmen. Regardless of the decision we would like to take this opportunity to thank every member of the staff and administration for their time, concern, openness and willingness to listen.

We would like to let the student body know that we were able to talk to the administration without feeling like we were just being appeased. We were not turned away in any office, if we could not be seen at that moment we were given appointments as soon as possible. We feel that it is important for the student body to know that the administration can be reached. Thank you again.

Sincerely,
Anita Braden
Rennie Bruno
Diane Lowman
Linda Baumlner

Dear Editor:

We are writing this letter for the information of the student body in light of our continued concern to provide an opportunity where matters relating to our sexuality may be discussed. We had planned to have on Jan. 24-27 a "forum on human sexuality" in cooperation with the Dean of Students' office as was advertised in the December Rotunda. Due to scheduling conflicts those dates had to be changed so that now we are planning to have this forum on March 23 and 24. A number of faculty will be helping as small group facilitators.

Our objectives for the forum are:

1. To provide an opportunity to identify and examine one's values in regard to the sexual aspect of interpersonal relationships.

2. To provide an opportunity to identify and discuss feelings related to one's sexuality with informed and interested people other than one's peers.

3. To identify and discuss possible sexual problems and issues particularly for students.

This will not be a "lecture" type of forum. Rather, there will be smaller groups where discussion on varied topics can take place. We look forward to this time together.

Sincerely,
Jim Garrison and John Emmert

The Complex Art Of Classic Horror Films

By LISA TURNER

For most people, the classic horror film begins and ends with Bela Lugosi in the 1931 version of Dracula. This is fine, as those people will have a chance to view this master in another film: The Return of the Vampire on March 10 in the ABC rooms of Lankford. However, few know of the older, and sometimes better, horror films that preceded this one.

Surprisingly enough, the first horror films were made in France some thirty-five years before, by a cinematic genius named Georges Melies. He had been present in December, 1895, when the Lumiere brothers, Louis and Auguste, unveiled their new invention, the Cinematographe, to a select group of Parisians. The films presented were very short, only a few minutes altogether, but lasted long enough to get Melies interested in filmmaking.

He bought an English camera and a large supply of film, despite the discouraging opinion of the Lumiere's father that "the cinema is an invention without a future." At first, Melies stuck to routine topics; people in the street, dignitaries and the like. He soon became very dissatisfied with this.

Before venturing into filmmaking, Melies had been a very talented stage magician, and later director of a theatre specializing in magic acts. He could see the possibilities of cinema, and the fact that it was being wasted on trivial record-keeping disgusted him. Melies discovered a new technique one day while filming a street-scene. According to the Carlos Claren, in his book, An Illustrated History of the Horror Film (G.P. Putnam's sons, 1967) "The camera jammed and the flow of film was interrupted for a few seconds. When he viewed the developed film later on, Melies was astounded to see a bus change into a hearse. Film had stopped while time had not. This wonderfully macabre metamorphosis was the genesis of all film trickery."

Melies made several horror films. He was the first to allude to a vampire in film: The Devil's Castle (1896) featured a medieval castle inhabited by a large bat that could transform itself into Mephistopheles, another name for Satan. Other Melies films include The Man with Four Heads, The Devil in a Convent, The Haunted Cave, The Devil's Manor, and a famous sequence about a trip to the moon.

A few years after Melies began experimenting with horror film techniques, an American company, the Edison Manufacturing Company, came out with the first film version of Frankenstein. Charles Ogle played the part of the monster in 1910. In the early days, actors sometimes had to create their own makeup, and Ogle's conception is supposedly the closest to the Frankenstein described by Mary Shelley in 1817. However, film stills of this movie depict a monster more pathetic-looking than terrifying. Frankenstein looks more like Buddy Hackett in whiteface and drag than anything that could keep a child awake all night.

During the 1920's Lon Chaney, better known for his roles in The Phantom of the Opera, The Hunchback of Notre Dame, and the like, starred in an American satire on vampires, called London After Midnight. Although Chaney looks frightening, with long stringy hair and bulging eyes, the film was more a comedy about a vampire couple than anything else.

What is considered to be one of the best vampire movies of all time was created in Germany in 1922. Nosferatu was the first film version of Bram Stoker's masterpiece, Dracula. Because the filmmakers did not secure the permission of Stoker's publishing company, Stoker's widow, Florence, brought suit against their company and won. All copies of the film were ordered destroyed; fortunately this did not happen.

The plot of Nosferatu is very similar to that of Stoker's Dracula. Although the director, F. W. Murnau, did not have full legal clearance, he still gave much credit to the original creator. Still, several of the events, and the location, were changed. Dracula was renamed Count Graf Orlock, Jonathan Harker, the count's houseguest, surfaces under the name of Hutter.

The plot retained most of the original's horror, but disregarded East European folklore and a lot of the specific events were changed.

Hutter was sent to the Carpathian mountains to arrange a sale of some lands for a Count Orlock, who naturally turns out to be a vampire. After locking Hutter in his castle, the Count sets sail for Bremen, a seaport in Northern Germany with 50 coffins. During the voyage on the Demeter he murders the crew, and upon his landing, an epidemic of the plague breaks loose, due to the rats that accompanied Orlock. Hutter somehow manages to get out of the castle, and races on horseback to Bremen, and to the side of his wife, Ellen. He persuades Ellen that the reason for the plague is the arrival of Orlock; somehow she ends up spending the night with Orlock "to save mankind." The morning rays filter into the bedroom, and Orlock disintegrates in their midst (one of the best shots in the film). Hutter arrives just in time for Ellen to die in his arms; the last shot is of a decaying castle in the mountains.

Where Lugosi's Dracula is subtle and horror—tinged, Count Orlock (well-played by Max Schreck) is immediately menacing. Orlock is hardly suave or continental in appearance; he has a balding pointed head, glowing white eyes, a thin mouth, a very emaciated figure, with long talons for hands.

Some of Murnau's techniques, such as the use of negatives during a trip through the land of the phantoms, and Orlock's disintegration at dawn, remain awesome and chilling. Others, such as the speeded up footage of a traveling carriage and the loading of the coffins are unintentionally hilarious today.

In 1930, director Tod Browning began looking around for actors to cast in his version of Dracula. Browning's first choice was Lon Chaney, who had previously appeared as a vampire (until the surprise ending) in London After Midnight, and was famous for his chilling makeup and voice skills. Much to Browning's chagrin, Chaney developed a malignant growth in his throat; he lost his power to talk, and died later that year. Browning cast Bela Lugosi, the stage Dracula, as lead in the film.

Dracula opened on Valentine's Day, 1931, not without some anxiety. Universal described Dracula as "one of the strangest love stories ever told" in its publicity blurb. Love story or not, Dracula introduced Lugosi as a malevolently charming count, a far cry from Shreck in Nosferatu. Lugosi's actual Hungarian accent helped a great deal, as did the deep tone it took on. Clarens argues that the original Dracula was a bit weak; while a lot of memorable scenes such as the described mist that surrounds the appearance of the vampire, the werewolf that races across the Seward's lawn, and Lucy's transformation into a vampire are ignored. "The ending is curiously half-hearted," according to Clarens; "A powerful villain like Dracula surely deserves a more impressive demise than an off-screen groan!"

Clarens was very impressed with the qualities Lugosi brought to the character. "If Dracula, the film, has retained any power to impress after thirty-five years of repeated showings, it is due in the main to Lugosi himself. Lugosi was Dracula: the actor's identification with the part is complete. Where Chaney remained human and pathetic, Lugosi appeared totally evil. As Count Dracula, he neither asked for nor needed the audience's sympathy. . . There is a world of difference between Christopher Lee's hoary, modern-English introduction of himself (in the British remake) and Lugosi's ominous, remote "I am—Dracula." Lee may indeed be the better actor but Lugosi pretty permanently claims the part. The movies do not often bring about such happy matches."

The following year, another classic film about vampirism, Vampyr, was made by Carl Theodor Dreyer. Instead of Stoker's classic, Dreyer relied primarily on an earlier work by Joseph Sheridan Le Fanu (an Irishman with an unlikely name). Le Fanu published his work, a novella called Carmilla a few years before Stoker's; it is evident that Le Fanu influenced Stoker.

Carmilla is the story of a female vampire. A young girl, living with her father in the Austrian mountains, befriends their unexpected and unfortunate houseguest, a beautiful young woman who has been delayed by an injury from a carriage accident. The young girl one day realizes where she has seen the guest before—when she was very young, she had had disturbing dreams of a young woman who entered her room and bit at her neck. Le Fanu's story is very well written, and holds closely to the beliefs about vampires held by Europeans at the time. Carmilla has a slightly uneasy, yet not quite sinister, air to it. . . there is the ritual stake-through-the-heart routine at the end, and Carmilla also has a strong overtones of lesbianism running through it. (According to several scholars, there usually is a large amount of homosexuality contained within the vampire mystique.)

Vampyr was not critically successful when it opened; it has received acclaim mostly in later (Continued on Page 8)

Scholars Research Question Of Dracula Myth

By LISA TURNER

During the 1930's and later, when vampire films were becoming quite popular, most movie-goers could shrug off the terror they felt by assuring themselves "Well, there isn't really a Dracula or vampires. . ." and continue to patronize their favorite horror films.

Raymond T. McNally became interested in the question "Where did the idea of Dracula come from?" about 15 years ago. He proceeded to trace the origins of the myth, with somewhat surprising results, in his book In Search of Dracula, prepared in collaboration with Radu Florescu.

McNally based much of his early research on the leads found in Bram Stoker's classic horror tale, Dracula. Contrary to his contemporaries' belief, Dracula was not a creature made up off the top of Stoker's brain; the product of a "wild and wonderful imagination" as McNally puts it. Dracula is solidly based in fact.

It is difficult to tell exactly how Stoker became interested in his subject. At the time he published his book, there were several gothic horror stories on the market, many of them by Ann Radcliffe. However, most of these stories turned out to have logical explanations in the end; whereas Stoker's character played more on the psychological fear of the reader.

Most scholars conclude that Stoker was influenced by books such as Joseph Sheridan LeFanu's novella, Carmilla, which dealt with vampirism tinged with lesbianism. Carmilla paid close attention to Eastern European folklore, something Stoker was careful to emulate.

McNally was primarily interested in the fact that most of the vampire movies were set in Transylvania. Most people automatically assume that Transylvania is a fictional setting; actually it is located in Eastern Europe; it was once part of Hungary and is now in modern Romania.

McNally began researching the area's history, and learned of a 15th century ruler just as evil as the fictional character who is named after him. Indeed, there were already numerous horror stories circulating about the original Dracula during his own lifetime. He was a blood thirsty ruler who favored impaling and massacring those of his subjects who fell from disfavor or just happened to be in the wrong place at the wrong time.

According to McNally, "the original Dracula was known mostly for the amount of blood he indiscriminately spilled, not only the blood of the infidel Turks—which by the standards of the time, would make him a hero—but that of Germans, Romanians, and other Christians. His ingenious mind devised all kinds of tortures, both physical and mental, and his favorite way of imposing death has caused Romanian historians to label him 'the impaler'."

The original Dracula was named Vlad Tepes (pronounced tsep-pesh). Tepes means "the impaler" and "son of the dragon" or "son of the devil." (His father, Vlad, had been a warrior in the order of the Dragon; he is also referred to as Dracula.)

Dracula was born about 1431 in the town of Schassburg, Transylvania. He ascended to the throne of Wallachia around 1451 after his father and older brother had been assassinated. He is remembered as a brave warrior; even to this day, peasants speak admiringly of his military feats. His terrible punishments and massacre of a large number of his subjects, often with no good reason are also remembered with less admiration.

During his early teens, Dracula was imprisoned by the Turks. From them, he learned the Turkish language and Byzantine cynicism. By 1451, he lived in Transylvania again.

His military career consisted mostly of a series of campaigns against the Turks, but it is his crimes towards his fellow countrymen which are better remembered.

During Dracula's time, impalement has hardly a new invention, it had been used in Asiatic cultures for centuries. Perhaps it would be better to say that Dracula perfected and refined the technique.

According to McNally, "a strong horse was usually harnessed to each leg of the victim, while the stake was carefully introduced so as not to kill instantly." Higher ranking officials were placed on taller spikes—even vil impalements, there is protocol.

Dracula was very particular about the designs made by the corpses: they would usually be arranged in concentric circles. Most important was their visibility—most victims were displayed at the city's outskirts, for all to see.

Most of Dracula's atrocities were committed between 1459 and 1461. The Turks were frightened by the numerous decomposed bodies they found on their forays into Transylvania. Even Mohammed II, their dauntless sultan, was disturbed by the sight of 20,000 impaled prisoners rotting outside the walls of Targoviste, capitol of Wallachia. (Mohammed later gave up his quest to conquer Wallachia partly because of this incident, murmuring "what can be done against a man like this?")

Once, while inspecting the scene of some recent atrocities, one of Vlad's companions had the nerve to hold his nose. Even the sensitive host, Vlad Tepes thoughtfully ordered him impaled on the spot, but several feet higher than the previous victims, so the companion wouldn't be disturbed by the stench of those below. The original Dracula had a very twisted sense of humor.

Men's Basketball In Perspective

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Men's Basketball season has now officially ended. During this season, the team matured and learned to play together. They had their ups and downs, but showed considerable improvement in each game and NEVER gave up—even when they were down by 20 or 30 points.

Statistics for the year reveal that the average field goal percentage for the team was 36 per cent and the average free throw percentage was 58 per cent. The high scorers for the season were Jimmy Yarbrough (247), Greg Gilliam (130) and Bryan Welbaum (151). Bryan and Greg also led the rebounding for the year. Everyone on the team played their best and did a fine job.

Last weekend Longwood participated in the Bluefield Tournament, where they drew Bluefield College for their opening game. Longwood lost to the tournament champs, but showed their ball handling talents by setting picks and made an outstanding effort. They hit 51 per cent of their shots which was a season record. Coach McNamee said it was a "good way to end the year." Many of the coaches at the tournament were surprised by how well L.C. played and were very complimentary of the team.

There were many exciting games played this year and those who attended the games enjoyed watching their team. Next year the Men's Basketball should be even better and more experienced.

SPORT FOLLIES

By DIANNE HARWOOD

Folly I: The Longwood College Gymnastics team placed second in the state last week end with an excellent performance that won them a berth in the regional meet to be held in Boone, North Carolina on March 10th and 11th. The LC tumbleweeds tallied 118.80 points, nine points behind champion Madison, with William and Mary placing third with 113.4 points.

Each team was allowed to enter a maximum four all-around and two specialist, plus two other specialist. Of those, the top four scores would go to the team total. To qualify as an individual, a score of 7.5 was needed; nine individuals from Longwood qualified in various events.

Freshman Debbie Kinzel placed third and qualified for regionals with an 8.3 performance on the beam. DeDe Kirkpatrick took second in vaulting with a 7.55; Margie Quarles also qualified for regionals with a 7.5 vault. Three of the LC tumbleweeds qualified on the bars, DeDe Kirkpatrick with an 8.2, Wendy Oliver with a 8.05, and Bunny Wadsworth with a 7.6. In floor exercise, Longwood will be represented by Bunny Wadsworth (8.0), Lisa Haynes (7.7), Vicky Stefaniga (7.6), and Cathy Cress (7.5). Miss Wadsworth will represent LC in all-around competition; she placed third in state with a 29.35.

So if any of you Longwood fans are in the Boone vicinity this week end, roll on over and give the girls a hand or two—they certainly deserve it. Give 'em hell, Longwood.

Folly II: RIP 'EM UP, TEAR 'EM UP, GIVE 'EM HELL, LONGWOOD!!!

Sue Rama hit a turn-around jumpshot and snickered. Mary Louise McCraw was "shaking her booty". Dr. Hodges stood up and grinned. This was the atmosphere before a buzzer sounded that marked the first upset of the VFISW State Basketball Tournament. Longwood dethroned the defending state champions and second-seeded Norfolk State with a 75-60 romp. And they were excited.

Longwood took the opening tap to the basket and were never headed. The Longwood Ladies held the Spartans scoreless for the first four minutes, and allowed them a measly 28-point half. The big plus for the team was a jacked-up defense—the girls held the league-leading scorer Vivien Green to only eleven points during the entire contest (go a-head!!). The second half was cool, too; LC was aggressive on the boards, Carolyn Henshaw hit a technical foul shot, and we got up to a twenty point lead with eight minutes left to play. Longwood hit a cold spell but went on for the win. Needless to say, Dr. Hodges was pleased. The girls celebrated with a midnight romp on the beach and a waffle a la mode.

Friday night was a different ball game. Longwood lost a heartbreaker to Madison by a score of 67-58. LC didn't seem as motivated for this game as the previous night; it will be interesting to see if the girls can pick themselves up and put it together in the third place play-off against Radford.

Longwood started slow; the girls had trouble getting shots off but were not aggressive on the boards. Madison built a steady lead throughout the first half and lead by a score of 21-8 at one point. Longwood played good catch-up ball and tied Madison 31-31 with fourteen seconds in the first half. Thus ends half one. Half two began as a neck and neck contest, but Longwood drew another blank and the Duchessess pulled away for good. LC again suffered from a weak second half and were outscored 36-37. Maryjane Smith was high with fourteen points, followed by Sue Rama with eleven and Carolyn Henshaw with ten...

Well, fans, the Longwood girls saved face as they played another excellent game to take third place over Radford, 65-63. Longwood lead up until the final few minutes, when, with 5:06 left, Radford took a 55-54 lead. Both teams exchanged baskets, and with :45 seconds left in the game, it was a 63-63 contest. Radford took the ball in for a shot and missed, and Maryjane Smith was

Fencing Team To Nationals

By DEANNA VANWEY

Longwood's women's fencing team, a group of girls that started this season with very little, have proved themselves to really be something! Friday they attended Sectionals at George Mason University and pulled through to go to the Nationals by one bout. This is really an accomplishment for a team composed of three freshmen and one sophomore.

Placing in these Sectionals was a real team effort. Six schools attended and only four made it. Madison, being the host for Nationals, made it automatically. John Hopkins took first place, the University of Virginia took second place and Longwood took third place.

The four that went all had great days. Susan Sparkman, ranked number one on Longwood team, was 4-1 for the day. The only match she lost, was lost in lablelle. Missy Walker, ranked second on the team, was 1-4 for the day. Fencing very seasoned fencers, Missy took most of them to lablelle. Alda Brown, ranked third on the team, was 2-3 for the day. Alda had a perfect win in one of her matches of 5-0. Angie Anthony, ranked fourth on the team, had a great day, the outcome being 3-2.

Nationals are being held at Madison College, March 31-April 2. The best of luck to the team. Be There-Aloha!

fouled on the rebound. In the bonus situation, Miss Smith hit the first but the second one failed to drop. The rebound resulted in a jump ball that was controlled by Radford, who hurried down the floor for a last second shot that failed to fall. Smith was again fouled with :04 seconds in the game; she hit one which gave the Longwood squad the two-point win and third place.

As an extra surprise, Longwood was voted the most sportsmanlike team, and Sue Rama was named to the all-tournament team. With the season at its close, the squad wishes to express their appreciation to all the loyal fans, and especially manager Trish Lassiter and trainer Crystal Limerick for their hard work and dedication. A special salute to seniors Carolyn Henshaw, Anita Stowe, and Roxann Fox for their four years of service. Hats off also to JUNIOR Terry Donohue, who also played her last game.

Legislative Board

Nicknames For Longwood Sports Teams Narrowed

By DEBBIE WEBB

The meeting Monday night began with Kim Furbee of the Help-Out committee, asking for suggestions for money-making projects. The basis for the Help-Out Committee is to aid anyone who finds himself in a financial emergency. Any suggestions for projects will be appreciated. Also, lists will be up in the New Smoker soon for anyone who would like to help with the committee.

The Organizations and Evaluations Committee has a new member-soph. Karen Balint. The committee meets every Wednesday night at 6:30 in the Reading Rooms, to evaluate upcoming constitutions. At the board meeting Monday, two constitutions were reviewed, those of the Psychology Club and the Chemistry Club. From now on, the board is going to try to have a member from the club whose constitution is being reviewed on a particular night. This will be an attempt to answer questions as they rise when the board is going over a constitution.

The five names that are finalists for the nickname of Longwood are: The Virginians, The Lancers, The Pioneers, The Crusaders, and The Lions. These names will go to the Board of Visitors, and will hopefully be voted on March 11.

At the previous meeting, a concern was shown for getting class rings for the male students. It has been revealed that the male students can either obtain their rings from the Bookstore or from the ring company being used.

A possible Conservation Day (or week) is in the planning stages for this spring. It may be done in conjunction with the Student Union and "Pitch-In" Week. There are many sore spots around the campus that could be corrected or improved if all of us will work together. Maybe everyone can begin a little "Conservation Day" of their own right now.

All organizations are requested to put notices or announcements on the door of the Day Student's Lounge. David Reins, one of the Legislative Board Day Student Representatives, feels that the day students would become more involved in the school's activities if only they would hear about them.

Many thanks to everyone who participated in Student Government Day last Thursday. Billie Brightwell did a fantastic job of organizing the day, and I hope everyone got as much out of the day as I did!!

Horror Films

years. Dreyer wanted to make a film dependent on the scene as reviewed by the character themselves. To do this he added a dreamlike, unrealistic touch to the film. While viewing rushes, he realized that some of the developed film was fuzzy in quality, but liked the tone that it gave to the movie. He shot the rest of the film through a gauze-covered camera lens. One of the scenes is especially noteworthy. In it, a character sees himself enclosed in a coffin in a dream. The audience gets a view of the corpse: the faces of the grieving peering into the coffin, the trees above on the long ride to the cemetery... there is suggested the feeling of being helpless and horribly enclosed.

Today, Vampyr ranks as one of the best, no later films have capitalized on the sinister, dreamlike setting.

Later films made during the 1940's and 1950's were mostly a bit campy, and not terribly effective taken as a whole. Some of the films made were downright insulting to serious horror film fans. Abbott and Costello Meet Frankenstein and Old Mother Riley Meets the Vampire are the best examples of this. According to Raymond McNally, author of In Search of Dracula (Warner, 1972) "During the 1940's Dracula Vampire films fell on hard times. Such films as Frankenstein Meets the Wolfman, The House of Dracula, Abbott and Costello Meet Frankenstein, toy in a frivolous, titillating way with the main elements of fiction and folklore. . . . This "genre" reached its nadir in 1952 with Old Mother Riley Meets the Vampire."

In the late 1950's, vampire movies began to take on a new perspective. Terence Fisher, a director with Hammer Films of Great Britain, explored the use of blood and guts in lurid Technicolor (instead of the eerie and suggestive black and white long favored) with great commercial success. In the process, he made a film that often is ranked with Nosferatu and Dracula (1931). Christopher Lee played Dracula in another adaptation of the Stoker novel in The Horror of Dracula. (1958). The most famous scene is the very end, where Dr. Van Helsing, the vampire specialist (Peter Cushing) destroys Dracula as he is trying to return to his coffin. Van Helsing rips open some drapes to let in the daylight, and then forces Dracula into it with the help of a cross formed from two golden candelabras. The vampire vanishes into dust.

Recent years have seen several notable, if not particularly good, vampire films. There have been the black exploitation films (Blackula) films dealing with the story of Carmilla, and sex exploitation films. McNally gives his opinion of one of these in his excellent book on vampire lore, In Search of Dracula. He claims that Guess What Happened to Count Dracula? (1970) has "no taste, bad filming techniques and poor acting. The film was made three times on the same set; once with actors wearing clothes under the original title; secondly with actors in the buff in Does Dracula Suck? and thirdly, in a degenerate romp under the title Does Dracula Really...?" Films such as these are rarely listed with the better films that pertain more to horror for the sake of horror.

Colleagues standing on the third floor balcony of the Rotunda with lighted candles and singing their song. Then they marched down the stairs and each awaited their turn to name their successor. As a name was announced, the new Colleague came forward and accepted a candle and gift from the Colleague who tapped them.

After the tapping ceremony, Rosalyn Crenshaw announced the new Head Colleague, Jan Bates. She also thanked the 1976 Colleagues for their help and wished the new ones good luck. The 1976 Colleagues presented Rosalyn with a beautiful bouquet of flowers to thank her for all she had done this year.

All of the interested freshmen applicants with the 2.0 required grade point average were chosen to be a Colleague.

The Colleague's duties are mainly concerned with Orientation, but they also send letters to the new freshmen, arrange for a picnic, concert at the beginning of the year, sponsor Freshman Ceremony, banquets, and leave favors for the freshmen to discover at their doors when they arrive. Also the Colleagues help with Spring Week end and the Forensics debates. These duties begin when the Freshmen arrive for Orientation.

Rosalyn Crenshaw remarked that the 1977 Colleagues seem to be a "good group" who will do well next year.

Mary Meade Saunders, New Residence Board Chairman

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS

Mary Meade Saunders is the new Residence Board Chairman as a result of the election between herself and Barbara Schodt on Wed., March 23. The day before the election, March 22, both candidates were present in the Rotunda for an informal question-answer period. Though there weren't many students present to ask questions, Barbara and Mary Meade discussed issues concerning Residence Board, such as extending open house hours, keeping pets in rooms and designating halls as public or private.

In a telephone conversation after the election, Mary Meade expressed her feelings about the duties of the Residence Board and the chairmanship. When asked what goals she would like to see Residence Board accomplish under her chairmanship, Mary Meade made these comments: "My real goal is to work for the students and try to get accomplished what the students want accomplished. In order to do that it has to be through the whole board, not just the chairman. The whole board has to work together." Mary Meade has had experience in working to make the students' ideas known ever since her freshman year as the president of French dorm. She has also been secretary and vice-chairman of Residence Board. Since January, she has still attended some Residence Board meetings, though not as a voting member of the board. "I've got so many things to do," said the newly elected chairman, "Right now, I'm trying to get back into things." Mary Meade will have no trouble finding things to get back into, because as she well knows, Residence Board is facing many decisions and changes. Without student input, however, it is hard for board members to know exactly what changes need to be made. Mary Meade emphasized the role of representatives and hall presidents. "Hall presidents are there for students to have someone to express their opinions to."

Mary Meade said that students sometimes consider board members as their enemies because the rules and penalties for breaking rules comes from the board. Mary Meade concluded by saying, "The board works for the students; that's why we're here."

Opera Magic Flute To Be Presented By Drama And Music Departments

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

For the first time at Longwood, in a joint effort between the Drama and Music Departments, there will be an opera preformed. Opera scenes have been done for the past two years, but now that there are male music majors on campus, a full opera can be done.

The costumes are in preparation, the cast is learning the music and dialogue, and soon the staging will begin. With much hard work and nearly nightly practices, the production will be perfected. This is a new experience for those in the cast who have never had to both sing and speak parts.

Open dress rehearsals will be held April 19 and 20. The actual performance will run for four nights, April 20 to 23 in Jarman at 8:00.

Most of the main character roles are double cast. Tamino will be played by Richard Chisenhall, Pamina by Jan Truitt and Therees Trach, Papageno by Hank Dahlman and John Hudson, Sarasto by Bill McKaig and a visiting performer from VCU, Matthew Spady. Also, Audrey Evans and Joy Pague are Papageno and Old Woman, Charles Mason and Lester Cruise are Monostatos, Pam Bessler and Susan Brinkley are cast as Queen of the Night.

Instead of an orchestra, accompanists on the piano and harpsicord will provide the music for the performance. The pianist are Pauline Boehm and her assistant Sandra Chambers, and Freida Myers and her assistant Marie Carter. Dr. Hesslink will be playing the harpsicord.

The Director and Characterizations Manager is Miss Norma Williams. The Drama Department is also working on the performance under the guidance of Dr. Lockwood, in such areas as costumes, set design, lighting, and stage crews.

This production is a major undertaking by the Music and Drama Departments.

Seven girls have been recently pledged to Kappa Omicron Phi, the Home Economics Honorary sorority. Bids went out Tuesday, February 5, and initiation was held March 22 at 1:00 p. m. in the Coynor building.

The new initiates are sophomores Rita Weaver, Carol Henry, and Nancy Bishop. All these girls are education majors.

Juniors initiated were Textile majors Becky Bass and Susan Waxmunski, education major Linda Burgess, and Karen Buczuk, a Foods and Nutrition major.

Alumnae Perry To Give Concert

By IKE R. STONEBERGER

Jane Cregar Perry, a Longwood College Distinguished Alumnae, will present a concert on April 1, 1977, at 8:00 p. m. in Wygal Hall.

Mrs. Perry is a graduate of the class of 1948. She is presently the choral conductor at William Flemming Senior High School in Roanoke, Virginia. She is the recipient of the 1976 Longwood College Distinguished Alumnae Award presented by the Longwood College Department of Music.

The Distinguished Alumnae Award was established in the fall of 1974. It is presented each year in recognition of an outstanding alumnae in music. With this reward is a certificate which will be presented to the recipient, who is required to return to campus and perform in recital for the benefit of Longwood music students. Selections for the Distinguished Alumnae Award are based on achievements in the field of music after graduating from Longwood.

Mrs. Perry will conduct a concert presented by one of her William Flemming Senior High School ensembles.

Longwood Students Band Together

Though it may be slightly shy of 76 trombones, the Longwood Band has come a long way during its two semesters of existence. Through the energies of director, Darrell Harbaum, the band has no doubt become a welcome attraction to the Longwood campus.

The band, consisting of approximately 40 members pursuing various fields of major study, made its debut at the Oktoberfest festivities in October, 1976, after at least 15 years of silence. In December the band once again added to the warming spirit of Longwood through its splendid performance of Christmas and light program music in its first concert. This concert, presented in the Lankford Gold Room, was dedicated to college president, Dr. Henry Willett, and named the "First Annual President's Concert" with the intention of establishing a lasting tradition.

The band, which rehearses two days a week for one semester hour credit, is led by an energetic set of officers — Susan O'Brien, president; Susan Bernard, secretary; Karen Bibb and Pam McClain, librarians; and Kathy Hughes, reporter-publicity — whose enthusiasm is a great source of motivation to the band members. It is only through the concentrated efforts of these officers, the director, and the determination of two departing seniors, Shelby Shelton and Karen Bibb, that the young band is well on its way toward obtaining success. The dedication and enthusiasm of the band members prove most encouraging and ever-increasing outside interest in the band fosters expectations for a larger band in the fall semester.

The band has many exciting plans for this semester. It performed for the first time of 1977 in a Departmental Recital in Molnar Recital Hall on March 1 and also performed in a concert of "Music of Vincent Persichetti" under the direction of this well-known American composer during his visit to Longwood on March 3-4, 1977. Susan O'Brien will conduct a number on the Student Conducting Concert April 7. There are tentative plans to present a program as part of the Founder's Day festivities on April 23. A spring concert is also planned for April.

Well, Longwood, at last you have a band! It is surely a band in which you can take great pride.

Longwood Players Present Story

Theatre To Children Across State

By GLENN LEFTWICH

On March 14-16 the Longwood Players toured with Story Theatre, a series of Grimm's Fairy Tales and Aesop's Fables adapted for the stage by Paul Sills.

The production, directed by Dr. Patton Lockwood, featured Renny Manley, Lisa Pellis, George Hughes, Linda Carwile, Paulette Daniels, Glenn Leftwich, Merle Phelps, Buddy Bourne, and George Bennett performing multiple roles. The original music for the show was performed and written by Jacqui Singleton, Renny Manley and Melissa Crick. The stage manager for the tour was Kit Orsi.

The first performance on Monday, March 14, was in Roanoke in the morning and then in Martinsville that afternoon. Thursday morning's performance was well received by an enthusiastic audience at Prince Edward County High School. Tuesday afternoon was played at Cumberland Elementary School. After the performance at Cumberland the van was loaded and set on the road to Norfolk where a performance was given Wednesday morning for a small but appreciative audience at King's Daughters Childrens Hospital. Later that afternoon the final performance of the tour was given at Clover Hill High School in Richmond.

The show operated on a very hectic schedule, and with thirteen people and their luggage packed into one van, things became a little cramped and exhaustive. Jacqui Singleton remarked "It was hot!" It was also crowded, hurried, bumpy, hectic, and tiring. It was a valuable experience for all concerned, and the amiable feeling among the cast and receptive audiences they met combined to make the show a pleasant as well as successful tour.

Panhellenic Council To Sponsor

A Cancer Education Program

The Longwood Panhellenic Council, in cooperation with the Public Education Committee of the Prince Edward Unit of the American Cancer Society, is sponsoring a cancer education program during the months of March and April.

On March 30 and 31, a representative from the Cancer Society will be present in health classes at Longwood. A film will also be shown and the event is being arranged through Miss Sally Custer, Health Coordinator.

On April 14 from 6:45 to 10:00 p. m., a Pap Smear Clinic will be held in the Longwood infirmary with doctors and nurses on hand who will be supplied by the American Cancer Society. The Panhellenic Council will assist with scheduling and filling out forms. This will be the Panhellenic social service project for Greek Week.

Concurrently, during the same hours, a Breast Self Examination Clinic will be held in the Tabb classroom. The Cancer Society will operate the clinic with the use of mannequins and their own instructors. The Panhellenic Council will assist as part of the Greek Week social service project.

Both clinics are free of charge and are open to the Longwood community.

Seven Music Majors Sing

Their Way To Top Honors

By IKE R. STONEBERGER

Thirty-four music students from Longwood College competed at the College of William and Mary on February 25, 1977 in the annual contest sponsored by the Virginia Chapter of the National Association of Teachers of Singing. Seven Longwood students placed in this district competition.

Longwood music faculty members Miss Norma Williams and Miss Barbara Burdick, Virginia N.A.T.S. members, selected students from their classes to enter the contest at Williamsburg. Some students had been preparing since January and others drew upon the many selections in their repertoire from previous years.

Competing at the district level for N.A.T.S. involves specific requirements in song selection, such as an "art song" from some musical period, or an "aria," or some 20th Century piece. Each auditioning singer is heard by a number of judges who are members of N.A.T.S. themselves. Some of the criteria used for judging may include tone, musicianship, accuracy of singing, and performance. The judges prepare score sheets and critique sheets which contain mostly constructive criticism. The singer, thus receives valid comments which may aid him in future auditions, recitals, or class work.

At the District level, in the Freshmen Women Division, Rene Rowland placed first and Carol Brooks, third. John Hudson, Bill McKaig, and Lester Cruise placed first, second, and third consecutively in the Freshmen Men Division. Sophomore Janet Truitt took second place in the Women Division, and Hank Dahlman placed third in the Sophomore Men Division. These students placed among the hundreds of students from music schools throughout the state of Virginia.

Winners from North Carolina, South Carolina, Maryland, and Virginia, including the seven Longwood students, competed last week end, March 25, 1977, in the Mid-Atlantic Regional Auditions held at Meredith College in Raleigh, North Carolina. Winners from this competition may be invited to a national audition at a later date.

Mike Melvin Joins ARA Slater

By STACEY SMITH

The young man that you may have seen directing students to the tables in the dining hall is Mike Melvin. He is in management training at Longwood with ARA Slater. This training which can last from 9 months to 1 year includes preparation for trainees to become food service directors. These trained directors can work in business, schools or hospitals

Mike, who majored in Hotel, Restaurant and Institution Management at Michigan State University, explains that so far he has been learning about and working in each department in the dining hall, later he will fill in for absent workers.

After his training period here, Mike will become an Assistant Manager at another school. He is not sure of which school he will be transferred to, but he hopes that he will be able to attend college himself part-time and get his masters degree in personal.

Mike says that he really likes his job and he finds that each day is different and interesting.

Meisburg And Walters, Gene Cotton Provide Good Vibrations

Meisburg and Walters relax after concert.

By JACQUI SINGLETON
Last Thursday nights' concert sponsored by the S-UN proved to be a great success, partly because of the turn-out by Longwood students and largely due to the charm and talents of Meisburg and Walters, of Tallahassee, Florida; and Gene Cotton, pointedly from Nashville, Tennessee.

The evening opened with the Meisburg and Walters due providing a few get-down, hand-clapping tunes, complete with fiddle and mandolin. On the other hand, the audience sampled the group's versatility as they were lulled into oblivion by the mellow numbers spun delicately off of the Meisburg and Walters guitars respectively. They seemed to be quite at ease with the Longwood audience and clowning with them with such an air of familiarity that everyone in the house could not help but feel well relaxed and at home.

Backstage as well as onstage Steve Meisburg and John Walters proved to be very personable young men who like to relate to the audience with the age-old life problem, such as love of their music they say. They communicate what they have learned in their experiences in hopes that the audience might share in this and perhaps learn something too.

Steve explained that he grew up in an atmosphere of folk music and admired singers such as Peter, Paul and Mary, Dylan and Gordon Lightfoot; while John admires Joni Mitchell. They both like this style of music because it enables the singer to get the message across and express a true feeling to the audience whereas in loud, heavy, rock people only listen to the beat and music but can't hear the words. As for Steve and John they choose the "style of music that best fits the song."

They feel that the audience influence is very important to them. They explained that it has a sort of "spiralling effect," wherein if the audience is responsive and really gets into their music they get into it more.

Steve and John, whose talent is obvious once you have heard them, are very interested in the creative world. They seem to have a special insight into life and use it effectively in their music. They are very open and genuinely interested in the reactions and opinions of the audience.

Next on the bill was Gene Cotton accompanied by a female pianist, a drummer with a broken foot, (which did in no way hinder his abilities), and two guitarists. Gene swung through many familiar tunes from his album as well as tunes by other artists. At one point during the performance, the back up group left the stage and Gene was left alone with the audience, trading quips about childhood discipline (something everyone can identify with). After a few solo numbers the rest of the group returned and eased into a stunning rendition of Elenor Rigby that sat the audience and everyone in the general vicinity on the edge of their seats. The effects were breathtaking and the entire evening will be remembered for a long, long time.

Of his music, Gene Cotton says "I just like to say hello and sing a song." He relates to the audience by sitting down and talking to them. He explains the background of the song but the song itself is a clear statement of his opinion of the subject. His song "Mrs. Oliver" expresses his view that "old people are not to be ignored."

Gene explained that he doesn't really write his songs in any particular way. He usually writes them when his moods are strong and his feelings are fresh in his mind. He might write on something he is involved in or something he feels needs to be said, such as an issue or problem of today.

He is very easy-going when discussing his music off stage; but when he's on stage singing one can see that he has something important to say.

Huggins/Nichols Exhibit Opens

The annual exhibition sponsored by the Purchase Committee for Art of Longwood College features this year two major Virginia painters, Victor Huggins and Frederick Nichols.

Mr. Huggins was born in Durham, North Carolina, and educated at Chapel Hill and Columbia University. He has taught at Vanderbilt University, the University of North Carolina, and at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, where he is currently employed. His work has been exhibited in New York, Tennessee, Washington D.C., Virginia, and Georgia.

Mr. Nichols studied at the University of Virginia, Pratt Institute, and the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Fontainebleau, France. Before establishing his studio in Orange, Virginia, he taught in the Worcester, Massachusetts public schools and at community colleges in Brooklyn, New York, and Charlottesville. While in Charlottesville, he organized the Group for Life Drawing, and also was active in the Second Street Gallery and the McGuffey Art Center, where he served as secretary of the Board of Directors for one year.

During the last three years, Nichols has exhibited extensively in Washington, D.C., and Virginia. In addition, last year his work was included in an exhibition at the American Embassy in Tel Aviv, Israel.

Both Frederick Nichols and Victor Huggins are involved with depicting landscape in their paintings, primarily the landscape as seen in Piedmont Virginia.

The Purchase Committee of Longwood College was established in 1951 to collect important works by contemporary Virginia artists. From this exhibition by Huggins and Nichols, one painting by each will be chosen to enhance this permanent collection.

Rebecca Rigsby Talks Of Her Art

By JAN TURNER

With only one year of art in a Louisa County high school, Becky Rigsby has come a long way in her field. She is a second-semester senior, and has been attending Longwood since her freshman year. Her show is now on exhibit in the Lankford building. Photography, painting, and predominantly printmaking are her major interests.

Becky has always been interested in the fine arts, and it was her seventh grade teacher who really encouraged her to make use of her talent. He also suggested that she go into music, but she hasn't the faintest idea why because she doesn't feel she is at all musically inclined! But it is the art that has stayed with her and grown into something that she will cherish the rest of her life. Becky's parents enjoyed the work she produced, and felt she did have a lot of talent. She is the only art-oriented person in her family.

She believes that art should be introduced in early childhood. It helps children to express themselves, and she is able to tell how they develop by looking at their artwork. Becky feels that not enough is done to expose young children to the fine arts. She plans to go into teaching, and would prefer elementary school-aged children. She has already student taught in Roanoke City, grades one through nine. Putting herself in a classroom situation, she would show her students the basic techniques and concepts of art first, and from there on it is up to the child. She would grade the project on that basis, and then she would view the originality.

Critiquing her artwork is very important she feels, and she finds it hard to do so. Viewing the works of others comes easier to her. "You are too close to your own piece to see it objectively, but if you can present your project, you've got it made." Most of her classroom artwork tends to be abstract, while the realistic pieces are usually done on her own time.

"Abstract is good, and easier than trying to be painstakingly realistic." Being an art major is expensive, but well worth the money she believes. Almost all of her work is for sale, and she usually gets the price herself. She is a great junk collector, and whenever anyone has something they are about to throw away, they hand it over to Becky. "Everything has some use to it!" she said.

Sometimes her pieces turn out to be good merely by accident, while others turn out well by instinct. "In class, you are under pressure to get in a particular assignment, and that may stifle your work." As a student, she finds it rough when it comes to meeting deadlines, but after student teaching she finds that if there aren't deadlines, nothing would ever get done. It doesn't bother her as much when a professor dislikes a piece, but when it is a close friend it tends to annoy her. "It's like having a child that someone doesn't like," she commented.

Her showing consists of sixteen pieces altogether, including silk screens, photographs, wood grains, drawings and paintings. Each one contains only a few colors, but they work together so that the piece is vibrant and alive with seemingly a lot of color. One photograph, called Bike Wheels, shows her imagination in putting the two different pictures of wheels together. It was taken in front of a high-rise dormitory. Her techniques in printmaking include woodcuts, linoleum, and two silk screens. She makes good use of her materials, and she uses color extremely well. Her artwork is full of imagination and wonder.

Becky would love to go to school some more, and, as she puts it, become a "professional students!" She is carrying a full load now, but still has some general education requirements to finish. She is pleased with Longwood's art program because she basically came here with nothing. Becky feels she has grown up a lot and has learned a great deal since she first arrived here in Farnville.

New Directions In Religion

Religion and worship seem to be branching out in many and varied directions. Upon hearing of the activities of Satan worshippers in West Virginia, Rotunda staff writer Bridget Scherz investigated the situation further. Through phone calls to West Virginia she obtained a few additional details. She then researched Satanism and other forms of worship often connected with Satanism. Simultaneously, staff writer Debbie Northern secured an interview with a newly ordained female Episcopal priest. Their findings follow.

Evangelist Jimmy Swaggart Speaks Against Satanism

(CPS) — According to Evangelist Jimmy Swaggart of Baton Rouge, La., the powers of evil, specifically Satanism, are destroying young people and that the amount of Satan worshippers among the young and college campuses is widespread throughout the world.

Swaggart cited Satan's weapons as being drugs, sex, bondage, lust and demon spirits and said that to combat these forces "young people should never associate themselves with witchcraft, horoscopes, astrology or fortune telling because it is the beginning of Satanism and the work of the devil."

The Evangelist, who recently spoke before a college audience in West Virginia, felt that there are not enough college students dedicated to God and urged students to turn to Him.

Satan Worshippers Plague West Virginia Campus

By DANIEL W. LINDLEY

(CPS)—Police in the college town of Huntington, W.Va. still are seeking local "Satan worshippers" who allegedly beat and raped a Marshall University coed the evening of February 21.

Capt. Norman Noble, commander of the Huntington investigation unit, noted that "we're doing everything in our power to arrest and break up this group." About 50 people have been interviewed by local and campus police, but there has been little uncovered beyond the rumors and general knowledge already surrounding the sect and the evening's events.

The Marshall student, who had been walking in Huntington and was abducted by four men in a car, was discovered later behind the Campus Christian Center. She was in a state of shock and had cuts on her hands, abdomen, and forehead. Local police have indicated that they do not believe the slices were related to any Satanist ceremony.

The Satan worshippers, a Huntington group whose membership is estimated at around 25 to 30 persons, apparently had been recruiting openly by word of mouth on the Marshall campus prior to the assault. According to police and other investigators, a number of Marshall students belonged to the cult, but an early rumor which contended that only black men and white women were admitted to the group has been dismissed. One police official still contends, however, that the sect's recruiters prefer "young, white females."

The victim meanwhile has left the campus and is not talking about the incident. According to several sources, she was a member of the Satan worshippers before she entered college and she was beaten and raped for trying to sever her ties with the group. Another source claims that the woman had been beaten physically in a previous attempt at escaping the sect.

The occult group itself naturally has dropped from public sight in Huntington. Local police told the editor of the campus newspaper, The Parthenon, that the clan "is known to have a very dangerous and frightening initiation ceremony." However, police are reluctant to discuss the nature of these practices because of the ongoing investigation.

"I'm not at liberty to say anything about it (the events surrounding the case) on the phone," said Capt. Noble.

"As far as I'm concerned, we have nothing concrete," said one campus security guard.

Marshall University observers say that no other incident of similar intensity has been linked with the Satan worshippers, although one local television station claimed that a stabbing death near the campus last year was connected to the woman's abduction. Capt. Noble denied any connection between the two events.

Despite the presence of the malevolent group, the campus community has not been inundated with paranoia, although the Parthenon editor admitted that many in Huntington are "agitated."

"Nobody's up in arms about it, though," he continued. "I guess there are groups like this all over the country."

Worshippers Scurry Underground, Rotunda Investigates Campus Attack

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Did you read the preceding stories all the way through? You might have. After all, that the majority of us, being women, can identify with her, and that W. Virginia isn't really too far from "home", are pretty good reasons why we might follow it on down to the final flecks of punctuation. However, that small detail in there about an alleged Satanic connection, did you catch that? Chances are, that even though the piece reveals no startling conclusions, the idea of "Satanism" is a strong incentive to find out "what happens in the end."

Along this same line of curiosity over "ends", I called the Marshall University Police to find out what finally came out of all this. I spoke with Director of Security David Scites who restated the Campus Security's role as "assisting the Huntington

Police" and filled in a few situational details concerning the incident. He was emphatic in explaining that "she lives in a private apartment twelve blocks from campus" and that the assault took place "near the Christian Center which is not on University property" shortly after she was dropped off there in a car. Although the attack occurred outside of Marshall grounds, the Campus Security are participating in the "joint effort" investigation "because, she is a student." Mr. Scites also suggested that I call Capt. Noble of the Huntington Police Department Investigations Division, as he is in charge of the case. After finding that Capt. Noble would be away until Monday, I eventually got in touch with Larry Holland of the same department. His only contribution was that "all I can say is that it's under investigation" and he declined to make any statement as to how the question of Satanism was initially introduced into the investigation.

In my final conversation, this time with a PARTHENON representative, I was told that there was "nothing more" to go on, "there were no arrests." Apparently, the "cultists" had scurried underground when the lights came on.

The issue then becomes more than a classic example of "whodun-it?" The reasons for including the item in the release raise certain questions about Satanism and the occult and the American public's preoccupation with them. This article may answer a few of those questions and hopefully spawn some others.

Satan, An Actual Being?

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Satanism, also called diabolism, appeared to have had its most active period in Europe and America around the final two decades of the 19th century. Two distinct factions exist within the religion dealing primarily with their relationship to the devil.

The first half of the division, to which the name "Satanist" more accurately applies, practiced diabolism as a means of turning away from a true but callous God which they felt had abandoned mankind. They admit that Satan is an evil being but worship him out of defiance to what they conceive as a Divine injustice committed by God. THE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF RELIGION AND ETHICS describes this form as a "counsel of despair" whose adherents were often scattered, isolated individuals "laboring alone or with the aid of a few seers."

These people were essentially "recluses," outcasts of society who had no formal organizational bonds with others of similar conviction.

The Luciferians, or Palladists, were concerned with the actual veneration of Lucifer. However, their conception of the devil derives from a kind of turned-around interpretation of Christianity. Lucifer of the Palladist conception was symbolic of Light possibly alluding to the "burning star" imagery when he was cast out of heaven. "Lucifer" in fact, means "light bearer." They are called Palladists for their adoration of a palladium, which is an idol or charm that is believed to grant protection. This palladium, or Baphomet, was preserved in secrecy for five centuries to protect it from the order who had held them in suppression.

In 1801 Isaac Long carried the Baphomet and the skull of the last Grand Master from hiding in Paris to Charleston, here in the United States. Eventually, these artifacts became the icons of a society that had, in part, evolved from Freemasonry. Freemasonry was a secret, fraternal organization of craftsmen masons during medieval and early modern times. Albert Pike, head of the organization, was responsible for its worldwide expansion, followed by Adriano Lemmi who transferred the "supreme direction" center from Charleston to Rome. It was not until the relocation in Rome that the practice of vengeful magic, along with the Black mass and other perversions of Christianity came to the Luciferian tradition.

If man insists on knowing about or having that thing which he is instructed to leave well enough alone, Satanism is certainly no exception. In June 1975 a special study was decreed by the Pope in response to this devilish business. The Sacred Congregation for Doctrine of the Faith reaffirmed the existence of Satan not merely as the Christian personification of evil, but as an actual being. The Vatican also took the occasion of this announcement to caution against "a morbid fascination with devils."

Newsweek magazine in August '71 carried an interesting article on the growing interest in Satanism. The author observed that the fascination with diabolism ranges from the trendy amusements of the chic to those who hold "plain blind faith in the Satanic Power, which sometimes produces macabre acts of violence and sex that in less enlightened eras of U.S. history would have brought the perpetrators swift punishment at the stake." As a gory illumination of the latter point he offers the case of a 22 year old woman who had brutally stabbed an elderly man to death, afterwards reflecting that her lenient seven year sentence was the result of Satanic intervention. A pre-Easter cattle mutilation in Texas, one of some fifty similar incidents in 12 counties there was attributed to a Devil-worship cult. The President of the Oklahoma Cattle Assoc. predicted that it will probably subside after Easter when the dismembered organs are no longer needed for sacrifice.

In the "pass the basket" department Black Pope Anton Szandor Lavey (Church of Satan) in the Newsweek article, denies affiliation of any of his "10,000 dues paying members" with acts of killing. He distinguishes his elitist sect from the ranks of the faddists. The elitist goal is the formation of a "police state in which the weak are weeded out and the 'achievement oriented leadership' is permitted to pursue mysteries of Black Magic." Adolf would be proud. Lavey lives in an appropriately all-black house, complete with revolving bookcase that swings into a passage to the "den." He gets there in his "sky-blue Jaguar (license plate SATAN 9)" which the Newsweek writer observes "may reveal more about the Black Pope's ambitions than the zany trappings of his cult."

The Dimensions Of Witchcraft

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

The General Cigar Co. had come to the conclusion that there was a little "bubble bubble" involved in their "toil and trouble" over what they believed to be a somewhat shady union election in Utuado, Puerto Rico. In bringing the case before the National Labor Relations Board in 1968, the company accused the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers of employing witchcraft to persuade voters toward a pro-union ballot. The union was alleged to have "played on their (the islanders') beliefs" by hiring a reputed witch for $150 as a sway tactic. Some became ill, others claimed to have been unable to find the "no union" box, while still other workers said that afterward they could not remember how they had voted.

Not quite two summers ago in August '75 Bogota, Columbia hosted the world's first Congress of Sorcery. 2,000 people paid a $275 registration fee to participate in forty cabalistic seminars. The four day event, according to the New York Times, attracted a crowd comprised of some 30,000 "self-styled witches, scientists, and tourists," many who consulted the various diviners at the accompanying craft exhibition.

"Some enchanted evening."

Michael Aaron, a 28 year old cosmetic industry executive, bought himself a rather off-beat version of the proverbial "white elephant" at a PBS television auction in N.Y. last September. For $150 Mr. Aaron received a guided "Tour of Occult New York." Among the activities stirring around in the cauldron of events for his cook's tour of Metropolitan magic were a Full Moon Ceremony with six witches from Passaic, a visit with a psychic healer, souvenir shopping at the Majikal Childre, an occult apothecary shop, a reading with a Tarot card interpreter, and a slide show of levitating furniture by psychic investigators Ed and Lorraine Warren (remember them?) When the N.Y. Times reporter asked Aaron about his reaction to all of this, Aaron had read a little about the occult while in college, he replied, that he was "still skeptical."

Witchcraft, or Wicca, according to Justine Glass in her book "Witchcraft, the Sixth Sense" is "now known as the Old Religion, embracing presumably theology, occult powers and ceremonial rituals...which was driven underground by the onslaught of the emergent Church and associated power politics."

Wicca evolved out of an early Pantheistic religion in which the female or Great Mother was the central focus. Before the man's role in procreation was established tribes attributed the birth of a child to some magical ability held solely by the woman. As rejuvenation of tribal population was vital to their continuation, the woman was placed in an exalted position in this religious context. Even after the male's role in conception was realized, the woman continued to be of a higher station for some time afterward. In many cases the king was a consort to the queen and was sacrificed after a year or two. Glass ventures that witchcraft "probably emerged during the Great Mother stage of human consciousness."

She sites the Neolithic period as the era in which the cult developed into a religion. The witches at this point worshipped two deities, the Great Mother and the Horned God, symbolic of hunting, magic and death. Cave paintings depicting a priest surrounded by the coven are reminiscent of the ring dance performed by witches today. The dance, and ring itself, are symbolic of rebirth as the life force re-emerges from the womb, again relating to the Great Mother tradition. The cult expresses the cyclic process of reincarnation in their celebration of the change in seasons. As was celebrated at pagan ritual-sites such as Stonehenge, the winter solstice most clearly demonstrates the cycle of rebirth. During this ceremony the crimson winter sun is framed in the mighty arches of Tritithon as the priestess stands behind the cauldron symbolic of the womb, the fire of life blazing beneath it. In this Dance of the Wheel the members circle around her, each holding a lighted torch.

HOLDING A LIGHTED TORCH. As the dying winter sun is reborn in the summer solstice so shall man be reborn from the womb of the Great Mother.

Druism, a practice similar to Wicca in many ways (both celebrate a rebirth ritual, believe in reincarnation, use the ring pattern for security of power and observe the Four Great Sabats), was at a time, the official religion of what is now England. This order was disrupted however during the Roman occupation (43-410 AD) when Druids were persecuted as threats to the Pax Romana. Witches remained relatively untouched. 324 AD marked the collapse of the Roman Empire and of the old Roman way of life with the installation of the first Christian Emperor of Rome, Constantine, who declared Christianity as the official religion of his regencies. Constantine's oldest son assumed remote control after his father's return to Byzantium. Eventually all legions were pulled out to assist in more immediate defense at home.

The rising Christian force in 314 AD issued a decree against pacts with the devil, the 24th canon of which ascribed 5 years penance for practicing divination or witchcraft. Under the Saxons the situation got progressively worse as the already hostile Saxons became even less tolerant after they were Christianized. The invading Danes shared the Saxon vehemence and passed laws prohibiting its practice. References to "unlybban wyrc" or Black Magic appear in their denouncements. Whether this practice was common before the persecution era or arose in response to it is unsure.

After 1066, there was a doctrinal turnaround of sorts as the Wicca tolerant Normans were led by witches to uproot and extinguish Saxon risings. Many Normans unwilling to succumb to the power of the Church were witches themselves. However as the Norman era set, (1300 AD) witch persecution had once more begun to rise on the horizon. They were finally driven underground in burrows of isolated self-preservation.

Native New Yorker Describes Spiritualism

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

East Manhattan is a far cry from the Druid heaths of Early Britain. Doors are bolted here, security sought only dubiously within, for different fears than that of a witch-hunt. In a place of such chronic abundance a sense of personal order is often only achieved by picking up from the confusion those things that are nearest and building for yourself something you can believe in.

Candles at the feet of ceramic saints illuminate their faces with a gently wavering wash of light. The light is reflected in shallow bowls of water arranged along with the saints, on the white clothed "altar" that still is, for all practical purposes, an old brown veneered dresser.

Tony, a 22 year old native to this island of Manhattan, discovered "spiritualism" through a "woman around the block who reads cards...I was interested in the cards but she told me about the saints and ways in which I could develop my mind." "Spiritualism" Tony explained, "a combination of praying to saints and developing your psychic powers." It has existed for centuries and is now becoming more popular in the city, "especially in Spanish neighborhoods." The "spiritual saints" may have had their beginnings in Africa where the missionaries' Catholicism was incorporated with the native religious traditions. Tony goes to Catholic mass and to local "Botanicas" which supply religious statues, colored candles ("each saint has their specific color"), herbs and scented potions which "the person will buy there and later prepare for their own particular purpose." The spells consist of "mostly what you feel you should do." Tony relies on dreams, hunches and the guidance of the saints in determining his spiritual course of action, although he explains, that he "constantly recognizes the (Continued on Page 8)

Rev. Mrs. Mary Anthony, Newly Ordained Episcopal Priest

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Until recently, all Episcopal chaplains and priests had one thing in common—they were males. According to Newsweek, the General Convention of the Episcopal Church voted in September of 1976 to allow women to be ordained as priests. Before this they had only been allowed to hold the position of Deacon.

The Rev. Mrs. Mary B. Anthony is one of the 50 to 60 women who have, since then, become Episcopal ministers. In a recent Richmond Times Dispatch article it stated that Rev. Anthony graduated in June 1976 from the Episcopal Divinity School in Cambridge, Mass. Later she was ordained a deacon in the diocese of Virginia. This 44 year old mother of four children, accepted the position of chaplain at St. Margaret's School, a private girls' high school in Tappahannock, Va. She became the first woman to become a chaplain at any of the seven area Episcopal Schools.

On January 13, 1977, Rev. Anthony took her vows in St. John's Church in Tappahannock and became one of the few female priests.

In a telephone interview with Rev. Anthony, she stated that three years ago when she entered the seminary, she was not sure that she wished to enter the ministry. At the time she was more interested in teaching religion but found that her feelings changed when she got to the seminary.

Rev. Anthony expressed the opinion that women entering the church was "a very good thing".

The cults being detached from one another contributed to the lack of uniformity that characterizes witchcraft in comparing cults today. The lack of a formal, written creed, "because of the nature of its history, witchcraft has no archives" (Glass), is also a reason for its lack of cohesiveness. To many, this lack of formal doctrine and emphasis on personal spontaneity is one of the strongest attractions of the craft.

She saw "no justification why women, as well as men, should not be ordained into the priesthood...the church is not a male church or a female church, but a church of all people." Women in her view, have as much to offer as men, particularly in the area of talking to other women. Women priest "give the church a much broader outlook."

In her new profession, she has not experienced any male rejection, on the contrary she has found that many women find it hard to identify with a woman priest. Rev. Anthony believes this outlook stems from the "frustration in some women's life in wanting to do the same thing, but not being able to." They are still questioning what the role of a woman is.

Without bitterness, she states that "there are churches in the Tappahannock area that would never invite me to participate in any way." Her overall reception in Tappahannock and the Diocese of Virginia, though, has been very receptive and positive.

If the church had not voted to admit women into the church as priest, Mrs. Anthony still would have sought the position, for she sees no reason why women can't become Priests. She is glad that she was not a direct participant in the conflict between the church and women who wished to be ordained, but said, "If the Church had not changed its position, I would have worked very hard for the ordination of women."

Asked if she believes any of the newly ordained women priest acted solely for "feminist" reasons, Rev. Anthony responded in the negative. Some made an issue of feminism only after being frustrated by the church's refusal and the other problems they faced in order to become ordained. She believes that most of them, as she herself did, felt that they had been called to be a priest and "were not proving a point."

Much of the disruption of church unity, according to Rev. Anthony, has occurred from the New Prayer Book controversy in addition to the turmoil over women priests. She knows that some people do not wish to accept change but that the disagreement will disappear since the church has changed its position. Those who disagree are only a minority. Most feel it is a "healthy thing for the church."

Another factor considered when the women were ordained was that of a job shortage for Episcopal priests. Rev. Anthony realizes this is something to contend with. There are lots of ways to open new ministries, such as becoming chaplains and hospital workers. In fact an acquaintance of Rev. Anthony "has a marvelous ministry with old people." "I see ordained people following different careers other than the parish ministry," she said.

In regards to any future remarriage, Mrs. Anthony says she will face the same difficulties as any woman in a career, since occasionally a husband and wife will each have a career and can not be in the same city together. "Hopefully following a career does not mean that you can't get married or won't get married."

When asked about the recent Satanism outbreak, she replied Satanism on the college campuses scares her terribly, "the indoctrination of people is a brain washing thing." She thinks that if a person is a Christian they will have a hard time accepting the validity of such things. Anthony has found it easy to counsel girls. They feel more comfortable discussing such topics as abortion and medical issues with a female chaplain than a male chaplain.

Rev. Anthony has been overwhelmed by the support from the school, community, St. John's Church and the Diocese of Virginia. She was surprised by the candid approach of some people. "Many people who questioned ordination feel free enough to discuss it openly with you." This questioning is "not a personal thing against you, but against women in this role in general." All in all, she is finding her new career's a rewarding experience, and at this time has no plans of leaving St. Margaret's School.

Legislative Board Busy

With Constitutions

FROM THE EDITOR . .

As the front page article on the past Residence Board Chairman election states, very few students attended the informal question and answer session held on the eve of the election. During an election of major importance, isn't it strange that the pre-election events were so quiet?

For the position of a board chairman certainly there should have been more energetic campaigning. From more than one student the statement has been made, "I didn't know that the two met with students to answer questions." Why didn't those students know? In December there were strong, active campaigns for every Student Government position, even board secretaries; yet now in March, the campaign for a board chairman is quiet and hurried.

Was the election of such little importance that publicity and campaigning would have been a waste?

This week is the literary and arts festival. Outstanding artists have been invited to Longwood for special appearances. Very seldom will one run into the opportunity to meet and hear such a number of artists, varied in their artistry, and at no cost. Not only is such a festival entertaining, but it is enlightening also. Support this week's festival.

The next press conference has been scheduled for Tuesday, April 12. Dr. Willett has stated that the main topic of discussion will be the proposed new open house hours. If you have an opinion or suggestion on open house hours please attend and speak up. Dr. Willett is asking you to voice your suggestions; here is your opportunity to do so.

Discussions of constitutions began the meeting Monday night. The constitution for the Publications Board was presented to the group and will be voted on next week. The following constitutions need to be brought before Legislative Board with revisions and/or additions: H20 Club, Home Economics Club, Modern Language Club, College Democrats, College Republicans, Political Science Club, Heritage Club, Longwood College Council, Panhellenic Council, Gyr, Rotunda, and the Virginian. As earlier reported, constitutions need to be brought before the board every 3 years with revisions and/or additions.

The question had been brought up earlier to the administration to see if a student reporter could attend staff meetings. It has been decided that the Rotunda can send a reporter to the staff meetings this year.

Everyone is reminded that the use of Barlow Field at this time is restricted to archery, in an attempt to reseed the field. Please try to confine your activities to Her field at the present.

Pitch-In Week, sponsored by Student Union, is April 18-22 this year. Although specific projects have not been decided on, Legislative Board is going to participate this year to help support conservation and the cleaning up of our campus.

Kim Furbee could still use some help on the Help-Out committee. A possible project is being discussed now. Anyone interested in working on the committee should contact Kim.

Forum Applauded

By SUE NEWTON

As our society becomes less formal, our need for discussion on sexuality becomes increasingly necessary. Our being aware of our bodies and their functions can prevent much unhappiness. (Remember, it's what you don't know that can hurt you.)

Our forums in the past have brought out a lot of students either though curiosity or the need to know. The past forum on Human Sexuality was no exception, even though the format was a little different.

Coordinated by Jim Garrison of the BSU and John Emmert of the Episcopal Church, the forum was directed with taste and discretion. Skits were presented depicting situations one and all could understand. After the skits, the participants were split into individual groups for open and honest discussion on such topics as premarital, sex, homosexuality, the so-called "double standard between men and women," and family pressure to name a few.

Overall, the discussions, with the prevailing theme that human sexuality is not a problem but a main part of our lives comparable to hunger and survival which must be dealt with by mature individuals, were quite informative.

Such a forum, conducted in a relaxed atmosphere, was needed. The past forum should be a precedent for future forums which are needed.

A Look At Early Opera

Opera And Mozart

By LISA TURNER

Opera has a long and fascinating history, which closely parallels its contemporary tastes, thought and history. Most will concede that it is the Italians and the Germans who have made the most important contributions to the art.

Like most arts, opera has a terminology all its own; luckily this vocabulary is fairly international. Italian seems to be the prime source of operatic terms; this is because the Italians gave birth to and nurtured it.

The word opera literally means "works." This is fitting, as opera is a melange of many components — music, poetry, art and drama, to name a few. It has been said that an opera contains something for every taste.

According to Olga Maynard, author of Enjoying Opera (Charles Scribner's Sons, 1966), "Opera has magnificent pomp and pageantry and is the grandest of the performing arts. It is the world's most expensive entertainment and art form."

Opera, as we know it, began in Italy during the late 16th century. It was the brainchild of a small and talented group of Florentines called the Camerata (because they met in a chamber). Included in the Camerata were two Italian noblemen, Bardi and Corsi, Rinuccini (a poet), and three composers — Galilei (father of Galileo, the famous astronomer), Peri and Cavalieri. This group aimed to restore Greek drama, with its choruses, musical accompaniment, and spectacular productions to its pinnacle. In the strictest sense, they were unsuccessful in this, but in the process, they created a new and enduring form of entertainment — the opera.

The first true opera, Dafne by Jacopo Peri, was performed in Corsi's palace in Florence in 1597. Unfortunately, none of the music or libretto (literary scenario) remain today; they have been long since lost. Thus, several opera historians cite Euridice, an opera presented in 1600 as the first performed opera. Euridice is still revived occasionally, although more for its historical value as a curio than as a great work of art.

These first operas were very different from the productions of today. Peri and Caccini (composer of Euridice) used very basic recitatives (a recitative is a single voiced melody), and accompanied by a small orchestra. Most authorities will admit that these first attempts were pretty monotonous. There was a very limited use of a ballet and chorus.

In 1607, the best early work was composed. This was L'Orfeo, by Monteverdi. It is historically the first opera still occasionally performed on the strength of its own merits. L'Orfeo is the story of Orpheus, the young musician in Greek mythology who tried to lead his dead wife from the netherworld. (Euridice also touched on this theme, but from the wife's point of view. Mythology provided the basis for most of the earliest works, whether this is because the stories were particularly popular or because the early composers were still trying to emulate Greeks, I am not sure.)

L'Orfeo contained excessive dramatics, and was much more like contemporary opera than its predecessors. It was first performed in Mantua. Monteverdi is well known because he sensed that the orchestra should be a more important factor in opera.

Early operas were performed in the palaces of wealthy dukes and businessmen for special occasions. The audiences were select; opera started out as a rich mans pastime. Euridice was presented (with music by both Peri and Caccini) at a celebration of the marriage of Henry IV of France and Maria de' Medici; L'Orfeo celebrated the nuptials of the eldest son of a wealthy Mantua family, the Gonzagas. (Who were Monteverdi's patrons).

In 1637, the first opera house was built in Venice by a playwright-composer named Benedetto Ferrari. By 1700, there were 14 opera theatres in Venice alone; opera had already caught on with the Italian people. (Maynard refers to it as a new national pastime;) she says the fury dramatics and beautiful melodies became immediately popular because they were to the romantic Italians.)

These opera houses were very similar to the operas they presented — they were filled with art and intricate carving; beautiful woods and fabrics, and very majestic. The best word to describe them would be "Baroque."

From 1685 to 1750, the Neapolitan School flourished in Italy. The Neapolitans lifted their themes from events in history and legend. Their songs were becoming more and more difficult to sing (by this time the first prima donnas were already around, and the single operatic star had become popular.) The overture became more and more important.

Two favorite types of opera were the opera buffa (comic opera) and the opera seria (serious opera.). Verdi is thought to be the greatest of the Neapolitan composers — he dominated the Italian opera for at least half century.

When opera was transported to France, it was transformed a bit — the French were very fond of the ballet, and this showed up in the operas produced there. Prior to this, the ballet had been used primarily while the settings were being changed around, and during intermissions. It now assumed a new importance; the opera was fast becoming a feast for the eye as well as for the ear.

The comic opera was popular with the French; they called it the "opera bouffe." Even Rousseau got involved in French opera; he wrote a few comic operas. Marie Antoinette and Louis XIV were especially enamored of the opera. (Louis took his name "the Sun God" from a character in a spectacular French opera).

Opera also travelled to England and Russia. In England, Handel is remembered best during this time even though he was a German, his works opened in London. Purcell is the best native English composer.

In Germany, the opera crawled along. The first work performed in Germany was Dafne, but with a different musical score, in 1627. The first German opera house was built in 1678 in Hamburg. The Hamburg opera was a movement towards popular tastes; complete with use of German vernacular.

The Singspiel was a very popular form; it was derived from the French opera bouffe, and established by Johann Adam Hiller. A singspiel featured the use of spoken dialogue instead of recitatives.

The initial problem that held the German composers back was an innate lack of dramatic sense in the German people. They liked good music as well as any Italian but could not imagine for themselves the ornate splendor of Italian productions. (In France the opposite was true; the French embellished upon the scenery and dramatics, but rejected even the simplest of Italian melodies. To them, the scenery and dramatic content were more important. Lully was the premier composer of the era; he was followed by Rameau and Gluck. The latter is famous for his far-reaching reforms — he better integrated French operatic music and dramatics.)

In 1756, Mozart was born, and German opera experienced a new resurgence. His best opera was Don Giovanni; he also contributed The Marriage of Figaro and The Magic Flute. Although the literary content of these operas was far from excellent, the music was superb — Mozart had a genius for gauging the people's tastes. (This holds true for today as was as it did in the 18th century.)

The Magic Flute

By LISA TURNER

The Magic Flute, or Die Zauberflöte, as it is called in German, was written during the last year of Mozart's life. It was first presented on September 30, 1791, at the Theater-auf-der-Wieden in Vienna. Its first American production was some 40 years later.

The Magic Flute was immediately popular with the Viennese. It was just the type of story that they liked — it presents a situation where the good and evil forces are in direct conflict, there is a surplus of burlesque characters, and in the end everything works out — love triumphs over all else. The musical score is particularly well developed. It is reported that George Bernard Shaw once said of an air in the opera: "It is the only music which might be put into the mouth of God without blasphemy."

The actual libretto (scenario of the opera) is quite confusing. Mozart and his librettist, Johann Emanuel Schikaneder, had to make some drastic alterations in the plot at the very last possible moment since another opera company performed a similar story first. For example, it is very hard to tell who is the villain at the beginning of the story, and the change is never satisfactorily explained.

Mozart was born Gohannes Chrysostomus Wolfgangus Theophilus in Salzburg in 1756. (Luckily he shortened this to Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart.) He was early recognized as a child prodigy by his father, Leopold. He and his sister, Nannere, travelled all over Europe during their childhoods, performing for royalty and the wealthy.

For all of his early start, Mozart was usually extremely impoverished during his later years and died very young. As a final insult, he was buried in an unmarked pauper's grave.

Establishing A Vineyard

Simple In Style, Quiet In Tone

By DAN CORRIE

Poet A.R. Ammons said of it, "The marriage here of human entanglements with vineyards gives the mind a new start, sends us back to the sources and resources of the earth, to our deepest roots and springs."

The big-faced bearded Tom O'Grady established his own Rosebower Vineyard in Hampden-Sydney. His recently published sonnet cycle grew out of this. Establishing A Vineyard—not a manual for a would-be wine-maker—contains thirty-three sonnets. The sonnet constructions are varied; there are twenty-eight different forms, including some twelve and sixteen line poems. One sonnet relies on repetition of end words in place of rhythm. "Its terza rima with repetitive words—I invented it," he pronounces in a poker voice somewhere between self-congratulation and puncheon.

O'Grady, the poet in residence at Hampden-Sydney College and co-editor of the national Hampden-Sydney Poetry Review, has written a well crafted work of art. He has taken the sonnet form, a form tailor made for quick wit and word play, and made it function for his own voice and style. Establishing A Vineyard is interesting if only as a study of a twentieth century poet handling a form that thrived in former centuries, but by its very nature, causes problems for many modern writers. O'Grady explores new ways of using the sonnet. Instead of the sonnet's hereditary verbal quickness, fast statement and response, O'Grady imposes his more leisurely and subtle voice.

Establishing A Vineyard stands as one work. The sonnets are not separate poems, but sections of one poem. This is O'Grady's main technique of taming the sonnet form. The poems interrelate and rely on each other. Each sonnet does not have to pack a speedy question and answer into a short fourteen lines, the questions and answers are allowed space and time to wait, to disappear, and return. There is the time and space for quiet lines.

Establishing A Vineyard has a feel of Prince Edward County; O'Grady has anchored himself geographically. His sonnet cycle grew organically at Rosebower Vineyard, quite as much as did his grapes. O'Grady's book is very much a product of this area, is steeped in this area's rural detail.

O'Grady is comfortable with the sonnet scheme. His style is experimental. It is simple, unexaggerated. His overall tone is quiet which makes his strong lines so much stronger in contrast. As poet Stephen Spender has said of this collection, it is full of close observation. As Quentin Vest has said, it is both quiet and intense.

Spiritualism Interview

saints, not just when I need something." There are a few practices that are fairly common to each "spiritualist" though they are interpreted and expressed in different ways according to the individual. One of these is the sacrifice of gifts to a particular saint. The gift may be a candle, flowers, or offerings of apples, honey, and candy placed on the altar. The water, Tony said, is set out as "a freshener...evil and jealousy will collect in the water." Another takes the form of a non-ceremonious gathering in which "three, six, or nine spiritualists will hold meetings, bless themselves with holy water, pray and wait for impressions on how to advise other people."

Black magic is something totally apart from spiritualism. "People who misuse their gift are led astray. They don't realize it is a gift of God. They think it's their own power and go crazy." To use spiritualism in a destructive sense would taint its purity. Instead of revenge "you protect yourself...turn the other cheek." Tony finds in "spiritualism" something for people "in search of something to believe in. It is easy to follow and I find it very pure."

Women Place Third In VFISW Tournament

By BETTE MCKINNEY

The Longwood College women's basketball team won third place in the Virginia Federation of Intercollegiate Sports for Women Tournament held at Old Dominion University March 3-5.

On Thursday, Longwood defeated Norfolk State, the 1976 VFISW champions, by a score of 75-60 to move on to the semifinals. The victory was an upset, for Norfolk State had defeated LC earlier in regular season play.

LC's Anita Stowe scored first, and LC held the lead despite Norfolk State's attempts to come back. Hitting 43 per cent from the floor, LC led 12-2 at 14:40 when Sue Rama sank a shot from the side.

Norfolk State, making only 24 per cent of its field goals, pulled within 2 at 6:32 when the score stood 22-20; however, Longwood doubled its defensive efforts during the remaining minutes. Rama sank 4 and Stowe and Mary Jane Smith sank one each to give LC a 34-28 lead at the half.

Both teams continued to play man-to-man defense in the second half. LC out-rebounded and outscored Norfolk State, working up to a 20-point lead at 9:42 when Rama, assisted by Stowe, sank a shot to make the score 60-40. LC's 45 per cent from the floor and 65 per cent at the line kept the team well ahead until the buzzer when the score stood 75-60.

Sue Rama scored the game high of 22 points and pulled in 17 rebounds, and Mary Jane Smith scored 16 points and got 16 rebounds. Anita Stowe also scored in double figures with 13 points.

On Friday Longwood lost to Madison, which allowed Madison to go into a first-place playoff against ODU, and sent Longwood to a third-place playoff with Radford.

LC Coach Carolyn Hodges noted that the team played "fairly good defense against Madison, with both teams allowing about the same number of shots each." She blamed the loss on "poor shot selection." Longwood hit 32 per cent from the floor, while Madison sank 43 per cent.

In the game against Madison, Longwood led 4-0 at 18:34 after baskets by Linda Baumler and Smith. Madison, however, evened the score at 4-4 by 17:15, sinking a shot from the outside against Longwood's 1-3-1 zone.

After LC's third team foul, Coach Hodges called a timeout at 16:54. LC went man-to-man after the timeout, but Madison pulled ahead 6-4 at 15:50 and outscored LC during the next 5 minutes to lead 21-8 at 10:02. After its 7th team foul, Longwood resumed a zone defense.

LC made a strong comeback during the last ten minutes of the half. The combined offensive efforts of the team and good defense under Madison's goal evened the score at 31-all at the half.

During the second half, the teams traded baskets for 9 minutes. Madison, however, began to pull ahead at 10:59 and worked up to an 8-point lead by 4:14. Carolyn Henshaw, Smith, Stowe, and Rama scored during the next two minutes to bring LC within 3 at 2:10, when Madison led 59-56.

Longwood stayed within 3 points for the next minute, but as Longwood was forced into a fouling situation, Madison expanded its lead through 4 free throws and 1 field goal. The final score was a heartbreaking 67-58.

High scorer for the game was Madison's Mendi Childress with 15 points. Childress also led in rebounds with 13. Longwood's scoring attack was led by Mary Jane Smith with 14 points, Sue Rama with 11 and Carolyn Henshaw with 10. Linda Baumler pulled in 10 rebounds for LC.

The playoff game between Longwood and Radford on Saturday was a close game from the starting tap until the final buzzer. Stowe scored first, putting Longwood ahead 2-0 at 18:45. The two teams then traded baskets, resulting in several ties during the first 13 minutes of the half. Longwood played good man-to-man defense, while Radford relied on a 2-3 zone.

After the score was tied 26-all at 7:22, Longwood began a strong move against Radford's 1-3-1 zone, with Stowe, Smith, and Melissa Wiggins converting rebounds to baskets. Longwood led 40-32 at the half. LC shot 50 per cent from the floor compared to the Highlanders' 33 per cent in the first half.

Radford went to a man-to-man defense in the second half and shot better from the floor than Longwood. Taking over the lead at 5:10, Radford stayed ahead until 0:40 when LC's Smith sank a basket to even the score at 63-all. During the final seconds, Smith shot two free throws to give Longwood a 65-63 win and third place in the Commonwealth (large college) Division of the VFISW.

Longwood led Radford in scoring and rebounding. Mary Jane Smith had the game high with 24 points, and pulled in 9 rebounds. Melissa Wiggins also scored in double figures with 11 points. Leading rebounder for the game was Sue Rama with 10.

Longwood won the Sportsmanship Award for the tournament, and Sue Rama, who scored her 1,000th point this season, was named to the All-Conference and All-Tournament teams.

Sue Rama Named To All Conference Team

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

One of Longwood's most outstanding women's basketball players is Junior, Sue Rama. She has been playing varsity basketball for Longwood since her freshman year adding height and skill to the Longwood defense and offense. When the Longwood team placed third in the state this year, Sue was honored by being chosen to the All State Basketball team.

She began playing basketball in the eighth grade in Chesapeake on a team sponsored by the Lions Club since her school had no team. Last year she tried out for the Olympic women's basketball team in the preliminaries held in Catonsville, Maryland. Sue enjoyed these tryouts and might be interested in trying for a spot on the 1980 team.

After graduation she would like to coach basketball if her Business Administration degree will allow her to do so. If not, she would like to go into accounting. Also, she is thinking about the possibility of joining a professional team. "I would like to continue playing. I like the sport too much to quit," she stated.

Sue has very much enjoyed playing on the Longwood team and feels that the team has done very well. She is planning on playing again next year to help the team have another winning season.

Archery Team Looks Strong

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Longwood Archery team for this year looks strong. Most of the team is composed of returning archers and there are two new members who are experienced, but have not participated in competitive archery. Also the team, for the first time, has two male members which does not qualify Longwood to have a male team (a team is composed of 4 archers) but will provide for a mixed team. The two strongest team members are Colleen Blakely and Carolyn Henshaw who will be on the mixed team. There will also be a women's team.

Two different rounds are shot in archery, the Easton 600 (20 arrows from the 60 yard line, 20 from the 50, and 20 from the 40) and the NAA 900 (30 arrows from the 60, 50, and 40 yard lines). The scoring is by the 10 ring scoring system. In other words, each colored stripe is divided into two zones. The centermost zone in the Gold Stripe is worth ten points and it decreases by one the further out the arrow strikes.

The Longwood archers normally compete as a team. Only in the U.S. Indoor Championship will they compete as individuals. Bows range in weight from 20 to 35 pounds. In competition, aluminum arrows are used since they are the most accurate.

Ms. Sally J. Custer, the team's coach, became a National Archery Association Instructor at the World Archery Center in Pennsylvania last summer. She explained that an archer must try to do the same thing the same way each time. The most important characteristic of an archer "is a positive mental attitude." You must "think the arrow into the goal." Ms. Custer stated that archery is the fastest learned sport. A person can become a professional in just three years.

This year Longwood is hosting the Virginia Federation of Intercollegiate Sports for Women Archery Tournaments. Last year Longwood was to hold the Tournament, but since Ms. Custer was a new coach, it was decided to hold it elsewhere. The Longwood team was first in the State in last year's tournament, a title they have held for four consecutive years. They also placed third in the Regional Tournament competing in the NAA 900. Thirteen colleges from New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Virginia participated. The team was not able to attend the National Tournament, even though they qualified, because it was held on Commencement Day.

Ms. Custer thinks their hardest competition will be against East Stroudsburg College, who hold national honors. Hopefully Longwood can go to Nationals at Madison College this year. Unfortunately, this tournament falls on Commencement Day again. Ms. Custer hopes to be able to take some individual archers. She believes she will have a successful mixed and women's team this year.

Spring has blown onto the Longwood Campus, bringing with it sunburns, formal dances, lacrosse and tennis (and I wish I could report on the sunburn and dances). Both squads have seemingly stepped out on the right foot.

Although the varsity lacrosse team lost its first game of the season 17-4 to William and Mary, there is no reason to be pessimistic. I honestly thought that Longwood played well, and they sure as heck did not give up in the final minutes. Admittedly, William and Mary has a more experienced, fluid squad, but Longwood had some great plays of its own. I'd like to point out that every time Longwood could get the ball to the opposite end of the field, they did score. The Longwood defense had trouble containing the penetration of the William and Mary Indians and obviously had trouble picking up the open man. Cheryl Sams scored three goals for LC and Terry Donohue tossed in one for the offensive output.

The JV Lacrosse Team had a beautiful "come from behind" game to tie the William and Mary second team 5-5. The JV's played well together and were successful in the all-important concept of cutting to the open space. Jane Carson, Donna Lowe, and Kathy Forthuber scored one each for Longwood while Linda Eagle added two to finish the game on an even keel.

The Longwood Tennis Team has been baiting the balls "pretty good" to say the least. The nine netters have been victorious on all three attempts, defeating Southside Community College, Hollins, and Christopher Newport.

The men from Southside were the first to fall prey to the Longwood Ladies. The girls won rather handily, giving up only 28 games while taking 105. Dee Donnelly was the only pressed player and had to claim the victory with a third set. The Hollins College preppies were the next team to fall at the rackets of L.C. Margie Quarles, Dee Donnelly, Dianne Harwood, and Teresa McLawhorn were all victorious in singles, despite being blown off the court by a cold mountain wind. In doubles, Gwen Koechlien and Miss Quarles were winners, as were Diane Lowman and Miss Donnelly. The girls also took an 8-1 win over Christopher Newport; not too much excitement in this one.

So all you individuals who have nothing to do on a sunny afternoon, come play spectator. You might get a suntan; you might meet someone to take you to your formal dance, and you will surely get an eyeful of tennis and lacrosse.

And again, a special congratulations to the Longwood College Gymnastics Team, who placed eighth in regional competition in Boone, North Carolina. Although no one placed, the girls turned in their best scores of the season. A special thanks to Bunny, Debbie, Lisa, DeDe, Margie, Vicky, Wendy, Sue, Cathy, Kim, and Coach for making the gymnastics team at Longwood a winner again.

Virginia Intermont Spring Horse Show

The Virginia Intermont College Open Spring Horse Show will begin at 9 a.m. April 2 at the college's riding facilities off Interstate 81 (Exit 5) at Bristol, Va.

The show features five classes in two divisions. The Hunters division includes Baby Green, Green, Student, Small Hunter and Pony, and Open. The Equitation division features Elementary Maiden, Novice, Open, and Mini-Medal classes.

Entry fee is $3 per class, $4 for stake classes, which are Baby

Green, Green, Small Hunter and Pony, and Open. In addition to a mini-medal, silver trophies will be awarded in all divisions.

Judging will be James A. Cantwell of Southern Pines, N.C., a nationally rated judge of the American Horse Show Association. Ringmaster will be Susan York.

The show is open to all riders. Overnight stabling will be provided. For stall reservations or additional information about the show, call Virginia Intermont College stables at (703) 669-8398.

A REMINDER

Activity on Barlow Field is restricted to archery only March 21 through May 15. The field is being reworked and reseeded.

Students are reminded that half of Barlow Field is available for activities this spring. Also, after 2:30 in the afternoon, the laboratory school athletic fields are open for use.

Gayle Hawkes Crowned Miss Longwood

By LISA TURNER

The lights are suitably dimmed, the twelve contestants stand about on the stage, anxious smiles frozen on their faces. Lyndi Chalkley and Kim Nichols have already been chosen the first and second runner-ups. Three girls on the stage are doubtless no longer breathing at the moment. There is a drumroll. . . the emcee is drawing this out as long as possible; (one hopes that it is not because he has lost the envelope again) and Miss Longwood 1977 is . . .

. . . Gayle Hawkes. She visibly starts, then covers her face, disbelief and triumph apparent. Several girls in the audience are cheering. There are scattered conversations among the spectators, both delighted and dismayed.

Gayle is crowned with a glittering tiara by Beth Thomlinson, Miss Longwood 1976. She is presented with the requisite bouquet of roses, adjusts them, then begins her stroll down the runway, a very appealing smile on her face. The man in front of me whispers to someone, "Think how her parents must feel."

Indeed. So ended one of the longest, pageants in recent history. There was general agreement among the pageant personnel that the talent competition (mostly singing) had been one of the best ever. To offset this, there was the unfunny buffoonery of the emcee, Cullen Johnson (and it was sadly unintentional for the most part), but a pageant is a pageant, and this one had more than its share of good moments.

All twelve contestants, Susan Barker, Lyndi Chalkley, Terry Cochran, Deanna Deane, Robin Havens, Gayle, Cathy Moore, Kathy Murphy, Kim Nichols, Cheryl Parks, Sue Seaborn and Jeanne Webb were very poised, and for the most part very talented. There was a dance routine, and lots of musical numbers. The selection of the five finalists must have been very difficult, but the five were Lyndi, Robin, Gayle, Kathy Murphy and Kim. Sue Barker took the award for most talented non-finalist (for her rendition of Evergreen).

The theme of this year's pageant was Utopia — Man's Search for the Ideal, which fits in very well with previous comments made by Tilsia Stephens, General Chairman of the pageant. Did the winner live up to her expectations?

Tilsia acknowledged that she was very pleased with the outcome — "No one is an ideal. There are so many qualities, and they have to be all combined in one. Gayle has so many, and that is why she won." Tilsia was very impressed with the judges and noted that the judges had been especially impressed with Gayle. (One or two commented on her resemblance to Liza Minelli and Judy Garland; she does have that short dark hair and bubbling personality). Gayle, however, is after a degree in pre-pharmacy and possesses a working knowledge of chemistry.

For some reason, the judges also like the runway, and thought that the pageant was particularly well-organized. A few were displeased with the performance of the emcee (who acted as though it was his first run through the proceedings), but the evening came off very well nonetheless.

Actually, the pageant was really pageant week. After Spring Break, the production committee really settled down to the serious business of rehearsals and all the last minute preparations that accompany a beauty pageant. Tuesday through Thursday evenings were taken up with rehearsals of the various talents. Friday evening was the only dress rehearsal. There were dances to choreographed, costumes to be put together, and the E. C. Glass stage band traveled back and forth between Lynchburg and Farmville on several occasions.

Saturday was an especially busy day. There was a luncheon at the Alumni House for the contestants, staff, judges and emcee. It was here that informal interviews took place; some of the judging was done before the first contestant set foot on the Jarman stage. A cocktail party at 4 p.m. for the judges, committee chairmen and contestant's parents followed, and at 8:00 that night the pageant itself got underway.

Entertainment for the pageant was provided by the E. C. Glass stage band, Bill Ferkuson, sang "If I Were a Rich Man" (in keeping with the Utopia theme), and Beth Tomlinson and Sandy Williams performed a very elegant modern dance to "Sophistication."

A reception in the Gold Room followed the coronation. Sunday morning, a breakfast was held for Gayle, her parents, Beth, her parents, Tilsia, Brenda Williams (judges' chairman) the judges, Pat Nucholls (pageant producer) and Theresa Wood (director).

Next year's pageant may be slightly different, as there is talk of having co-emcees, perhaps one might be a past Miss Longwood, or a good speaker from Hampden-Sydney.

The hard work is not yet over. Tilsia quickly reminds that the Miss Virginia pageant is still upcoming, and that Gayle is already at work on her talent for it. There are bills to be paid, and paperwork to be waded through.

How Do Young Writers Get Started?

By SANDY WILLIAMS

Dabney Stuart casually kicked off his shoes, propped his feet on the coffee table, and leaned back in the corner of the sofa as he commented on a recent "badass review."

Also making themselves at home in the English Department lounge were Dara Wier and Gregory Orr. After we munched on a few of Slater's sticky buns and after I recuperated from my initial scare of having to interview these poets (who turned out to be human after all), a very leisurely discussion took place.

"How do young writers get started? What are the possible outlets? Where are the best places to submit work? The pros all had similar responses and reactions to these central questions. Those interested should take heed to their advice. They ought to know—they made it.

The general consensus was that writers have to have such a strong private dedication to their work that publication is only of secondary importance. Still, none of them could deny the gratification they felt in seeing their work in print.

The first outlet available to a young writer is through his college publications whether it be the newspaper or literary magazine. It is usually relatively easy to get work printed here. However, the road to publication gets rougher later.

The writers maintained that the Directory of Little Magazines and Small Presses is the best source for locating possible places to send work. After landing this book which can be found on the reference shelf in most libraries, one must read the type of literature various magazines publish. For example, to quote Mr. Orr, "If you're writing a free verse poem and you get a copy of this magazine and you see that every poem that they publish is rhymed metrical verse, you know that your chances are a million to one against you getting yours published." Therefore, send your masterpieces to a magazine that prints work typical of your own. Otherwise, it's a waste of time and postage. Another helpful hint from the poets was to never overpower the editor with vast amounts of literature. Also, do not send more than two short stories or four poems to the same place at the same time.

It is important not to become discouraged if the "idiot editors" aren't as impressed as they should be. Since the ratio of work submitted to work accepted is approximately 1000 to 1, it could take years to see that work in print.

At another time, when Longwood's own Mr. Woods was asked what suggestions he could give young writers, he responded, "Don't even bother. It isn't worth it!"

Trace Elements In Disease

Chemistry Club Sponsors Lecture

By JOLEHL

Monday, March 28, the Chemistry club sponsored its first function as an officially recognized campus organization. Featured was Dr. Ralph Allen, associate professor of Chemistry at the University of Virginia, who spoke on "Trace Elements in Disease."

Dr. Allen received his BA degree in Chemistry at Cornell College in Iowa, in 1965 — "a college of about 1000 students, small like Longwood, which is why I can relate to this school." His Ph. D. was received in 1970, at the University of Wisconsin in the field of Analytical Chemistry, minoring in Geology. Currently Dr. Allen teaches Analytical Chemistry and instrumental analysis at U. Va., while personal studies have included activation analysis of meteorites and lunar samplers.

Arriving on the campus at 4:00 p. m., Dr. Allen was given a tour of the Science department facilities by the Chemistry club officers. A banquet was held at 6:15, followed by a 7:30 lecture and 8:30 reception in the Stevens Building, which was attended by about 150 students.

Dr. Allen initiated his lecture with an explanation of Neutron Activation Analysis. "Radiation is emitted by decaying material when activated by neutrons, which if measured gives a quantitative analysis of the amount of the material present." This method is used then in measuring quantities of various trace elements as they are released from tissue after irradiation.

The actual role which trace elements play in health and body functions is only a recent scientific discovery. "Years ago, up until about 1960," he explained, "only 7 trace elements were considered essential to mammalian biochemistry. Now 21 are known to be essential, and more are always being discovered."

Trace element functions include electrochemical charge carriers, which trigger nerve cell reaction; structural components, such as phosphorus in bones and fluorine in teeth; or catalytic components, which combine with proteins in enzyme.

Another recent discovery concerning trace elements in their role in diseases, not normally associated with trace elements over-abundance or deficiencies. The limited studies done, due to the moral issues of human experimentation, have revealed trace elements to be linked to obesity, cirrhosis of the liver, and heart disease among other ailments.

"Selenium, for example" stated Dr. Allen, "prevents cancer in certain animals if given with carcinogenic compounds. It also has been found, and linked to trace elements in diet, that winter babies are more prone to cancer than summer babies. The reason... a very possible explanation could be in the decrease of fresh produce intake and thus less selenium trace element intake."

Using rats then, as the experimental animals, trace elements can be studied not only in respect to dietary effects, but as in Dr. Allen's field of specialization, in cancer therapy and the diagnosis of its success. Cancerous tumors or hepatomas can be injected onto any part of the rat, and the amount of trace elements released before and after irradiation can be recorded. These observations are then compared to trace elements released by other tissues in these rats such as the liver, and a ration of normal to cancerous tissue is obtained.

It was discovered that the amount of trace elements released following irradiation fluctuate in waves peaking at days one and three. Such studies disclose information about tumor-cell permeability as compared to normal cells. By studying amounts of trace elements released after treatment, it can be determined if irradiation has been successful. It has also been found that tumorous tissue has an affinity for certain elements, which if irradiated, could then be concentrated mainly in these tissues, and possible future source of treatment. Long term treatment effects can also be obtained by comparing trace elements affinities in treated and untreated tumors. Selenium for example has a higher concentration associated with cured tumors than active untreated tumors.

Dr. Allen, in discussing the great amount of future work which still remains to be done in trace element studies, is a firm believer in the chemistry of trace elements and their relation to the field of dietetics. Summarizing, he stated "more and more, disease thought of as things unrelated to inorganic material will have trace elements related to them. More emphasis will be placed on the trace elements in diet intake, and as such, the field of dietetics will become very important in the future."

New Danger On Longwood Campus

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

When Ellie Gerner's father opened the door of her white Vega and tenuous hold of the cracked, veiny glass gave way and the entire rear window splintered into the back seat. It didn't get that way at the hands of the proverbial woman driver, or from being left overnight in one of the darker recesses of Longwood campus. It got that way because Wednesday afternoon, it was parked out in front of Frazer dorm when someone decided to drop a rock off the roof.

Chief Smith, who is in charge of the investigation, emphasized the seriousness of the offense as reflected in its legal repercussions: "Throwing any object in thoroughfare used by automobiles or pedestrians is a felony and is subject to 1-5 years in prison, $1,000 fine or both." All the Information Campus Police had at this time was generally incidental; the act occurred at approximately 4 o'clock, on March 30th, there was a witness to the breakage, however, no one that they are aware of so far had seen the rock thrown, and the roof was deserted when Mrs. Marshall checked it shortly afterward. They advised Ellie to contact her insurance company about the damage "which would amount to about $100" as soon as possible. Chief Smith also asked the head resident of Frazer to contact the hall presidents "to see if they could get information." Mrs. Marshall has already done this although with little success.

In speaking with Ellie, she seemed more appalled at the possibility of personal injury than the damage done to her car; "the thing that upsets me is, what if a person had been there?" she pointed out that her car was parked near the well traveled dirt cut-off path between the sidewalk and Frazer steps at a time when classes had just been let out. To get an idea of the physical impact of the falling rock, I approached Mr. Meshejian of the science department. Judging the high rise to be about 100 ft. and the rock to be somewhere the size of a golf ball, he arrived at what we agreed to be a conservative estimate of 55 mph as the velocity of the falling object. This calculation was also based on the assumption that the rock was dropped rather than thrown, in which case the velocity and consequent impact would be proportionately increased. How does all this relate to mysterious falling rocks and the safety of the human head? Imagine someone banking a professional size baseball off the top of your skull; whether or not it was intentionally done (speed being the constant) the physical hurt would be the same. And so it is with skipping stones at obnoxious altitudes; had the rock been passively released to "see what would happen," or deliberately sited over a specific object, the pain or property damage has the same devastating potential.

To Present Happiness

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

On April 13, the Sophomore Class will bring balloons, candy, laughter, and smiles through their crazy antics to many children in Crippled Children's Hospital. They also might go to Education for the Retarded, Inc. and Brookhill Program for the Trainable Retarded. This annual show is intended to brighten the day for the children and the 30 to 35 participating sophomores.

Their theme is Happiness. Skits, clowns, and cartoon characters, such as Raggedy Ann and Andy and Mickey Mouse illustrate the theme.

After the performances, the entertainers will eat a picnic lunch at Maymount Park in Richmond. Class involvement and a charitable attitude from Longwood is hoped to be derived from this experience.

Margie Kelley and Cinda Holt are the co-chairmen of the Road Show. They are very excited about it and think it will be a great deal of fun, both for the children and the sophomores.

Longwood SEA Members

Attend State Convention

By DONNA HUFF

Recently four members of the Student Education Association attended the state convention of the Student Education Association held in Charlottesville, Virginia, March 11-19, at the Ramada Inn. Those attending as delegates were Laurie Allan, Mary Lee Corey, Sherry Herald and Donna Huff. The delegates attended seminars, one each day on non-teaching responsibilities, audiovisuals, multi-cultural studies, handicapped children and interview skills. A banquet was held on Friday night at which the delegates heard a delightful speech from Robert Richards, Executive Director of the Education Association of Norfolk. Following the banquet, the first business session was held where at that time the candidates for next year's state officers of President, Vice President, Secretary, and SNEA alternates gave their speeches. There was then an informal meeting of the candidates to answer questions from the delegates.

Saturday morning, the delegates attended a seminar and voted for next year's officers.

Lunch was served and then the second business session was held and the election results were reported. Several amendments were added to the SVEA constitution and resolutions were passed. One resolution passed of interest to all prospective teachers, concerns the fifth year internship. The resolution states that "be it resolved that definitive steps have been taken to examine the ratifications of the Fifth Year Teacher Internship that the SVEA Delegate Assembly adopt a position to any program until it should prove both feasible and a positive step toward quality education."

Longwood among other Virginia colleges was cited for increasing its membership seven more than last year's membership. The Longwood SEA extends an invitation to all elementary and secondary education majors to join. If anyone is interested, they may contact President-Wanda Garrett in 610 Curry or Donna Huff in Curry 420. Dues are $7.50 which pays for magazines and newspapers from VEA, SVEA, NEA and SNEA, tort insurance for student teaching and other special benefits.

Geist Sponsors

Bloodmobile

Geist will sponsor a bloodmobile Thursday, April 14, 12:00-6:00 p.m. It will be held in the ABC rooms and all are asked to participate if they meet the following criteria.

- 1) Must be between 18 and 66 years old
- 2) Must be 56 days between donations
- 3) Must weigh at least 110 pounds
- 4) Never had jaundice or hepatitis or been knowingly exposed with the past 6 months
- 5) Must be at least 6 months after having had ears pierced, tattoos, or blood transfusions.
- 6) Never have had malaria
- 7) Not on oral antibiotics for at least 2 weeks or antibiotics by injection for at least 30 days (exception: small maintenance doses for acne—48 hours.)

Donors should eat before donation—at least once in last 5 hours.

PBS To Present Anthology Of "The American Short Story"

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Starting April 5 viewers of PBS will have the opportunity to sit back and let the air waves turn the pages of one in a television anthology of "The American Short Story."

The National Endowment of the Humanities has sponsored the project which will be presented on six consecutive Tuesday evenings over the Public Broadcasting System. The resulting programs, varying from 28 to 55 minutes in length, are the culminating efforts of twelve literary scholars who worked in selecting 20 from a list of 100 possible stories, NEH executives who later narrowed that list to twelve on the basis of "literary merit, social insight, and entertainment potential," and a diverse staff of actors, directors, and technical personnel to tend to the needs of each of the chosen stories.

Robert Geller, executive producer and president of Learning in Focus, the production organization, discusses the approach in presenting these literary works: "Fidelity to the authors has been one of the principle objectives of this project...Each one captured, in short story form, a group of unforgettable real characters, as well as the moods and values of a special time and place in American culture. We devoted ourselves to capturing, on film, their perceptions and styles, and of course, the power of their narrative."

While each story stands firmly on the broad base of its literary merit, certain technical, locational, and biographical elements imposed by their chroniclers make their potential for television that much more interesting. "The Displaced Person" for example, was filmed on the farm and house in Milledgeville, Georgia where the author, Flannery O'Connor, had lived and written. "The Jolly Corner," by Henry James, was shot at Brooklyn and Manhattan sites carefully chosen for their representative depictions of New York City during the era of the late 1800's when the story takes place. LeVar Burton, a familiar face recently seen in the television novel Roots by Alex Haley, is featured in Richard Wright's story of a black teen-age farm worker's passage into manhood, "Almos' a Man." Ron Howard, best known for his role as Ritchie Cunningham in The Happy Days, portrays a young man who falls in love across social lines in Sherwood Anderson's "I'm a Fool," an observation on the growing social and economic pressures in America. "Bernice Bobs Her Hair," written by F. Scott Fitzgerald, and shot on location in Savannah, Georgia, was chosen as one of four American films screened this year at the New York Film Festival. Other stories, of equally impressive portrayal, include, "Soldier's Home," by Ernest Hemmingway, "Parker Adderson, Philosopher," by Ambrose Bierce, "The Blue Hotel," by Stephen Crane, and "The Music School," by John Updike.

Male Student 'Threatens' Residence Board Chairman

By STACEY SMITH

In an interview Thursday, Dean Heintz and Dr. Peele released the statement, "A student in violation of Administrative probation was asked to leave campus for a few days and return later with his parents for a conference." They explained that the action taken to ask the student to leave was an administrative decision and that students should realize that it was not a Residence or Judicial board action. They stressed that the student has not been expelled or suspended and no final decision has been reached, as to his position. The student's name was not released in order to protect his rights and invasion of privacy.

This student has agreed to come forward and reveal his name and his account of the incident that resulted in the administration asking him to leave campus.

According to Billy Rogers, on Friday night March 25 after the Residence Board Chairman attempted to search his room, he confronted Chairman Mary Meade Saunders with the statement "I'm gonna get your tail, I'm gonna nail ya to the wall." He claims that he was not threatening her. After two days of deliberation Dean Heintz and Dr. Peele came to the administrative decision that he did threaten Residence Board Chairman Mary Meade Saunders, and asked Billy to leave.

An attempt was made to contact Mary Meade Saunders for a statement but she was unavailable at the time.

"Something For Joey"

Sports Drama To Be Aired

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

"Something for Joey," a sports drama in the tradition of "Brian's Song," will be aired over CBS as a two hour special Wednesday, April 6. The story focuses on John Cappelletti (now a star running back for the Los Angeles Rams) and the close and loving relationship with his leukemia-stricken younger brother, Joey. Chronologically, the action begins two years before and leads up to Cappelletti's presentation of his Heisman Trophy (awarded to the best college football player) to his brother Joey as a tribute to a different kind of courage and achievement.

Two-time Emmy winner and veteran of three Academy Award nominations, Geraldine Page, portrays the Cappelletti mother opposite Gerald O'Laughlin who has appeared in episodes of many CBS series including "Hawaii Five-O," "Mission Impossible," and "The Rockies," Marc Singer who portrays John Cappelletti, had received the Los Angeles Drama Critics Circle Award for best actor in 1974 for his performance in the stage production of "Taming of the Shrew" and critical acclaim for his appearance in the "GE Theater" production of "Things in their Season," as well as other television specials. TV rookie Jeff Lynas plays Joey, the chronically ill brother. Lynas recently won acclaim for his lead role in the film "Lies My Father Told Me."

IBM is the full sponsor of the program, directed by Lou Antonio and written and produced by Jerry McNeely for MTM Enterprises.

It's An Easter

Egg Hunt

By DEBBIE MOUL

Lucinda Adams and Brenda Hurt and the other members of the Afro-American Student Alliance are sponsoring an Easter egg hunt for many of the underprivileged children in the area.

The hunt will be held in the Sunken Garden on Easter Sunday, April 10 from 2:30 to 4:00. Many of the children, ages 3-7, are fatherless and live in an apartment complex near College Plaza.

Members of the club are going to buy eggs, boil them and color them as well as buy candy eggs. A first place and a second place prize will be given to the child who finds the most eggs.

Anybody who is interested in helping should contact any member of the club. Lucinda invites everyone to come and share the fun that these children will have in their hunt for those Easter eggs.

McDonald's To Sponsor

Lorraine Hansberry Award

CHICAGO, ILL.—Two original plays on the Black Experience in America, which at this moment may be drafts in a desk drawer or an idea in some student's mind, will receive the 2nd annual Lorraine Hansberry Award in the spring of 1978.

The award, funded by McDonald's Corporation, honors the memory of playwright Lorraine Hansberry, the youngest author and the only black ever to receive the New York Drama Critics' Award for Best Play of the Year. That play was the now-classic, "A Raisin in the Sun."

The plays entered are judged by the regional and national judges of the American College Theatre Festival, which, every spring, brings to Washington the year's best student plays and productions. Some of the plays and authors are introduced at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

The first-prize winner of the Hansberry Award will be presented by McDonald's with a check for $2,500 and the college that produces the play will get $750. The runner-up will get $1,000 and the school will receive $500 toward the production of the play.

This year's award winner, Judi Ann Mason, a graduating senior at Grambling University in Grambling, La., will see her play produced by the Back Alley Players in Washington, D.C., on May 31.

To be eligible for the award, the play must be a regular entry in the Playwriting Award Program of the American College Theatre Festival, and meet all of the festival's rules and regulations. The playwrights must be full or part-time students enrolled in accredited graduate or undergraduate schools.

FROM THE EDITOR . . . Board Members Or Bogeymen? The Piedmont Mailbox Library Decision

Hollow milk chocolate bunnies, jelly beans and creme filled eggs hidden in a bed of multi-colored grass... a stuffed bunny... tales of Peter Cottontail... the youthful joys of Easter. Do you remember the excitement, the anticipation of the Easter Bunny? Unfortunately in the childhood of many, there has not been and will not be a day of joy provided by the Easter Bunny. In many homes next Sunday, because of various circumstances the day will be nothing extraordinary.

Fortunately, for many underprivileged children in the area, the day will be highlighted by a special act of love. Members of the Afro-American Student Alliance are busy this week preparing for an Easter egg hunt Sunday. Sisters of Sigma Kappa are joining Sigma Nu to add a touch of happiness to another group of children next Sunday.

The excitement wrapped up in Easter baskets may have decreased over the years for most of us, but thanks to these students the happiness of many youngsters will be great. Thank you for taking the time to remember the excitement of your childhood Easters, and helping to create it for others who have never known it.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor:

In the recent article in the Rotunda concerning Mary Meade Saunders as the new chairman of Residence Board she was quoted as saying she would "get accomplished what the students want accomplished." Well, I for one am asking that Mary Meade keep her promise and comply with what the students want accomplished. In my observation the students want her out of office and have a re-election for chairman of Residence Board. Of course maybe what she said was just campaign rhetoric and we should not expect such extreme promises. After all I believe Richard Nixon once said the same thing when he was running for President. There has been extreme controversy over the election and many students believe that there was not adequate publicity before the election.

Many of the people who were involved with the election say that there was adequate publicity and that it is the apathy of the student body was the reason that the turnout was so poor.

Also there has been mentioned that the election was no different from any other. Maybe the uproar over this one says something of the whole election process at Longwood. But these same people are baffled as to explain why more students have signed the recent petition, which stated that a re-election be held, than voted in the entire election. Obviously the students don't agree with what has occurred and want some action taken to correct the situation. I ask that the new chairman live up to her promise and in the interest of the student body and the image of the Residence Board (which is bad enough as it is) that she step down from office voluntarily and have a re-election. I know that asking Mary Meade to resign her powers is like asking the sun not to shine but if the majority of students do actually want her, then she has nothing to worry about with a re-election.

D.J. Lindsey

By SANDY WILLIAMS

"... Belinda like it cause you don't have to pay anything. Carol like it cause she always get what she wants. Angela like it cause it's easy to fill out the card. Stacy like it cause it don't take long for delivery..." Wondering what the wild enthusiasm is about in this letter? — The Piedmont Mailbox Library which is soon to be non-existent.

This two and one half year pilot program was established due to the lack of public library facilities in the area. Housed in the Longwood library, this speedy and popular books-by-mail service serves the residents in the five surrounding counties, Buckingham, Nottoway, Amelia, Cumberland, and Prince Edward. In this trial period, 175 thousand books were sent to approximately one third of the eligible people. Yet, in the face of the statistical success and the overwhelming public interest, the county supervisors rejected the recent proposal to continue the service through a regional library.

Five per cent of the state of Virginia lacks sufficient public library service — the area counties making up most of this percentage. Over the years, area adults and high school students have been forced to prey on the Longwood and Hampden-Sydney libraries which have been very gracious in their lending procedure. Though the colleges have refrained from callousness, this accommodating policy is hardly fair to the college students who might have an immediate need for a book that a "local" has in his possession. Of course, there is the privately supported Farmville Public Library and Farmville Reading Room but their selections are slim. Attempts were made in Cumberland, Buckingham, and Amelia counties to secure a library system that required volunteer service. These endeavors confirm the residents concern and interest in this critical matter.

To solve this problem the Piedmont Mailbox Library was organized in cooperation with Longwood College for housing, with the HEW for funding, and with the Virginia State Library for purchasing and cataloging.

After the trial period, if the facility was sufficiently used, the service was not only to continue but to expand into a regional library. The central location was to be in Farmville with local library affiliates in each community.

Obviously the facility was sufficiently used as can be seen through all of the various groups and agencies that took advantage of the program such as day care centers, nursery schools, and home demonstration clubs. Elementary school teachers ordered for entire classes. In specific, the people at the Welfare Department, the Piedmont Area Mental Health and Mental Retardation Services Board, and Holly Manor Nursing Home patients all utilized the facility. An example of what the Piedmont Mailbox Library had to offer the elderly is best said in the following letter:

I am a semi-invalid and am not physically able to go back and forth to the library for books, so it is needless to say how very much I enjoy the books and the convenient service. I look forward to them so much as I have to spend many hours alone. Hoping this will continue for a long time. I am a faithful reader and supporter of this program.

Such a diverse crowd was attracted to the library because it catered to everyone's tastes. Besides having current popular fiction, sections were also designated to history, biography, poetry, plays, and art. To accommodate the younger family members, both teen and juvenile books were available. The useful crafts and "how-to" books were in constant demand. They covered such areas as weaving, quilting, gardening, cooking, and home and auto repair. The following segment from a letter of a Piedmont reader demonstrates a small portion of the constant praise:

... My husband and I enjoy reading your books. My husband is a mechanic and I'm a housewife... Thanks to you I've enjoyed reading more than ever before. My husband enjoyed his book because it helped him fix up a little work wiring on our truck van... The patrons were happy.

They finally had an adequate source of literature.

Besides individual testimonies and letters, the statistics prove the actual success. Careful records were kept to reveal that approximately 170,034 books, constituting about 50,010 orders, were mailed to residents during this period. In addition, during the last six months period, there were 3,194 walk-in patrons who checked out 7,367 books. That's success.

So what happened to this paramount of success? Good question. But it sounds like an acute case of misplaced priorities.

Out of the five involved counties, the Prince Edward board supervisors were the only ones who were the least bit positive toward the proposal. Their board meeting rendered a conditional outcome in which they promised to continue the project if all of the other counties agreed. None of them did.

Cost seemed to be the greatest concern at the board meetings; however, federal and state grants would have continued to aid the project for the next two years which would have meant a tax raise of a mere fifty cents per capita. The third year, when the counties would have fully taken over the financial responsibility, the cost would have been $1.50 per capita. Evidently the board members did not think that the continuing education and the reading opportunities of the county residents were important enough for a small tax hike. Interestingly enough, the Cumberland board of supervisors just recently agreed to increase their salaries the same amount as the library would have cost.

The board members' extreme nonchalance or lack of concern can not go without mention. An invitation to a reception in the library was issued by Dr. Willett to all twenty-eight board members to familiarize them with the actual operation. With refreshments prepared for twenty-eight, Dr. Willett, the Piedmont staff, five librarians, and five interested Longwood faculty members were on hand to greet two board members. Incidentally, the two that showed

New Sport At Longwood Draws Attention

By ROY WRIGHT

In a back room off the pool hall there lies two such machines. The floor is littered with coke bottles and there is a haze caused by cigarette smoke. At the "Captain Fantastic" machine there is a player with a grim look of determination on his face. Then bells start ringing and lights flashing — he backs up with a smile — he has won another game.

While this is a common scene today just a few years ago it would have been different. Then it was looked upon as a form of gambling with lady luck calling the shots and no skill involved. It was a game for people with which the "Good Citizens" would not associate. This comes partly from Chicago the last holdout against legalized pinball. There was a ban on public pinball machines from 1942 to 1976 — ever since Mayor Fiorello La Guardia was upset that candy store owners were encouraging school kids to waste their lunch money on pinball by paying off any free games they won at nickel each pushed through the suppression-of-pinball act. The strange thing though is that the three biggest manufacturers of pinball machines, Gattilied, Williams and Bally, have their factories there. Their estimated production of 50,000 per year probably accounts for 90 per cent of the worldwide total. But it was only in December of 1976 that Chicago repealed this act and legalized pinball.

Pinball has come a long way since 1920 when the old parlor bagatelle games were transformed into spring-powered penny pinball machines. With the latest machine (Rodeo) having a glowing playing field made of polyurethane there has been a definite change. One of the people who brought about these changes was Harry Williams, one of the great names in pinball. He invented the tilt mechanism, the kickout hole and put the bells and gongs on the machine.

"Tilt" is the word that lights up on the backglass when the player has bumped the machine too hard. The machine goes dead until the next ball drops through the runout slot.

Williams has been quoted as saying, "Sometimes I rue the day I did it. The tilt machine has made us a lot of enemies. I don't like negatives, I like plusses. Like the day I invented the bell by accident. One day I realized that pinballs were quiet. I don't like that, I said to myself." According to Mr. Williams the object of the designer is to give the player about three minutes of action each time he puts in a coin.

When one of the local Longwood players, Ruth Curtis, was asked if she got her moneys worth, she replied, "I feel that I do, usually I manage to win a game and even if I don't it gives me a chance to relax."

This led to the question of why she played:

"Usually I play to relax from studying or just for something to do when I have a spare minute. I also enjoy watching the others play. They have such interesting methods. Some jiggle the machine a lot and some jiggle a little. You will just have to watch to know what I mean."

A number of players were asked why they play pinball: Charles Elinsky said "playing pinball satisfies my competitive spirit and it is also a form of sexual release. Whenever I win a game I tingle all over. It's the same whether I win a game from the machine or another player."

Dave Stack when asked the same question said "I enjoy the competition and the skill involved. It takes a lot of practice to be able to hit the flippers at the right time and to be able to bump the machines without tilting."

Another player, D. J. Lindsey, said that he played pinball because there are not enough sports facilities. He can't lift weights because there are no weights and he can't play basketball because the courts are constantly in use.

In general most people say that pinball fills their time and allows them to relax from studying, and to socialize. There also seems to be a fascination with the lights and bells going off whenever the ball hits a target. This totals up the feelings of the players except for one thing: they all said to give a special note of thanks to Mr. Rickman for his superb upkeep of the machines.

New Solar Energy Developments

Solar Development For Dorms

By CLIFFORD A. WELCH
(CPS) — At California State University — San Jose (SJSU), dormitory administrator William Schooler simply got fed up with paying high utility rates.

Schooler turned to Dr. Donald Aitken, head of the six-month-old SJSU Center for Solar Energy Application, for help. They came up with a pioneering plan to install solar water heating units in three SJSU residence halls. To save money and provide practical experience to students, they would create a solar workshop.

Under the guidance of Aitken and grad student Jim Altman, who supervises the construction staff of 15 undergraduates, solar energy units have been built and installed on each building. In June, when the program, dubbed "Project Sunshower," is completed, 600 students will be using hot water heated without cost by the magnification of the sun's rays, Altman said.

Altman, an environmental studies graduate student, believes the SJSU project is the largest student-built solar water-heating development ever. It is budgeted at a surprisingly low $125,000, as compared to a similar project developed by contractors for a Georgia school system at a cost of $1 million.

It seems SJSU wants to be the trend-setter in practical use of solar power. For instance, university officials have earmarked $600,000 to construct a solar heating and cooling plant for the new, $11 million library project at SJSU. Dr. Aitken is working on this building as a technical consultant to the architects.

Project Sunshower itself looks like the prototype for much greater use of solar power in the California State University system. Aitken hopes a successful Sunshower demonstration will encourage the university to use solar methods to heat many of the system's buildings.

University officials, who approved the Sunshower proposal of Schooler and Aitken last summer, have already taken the bait. Beyond agreeing to finance the library's solar energy plant, the officials may extend the current plan to include another three dormitories and a 12-story residence hall at San Jose before expanding the project to other campuses.

The current project is budgeted for $125,000, said Altman, but in 11 years that much will have been saved. By 1997, Schooler said the project "will have paid for itself twice over," in saved utility bills.

According to Schooler, who is quoted in The Christian Science Monitor, the construction won't cost the taxpayers a cent, since reserves collected from student room rents over the years are high enough to cover the budget.

Each dorm houses 200 students. Altman said his team of solar workshop students is building three holding tanks with a total water capacity of 27,000 gallons.

They built 360 solar panels totalling 9000 square feet, and are placing them at the top of Washburn, Royce and Hoover dormitories. When they are finished, and professional plumbers and inspectors have adapted the solar heating tubes with the current natural gas system, 70 to 80 per cent of the water heating and cooling will be provided for. The remaining percentage will be heated by the original natural gas furnaces, which will be maintained as a backup.

To guarantee the long life of Project Sunshower, Altman said they used "hundred year materials." These are basic raw materials such as wood, glass and steel that should be available for well over one hundred years in case repairs are necessary.

Solar Energy's Light Brightens

(CPS) — The creation of a national solar energy research institute was announced by Energy Research and Development Administration (ERDA) officials March 24, marking the first major federal movement toward emphasis on solar energy development.

The unit, which will be built near a suburb of Denver, Colo., will promote the "widespread use of all aspects of solar technology, including direct solar conversion (to electricity), solar heating and cooling, solar thermal power generation, wind, ocean thermal conversion and biomass conversion," the ERDA announcement said.

On July 1, a staff of 75 solar specialists and administrators should begin work in a building near the proposed, 300-acre, hilltop site.

The initial plan calls for five-year funding of the institute at $10 million annually. When the institute is built, some 300 employees will work there at an annual budget of $20 million, said an ERDA spokeswoman in Washington.

The institute is to function in concert with the solar researchers of industry, academe, and government. The institute will also support in international solar energy cooperation program.

ERDA officials are planning three regional solar research centers for location in New England, the southeast and north central United States. These centers will look to the Denver-based institute for administrative guidance and technical advice.

According to ERDA chief Robert Fri, the recent announcements are just a small part of a "unified national energy policy that will include a vigorous solar energy program," which the President is expected to announce in April.

Manhattan's Improvisation

The following feature was researched and written by a journalism student, Bridget Scherz. The Improvisation is a club on the corner of 44th Street in Manhattan.

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

The leisure-suited man did a double-take in the doorway, stepping back to glance again at the weathered wooden sign that hung overhead. Turning to his wife ("This is it, alright.") he shrugged and circled his arm around her back. This is a gesture of protective courtesy. This is also so that she'll go in first.

"Two for the show?" Judy Orbach looked up from the "reservation desk", a rickety podium under the wall phone. Face emerging from a gold-blond veil of hair, body appearing vaguely as a large, comfortable apparition in the sparse barroom light, she smiled a warm Mama Cass smile as she guided the slightly less apprehensive couple reassuringly to the back room, her body rocking gently with her small, deliberate steps. Judy, now assistant manager, has been with the Improvisation for nearly three years. Started fifteen years ago by Budd Friedman as a "showcase" for new talent, it remains as one of the few strictly non-professional clubs where aspiring comics, singers and musicians can step from the security of the living room carpet into the precarious reception of the live stage.

As with all entertainment "institutions" and the performers that preserve as long as the "Improv" and its following, an unmistakable sense of "family" eventually evolves. As Judy explains, "It's like a little city... or a bubble within the city." Twenty to thirty "regulars" inhabit the place sitting at the further-most tables of the back room, observing with a critical but encouraging eye, whoever happens to be on stage. The adjoining bar-room, which opens an hour before show-time at 9 o'clock, is also the comics' schoolroom as they verbally cuff one another with new material, gaze up at the small color portable suspended above the bar, or swap progress reports on pending engagements in the line of maroon vinyl-cushioned booths.

On the weekends, (Thursday through Saturday), the order of appearance is arranged prior to showtime, unlike the week-nights in which performers are given a ten minute warning called into the bar. Six or seven of the most successful acts receive prime-time slots which run between 10:15 and 12. After that, the crowd and the experience begins to thin out gradually until 2 or 3 in the morning. But even the bottom-billed acts faced with the insurmountable task of evoking comic or musical ecstasy out of sleepy-eyed slump of stragglers (that are often either too polite or too drunk to go home) are grateful for their small foothold in the program. Many have gotten a 2:15 set only after months of drawing at the Improv's Sunday Lottery. Those lucky enough to draw an audition ticket, perform Sunday night which is dedicated solely to screening talent. The staff, relying on their own and the audience's response, decide which acts will be invited back.

Between telephone calls and jotting down reservations, Judy turned around to share some celebrity lore about the black-framed glossies covering the opposite wall of some "Greats" who could trace the Improvisation back somewhere in their beginnings. Jimmie Walker, Gabe Kaplan, Richard Pryor, Freddie Prinze and Stilla and Meara smile in an artificial celeb-collage audience at the "prospectives" milling around in the bar. "Liza Minnelli sang here at 16... and just a few weeks ago Bette Midler stopped in at four in the morning, sat down at the piano in the back and started singing."

Agents, according to Judy are a great incentive to the performers who entertain not for money, but exposure. "Often, arrangements made with an agent will lead to a spot on a talk show, an engagement at a paying club or college and possibly a TV series." Not long ago, the producers of LAUGH-IN, along with Goldie Hawn, held auditions here for comics for their new version of the once popular show. Judy smiles as she nods in a reflection of family pride, "one of our people has made it."

In the back room, that one comic adequately described, although not without a certain amount of "tack", as "Anne Frank's former apartment" what are not yet an audience try deftly to stumble through an orchestra pit of what has to be a collective representation of every type of table and chair made in the history of civilized seating. To the left of the entrance a green chalkboard displays a chicken-and-hamburger cuisine along with the prices, although no other orders anything. Cardboard placards placed around on the tables hereby make known the $3.50 weeknight minimum that few people will have trouble exceeding at the price of the drinks. In the front a small wooden platform that is the stage supports an old upright piano. The backdrop, a red brick wall on which the sign "IMPROVISATION" is hung, is the same for everyone. A tall, furry-headed master of ceremonies picks his way through the sea of furniture and steps up on the stage. He dislodges the mike from the stand and glances at the large, thick-framed mirror mounted on the far wall directly across from the stage. At a tiny lightboard near the entrance, Judy focuses the spotlight and dims the house. The show is about to begin.

"Ladies and gentlemen, alot of famous people started at the Improvisation. You will see none of them here tonight."

As the audience titters he grins, focuses straight ahead, and looks at his reflection.

Probably, the greatest misconception in show business is that comics aren't bright." Who's going to argue, sitting there with a 30 year old M.A. in Psychology, in a very classy suit no less, who just happens to be comic. If "freedom" really is "just another word for nothing left to lose," Robert Slurz (lopping off some Slavic ending so as "not to embarrass his parents," so I am told) had been stripped far enough down to his "freedom" that he decided to pursue the thing that might have always meant to be his in the first place. When he lost both his job and his marriage he "realized the impermanence of the two things that I thought most stable." With no other commitments other than to himself, he felt free to begin writing, performing, and promoting his own material. His knowledge of Psychology "is a definite advantage" in relating to an audience. Surprisingly methodical, Slurz "feels out" an audience by their response to certain stock opening material so that he can get an idea of the type of humor to which they will respond. Conversational flow in delivery, "it has to be credible," and the flexibility "to expect any kind of reaction," are important to Slurz as performing strengths. The biggest obstacle in delivering a routine? Probably hecklers — and to an even larger extent, "female hecklers." Why? "Because you cannot directly attack a woman... no matter what she has said. It will turn the audience against you." If retaliation is really necessary, "you must do it through the guy." Like I said; who's going to argue?

Comic Jack Grayman has a definitely Neandethal approach to the problem of hecklers. His solution is simply "to go for the throat." By intruding on your act, the heckler is "fair game" to an artillery of personal putdowns of magnum force. Tough character. What does he do during the day? "I make my living by deficit spending." HA! No, really. "Actually, I'm living off a woman. (O.K., on to something else then.) At least you're not on welfare. "No, she is." The simultaneous sidelong glance. We seem to be reconciled. "Actually, I'm an actor." We are. Are comedians a special breed apart from the rest of us? "Yes. They are sick. They never have enough of anything and don't understand their needs." He extinguishes his cigarette in quick, deliberate jabs. Uh, do you think they look for in evaluating an audition? Jack Grayson looks reflectively down at the table as he twirls the ashtray, then at me, "They want to see what makes you unique — How do you look at things differently? The difference in comedy is the immediate feedback in response." Lowering the notebook from the area of my throat, I thank him for his time. He may have been just as paranoid of me pulling my pen on him.

"Comic craftsman" Bob Wuhl, who, wedged between credits of actor, songwriter and bartender, writes for Rodney Dangerfield, takes a manipulative approach to comedy. Wuhl's technique is to "make them laugh at what you want them to laugh at." Unlike the "satirical" or "observational" genres of comedy, this comic "creates." To him the rendering of something funny is a craft and he is more interested at this point, in "comedy writing as opposed to delivery." He has several personal theories about humor and the humorist and was very eager to talk about them. The importance of identity of the comic is one of his most interesting observations, "the comic has to establish a character and presense that defines his identity." The comic who "relates the material to himself, I did this," has a better chance of being remembered than the guy who delivers the same lines in story form." What about comedy's role? Does it have another function besides making us laugh? "First of all, hard laughing is an unnatural response." To make someone laugh then, is an accomplishment in itself. "Usually comedy is ahead of everything else... it breaks ground... If you can laugh about it, you can talk about it." Comedy as a nanacea for social ills? Maybe the continuation of the Improvisation as a tradition is more important than we may think. As Bob Wuhl observes, "there are no more places to bomb to learn to be good."

Men's Golf Interest Group Organizes

The Intercollegiate Athletic Council approved the establishment of a men's golf interest group at their March 23, 1977, meeting. The members of the interest group are Bill Breedon, Chuck Elinsky, Chris Herring, Rob Johnson, Mark Munoz, Dave Stack, Roger Strong, Bryan Welbaum, and David Yerkes.

Practices are currently being held at the Longwood Golf Course. Qualifications for all matches are held prior to scheduled events with the top six finishers qualifying to participate.

The first match was held on Monday, March 28, with North Carolina Wesleyan. Longwood was defeated in medal competition 353 to 398. Taking medalist honors for Longwood was Chris Herring.

Three additional matches have been scheduled this spring.

April 11: Virginia Wesleyan & Newport News Apprentice School

April 13: Christopher Newport & Virginia Wesleyan

April 22: Averett College 12:00 noon

The Averett event will be held on the Longwood Golf Course. Interested spectators are encouraged to come out and support this interest group.

The men are enjoying the opportunity to compete with intercollegiate teams and are optimistic about their chances to be victorious in their first spring season. The group is planning to work on their games this summer in hopes that golf may be elevated to an intercollegiate status in the near future.

Men's Softball Intramurals

Off To A Good Start

By D.J. LINDSEY

As some of you may have observed there has been a recent growing interest in softball. The guys on campus have turned to softball for recreation with the coming of the warm weather.

At present time two teams have been organized; 2nd floor Frazer and Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity. However, the Longwood day students and the Freshmen are attempting to form teams.

There seems to be much enthusiasm shown by the men but one male has commented that they cannot use Her field on weekdays because it is currently being used by the Lacrosse team and the women's intramural softball team. Also Barlow field is being reseeded and is only open to the Archery team at present.

However, the Campus School is an alternative site, which is only a short distance from the college.

If there are any interested males who would like to get involved, Her field is open on week ends.

If anyone is interested please contact D.J. Lindsey, 244 Frazer. Come out and enjoy the fun.

Good Showing From Men's Fencing Team

Recently the Men's Fencing team traveled to Madison College to have a duel with the Madison Dukes. The men that made the trip were Steve Frank, Bill Breedon, D.J. Lindsey, and Gregg Dunn. The team tied Madison in wins with a total of eight matches for each side, but Madison won the meet having less touches against themselves. Overall, it was a good meet for Longwood who has only one fencer with any previous fencing experience, Steve Frank, who has been fencing for over a year. The rest of the team are just beginners, but they have a good showing for themselves. The next home meet will be posted in the bulletin. So come out and support your team!

Dance Company

To Travel

By SANDY WILLIAMS

The Longwood College Company of Dancers will leave campus next Monday, April 11, on a recruiting mission to Cox High School at Virginia Beach. Financed by the Admissions Office, the Company will take their newly composed Spring Concert which is to be presented to the student body on April 7, 8, and 9 prior to their departure. Hopefully, their performance will serve as "bait" for those college bound students interested in a strong dance club.

Potential In

Women's

Golf Team

By DEANNA VANWEY

Longwood's Women's golf team coached by Dr. Barbara Smith, won their tri-match against William and Mary and Sweet Briar last week. LC beat W & M, 9 1/2 to 2 1/2 LC beat Sweet Briar, 11 to 1. The team, with members: Becky Webb, Janet Clements, Judy Stiber, Bev Hart, Deanna Vanwey and Robin Rowen, have played one other match and one other invitational this spring. They lost the other match, in which they played UNC-CH and came in 8th in the invitational that was attended by quite a few larger schools such as Georgia State, Ohio State, Michigan State. Good luck to the team in their upcoming matches.

Lacrosse Loss

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Longwood Ladies took another hard hit in lacrosse on March 29 when they hosted Mary Washington College. The team played a hard game, but could not make a comeback, losing 11 to 3.

The disappointing fact was that the Longwood team was more skilled, but have not played as many games this season (Mary Washington had already played 5 games). Mary Washington was able to bulldoze through our defense and was just more aggressive. Our offense made some good attacks, with Carol Filo, Terry Donahue and Terry Voit each chalking up a goal each. The defense, towards the close of the game, was able to make some interceptions and cross checks to stop the advancing Mary Washington attack.

SPORTS

A Man, A Dog, And A Frisbee

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

If someone mentioned a half-time at a pro football game, you might picture playing bands, pagentry, and perhaps an occasional punt-pass and kick championship. But a more creative and unusual performance might include a young man, who has a talented dog that can catch a frisbee in mid-air.

One such performer is Mr. John Pickerill, a 28 year old economics professor at Mary Washington College, and his 1 year old Labrador retriever Martha Fay. They began doing this last summer at a Chicago White Sox game. Since then they have done half-time shows at many soccer, football, and baseball games and auto races.

In order to be asked to entertain at half-time shows, Mr. Pickerill sent out publicity mailers to the booking agents. The pay range is, for soccer games $400.00, for pro Football $600.00 and for baseball games and college sports he received $300.00.

For about 10 to 12 years, Pickerill has been throwing frisbees. He has "loved it for a long time, but became really involved with it last year, after winning the National Frisbee Tournament in New York. He said he had "always been a jock", since he ran track and played sports in school. Now frisbee is more his speed.

In April, Mr. Pickerill and Martha will be on CBS's Wide World of Sports, which will show the World Frisbee Championships. Martha set the world record for frisbee dogs in Boulder, Colorado with 84 yard catch. April 17 they will perform at half-time at the Washington Diplomats Soccer Game.

Martha, after learning the basic steps of heeling and fetching, has become a star and can now do some amazing catches. In a meet, the frisbee dog must stand behind its owner, who throws the frisbee and the dog runs to catch it in the air. The measurement is taken from where the owner stood to where the dog caught the frisbee.

The Frisbee Club at Mary Washington, which Pickerill helped organize, is affiliated with the International Frisbee Association. One advantage of being affiliated is that members can purchase frisbees at a discount. Mr. Pickerill is interested in aiding any group of frisbeers to form a club.

"Frisbee's here to stay," said Mr. Pickerill. There are now many professional frisbee throwers. Even women are entering this sport. Right now about 71 colleges around the nation are playing Ultimate Frisbee, a game similar to soccer. He feels the sport is growing, "It's a sport of the future. Even the flying discs are improving."

The favorite frisbee of Mr.

Pickerill is the 119 World Class Frisbee. In competition, he also likes the CPL All Star, which is not a frisbee but another type disc.

Mr. Pickerill's plans for the future are not certain. "Frisbee definitely is in my plans," he stated. He has been teaching at Mary Washington for three years now and enjoys it, but might consider leaving this profession. He is also very interested in economic consulting and T.V. advertising with Martha.

He is also working on the Virginia State Frisbee Tournament which will be held at Mary Washington College on April 9. Martha will be there to thrill the spectators, along with a band and a film of last year's World Frisbee Championship, featuring Martha's winning catch. A $3.00 pre-registration fee is required and prizes of $35.00 for first place, $25.00 for 2nd and $15.00 for 3rd will be offered. Also the first 60 registered contestants will receive a free frisbee. Competition will be open for men's and women's events and for frisbee golf. If interested contact John Pickerill, Economics Department, Mary Washington College, Fredericksburg, Virginia 22401.

Football season will soon be here and Mr. Pickerill is already working out arrangements for Martha and him to perform. So keep a lookout at half-time shows for this talented pair of performers.

Whether the decision to stop the operation was founded on ignorance or not, a true injustice has taken place. As William Ellery Channing stated in "Self-Culture," "Books are true levelers. They give to all who faithfully use them, the society, the spiritual presence, of the best and greatest of our race." The unwarranted decision to halt the Piedmont Mailbox Library's operation has certainly deprived the area county residents of their due literary opportunity.

Bluegrass And Kites And Corn-On-The-Cob

Spring Weekend Set For April 15-17

By DEBBIE MOUL

Grab your friends, parents or your great-grandmother and come indulge in a lot of great food, foot-stomping music, continuous fun and entertainment everywhere you look.

Where can you find all this glorious activity? At Longwood College on April 15-17. Spring Weekend is right around the corner. Becky Tuck, Chairman and other individuals have been working diligently to put together a week end that will be fun for all and hopefully a door-opener for future events on campus. Friday night initiates the week end with a mixer in the lower Dining Hall. The band is "Lynx" from Richmond. Beer will be sold.

Not only is Spring Weekend filled with entertainment, it is also an opportunity to show-off our campus to prospective students and to give them a chance to see the sort of things that Longwood has available. The Admissions Office sent out flyers, inviting 1000 instate students who have been accepted, are transferring or have pending files. On Saturday morning, there will be registration and academic advising in the Gold and ABC rooms. Guidance counselors from all the high schools have also been invited so don't be surprised if you should see yours.

Now the fun stuff begins: game competition for teams, couples or individuals. How good are you at an egg toss? A wheelbarrow race? The obstacle course type games should prove entertaining and amusing to those who venture out into a world of tires, shaving cream and raw eggs. There's a lot more where that came from. There will be a $25.00 prize for the winner of the group games as well as prizes for other game winners.

All this activity should work up quite an appetite but there's a ready solution to that; fried chicken, corn-on-the-cob, potato chips and any other gourmet picnic food that comes to mind. Admissions Aides will be selling the $2.00 guest tickets. Longwood's own Charlie Mason and his "Blue Grass Blues" Band will provide the music to feast by. During one of the band's breaks the Gymnastic team will perform. The other break will be full of determination, brawn and class spirit: a tug-of-war between the Freshmen and Sophomores. Other events to follow include the Dance Company, the H2O Club, Gymnastic Team, Lacrosse and Kite-Flying Contest. The kites will be judged on originality, how long and how high they stay up. It doesn't matter what they're made of as long as they fly. Other events are scheduled for the day, too.

Sunday should be fun, too; a girls vs. boys sports game, the Bruce Olsen Band and another delicious picnic lunch sponsored by the sororities.

Flyers for Spring Week End are posted across campus. A schedule of events will be placed on the tables in the Dining Hall. Spring Week End should be fun for all who participate.

Tabb And Ruffner Residents Mourn Death Of Squirrel

By TOM DeWITT

April 4, 1977 was rainy and a very sorrowful day for those students that knew the late squirrel, "Rebel." Rebel, the grey squirrel, had become an affectionate personality in the hearts of many on campus and it was with sorrow and a degree of seriousness that he was buried April 4.

The time of the funeral was set at 5:30 p. m., but it began at approximately 5:45 because the two gentlemen to issue the last rights, Bill Breeden and Henry Bear, were late coming back from the funeral home across the street from French Dormitory.

The service began by the playing of Elton John's "Funeral For A Friend" out of Tabb 113's window with a multitude of mourners gathered around the flag-covered grave with the immediate family, Tom Curtin and Roy Wright sitting.

Bill Breeden and Henry Bear followed the two pallbearers out of the Infirmary door to the grave where a Rebel flag was placed over the resting squirrel. With the conclusion of Elton John's number, the service started. Henry Bear issued the eulogy that started out much like the familiar one of Richard Pryor: "We are gathered here today. ."

At the conclusion, Bill Breeden offered a prayer and Henry Bear offered a little poem written just for the occasion.

The flags that were covering the grave were then folded in a very militaristic fashion and presented to the weeping fathers, Tom Curtin and Roy Wright.

Following this action came a three firecracker salute to this heroic squirrel who had just successfully climbed his first tree to the top only the very day before.

This marked the end of the official service and most of the crowd dispersed. Then, surrounded by his closest friends, he was lowered into his final resting place. Tom Curtin threw on the first piece of sod and the cross was put in place and surrounded by flowers.

Afterwards, Tom was asked how Rebel might have met his fate. Tom replied that he felt Rebel had died of cold the night before. Roy Wright, who was the original father, had taken Rebel away from the cat over Spring Break. He was asked if he would be able to adjust to Rebel not clinging to his arm and crawling up his back as he walked to class. Roy replied, "Sure, I'll miss the critter." He was also asked if he thought there was any foul play involved in the death of Rebel. Roy did not comment but left the impression that an investigation would be carried out.

It was a sad day when Rebel passed on. The front campus had lost more than an extra boarder and for those that were there the day Rebel opened his first eye, and climbed his first tree, there are now only memories, left to you and a small, golden cross under the dogwood tree in Tabb Circle.

The Greeks Invite You To Greek Week

By SANDY WILLIAMS

A very promising Greek Week chocked full of both old and new events is in store for the students April 11 through 17. With the exception of the banquet held on Monday night, everyone, Greek or not, is invited to participate in the fun, games, and social services.

Greek Week festivities began last night with a banquet in the lower dining hall where three awards were given. The Scholarship Award was received by the sorority with the highest cumulative average of initiated members. The Panhellenic Merit Award went to that sorority whose Panhell representative had the highest number of points for doing her specified duties.

For the Greek Woman of the Year Award, each sorority was to put up a candidate's qualifications. On the basis of college activities and community services, a group from the administration staff chose a winner without any prior knowledge of the student's name or sorority.

On Tuesday, an admission-free coffee house in the ABC Rooms from 8:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. has been planned for the entire student body. Entertainment will be provided by Perry Leopold who will be singing contemporary listening music. Both beer and cokes will be sold.

Perhaps the most exciting entertainment of the week will take place on Wednesday night from 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. in the Commons Room when each sorority will provide skilled and practiced members for the Greek Talent Show. This event is to be judged by Dr. Peele, Ms. Custer, and three independent students.

A social service of concern to the female students will be Thursday's Greek Week happening. From 6:45 p.m. to 10:30 p.m., Panhell is sponsoring the American Cancer Society who will provide three area doctors to give free self-breast examinations and free pap smear tests. Tabb classroom is the location of the breast examinations and the pap smear tests will be given in the infirmary.

Since Spring Week End and Greek Week overlap, Panhell will not be sponsoring anything as such on Friday and Saturday. However, they do plan to support the mixer Friday night in the lower dining hall and to actively participate in the competitive

Longwood Business Students Win Awards

Susan Lewis and Dianne Morris receive awards.

Three Longwood business majors have received top awards in State competition.

Susan Betts Lewis has been elected President of the Virginia State Chapter of Phi Beta Lambda, an organization for collegiate business majors. Her term of office begins immediately and will continue until April, 1978. Susan is a junior business education major from Richmond. The election was held at the State Conference of PBL in Richmond April 1-2.

In other events of the week end, Longwood business majors won recognition as follows:

Patricia Evans, Second Place, Executive Typist; Elaine Baird, Third Place, Executive Secretary; Susan Lewis, Second Place, Mary B. McGinty Scholarship.

Rhonda Riggins, a junior business education major from Richmond, was appointed State Corresponding Secretary.

Dianne Morris, a sophomore business administration major from Phenix, placed first in the Extemporaneous Speaking event. Dianne will compete in the national event in Denver in July.

Rhonda Knight, a junior business education major from Ashburn, was one of six students from across the State named to Who's Who in Phi Beta Lambda. Rhonda has served for the past year as Vice President of the Longwood College PBL chapter and State Recording Secretary.

The Longwood PBL chapter was recognized as having the second largest membership in the state.

Also attending the week end conference were Doris Bradley, Cynthia Chapman, Linda Moore, Claudia Nuckols, Robyn Swartzwelder, Betsy Whidden, and Kim Willis. Miss Sarah Lowe Thompson and Mrs. Frances Hamlett, professors in the Business and Economics Department and co-advisers of Longwood's Phi Beta Lambda, accompanied the group to Richmond.

Sigma Phi Epsilon Activities

By CHRISTY PLANT

Sigma Phi Epsilon will participate in a number of activities to begin this week. The fraternity plans to support the Bloodmobile and will sponsor a booth for Spring Week End. Other projects to be supported include the traditional "PITCH-IN" where the men hope to clean up needed areas and possibly help local residents to paint their homes. They will sponsor an awards banquet on April 18 and a Brothers and Dates Party on April 23.

The newly elected officers of Sigma Phi Epsilon are Larry Medler, President; Shawn Barrett, Vice-President; David Funkhouser, Secretary; and Chris Herring, Treasurer.

Director Of Wesley Foundation

25 Years Of Service

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS

On April 17, 1977 a very special lady here on campus will be honored with a tea for 25 years of service, counseling, and friendship to Longwood and Hampden-Sydney students. Her name is Malinda Ayres and since 1952 she has been the director of the Wesley Foundation.

Miss Ayres, originally from Richmond, received her B. A. in religious education from Greensboro College, North Carolina, in 1952. She had been considering positions in church-related work in Danville and Blackstone when she was approached by Dr. Kenneth Haddock, Farmville district superintendent of the Methodist Church and Dr. John W. Myers, minister of the Farmville Methodist Church then. They asked her to become director of the Wesley Foundation here at Longwood. "After much thought and prayer, I agreed," said Miss Ayres.

Thus began a busy life for Miss Malinda Ayres at the Wesley Foundation. "When I first came the (Wesley Foundation) student center was in the basement of an old frame house," she said. She added that the old house was on the same site of the present student center at 204 High Street. "When I came here we had only about 600 students (on campus) and now there's about 2200," she said and then explained that the percentage of students participating in the activities and programs of Wesley is much better now. Activities and programs have increased and changed quite a bit to meet the needs of Christian students. In 1952 there were two or three activities a week at Wesley and now there is something going on at Wesley Monday through Thursday, in addition to week end coffeehouses, retreats and Sunday School.

Has there been one outstanding episode at Wesley during her directorship? "Yes," she answers, "the day that this building (the present Wesley Student Center) became a reality. I, along with Wesley's Board of Directors, worked eight to ten years to see that we had an adequate, well-equipped place where the students could come use the facilities." In 1965 Miss Ayres saw the new student center completed.

Miss Ayres said that the building was a physical accomplishment. However, "the thrilling opportunity or challenge of working with students, individually and cooperatively" has been a continuous outstanding experience for her since she came here and in the process she had made many lasting friendships (and all of her friends affectionately call her Malinda).

When asked about Wesley Foundation's role and relationship on campus, Miss Ayres had these comments: "I have found that the college administration has always been very cooperative with the Wesley Foundation and all the church groups. I feel the Wesley Foundation has had its impact on the campus life also through programs and activities." She said that the students involved with Wesley have gotten a lot of training in leadership: leadership in church, on campus and in the community. She concluded by saying, "I would hope students would feel that not only Wesley Foundation but other church groups, to be a very integral part of campus life."

Miss Ayres is and always has been very involved with the students here. She has counseled students, helped them out, and directed the Wesley Foundation with students in mind. Miss Ayres has taken part not only in Wesley activities, but also in many college functions. She is a former Longwood student herself. She received her Master of Science and Education degree here in 1960.

The Wesley Student Council will be honoring Miss Ayres on Sunday, April 17 from 2 p.m. - 5 p.m. at the Wesley Student Center. Any students, administration, or faculty members who wish to join in congratulating Malinda and celebrating with her are invited to come.

And Where Are You Living Next Year?

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The rising sophomores stood huddled in the hall with their future roommates and suitmates waiting for their numbers to be called. The number 183 was called out and a hopeful suite of girls went into the "C" Room to pick out their place of residence for next year. There, they discovered that there were no more suites left and that only eight single spaces were left. Two of them, the owner of the 183 and her "roommate" were allowed to sign for a room. They were not even able to room together, but got separate rooms on the same hall with complete strangers. The other two, whose numbers were much higher, did not even get a room.

Genice Morgan is one of these people. She waited for 2½ hours in Lankford and got nothing. "They should give sophomores priority over incoming freshmen," she said, referring to the designated freshman floor in Cox. She also feels that they should not have accepted extra freshmen with no place to house them. Genice says she will be living next year in "Her Dorm."

Many of the separated freshmen and those who have, as yet, no rooms were very upset and vocal. When asked her opinion of what had taken place, one freshman replied, "I'm so upset that I'm afraid I might say something I will regret." Another thought, "This is so (expletive deleted) stupid."

Denise Ehlers and Kris Kamosky are without rooms and feel that the men's floor in Cox which is partially filled, should be replaced as a female hall. They believe new freshmen are getting priority and should be tripled up.

They "don't want to room with someone they don't know."

"It wasn't well organized," Tammy White and Margie Bible said about the draw. "Grade Point Averages should be used" in the sign-up process. This, they feel, would make people work harder. "The Freshman class is at the end of everything and gets what is leftover." They were able to get a room, but were separated from their suitmates.

Says freshman, Linda Yeats, "We all pay the same money so some should not get what they want while others do." Marie Wattson, who does not have a room yet, states that she does not like the idea of homesteading. "Everyone should have to fight to get a room."

Pity poor number 663 (which was the last number), whose holder was Kim Walker. She had wanted to suite with K. B. Breimann, Linda Meadows, and Lisa Hannum, whose lowest number was 249. Needless to say, they were separated. K. B. and Linda were able to get put in a 3 girl room on 10th floor Curry when some people erased their names from it. That night they went to see the room and discovered it held only two desks and has no shelf space. They feel the room is not large enough for three people. K. B. says she is not going to last long up there because she is afraid of heights. Kim and Lisa did not get a room at all after waiting for 2 hours.

Jane Seufert is at the top of the list of roomless students who want to room in Wheeler. She thinks she is "better off than those who were randomly put in rooms."

"It is a hassle and I just wasted my time," says a disgruntled student with no room. Another student, who was not able to room with who she wanted, said, "We put out our money but have no choice. I'm mad."

Many students were turned away from room draw because their $60.00 deposit had not been paid by their parents. Linda Desiderio, 3rd floor South Cunningham's Hall President, had not paid so her whole suite was unable to sign up. Linda went to ask Dean Swann if there was any way for her to sign up since she was certain that if a bill was sent to her home, her parents would have paid it. She was told that some parents did not receive bills, but without her fee paid, she could not sign up for a room. She then went back to her room and returned with a check for $60.00, but Dean Swann was not authorized to accept it. Therefore, her suite is without a room. Linda says, "I sympathize with Dean Swann," but she still feels she should have been given permission to sign up for a room.

Some alternate ideas for room draw that freshmen have were that people without roommates should be put in rooms together, leaving rooms available for two people. One person felt that two lotteries should be held — one for those people without roommates of suitmates and one for those that have them. Then certain floors should be singled out as single room floors and some for suites. They felt this way everyone could get the type of room they want. Some felt that if room draw was held in the auditorium people would be able to hear their number and no one will sign up before they should.

The general consensus is that the rising sophomores are not pleased with what happened on April 5. Many feel that since a lot of them did not get rooms with whom they wanted, that there will be a great deal of moving around next semester. They believe that those people without rooms will be housed, but they are uncertain where and with whom they will be placed.

... There Will Be Rooms

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Dean Terri Swann states that there are 52 students without a room. Probably the total is higher, though, because some students still have not paid their room fees. Vacancies will be made by those students who have been chosen as Resident Advisors, along with any roommates they have, Pre-Professionals who will be transferring and other students who will not be returning to Longwood. By May 1, all those students who want their room deposits refunded will have requested them. The college also will be hearing from students who decide not to return throughout the summer. When a vacancy occurs, Dean Swann consults the waiting list according to what dormitory it is in. Then she asks the student if she would like to live in the available room. If the student does not, she asks the next individual on the list.

The problem of roommate separations was caused by upperclassmen without roommates. Anyone who knows they wish to change roommates should get together with those who "they have been assigned to and see if something can be arranged. If an agreement is reached, all of the involved parties must go to Dean Swann for the proper procedures. This will save the administration and students time and energy next fall.

This is the first year since Dean Swann has been in charge of housing that shortage of rooms has occurred, but she says that there will be no one tripled up unless certain students want to have three in a room.

It is true that the male halls in Frazer and Cox are only partially filled. Dean Swann asserts that it is necessary to keep these openings available for male transfer students. Female transfers are just assigned to vacancies in the female dormitories, but males have to have certain places set aside. She feels that the male transfers should exceed the vacancies.

To the best of Dean Swann's knowledge, all the parents were sent bills from the business office, except for seniors, who are not graduating and maybe a couple other exceptions. The bills which have not reached their destinations, must have been lost in the mail.

Dean Swann is optimistic about the rooming situation and feels that everyone, including all the freshmen for next year, will be housed adequately.

games held on Saturday.

Sunday will bring the Greek sponsored picnic to be held on Stubbs Mall from 5:30 to 6:30 for everyone to attend. Sorority displays will enhance this event as will the Longwood Disk Jockey, Kim Nichols, who will be playing records.

Longwood's newest sorority, AKA, will be actively involved in the week's activities and Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity, while not affiliated with the Panhellenic Council, has been invited to participate.

At the Geist Recognition Assembly, a Social Service Award will be given to that sorority having the highest percentage of its members who supported Thursday's breast and pap smear tests. Also, at this time, from a previously established point system, the winning Greek Week Sorority will be named.

Geist Sponsors Bloodmobile

Geist will sponsor a bloodmobile Thursday, April 14, 12:00-6:00 p.m. It will be held in the ABC rooms and all are asked to participate if they meet the following criteria.

- 1) Must be between 18 and 66 years old
- 2) Must be 56 days between donations
- 3) Must weigh at least 110 pounds
- 4) Never had jaundice or hepatitis or been knowingly exposed with the past 6 months
- 5) Must be at least 6 months after having had ears pierced, tattoos, or blood transfusions.
- 6) Never have had malaria
- 7) Not on oral antibiotics for at least 2 weeks or antibiotics by injection for at least 30 days (exception: small maintenance doses for acne—48 hours.)

Donors should eat before donation—at least once in last 5 hours.

Six typists are needed per hour between noon and 6 p. m., if interested contact Barbara Lichford (box 574 or phone 392-8407).

Petitions Ask For Officer's Removal

By STACEY SMITH

On Tuesday, March 29, before dinner a large group of students were congregated on the walkways, flower beds, and steps outside of the dining hall. The interest of the students was attracted by the soliciting of signatures for a petition, asking for a re-election of Residence Board Chairman.

A group of students were circulating this petition because they felt that the timing of the election was poor, it was broken up before and after Spring Break, one of the candidates was well known and one was not, there were no campaign speeches, and the student body was not well informed on the issues. They feel that this election was important for Residence Board and the election committee did not stress its importance.

The petition did not state any grounds as to why the students wanted a re-election, and the constitution does not allow for a re-election. Therefore, the petition was declared invalid by the Elections Committee.

Tuesday night a protest was planned to show student body support for a re-election. It was broken up because the students did not have a permit. Representatives went to obtain a permit but instead they decided to have a meeting with the administration.

Last Monday Dean Heintz, Dr. Willett, Dr. Peale, Dr. Dalton, Elections Committee representatives, Residence Board representatives, Legislative Board representatives, and other student representatives met in the Banquet room. Dr. Willett opened the meeting by stating that the issues and problems should be identified. Students argued from a moral standpoint that even though the handbook does not contain a statement requiring that reasons be spelled out in such a case, it was only right that reasons should be stated.

Other students explained that there were many reasons that students wanted a re-election and that each student had his own specific reason. It was brought out that students were upset because they were not sufficiently notified about the election.

The question was raised as to what can be done when the majority of the student body wants a student out of office. Dr. Willett referred to the procedures in the student handbook on page 42.

The meeting ended with no solution, except that the issues were exposed and the proper procedures were stated for a removal of a student from office.

Statement From Residence Board Chairman

In response to "Male Student Threatens" Residence Board Chairman" in the April 5 issue of the Rotunda, Mary Meade Saunders has issued the following statement.

On Friday, March 25, 1977, I received a phone call from Miss Marshall, Head Resident of Frazer, asking me to come to Frazer because she believed there were more girls on second floor Frazer than were signed in. I got in touch with Cindy Sanders, an officer of Residence Board, and we went over. We spoke to Miss Marshall; then we went upstairs. This was around 10:25 p.m. When we got off the elevator on second floor, we asked the girls we saw if they were signed in and they responded. We saw a guy with a liquor bottle out in the hall. I told him that he wasn't supposed to have the bottle. I asked him his name and he gave it to me and told me he wasn't a Longwood student and that he wasn't visiting a Longwood student. I explained the college rules concerning alcoholic beverages to him. No attempt was made to enter any room on the second floor Frazer.

Cindy and I then left and went back to Miss Marshall's office. While in Miss Marshall's office, with a number of other people, I was approached by Billy Rogers, who told me not to mess with his friends, and if I was going to check rooms, that I should check his and that he would get my tail even if I had a search warrant from Dr. Willett. When he left, he turned around and once more said that he would get my tail.

Commentary

Student Government Questioned

By TWINKIE PLANT

The problems exploding on the Longwood campus, as is pointed out almost daily by someone or other, should be a matter of concern to all students, however hopelessly complicated.

The present standards at this college are contradictory to the needs and wants of the student body. The handbook is a perfect example. On page 40, Article IV, the Student Government Association Constitution states that official duties for board officers "begin immediately upon installation." However, in the last election this was not the case. The installation was looked upon as a formality and the board member was given the responsibilities of the elected position upon winning the election. This has started questions in the back of many minds as to whether or not the person was used by the administration.

Another example is found on page 42 under Article VII. It states under recall that "Any officer of the Association or the three boards shall be relieved of official duties if one-tenth of the student body petitions for the release of the said officer and a two-thirds majority of the student body voting is carried to relieve this officer of official duties." It does not state that specific reasons must be stated on the petition as to why the officer should be relieved. This has been challenged by students as a petition carrying well over the one-tenth needed was considered invalid because the petition contained no reasoning for removal of the officer. Students signed the petition for their own reasons just as they will elect a person to office for their own reasons. Personal reasoning has no need to be questioned. The Constitution as well as all aspects of the handbook needs to be updated, and completely revised.

At the present the student handbook should be burned if people continue to disregard what it has to say. The examples above clearly show that if certain people have the power to change these things without turning to the student body for support and comment, how can students use the handbook efficiently if present situations arise only to find fault in what the handbook represents?

If prospective students received the present handbook with applications to attend Longwood, how many of them would really apply? Students no longer want a college to act as a babysitting service when they are adults in the eyes of society. They are looking for a school that will enable them the freedom to live as they choose. If students aren't ready to be treated as adults they shouldn't be here pretending that they are.

What if a large number of frustrated students transferred at the last minute and all at one time? Where would Longwood College be? Is that the last possible direction action to make the people who run this college open their eyes to the changes so desperately needed?

The present modes allow members of the student government to act as puppets dangling between the administration, the student body and the system that we are all exposed to on this campus. It should be entitled "the screw system". Trite rules are being broken all over campus but the students who get caught are usually turned in by students who dislike them. Is this really fair to the few given twenty-four hours in which to turn themselves in? The "screw system" involves more cases of girl turning in girl than any other on campus. The male students don't seem to have a part in advocating this system which shows that perhaps they haven't been brainwashed yet. Another factor comes to mind...if you are a well-liked student you have it made. Break all the rules you want, only your enemies or someone looking for trouble will bother to turn you in.

It is understandable for students who did not realize the situation to be uninvolved. But now that they know, will they stand up and do something or will they continue to sit back while their rights are being abused? Apathy is the students' fault and if more people became involved apathy would not stamp out the possibilities for changes on this

Quote In Context

"Longwood's own Mr. Woods" has been justly hoist with his own petard by reporter Sandy Williams, who quotes him as giving this advice to young writers: "Don't even bother. It isn't worth it!" The quote is accurate, but the context that should have indicated that the remark was made in jest is utterly missing. I've been a working writer for fifteen years; it's worth it.

No Re-election

Dear Editor:
Regarding the election held on March 23, I feel absolutely certain that this election was as well publicized as any previous one, and no one has complained before. Notices were printed in the daily bulletin and a banner in the Dining Hall announced the Press Conference for the candidates, which certainly signified an election. Election Committee can only announce the elections, they can not lead the students to the polls by the hand and command them to vote. The students are grown up enough to be able to read notices and to figure out for themselves that when a person resigns, such as Sara Jo, from a top school position, then another election will probably be held.

More voters participated in this election than in any other one this year. For the first time, the petitions to run, explaining the views of the candidates and with a picture of them on it, were placed on all the balloting tables. They also hung in the new Smoker for several days.

When I went around through my dormitory to enlist people's help in working at the polls, I was appalled to discover that very few of my fellow students had paid any heed to the election announcements and did not even realize that Sara Jo had resigned. That night and the day of the election, I tried to pass by word of mouth that there was an election. So many people responded with an apathetic "so what," and "I don't want to vote because I don't know who is running." This lack of knowledge is their own fault.

The election was carried out and those interested in voting for their choice as Residence Board Chairman did so, with the result that Mary Meade was duly elected. I cannot see holding new elections just because a fraction of the students do not approve of who won. Where were these students when elections were held? They had their chance to vote for their choice as chairman.

Mary Meade has not yet even had a chance to show what she will do in this office. There is no possible way in which any one single person can yield undue power in any school office. There are too many checks. Major decisions go through most of the boards, the Board of Visitors, and the Administration. Mary Meade should not be subjected to unfair judgements.

If people are displeased with the results of this election, let them be more aware of the next one and be certain to VOTE!

Sincerely,
Debbie Northern

Eyewitness

Dear Editor:

I would like to comment on the incident that occurred between Mary Meade Saunders and Billy Rogers on the night of March 25. I work at the desk in Frazer dorm and was there when Billy came down to the main office to confront Mary Meade Saunders. The chairman of Residence Board claims that she was "threatened" that night, but in my opinion she overreacted to the incident.

Billy Rogers, being blunt and outspoken, stands up for his rights and the rights of others. Billy felt that Mary Meade had infringed upon the rights of all of second floor, and he told her in no uncertain terms. No profanity was used, and in fact the worst thing said was, "I'm going to get your tail." I know, as many others also know, that worse things are said between girls everyday here on campus.

I fail to understand why Mary Meade Saunders ran for this office if she cannot withstand the smallest amount of pressure. That was her first encounter with Billy, and it could have been far worse. Will Mary Meade run to the administration shaking all over everytime she encounters a problem with the males at this school? Fortunately, Billy is not the only student here that takes up for himself, so Mary Meade better be prepared for students that cause real problems for her.

Billy Rogers in no way threatened Mary Meade Saunders' life, and I think the student body should know this. If Mary Meade runs to the administration everytime her pride is hurt, she has no business holding any office.

Karen Moore

Lots Of Luck

Dear Editor:

In respect to the situation of Longwood College going co-ed I wish to make a few comments.

I have lived at Longwood off and on for the past ten months, and in this time I have met many people, made some new friends, and learned much both in and out of the class room.

Within the past few years several single-sexed colleges have gone co-ed, and are now quite popular. I feel Longwood has this same potential; however, I also feel Longwood will never make it with the way it is going now.

Longwood did not want to go co-ed, but was forced to by HEW, and for this reason is not putting out 100 per cent effort which at times like this it needs to. The administration here is trying too hard to keep Longwood the same old State Female Normal School.

What I believe Longwood must do is (1) get rid of some of the archaic, assanine rules, and let the students live (2) replace positions in the administration starting with the dean of students (3) go co-ed with 100 per cent enthusiasm and (4) throw "Longwood College Policy" out the window.

Now I would just like to wish Longwood the best of luck, because the way things are going luck is the only thing that is going to do any good.

The Birth Of "Bluegrass Blues"

By TWINKIE PLANT

If you're ready for some footstompin' and handclappin'; then you're ready for Spring Weekend featuring for the first time at Longwood "The Bluegrass Blues."

The band consists of six young talented men from Augusta County who enjoy singing bluegrass music. They are Dale Roller, Nick Collins, Donn Meyerhoeffer, Mike Western, Kenny Nicholas and Charlie Mason.

According to Charlie Mason, "The band started when we were in high school together, except Dale, Nick, Donn, Mike and I would fool around with songs, harmonizing to old barbershop quartets, gospel, and choir songs. Several of us played guitars and accompanied on some numbers. We would get together at lunch and just 'pick'n grin.' Then Dale brought his banjo to school and played with us. Soon we started playing at each other's houses and our choir director asked us to do a few songs on choir programs to add variety."

"After a month of playing together, people began to want us for entertainment at small club banquets. With a small amplifier, two small speakers and four microphones we performed at banquets in our area. As the invitations increased we decided to think with a more serious attitude. We invested in a better sound system, built better speakers and began to sing along the Shenandoah Valley, from Washington, D. C., to towns near Bistol. Our repertoire included bluegrass favorites, some gospel, a few country-rock songs along with originals that we had written."

One of the first songs written by members of the group was "On My Way Home," a slow country-type song about returning from the hustle and bustle of the city, to the open air and beautiful life of the country. Another was a novelty song about the trials and tribulations of chewing tobacco, thus "Chewing Tobacco Blues." Dale also wrote a few banjo instrumentals, "Roller Special" and a song that is very flexible in style, "Cat and the Turpentine."

"About a year after writing these songs and having saved all of the money we earned singing, we decided to record an album. With Dale going to Virginia Tech, Nick at VMI, Donn and I seniors in high school, and Mike working, it was hard to get ready. Finally after much arguing the pros and cons it was decided we would do it over Christmas break. After two weeks of solid practicing (even on Christmas Eve) we recorded our first album entitled 'Pickin' To Beat the Devil.' We sell our album in area stores and where we sing."

The Bluegrass Blues Band has performed at Kings Dominion, Virginia Tech, Bridgewater College and at a number of bluegrass festivals. The singers complement each other's skills respectively and their new tunes fit somewhere in between the country and pop formats.

"We are shifting in style now from strict bluegrass to contemporary bluegrass and adding easy rock, some Marshall Tucker, Pure Prairie League, Eagles, and Charlie Daniels Band."

The band will perform a picnic concert on Saturday, April 16, at Wheeler Mall from 12 p.m. to 1:30 p.m. If you find yourself smiling and wanting to "get down on some flatfootin'" ... it's just a case of bluegrass blues!

Art Show Coming Soon To H-S

Reprinted with permission from the Tiger

By DAVE CLOUGH

Hampden-Sydney will be the site of one of the most elaborate art showings ever to come to this part of the state next week end, April 15 and 16. The show, which is being brought to the campus through much effort and expense will display the works of seven of the most talented sculptors in the area, all of whom have had shows in Richmond, Washington, and New York as well as some who have taken and shown their works abroad.

Conway Thompson of Longwood College will be displaying some of her works at the show. Ms. Thompson works primarily in stone and wood but will be displaying only some of her wood sculptures.

Jack Witt from Randolph-Macon College will display his different variations of bronze metal work. Nancy Witt, Jack's wife, will also be displaying a somewhat different medium in her sculpted and shaped canvases. Although she is primarily a painter, she has made usage of both mediums in her works.

Another new form to be displayed is the work of Jane Morais. Ms. Morais, from the Maryland Institute of Art has undergone work in what may be termed "soft sculpture." She will display a group of works stuffed with different materials which she has collected. She creates a variety of works such as floor designs, bed covers and dolls.

Demetrios Mauroudis will be there in two capacities. He will be displaying his work as well as demonstrating his talent by undertaking spontaneous sculpture during the show. He works with a variety of metals and a welding machine. He also works with clay which is what he will be working in during the show.

Joe Seipel of Virginia Commonwealth University has several very large pieces of plastic sculpture which will be displayed outdoors. The last artist is Gertrude Shook. Ms.

Shook is a local resident coming, with her works, from Keyville. She makes textile hangings and large macrame wall coverings.

The displays will be shown from 2:00 p.m. on Friday afternoon until 3:00 p.m. on Saturday afternoon. All of the artists will be around to talk to visitors about their work and some of the art will be on sale. Most of the displays will be on the inside of Parents and Friends while some of the larger works will be out in the front of Venable.

On Friday afternoon there will be a film by Charlotte Schrader-Hooker, shown in the Parents and Friends Lounge which is related to different ideas going on in the world of art; specifically, you guessed it, sculpture. In the evening there will be a discussion from 7:30 p.m. until 9:00 p.m., also in the Parents and Friends Lounge.

Saturday there will be a free picnic in front of Venable and another opportunity for everyone to talk with the different artists.

This event, although it has not been given much limelight till now, should prove to be one of the best special attractions to come to Hampden-Sydney. I wholeheartedly suggest that everyone take time to visit the show. Besides, it might be interesting to see a different side of the Hampden-Sydney community.

campus. Student Government should not be turning their backs to students who desire change and are willing to work for it. The Student Government should act as a "government" keeping their eyes and ears open in order to find out where the students are and what bothers them. According to Jerry Farber in a book concerning the rights of students "The student movement is full of surprises. Stupid iron-fisted tactics used by Student Government and Administrators can transform a very sleepy campus into a hot spot". Is this Longwood College?

By DEBBIE MOUL

Once again, the Longwood College Company of Dancers performs with grace and sophistication, fervor in every movement. Opening night of their Spring Concert proved successful as the girls, clad in various colored tights, leotards and loose-flowing garments filled the stage with dramatic movement as well as brisk energetic capering.

This year's concert was dedicated to the graduating seniors of the company, Susann Smith, Sandy Williams, Beth Tomlinson, Nancy Milan and Annmarie Nemetz. This concert was really theirs because they had choreographed the dances. The company decided on Easter weekend to perform so the idea arose to try something liturgical for Easter, to comment on the dancer's feelings of mourning and rejoicing. The first scene, "Celebration," consisted of five religious songs, the dancers reacting with graceful and reverent motions, true expressions of feeling. The choreographers of these five dances were Nancy Milan, Beth Tomlinson, Carol Henry, Sandy Williams and Susann Smith and Andrea Harkness.

The second scene actually had nothing at all to do with Easter. A lot of creativity and originality was used to create these dances. Sandy Williams choreographed a dance to music by David Bowie, a seemingly difficult task, but nevertheless quite entertaining and energetic. The following dance could only be described as bizarre and undoubtedly abstract. The performers were clad in odd clothing, headresses, many odds and ends attached to their bodies. The music or rather the many sounds that they danced to were merely sounds that could be made with the mouth, typical yet extraordinary. The last dance of the set started off with the smooth, mellow voice of Jacqui Singleton and soon combined with the graceful movements of the dancers, a splendid combination.

The last scene of the program was entirely devoted to the death and the resurrection of Christ, pertaining to Easter. Elton John's "Funeral for a Friend" was indeed perfect music for this dance, the mourning of the dancers for the crucifixion of Christ was evident through their long, gradual motions, gestures indicating grieving and sorrow. The dancers were clad in black leotards and tights and seemingly blood-colored ragged shrouds, perfect for such an event and certainly signifying the darkness and coldness of death. Susann Smith choreographed this dance. Then without a moment's hesitation, the stage was alive with capering, joyful dancers in bright leotards. The Resurrection. But all too soon, just as the audience was beginning to experience the joy that the dancers were exhibiting, the concert ended.

The company will be sad to see these exceptionally talented seniors leave for they have contributed so much. What are their plans for the future as far as dancing is concerned? If this

CBS Special

"The Amazing Howard Hughes"

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

This week, the CBS network will present "The Amazing Howard Hughes," a profile postmortem of the building of the Hughes financial empire and the grotesque, self-nurtured decay of the man who lived in chronic seclusion within it. The phenomenon of the Hughes mystique is, in many ways, an example of a type of scarcity in the economics of human interest: his fetishistic insistence on absolute privacy actually created a public curiosity, and consequent demand, for information about him.

Tommy Lee Jones and El Flanders star in this special, based on Noah Dietrich and Bob Thomas' book of the same name, that attempts to peer through the cardboard covered windows of Hughes' later years to a time of financial beginnings, speculative ventures in folm-making, golf, aviation and Hollywood starlets and the record-breaking world flight in 1938. Noah Dietrich was a longtime associate of Hughes' and Bob Thomas is a seasoned Hollywood correspondent for the Associated Press. The four hour production, adapted for television by John Gay, will be presented in two two-hour segments on Wednesday and Thursday nights (April 13 and 14) between 9 and 11 o'clock.

Film Award

Dr. Hooker's film, Conway Thompson: Sculptor From Dry Bridge, has been awarded the CINE Golden Eagle, which is the top award given by the Council on International Nontheatrical Events, a division of the U. S. Information Agency. The Golden Eagle Certificate is given "as evidence of (the film's) suitability to represent the United States and American cinematography in international film festivals abroad." CINE will place the film in eligible festivals throughout the world during the coming year, and awards will be presented at the Annual Awards Ceremonies in Washington, D. C., next December.

Craft Fair At U.Va.

Kaliedescope Of Crafts

The fifth annual Statewide Virginia Crafts Council Craft Fair '77 is being held April 15-17 at University Hall in Charlottesville. The fair is open: Friday, April 15 — 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.; Saturday, April 16 — 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.; and Sunday, April 17 — noon to 5 p.m.

University Hall is located on Route 29, Emmet Street, just north of Route 250, University Avenue.

Craft Fair '77 is a juried show. Over 70 professional craftspeople from Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee, Maryland, and North Carolina have been selected to participate from among the many applications received by the VCC Standards Committee. Examples of some of the best in both traditional and contemporary crafts will be available to fair visitors.

A wide variety of ceramics ranging from Indian-fired stoneware and hand-painted porcelain to clay sculpture in both functional and nonfunctional forms will be displayed. Designer craftspeople working in 14k gold, sterling silver, brass, copper, and using clay beads and numerous precious and semi-precious stones will offer many unique pieces of jewelry and small objects such as pillboxes and thimbles.

Handwoven shawls, pillows, coverlets, and decorative wall hangings of natural materials and varying textures are indicative of the multiple approaches to weaving. The craft of batik is well represented by the work of several exhibitors. Their pillows, hangings, bags, and wearables are often additionally highlighted with decorative stitching and hand-painting. Examples of needlework, natural vegetable dyed and hand spun yarns, and macrame furniture reflect the diversity of scope within the textile and fiber media.

Contemporary leatherwork ranging from custom designed hand bags, traveling cases, and belts to hand-carved and tooled backgammon boards and wall clocks will be exhibited along with a selection of contemporary and traditional wooden furniture. Mouth blown glass, stained glass, carved lucite, wooden toys, handmade dulcimers and banjos, broomcraft and fiber weaving, and braided wax candles are among the many items available in this alternative marketplace.

Two blacksmiths, representing both the traditional and contemporary schools of handworked iron, will exhibit their work along with several metal sculptors.

Mountain artisans from the well known Holston Mountain Arts and Crafts Cooperative will present a full display of the colorful quilts, toys, and wooden carvings that are part of the Southwestern Virginia mountain heritage.

In addition to individual displays, a well-rounded demonstration program in over 15 different media categories is scheduled to run hourly throughout the three days. Demonstrations in enameling, spinning, and weaving are among those which should prove educational as well as entertaining for visitors of all ages.

Crafts Fair '77 is the first major spring fair in Virginia where designer craftspeople and mountain artisans gather to display and sell their winter's work.

Admission is $1.50 for adults, 75c for children, students, and senior citizens. Children under six admitted free. School groups are also admitted free on Friday, the 15th, and special group rates for clubs and organizations are available. For more information, contact: Mary Maher, Fair Manager, Route 1, Box 44A, North Garden, Va. 22959 (804) 295-0264.

Master Dance Class Offered

Murray Spalding Dance Theatre

To Perform At U.Va.

The Murray Spalding Dance Theatre will present two concerts in Charlottesville April 15 and 16. Both performances will be at 8 p.m. in Venable School Auditorium, 14th Street. The programs, which will differ, will both offer a variety of modern dance solos and duets choreographed by Ms. Spalding.

Ms. Spalding and her company travel frequently. They have appeared in Washington, D.C., Baltimore, Denver, Philadelphia, and most recently in California. They have also performed in Mexico City at the Ballet Folklorica Theatre.

The company is based in Washington, D.C. where Ms. Spalding heads a studio which offers classes in modern dance technique, improvisation, Hatha Yoga, and T'ia Chi Chuan, an Oriental martial art she incorporates into her choreography.

Ms. Spalding, who started ballet lessons at the age of four, discovered modern dance while at Sarah Lawrence College. After receiving B.A. and M.A. degrees in dance there, she went on to New York City to study at the Martha Graham Studios, and at the Robert Joffrey and American Ballet Theatre schools.

Her study of Yoga and T'ia Chi Chuan are more recent. They reflect her continuing and widening interest in forms of disciplined movement, particularly that based on breath control rather than muscular tightness.

Combining these forms of movement in unexpected ways is part of the basis of Ms. Spalding's choreography. She juxtaposes elements so that the audience will see each part differently because of the particular combination. She uses music in a similar way. Her most recent works involve audio tape collages. Ms. Spalding composes these from recordings of the sounds which best express the varied moods of a piece.

"That Last Dance," to be performed Friday night, will present Ms. Spalding on her partner Sid Miller moving to a collage of "America the Beautiful" and "Those were the Days," both rearranged in waltz time.

Ms. Spalding, who will teach modern dance technique next fall at McGuffey Dance Center, will offer a master class in modern dance for all levels Saturday, April 16 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Memorial Gym, UVA. Tickets in advance are $4.50, admission at the door will be $5.50. Tickets for the concert are $3.00 and will be available at the door. For information about the concerts or master class, call 293-6710.

Time Announces

Photo Contest

Images of Time. Past. Present and Future is the theme for a national photography contest announced this week by Time Magazine Publisher Ralph P. Davidson.

A grand prize of $1,000 will be awarded for the best photograph of nature, people, places, events or objects by an amateur photographer, in color or black and white. Second prize is $500 and three third prize winners will receive $250 each. Honorable mentions will receive the Life Library of Photography.

Prize-winning photographs will be selected by a panel of judges consisting of world-renowned photographer Alfred Eisenstaedt, former White House photographer David Kennerly and Lee Jones, editor of Magnum Photos. The winning photographs will be published in a special advertising section on photography entitled "Photography: The Universal Language" in Time's November 18, 1977 issue.

Details of the photography contest were announced in the April issue of Time. Deadline for entries is September 1, 1977.

J.V. Lacrosse Takes Bridgewater

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Longwood Lacrosse team traveled to Bridgewater College on April 9. The varsity team played their best offensive and defensive game of the season. They kept the ball on the attack for the greater part of the game and got more shots on goal than Bridgewater, but their opponent's goalie did a fine defensive job by keeping us from scoring all but one goal. Terry Donahue scored our only goal. The final score was 6-1, which meant another L.C. loss, but the score is not indicative of the accurate passes and great hustle shown by Longwood or how evenly matched the teams were.

Miss Huffman, the L.C. coach was most happy with her Easter gifts and felt that her teams performed magnificently.

The J.V. team, most of which is composed of players who have never played lacrosse before, took their game 6-2. Scoring were Katie Trainor with 2, Linda Eagle with 3, and Diane "Nick" Nickelson with 1. The J.V.'s offense drove past the defenders of Bridgewater and were able to get good shots to score.

Our goal keepers were able to stop several shots. Suzanne Ashe stopped 13 shots and Debbie Fore stopped 17. Both teams played well offensively and defensively. Their next game is against Westhampton on April 13 at 3:30.

Longwood To Host Archery Tournament

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The last two Archery competitions have been cancelled, but on April 9, the team went to Madison to compete against VPI&SU, Brooklyn College, Atlantic County College, and Madison.

On April 19, the VFISW Tournament will be held at Longwood. Ms. Custer and the Longwood Archery Team Manager, Melissa Crick, are making preliminary plans. It will be a National Archery Association sanctioned six goal tournament. Competing in the Tournament will be five colleges, Longwood, Madison, Westhampton, Bridgewater, and Hampton Institute. The double Easton 600 Competition will be held on Barlow Field and starts at 10:00 a.m.

First place trophies will go to a women's team (top three archers from the same college) and a mixed team (top two men and two women from a college). Individual medals will go to the first, second, and third place winners in both the women's and men's division. A luncheon will be held for the participants in the Dining Hall that day.

For Longwood to go to Nationals this year, they must finish 1st, 2nd, or 3rd in State or Regional Championships. Individuals competing must also be in one of the top three positions in these Tournaments or have shot an All American score in a college shoulder to shoulder meet. Nationals will be held at Madison College May 12-14, where there will be two NAA 900s and a FITA (MIDDLE DISTANCES). All participants must belong to the NAA or be registered amateur archers.

Ladies Golf Undeclared

By DEANNA VANWEY

Last week Longwood's Women's golf team won their second tri-meet of the season. Playing against William and Mary and the University of New York at Brockport, at Kingsmill Golf Club in Williamsburg, Longwood only lost six points all day.

Intercollegiate golf is played by a medal play, nassau type scoring. Each player gets a point for winning the front nine, a point for winning the back nine, and a point for winning the total eighteen. The total number of points each player can get is three, then the total points won by each team decides the winner of the match.

Against William and Mary, Longwood won 9½ out of a possible 12 points. Against the University of New York, Longwood won 8½ out of a possible 12 points. The University of New York also beat William and Mary 7-5.

All the Longwood players did very good. Their next match is this week end, at Madison.

Fencing Team At Nationals

By DEANNA VANWEY

The 49th National Intercollegiate Fencing Championship was held at Madison College last week. Colleges and universities from all parts of the country, including Longwood. This is the biggest tournament held in the United States for intercollegiate fencers and it was a great accomplishment for the team to get there.

During the championships, Longwood beat all the other Virginia teams attending, and came in, in 29th place. San Jose State won the championship, losing only 3 out of 116 bouts the whole week end. This is San Jose's fourth year of taking the championship.

Longwood's Team fenced strong, experienced teams and proved themselves to be very strong, also. Keep it up.

SPORTS

With Two Additional Wins, Tennis Team 6-0

By BENNIE SHAW

The Longwood College Tennis Team raised its season record to 6-0 this past week by defeating Averett College and Roanoke College by the identical scores of 9-0. Longwood defeated Averett on a very windy, chilly day without the services of team captain Gwen Koechein and co-captain Dee Donnelly, however, both players were available for play against Roanoke. Coach Harris said she was very happy with the way the team was playing and hopes the winning way continues.

The winning way for the tennis team at Longwood should continue for years to come as the team consists of one junior, Diane Lowman; four sophomores, Gwen Koechein, Dee Donnelly, Mary Barrett, and Diane Harwood; and four freshmen, Teresa McLawhorn, Penny Stephens, Margie Quarles and Jill Bacchieri. The team will have a home match Wednesday with ODU and will leave Thursday for the state tournament being held at U.Va.

Legislative Board

Alma Mater Lyrics Needed

By DEBBIE WEBB

First we want to remind everyone of the Press Conference this afternoon at 12:45. The main topic of discussion will be open house hours. Everyone is urged to attend to express views and ask questions.

For the last few weeks, Legislative Board has been reviewing proposals made by Residence Board for changes in the handbook. They will be made public at a later date.

The alma mater is out-of-date and now is the time to do something about it. Any current Longwood Student can write a 2 verse alma mater and turn it into the Music Department by April 15. The entries will be recorded by numbers, no names. Here's a chance to change a little bit of Longwood's history.

Important—Legislative Board meetings have been moved to 6:30 instead of 7:00. They are still in the Reading Rooms on Monday nights—only change—6:30.

At this point, Longwood still doesn't have a nickname. Five names were turned in to the Board of Visitors to be voted on, and all were turned down. We will begin soon attempting to come up with a suitable nickname.

Remember all the questions and comments raised at the campus-wide dorm meetings held earlier this semester? You may rest assured that the questions were not discarded. Legislative Board is in the process right now of looking into the matters that were brought up. The results will be made public soon.

Don't forget—the meetings have been moved back to 6:30 on Monday nights—and especially don't forget the PRESS CONFERENCE this afternoon at 12:45 in the Gold Room. See you there!!

wasn't evident on stage, it certainly was backstage. Many a tear was shed. Annmarie Nemetz, and Art Education and Sociology Major, has been in the company for four years. She loves dancing and would like to dance forever. Plans for dance classes are definitely in the future. Beth Tomlinson has been in the company for three years. She would like to continue dancing after graduation and may possibly pursue it as a career. Nancy Milan is a P. E. Major and has been in the company for four years. She is getting married in August so plans for the future are uncertain. Sandy Williams is an English Major and has been in the company for four years. She does not wish to pursue dancing as a career but will continue taking dance classes. Susann Smith is a Speech and Drama Major and would like to go to Graduate School and study dance. She has been in the company for four years and is going to do some professional dancing this summer. The company is going to miss these girls but the futures look bright for each of them.

Residence Proposals Discussed At Press Conference

By TWINKIE PLANT
and D.J. LINDSEY

The last press conference held Tuesday, April 12, in the Gold Room touched upon various student interest topics.

Beginning with an introduction of Administration present, Student Government President, Linda Crovatt, made a few general announcements concerning the Bloodmobile, the Alma Mater, the Dabney Lancaster Scholarship, and projects that the Student Government has been working on. Students were asked to "Stay off the grass" during Pitch-In Week in order to beautify the campus.

Dr. Willett then took the floor by giving information regarding the summer session. On the question of housing Dr. Willett stated "The obligation is to those students who are here first." If the problem of student housing is not alleviated by the start of the next semester, then the number of in-coming freshmen will be reduced until everyone who has signed up for a room is placed.

The next subject concerned the major changes proposed and passed by both Residence and Legislative Boards. These include allowing students to leave the dorm once they are secured and the newly proposed open house hours. Dr. Willett felt that the proposal of leaving the dormitory had details to be worked out but "basically that has been approved and will go into effect." On the proposed open house hours there are some major changes: Monday through Thursday during strict quiet hour (7:00 p.m.—10:00 p.m.), Friday opening at 2:00 p.m. and closing at 1:30 a.m., Saturday starting at 11:00 a.m. and ending at 1:30 a.m., and Sunday from 11:00 a.m. straight through to 11:00 p.m. These will give students an additional twenty-one hours per week of visitation. Dr. Willett then opened the topic of open house to the students present for their reaction and comment.

Patricia K. Chapman, Secretary of Residence Board, asked if members of the board could be present at the staff meeting held Thursday in order that a more adequate student input is provided. Dr. Willett will present the new hours to the Board of Visitors. If there is general agreement among the board and the staff, "fine." And if not? "They may say they won't look at them." The Board of Visitors has the legal authority to have these changes presented to them and the final decision as to whether or not these changes will go into effect. If the Board of Visitors has any questions concerning the proposed changes, representatives from both Residence and Legislative Boards will be allowed to explain them.

Dr. Willett suggested to the students that if they wanted to see some changes to go through the two student boards. "Go through the channels and there's a very good chance of getting almost anything within reason done." He also commented, "...when people start talking about demonstrations and this sort of business, number one you're convincing me and number two you are convincing the board, that you're not really interested in looking for solutions, you're just trying to raise a ruckus. I have never seen anything solved by a demonstration." He then remarked that he had seen many things solved by having proposals come through the boards.

A question was raised concerning kegs in the Residence Halls next semester. Dr. Willett felt that they would still be banned. However alternate arrangements such as winterizing the cabin, opening up the lower dining hall, and using the ABC rooms in Lankford are being looked into.

Questions were raised concerning Student Identification Cards, Status of Therapeutic Recreation Majors, Sign-in-Sign-out procedures, and scheduling of exams. Handbooks and catalogs were also discussed at some length.

The Press Conference was the answer to many questions and offered suggestions for both Administration and Student Government to look into.

Teacher Quits Post Over Religion

Reprinted from The Roanoke
Times and World News

By JACK CHAMBERLAIN
Staff Writer

Terri Jones taught in Roanoke County schools for nearly four years, a firm believer that children should know that God is good and Satan is bad.

She said she believes very strongly in the good of God and Jesus and the evils of Satan, witches, goblins and ghosts.

And that's why Terri Jones doesn't teach in the Roanoke County schools any more. She quit two weeks ago rather than leave her religious convictions at home.

"I had the feeling all along that if I was ever challenged on the subject of religion, I, as a Christian, would have to leave," Miss Jones said in an interview.

She said she could not continue if she had to give up her daily devotions in her classroom and promote satanism, witchcraft and goblins at Halloween.

Donald Thompson, her principal at Catawba Elementary, and Aubrey Vaughan, director of elementary education, said she is a great teacher and they are sorry to see her go.

But the U. S. Supreme Court, deciding a suit brought by a Maryland atheist, ruled in 1963 that prayer, Bible readings and, in general, advocating religious in public schools is unconstitutional.

The exact interpretations of that landmark decision are still being debated 14 years later, but it is generally thought that it is illegal for teachers to conduct prayers and devotions in public schools.

Thompson said he knew Miss Jones conducted daily devotions in her classroom for the last 2½ years, but it was all right with him as long as no one complained.

Last month someone did. The mother of a child in Miss Jones' combination 3rd and 4th grade class, said Thompson, "said she didn't want her child talked to about religion in any way. She said she took her child to church and that was enough."

After consulting with Vaughan, Thompson told Miss Jones of the complaint and advised her of the law.

"I knew she was having a little devotion every morning," Thompson said. "I had to call the law at least to her attention. I just let her make her own judgement."

So Miss Jones quit. "I just didn't feel I should change my convictions just to suit what two or three parents wants," she said. "I wasn't going to compromise in any way and stay where I haven't the freedom of speech."

Miss Jones, 26, said she believes her problem also developed from her refusal to observe Halloween last fall when other teachers were having Halloween parties.

Thompson agreed that this had something to do with complaint last month. The same mother had complained about Halloween. Instead of a Halloween party, in which Miss Jones felt she would have had to promote witches, goblins and ghosts, the class had an autumn party with refreshments, and the children talked about nature.

"I feel like (Halloween), in an innocent way, teaches children there is nothing wrong with witches. I try to teach children there are witches," Miss Jones said.

Halloween, said the soft-spoken teacher, introduces children to witchcraft, satanism, ghosts, and goblins in a subtle way.

"Later on, when the children grow up, they don't take it seriously and it is a serious thing," she said.

Miss Jones said she expected the Halloween hassle would crop up again next fall, adding to the problem of the daily devotions and other religious teachings she didn't want to give up.

Miss Jones said a couple of parents—including the one who five months later complained to the principal about her devotions—had asked her in October why she didn't have a Halloween party, but no one complained about it at that time.

"I feel like trouble would have come," she said. "I knew I couldn't change my convictions about Halloween any more than I could about devotions."

Miss Jones, a 1973 graduate of Longwood College, taught at Hardy Road Elementary for a year before transferring to Catawba. She is a native of rural Fries in Grayson County and preferred a small, rural school with self-contained classrooms. Hardy Road, an open-space school, has 900 pupils, Catawba has 52.

At Catawba, Miss Jones said, she conducted devotions two or three minutes each morning "right after taking up the money" for milk, ice cream and such.

Sometimes she would tell a story, sometimes she would read from the Bible. She said she would ask the children if anyone wanted to add to the prayer, but they didn't have to.

"I had some parents say they were glad I had devotions," Miss Jones said.

Miss Jones said she was reared as a Southern Baptist, but dropped out a few years ago after finding what she wants in a fellowship of 11 persons in a private home.

"I felt like, as I grew to see exactly what the teaching of Jesus is all about, I no longer could find it in an organized church I've been to," she said. "Jesus really wasn't there. It didn't suit my needs."

Miss Jones said she had no plans for another job right now, but she's not worried. "I'm glad I can trust in the fact that God will take care of me," she said.

Vaughan said Miss Jones was "one of our very good teachers, an excellent classroom teacher—I personally would have loved to have my children in her classroom."

Prayers and all?
"Prayers and all," he said.

Outstanding Faculty Member Being Selected For Award

By ELLEN CASSADA

"For Professional Excellence and Devoted Service to Students"

This brief statement is inscribed on the Faculty Recognition Award Medallion, presented at graduation by the Student Development Committee to a chosen faculty member.

For the sixth consecutive year, the student body has submitted nominations. The ballot states that "this award is given annually to a deserving faculty member for academic excellence and service to students...The faculty member...should be the one...who is the most outstanding on our campus." Nominating students list the name of the professor and explain why their selection deserves the award. Ballots are then compiled and the Student Development Committee screens all nominees and makes a final selection.

The committee is comprised of various organizational chairmen and selected class and departmental representatives. After all nominations have been submitted, each candidate is discussed. There is an initial vote for elimination, and background statistics are gathered for the top twelve. From this, the selection is made. The final vote is secret, with only the student chairman and advisor aware of the decision.

Past recipients include Dr. James Gussett, Dr. Eleanor Hobbitt, Miss Barbara Bishop, Dr. Mary Cristo, and Dr. Herbert Blackwell.

It should be emphasized that the award is presented BY students FROM student nominations. The purpose of the award is to recognize the faculty member who students feel best exhibits the qualities of competence and efficiency in the classroom and concern for students outside of the regular classroom situation. There are 23 students presently serving on the Student Development Committee, and naturally there will be 23 definitions of "outstanding qualities."

The true meaning of the award cannot be adequately expressed in a few words. It means something a little different to each individual. The overall importance of the award is the fact that it is given by students in appreciation of a faculty member believed to have gone above and beyond teaching requirements.

Lecture

Wednesday evening at 7:45 in Jeffers Dr. Jack Burke will present a lecture entitled, "The Effects of Shark Blood on Animal Cancer Cells."

Dr. Jack D. Burke, Professor of Anatomy at the Medical College of Virginia, is a former member of the Longwood Faculty. He has done extensive research on the blood oxygen capacity of various mammals, fish and birds. In 1976, he co-authored an article entitled "Inhibitory Effect of Shark Serum on Lewis Lung Carcinoma," which was published in the journal of the National Cancer Institute.

The lecture is being sponsored by Phi Kappa Phi.

Longwood's Contemporary Art Collection Grows

By
CONWAY B. THOMPSON

The purchase of two landscape paintings, from its current exhibition, one by Frederick Nichols and one by Victor Huggins, brings Longwood's collection of work by contemporary Virginia artists to fifty-six in six media: painting, drawing, sculpture, pottery, prints, ceramics, and a mosaic. The Committee chose "Waterfall on the Rapidan," by Frederick Nichols, a painting showing frothy water gushing over rocks as the river picks up and mirrors the autumn leaves above it. This picture vibrates with movement, color, and dynamic composition. In contrast, the painting of Victor Huggins chosen by the Committee is quiet with muted color and mood. It shows us the gentle Blue Ridge rolling in the distance behind a wall of green trees and foreground pasture. Its restfulness and harmony suggest a nineteenth century, preindustrial revolution peace, where cattle browse and people may stroll.

The history of the collection began in 1948 when Dean of Students Ruth Gleaves appointed a Committee for Interior Improvement and asked Emily Barksdale to be chairman. As a graduate of Randolph-Macon Women's College, Ms. Barksdale was familiar with its art collection and recognized the importance of such a project for Longwood. She formed the first Committee for the Purchase of Works by Contemporary Virginia Artists. As a state-supported college, it seemed appropriate for Longwood to recognize and encourage Virginia's living artists. As soon as it was known that funds were needed in August 1949, the graduating senior classes, Longwood Players, and interested individuals donated money to the fund.

In 1951 the first painting was bought out of the Virginia Biennial at the Virginia Museum. Others were added from visits to studios as well as from the Biennials until 1958, when Horace Day was invited to show a group of his paintings on campus. This exhibition created so much interest that the policy of inviting artists to show a group of their works from which the Committee could choose, began and continues.

The Longwood College Committee for the Purchase of Works by Contemporary Virginia Artists has been made a standing

Contest To Develop New Alma Mater

Because of the change to co-education, Longwood College finds it necessary to develop a new Alma Mater. A contest shall be held for interested current students to write a new text. This text will be set to music by Dr. James McCray, Chairman of the Music Department and shall become the standard Alma Mater for our college. We invite all students to write an appropriate text for consideration. The rules for the contest are as follows:

1. The text should have two verses and be approximately the same length as the existing Alma Mater.
2. The text should represent co-education.

3. All entries must be submitted to the Music Department by Friday, April 22 at 4:00 p.m. No author's name should be on the submitted manuscript. Each entry should be turned in to the Music Secretary in the Wygal Music Building and it will be assigned a number with the author's name registered separately from the text.
4. All entries will be judged by the Alma Mater committee which is comprised of members of the faculty, alumni, and students.
5. The winner will be announced Thursday, April 28.
6. The 1977 Senior Class will sing the Alma Mater for the first time at this year's graduation.

Longwood Participates In VHEA Convention

By CINDY GOODWYN

The Virginia Home Economics Association held its 67th annual convention on March 23-26, 1977, at the Hotel Roanoke in Roanoke, Virginia. The convention program, "Home Economics: Visible Resources on Contemporary Issues," was designed to assist home economists in keeping abreast on issues related to the profession at the state and national levels.

The keynote speaker for the opening session was Dr. Donald Dedmon, President, Radford College whose topic was "Home Economists Communicating Their Profession to Others." Convention extras included exhibits and mini-workshops on the following topics: 1. The Family and Aging; 2. The Employed Homemaker and Family Adjustments; 3. World Hunger; 4. Aesthetic Considerations in the Near Environment; 5. Energy Alternatives; 6. Creating Quality Environment for Older Americans; 7. Home Economists in Management Positions; 8. Clothing for the Handicapped; 9. Land Use Planning; 10. Metrics.

Mrs. Dorothy Savedge, a member of the executive council of the Virginia Home Economics Association, conducted a workshop on "Home Economists as Leaders" with Dr. Letty Pryor from University of North Carolina, Greensboro, as guest speaker. The workshop was very inspiring as the participants discussed the role of leadership in the field of home economics.

At the convention Longwood's home economics department was well represented by 5 teachers and 16 students.

S-UN Plans Many Summer School Activities

By D. J. LINDSEY

Longwood's Student Union has many activities planned for the two summer sessions. There will be a S-UN program every Wednesday ranging from mini-concerts and films to watermelon picnics and picnics to Holiday Lake. The mini-concerts and films will be shown in the commons room between Frazer and Curry dorms. During the two five-week periods there will be a total of five mini-concerts. The first group to be featured will be T&M Express which appeared at Longwood earlier this year with Rosewater Blue. The audience reaction to them was very good. The group Warren and Bodel are scheduled to appear three times. There are also outdoors activities with food and music to be held. Watermelon will be in good supply for outdoor picnics and picnics to Holiday Lake; which is scheduled for July.

Last but not least there will be Wheels trips to such places as Nagshead, Virginia Beach, the mountains for hikers, a blue grass festival, and a trip to King's Dominion. In order to have these weekend trips there must be enough students signed up to go. Unlike regular session activities, all the summer session programs will be free. These activities are being entirely funded with the summer students' activity fees.

More One-Act Plays To Be Presented

The directing class at Longwood is once again preparing for production of the final group of one-act plays for the year. The plays will be presented April 25-27 in Jarnan Studio Theatre. The times will be announced later.

The plays for this semester include mostly comedies. There are 9 one-acts to be done half and half between the first and second nights. On the 26th there will be a High School production of Class of '88 and an original cast production on the 27th. All but three of the one-acts are new scripts by Jacqui Singleton and will be her final productions on Longwood Campus.

CBS To Air Special

'Mysteries Of The Great Pyramid'

By STACEY SMITH

On Wednesday night, April 20 at 8:00, CBS will present a TV special entitled "Mysteries Of The Great Pyramid." Omar Sharif, the host will be presenting discussions, historical background, and questions raised about The Great Pyramid of Cheops.

The Great Pyramid, which is located on the Egyptian desert near Cairo was built close to 2600 BC, and its height reaches 482 feet. It is mainly made of limestone and displays impressive masonry. Yet for an unknown reason it looks as if it was left unfinished by the workers. As if to show a once great power, nine smaller pyramids surround the great one. Three of the small pyramids were built for Pharaoh Khufu's family and on the front east a mortuary service temple for Khufu remains standing.

Egyptologists have found that in order to have created this massive burial vault, blocks were taken out of quarries by the river south of Cairo and at high tide they were floated across to the base of the pyramid hill, where stone ramp waited.

The special will raise many unanswered questions such as: What was the purpose behind the sole survivor of the ancient seven wonders of the world? Was it merely a tomb for a great pharaoh, or is it in fact, a repository for some still-to-be-found answers to vast and universal secrets? When the pyramid was broken into why was the sarcophagus found empty? And is there a link between the Great Pyramid and a form of Kinetic energy?

These questions and more will be discussed by experts who will give their opinion on the topics brought up. Viewers will be brought inside this massive tomb to see for themselves what the excavators have found, and they will be enlightened on many of the mysteries behind the Egyptians and their beliefs in pyramids.

Sophomore Road Show Huge Success

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

At 7:30 in the morning of April 13, about 28 sophomores with painted faces and warm hearts went to Richmond to brighten up the day for patients at Crippled Children's Hospital and Chippenham Psychiatric Hospital for Adults.

Their skit of "Old MacDonald's Farm" included clowns, "animals", Raggedy Ann and Andy, and Mickey Mouse. Everyone had fun and the patients enjoyed the shows.

The biggest highlight, though, was when the group gave an impromptu performance at Maymount Park to a group of around 40 children enjoying their school vacation. These children were a good audience and got an extra treat besides an excursion to the Park.

A lot of credit must be given to all the participants and to Robin Bryant who was in charge of the clowns. Sophomore Road Show was a big success.

Conflict Presents Dangerous Situation On Iler Field

By TOM DeWITT

Last week as the men's portion of the IAA softball game started, a conflict immediately arose. The girl's lacrosse team was also occupying Iler field at the same time. Neither teams nor events directly effected each other until it was time for the outfield to be taken. It was then found, (rather abruptly,) that the left field of the softball game would be right in the middle of the lacrosse field. Kevin Bedsworth, left fielder for the Sigma Phi Epsilon team, was met with, "You can't play here! Get out of the way! You wanna get hit?" Kevin called time out and walked into home plate to discuss the situation with the IAA officials. It was decided that nothing could be done about the situation and to play as though "Nothing was wrong" and make sure you weren't clubbed by a passing lacrosse player.

The game started with little incident after a few more choice warnings were issued to Kevin as he again took his position in the outfield. After a few painfully near misses and blocked goal attempts by Sig Ep's left fielder, Frazer took to the field. Again, they experienced the same difficulty.

It was made obvious to the softball players by the lacrosse team that they would have to move, so at the conclusion of a women's softball game, the location had been changed to the far southeast corner of Iler field. This produced a clear left field and a cramped center field, but it looked as though things would work out.

The east lacrosse goal was in the center of right field but ignored because not many players hit to right field. This produced a right outfielder playing back up to the first baseman. However, because Iler field was not designed for being played in by the long ball hitters and the lacrosse team at the same time, balls continued to interrupt the lacrosse players as they whipped passes dangerously close to right fielder, Tommy Pultz's head. Pultz took this in stride along with the remarks that still originated at that part of the field. Finally, it happened. A long drive down into center field caused Kevin Bedsworth (who had been moved to center field for his own protection) to back up into the "forbidden zone" once more to play it. The ball landed no where near the lacrosse ball and immediately became part of their game. After retrieving the ball from a neighboring goal and removing a clete from his shin, Kevin threw home, missing the tag by a good two minutes.

The IAA officials thereafter called a ball hit into the lacrosse field as an automatic double. The players added one more clause, any lacrosse player hit was a homer and the person's team responsible won hand's down, in addition to a three week vacation in Florida.

With all due respect to the lacrosse team, thank you who stuck to the lacrosse game. Also given the mentioned situation, the IAA officials should be commended for keeping peace "among the ranks" but most of all, thanks to the person who made up the one additional clause.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

Due to various circumstances there are no pictures of Greek Week, yet the Greeks should not go unrecognized or commended. It was a great week of fun and excitement. It was also a week of serious giving. The social services that the Greek perform are many. Each service asks that the sisters and brothers give a part of themselves to others. It takes a very special person, one with a heart of understanding and love, to give in such a way.

Fortunately for all who benefit from it, the understanding and love, does not begin and end with Greek Week. The same activities which occurred during the week occur throughout the year. Wouldn't it be nice if the same atmosphere which surrounded the week could be present throughout the year?

And what better way to end any week than with spring weekend. People got down and partied together, and wasn't it great.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

COMMENT ON "THE COMMENTATOR"

Dear Editor,

Many will not even pick up a small newspaper like "The Commentator," probably because the general feeling is that anything critical, underground and unsigned is not worth one's effort and time to read. I must confess that the same thoughts passed through my own mind, but I decided to open up and give it my attention anyway. Surprisingly, I was impressed with the content of the various articles. I am making a plea for those whose views are different from those expressed in "The Commentator" to read it and notice its strong points. If you still think the newspaper wrong or unjust, at least you will know the foundation on which views opposite from your own are built and will understand why someone felt the need to publish it. In return, the editor(s) of "The Commentator" should also listen to and read the ideas dissimilar from his or hers.

A mere spark can start a fire, but it takes alot of effort to check the fire after it is out of control. The saddest part is that the effort usually comes too late, for even though it puts out the fire, only ashes are left to show for it. Like starting a fire, it is easy for people to air what they truly believe in, but it is very difficult for them to stop seeking revenge and exchange ideas in order to find the middle ground in between. Longwood is ablaze with various controversies at this time. A suggestion for the administration, the various branches of the student government and the student body is to let the fire die down before it is too late to salvage anything. Find the middle ground where the bad points from each viewpoint can be discarded and the good points from each combined to form a workable compromise. If one really thinks about it, we are all striving for the same major goal; a great college that we can all take pride in. Can we open up enough to listen to each other... can we discuss the various situations on which our opinions differ without the bitterness that lately has been seen for too often on our campus... or are we all going to be martyrs for our own causes, accomplishing nothing?

Thank you,
Caroline Harrison

REBUTTAL

To the Editor:

With respect to Jubal Ackerson's letter of last week, I wish to make a few comments. Perhaps Longwood was "forced" to go coed by HEW, but this does not automatically indicate that little effort has been put forth to make the transition a successful one. The decision was finalized and announced to the student body during the spring semester of last year; consequently, those females stringently opposed to the College going coed had time to change their plans for the next academic year, and there were some who decided not to return. I would suspect that all prospective students were also made aware of Longwood's new coed status, otherwise we would not have resident male students in attendance at this time. In simpler terms, those students here now CHOSE to be here.

In my opinion, there are many MALE students who have not put forth 100 percent effort in attempting to live civilly in a coed atmosphere. The old adage "rules were made to be broken" is essentially correct; however, breaking rules in order to show how "archaic" and "asinine" they are is no way to have these rules changed.

Unlike you, Mr. Ackerson, I have been here for four years and I have seen PROGRESS which has allowed the students to "live" better than in preceding years. For example, students no longer have to file destination slips for overnight trips, no longer HAVE to be in by midnight, no longer have to leave doors OPEN during open house hours, and no longer have to refrain from drinking alcoholic beverages in the presence of male guests. Need I say more? Longwood has come a LONG way just in the last four years. I might add that these changes came about through the mutual efforts of the Administration, the students, and the respective Boards.

I, too, wish this college better luck in the future; it was certainly Longwood's misfortune to have granted admission to certain students. And to you, Mr. Ackerson — the best of luck in your endeavors to "throw Longwood College Policy out the window" . . . it's been here a lot longer than you have.

SPRING AND STEREOS

Dear Editor:

Spring is a lovely time of year; the dogwood in the courtyard below the Colonnade bloom in a riot of loveliness. The weather is warm and as Tabb and French do not have air-conditioning, the windows are always open to catch any wandering breeze. How sad then, to have this lovely scene shattered by someone's stereo blaring drums and guitars while you're trying to listen to your Beethoven Symphony; your ears assaulted by the continuous playing of someone else's taste in records.

We all have our preferences. I merely ask that we not force them on others. The Tabb and French dorms have walls of paper and sound travels easily enough in the winter with all the doors and windows shut, but in the summer the choice is of either listening to someone else's records, because you can't hear your own, or perishing in the heat. I politely ask the sunbathers in the courtyard below the Colonnade not to turn their first, second, and third floor record players on full blast so they can tan to music. Some of the music I like, and some of it I definitely do not. It is rather upsetting to be listening to a record in your own room and have it drowned out by another record coming from outside your window. I ask that all residents in that area and in any others to please, please: have a little courtesy. Your taste in records maybe excellent, but so is the next person's. It is not your right to decide what everyone else's taste is to hear.

I withhold my name in fear of having my records sabotaged by irate listeners.

Varsity Lacrosse Team Fighting Hard As J.V. Team Rolls In The Wins

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

On April 13, the Longwood Lacrosse team met the Westhampton Lacrosse team on Iler Field. Westhampton took a 12-3 win over Longwood. L.C. just did not play as well as they did against Bridgewater, the passes did not get to their destinations and the ball was on our defensive end of the field throughout the second half. Despite the overall performance, the defense did an exceptionally good job by blocking several shots and intercepting passes. Unfortunately, the attack just could not pull everything together. Scoring for Longwood were Carol Filo with 1, Terry Voit with 1, and also Terry Donahue made 1.

Again the J.V. team pulled through with an 8-1 win over Westhampton. Even with two of Westhampton's Varsity players in the game. Our J.V. played tough. Terry "Fuzz" Schavione scored 3 goals, Cathy "Skeet" Forthuber scored 2, Linda Eagle, Jayne Carson, and Katie Trainor each had 1. Both the attack and defense got off some good passes and kept Westhampton from scoring any in the second half.

The Varsity team played a close game with Sweetbriar on April 14. Longwood took an early 2-1 lead but at half time Sweetbriar led 6-3. The final score was 9-8. Carol Filo and Terry Voit each had 3 goals while Cathy Holt and Terry Donahue both hit 1. Goals shot and missed totaled 23.

The team put up a good fight and made some good shots late in the second half, but time ran out before they could take the lead. The defense again played a well controlled game.

Spring weekend brought victories to both teams against Shenandoah Club with identical scores, 10-4. This was varsity's first win and the J.V. is still undefeated. Both teams worked well together. A special note of recognition goes to Terry Donahue and Patty Hughson, who played goalie for the first time. Also thanks go to Suzanne Ash and Debbie Fore, who played goalie for the club's first game. Cathy Lowe, and Cheryl Sams helped out the Shenandoah team since they had to play two games.

Both Cheryl Sams and Terry Voit had a hot hand for the Varsity Longwood team, scoring 3 goals each. Terry Donahue had 2, Carol Filo and Jennie Morrow each scored 1 goal. For the J.V. team, "Skeet" Forthuber and Linda Eagle each shot 3 goals. Jamie Carson had 2, Teresa Ware and "Fuzz" Schavione had one apiece.

There will be two games played today at Lynchburg College. The Varsity and J.V. teams are looking for another win to finish their regular season. The Varsity team will then go to Tournaments April 22-23.

Longwood's Fine Tennis Team

Keeping Active And Urging Support

By BENNIE SHAW

The Longwood College Tennis Team armed up for the state tournament held this past week end by soundly defeating two strong opponents, Lynchburg College and ODU.

The match with Lynchburg College was the "tougher" of the two matches with Longwood gaining a 7-2 win.

The Longwood team played very strong against ODU which is evident by the final score of 9-0. This was the fourth time this spring that our young ladies have held a team scoreless. The final home match of this season will be held tomorrow against Randolph-Macon College.

Some of the best women tennis in the state is played here on the Longwood Campus and all seven members of the team have earned the support of the student body so tomorrow at 3:00 p.m. be at the Barlow courts and show this team how proud we are of their 8-0 record.

"Another win."

Archery Team Looking Strong

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

As predicted, the Longwood Archery Team certainly appears to be heading for Nationals. They will have to place 1st or 2nd in the State Tournament to be held at Longwood on April 19 in order to attend. Last week end Longwood placed 2nd in a tournament against Madison College, VPI&SU, Atlantic County College, Glassboro State College and Brooklyn College. Glassboro shot a 1859 to take first place, Longwood was just four points behind 1855, and Brooklyn shot a 1771 for third place. Caroline Henshaw shot Longwood's highest score, which was a 710, just 10 points from an All American Score.

The team also looked strong against Westhampton on April 13. They defeated their opponents 2014 to 1461. Both Caroline Henshaw and Colleen Blakely shot All American Scores in the Eastern 600. To do this their scores must be 480 or above. Due to this, they may be nominated for the All American Archery Team. The other archers for Longwood were Kathy (Kaki) Hicks, a freshman who is a very strong addition to the team. Penny Norford and Betsy Crupper.

Frazer Heads Up

Men's Softball

By D.J. LINDSEY

Frazer dorm has steamrolled to three victories in the Men's softball intramurals. Frazer has defeated South Cunningham, Sigma Phi Epsilon, and Tabb in consecutive order. In order to win the championship, they must win a total of five games. With the exception of the first game against South Cunningham, the scores have not been close. Frazer has yet to play the Day Students and South Ruffner.

Varied Items Brought Up At Legislative Board Meeting

By DEBBIE WEBB

The Student Union takes part yearly in Pitch-in, a program sponsored by Anheuser-Busch, Inc. The purpose is to contribute something to clean up the environment, or to do something to beautify it. Exactly what is done is left to the individual organization participating. By now everyone should have seen signs of Legislative Board's contribution. Let's hope it works!

(One thing we would like to remind students and faculty of: Legislative Board members can administer exams. If a professor cannot give an exam when the majority of his students can take it, a Legislative Board member can be there to hand out the exams and take them up.)

Wanda Petersen has been checking into having more outside lights on campus. It was brought up in many of the campus-wide hall meetings that there was not enough outside lighting in certain places. Campus Police are checking into it, and will get back to Wanda soon.

Other items that were brought up at the hall meetings and looked into: 1) gravel has been brought to fill up the holes in the parking lot behind Wheeler; 2) at the present time the pianos in the dorms are not well cared for and are not tuned on a regular basis. The cost of tuning ranges from $20 to $30. There is the possibility they might be tuned if students show concern in keeping them up; 3) on the question of painting rooms, there was a shortage of painters and the painting schedule was still under consideration; 4) people misused the privilege of taking cereal and fruit out of the dining hall, and the cost being high, it is no longer allowed.

We only have a couple more meetings, but we sure would like to see you there — Lankford Reading Rooms, 6:30, Monday nights. See you there and have a great week!!

faculty committee. It continues to be headed by Janice Lemen, Professor of Art, and herself a painter. Three other Art Department members serve, as well as three non-art faculty members, a Library staff member, and Art students.

Students have always been on this committee, with a definite voice in selection and placement of the works—always where the greatest number of students will see them. The works are rearranged from time to time with the suggestions and help of the student committee who give their time and effort cheerfully, and continue to contribute funds through their graduating classes.

Alumnae returning to the campus can feel pride in the College's growing and varied collection, most of which have increased in value both esthetically and economically. The works speak for the quality and scope of artists who have taken themes from their native state, or have been nurtured by its ideals and education. It also serves as a tangible reminder of the foresight and awareness of those who have known the importance of surrounding the students, insofar as possible, with ever wider experiences for their consideration and joy.

Fantasticks

Players End Season On Pleasurable Note

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Longwood Players ended their spring season on an upbeat with their production of "The Fantasticks" running last Wednesday through Saturday night. The two-act musical, written by Tom Jones, was "propped," lit, set to music, choreographed and swallowed by the actors in hasty gulps of memorization in an incredible 2½ week's time. To make things that much more "interesting," at least to the lighting crew, the production was staged on relatively unfamiliar territory in a trans-campus technical campout over in distant Wygal.

Despite the brief period of gestation and the fact that some of the crews were technically "living out of a suitcase," the production turned out surprisingly well. What problems there were generally appear to be the result of these circumstances rather than any large, individual inadequacies of any of the actors or technicians.

As the self-proclaimed very-sweet-sixteen-year-old martyr of love, Therees Tkach artfully swooned the audience into Luisa's storybook "realities." Her singing was clear, articulate, and in command, responding appropriately to her emotion and the dialogue of the song. The only shortcoming here was a visual one; her musical contemplations would have been even more effective had she used more gestures, taking her cue from the lyrics of the song. For example, in the number in which she fantasizes her hair turning to gold, the audience almost expects her to fondle her own brown hair in reflection—she doesn't. This is just a minor point, however, and is more an absence of highlight than a distraction.

Rick Vaughan, as Matt, the educated though unworried boy-beyond-the-wall, did an outstandingly fine job in his singing, and seems to have a definite knack for depicting naïveté. Therees and he blended together nicely in the vocals and seemed to be conscious of voice projection without appearing strained. However, Vaughan did seem posturally strained at a few points during the songs; again, perhaps a greater use of gesture and an awareness of this problem might have made him appear more relaxed.

The traveling salesman of quality rapes, El Gallo (pronounced El Guy-oh; si, si) was played by Hank Dahlman who wasted no time in winning the audience's affection with his musical opening of "September Song", and their applause for his Iberian frenzy in "It Depends on What You Pay."

Dan Edwards (Hucklebee) and Henry Emmerson (Bellomy), both of Keysville, responded to the Players' S.O.S. for minutemen talent who could be prepared to perform after the short 2½ week theatrical bootcamp of rehearsals including blocking, lines, and musical coordination. Both, having done

"Fantasticks" before in Keysville, did a marvelous job in their very animated, almost vaudevillian portrayal of the two fathers.

The two Shakespearean stock characters emerging from the prop chest, Henry and Mortimer, were played by Ed Baker and his Tonto-esque companion, Glenn Leftwich. Any inadequacy in describing this scene in its absolute Merits lies not in the actors' comic portrayal, but in the reviewer's description of it. Baker's dense lumbering and his facial expression of stupefied anguish of a man unfolded from a historical hope-chest could be rivaled only by Leftwich's spastic self-assault with his uncontrollably rhythmic drumstick.

The Mute, played by Norman Harris, was commendably attentive in supplying many of the visuals as well as to the action of the play itself. Rather than sitting out of it until his cue, he followed the action in a quiet, detached amusement, giving the feeling that he belonged onstage not as an indifferent functionary, but as a co-operative, interested observer.

A few inconsistencies between circumstance and what actually appeared on stage seem obvious enough to be worth mentioning. In the beginning of Act II the actors seem conspicuously overdressed for all the sweltering that's going on under the rude illumination of the sun. Dispensing with a few buttons and rolling up shirt-sleeves would have been a simple, yet effective gesture to express the temperature. Along this same line, the "cold, cruel world" may have dispelled Matt's fantasies, but it didn't mess up his hair. It seems that the costume and make-up people could have roughed him up a little in the lobby between the time that he defiantly sets out to take on the world and the scene in which he straggles back home, after the world had done him in.

In the technical department, the set was successful in its carnival array of colored streamers that established a light, almost theatrically campy mood. The lights, although patchy in some of the acting areas, (this is again a structural fault in lighting the Wygal stage as there is no apparatus for front illumination that blends the light of the side instruments) were generally effective in creating an atmospheric tone, especially in the evening garden scene. The costumes were stock, stereotyped clothing caricatures that were playfully done and just as entertaining to look at. Hucklebee and Bellomy's straw hats and vests were in sync with the carnival theme, as Henry's musty red-velvet frock and Mortimer's crimson leotards and suede loin cloth were reminiscent of a tattered edged anthology of Shakespeare.

The ensemble that provided the overture, backgrounds and accompaniments carried that same sense of celebration in the enthusiasm in their performance. Dressed as an off-beat musical conglomerate rather than with the stuffy dignity that is associated with the word "ensemble," they were an alert, responsive unit.

Dramatic Director Dr. Patton Lockwood, and Musical Director Dr. James McCray, along with the actors, musicians, and technicians, should be congratulated, and thanked for their time and sanities spent on this production. If success can not often be measured except in the pleasure that it brings to others, then the Player's production was unquestionably achieved its purpose.

Art Professor Retires

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

After teaching for 16 years in Longwood's Art Department as an Associate Professor of Art, Ms. Nancy V. Leitch is retiring this year. Ms. Leitch received her B.A. degree from Carnegie Institute of Technology and her M.F.A. from Cranbrook Academy of Art. She says her work has been rewarding and that she has met many nice people here, but now she feels she has reached the age to retire. Ms. Leitch has been teaching for a total of 24 years in the state of Virginia.

At the moment, she has no definite plans of what she will do after her retirement. Her varied interests include art and animals. Ms. Leitch said that perhaps she might get a new show dog and enter it in dog shows since she has retired her other dog. Then again, she might start going to horse shows or take up riding again, since she used to when she was younger. There are many things she would like to do now that she is retiring, that she did not have the time to do while teaching.

On Wednesday, April 27, at 5:30, the Art Department is having a picnic in honor of Ms. Leitch, on the lawn of Bedford.

Open House Hours Extended

By MARY MEADE
SAUNDERS

Proposed Hours: Monday through Thursday — 7 to 10 p.m.; Friday — 2 p.m. to 1:30 a.m.; Saturday — 11 a.m. to 1:30 a.m.; Sunday — 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.

The hours listed for the extension of Open House Hours will be in effect commencing Monday, April 25, on a trial basis. Students are reminded that many others are working on term papers and preparing for examinations. It is to be hoped that everyone will be considerate of the academic efforts of the majority of students. It will not be necessary for the residence halls to vote on this issue during this semester. However, the proposal for implementation of Open House Hours was sent back to Residence Board so that some kind of representative voting could be established for the 1977-78 academic session. Details of the procedures to be used in residence halls for determining Open House Hours which are more restrictive than these maximum hours will be published when the Fall Semester opens.

Golf Teams First Victory Despite Injuries

By MARGARET HAMMERSLY

Longwood College's Men's Golf Interest Group won its first match last Friday, April 22. The home match, with Averett College, was won by 19 strokes, the score being L.C. 336, Averett 357.

Prefacing Friday's match were two injuries Thursday evening. It seems to be a tradition (newly established), in which on the evening before a golf match, the golfers ceremoniously jump from the window of 115 Tabb. Until Thursday there had been no injuries, however Thursday evening before a group of spectators golfers Charles Elinsky and Roger Strong injured themselves.

Elinsky fell on his back, suffering a hairline fracture of the vertebrae. He was taken to Southside Community Hospital Friday morning by fellow golfer Bill Breedon, and admitted. Saturday afternoon he was released.

Strong suffered a heel injury, yet was able to play in the match.

On Campus Talent Exhibited In Junior Art Show

By SANDY WILLIAMS

Now showing in the library's exhibit room is the annual Junior Art Show where the junior art majors have displayed samples of their work. A great variety in media and technique are exemplified. Both realistic and abstract experiences are created through the various studies in oils, acrylics, watercolors, weaving, wood sculpture, silkscreen prints, jewelry in bronze, silver, and gold, ceramics, and wood and linoleum cuts. The exhibit will remain in the library gallery until April 29 and, personally, I think it is worth the time to see our "on-campus talent."

There are many different levels at which one can evaluate a work of art but because I am armed with only a smattering of art background, my analysis is derived from a purely aesthetic standpoint. Upon viewing the show, there were several pieces that grabbed me by first impression. Kathy Taylor's oil painting, "Close to the Edge," was one of the most striking. Her portrayal of two trees on a cliff is captured through cool colors that graduate from darker to lighter which ties in with the overall upward linear curve. This technique provided a unified, cumulative effect.

The juxtapositioning of soft, mellow colors accounted for my instant captivation by Constance Johnson's "Assimilation." The soothing effect that this asymmetrical abstraction generates seems almost therapeutic.

Another attention-getter was Susan Harrell's wood sculpture of a waterfowl. She miraculously transformed a block of wood into a sleek, delicate, and graceful bird.

There are two excellent renderings of lion heads that should not go without mention: Dolly Lynn Cajigas' felt-tip "Alpha Delta Pi Lion" and Donna Athey's "Lettered Lion." Both artists captured the feline's majestic charm through linear contours of accuracy and minute detail. Donna Athey also demonstrated a flair in jewelry making. Her brass, bronze, and black jade necklace is intricate, unusual, and beautiful.

Trish Williams' watercolor paintings display her noticeable knack for handling the medium. Her painting, "Quietly Fowing Water," is a fascinating realistic depiction of a quaint old mill on the banks of a river. The very clear and distinct representation of the scene must have been a difficult task because watercolors sometimes tend to give a muddy, mottled, or overworked effect.

The junior who displays the most distinctive style is Michele Fugate. Her work is easily recognizable through her use of hard edges and strident colors. This unique style seems to mirror Michele's own vivacious, extroverted personality. In her acrylic painting, "Car Accident #3," she interprets an automobile collision by painting a car with giant cracks and stars around it. The glaring colors and distortions utilized magnify the situation by creating a bizarre and agitated mood.

The three Alumnae Association Purchase Awards went to Ami Edwards for her experimental relief print, "Setting Suns," to Linda Payne for her etching, "Stone Mill," and to Martha McGuire for her silk screen print, "Ice." Constance Johnson received the Art Department Purchase Award for a watercolor painting.

So "give a look" in the library basement. The quality and variety of work will be well worth your trip.

Olivia Sparkles In Concert

By TWINKIE PLANT

The lights dimmed on to a stage brightly covered with hanging plants and in walked Olivia Newton-John to gracefully fill the spotlight for her first tour at Norfolk Scope Saturday night.

The concert began quietly with "Love Song" to a crowd only half filling Scope capacity. With angelic style intact and eyes full of expression she welcomed the audience with a thick southern accent, "How ya'll doin'?" She was then presented with flowers, a friendly gesture made by the audience and not one you often see these days.

With blonde hair flowing behind her Olivia Newton-John sang and danced across the stage for a full hour casting off sparkling pink knickers, floral smock, and silver boots. Many of her numbers took on a bolder look than you would expect from an outward gentleness as Olivia shook everything she had from top to bottom. A surprised audience loved it!

Olivia Newton-John has been making her mark on record charts around the world since 1971. She has been awarded the Grammy Award for Best Country Female Vocalist and continues successfully on pop charts. A few of the numbers performed include one of her latest hits, "Sam", "Have You Ever Been Mellow", and "Let Me Be There". At the end of many of her numbers the lights would dim leaving only part of Olivia and then allowing the rest of her to disappear almost as quickly as she stepped onto the stage.

"If You Love Me Let Me Know" led to a standing ovation followed by Olivia's thank-you, "I Honestly Love You". At that she waved to a satisfied crowd and danced off the stage; once again a-sparkle and hair flowing.

Outdoor Arts Festival Around The Corner

By D. J. LINDSEY

On Saturday, May 7, there will be "A Festival of the Arts" at Longwood College. The outdoor Art Festival will be held on the lawn in front of the Rotunda and the Colonnade. A variety of events will be going on during the day. Longwood's own Quintin Vest will be among several people who will read poetry. Along with him will be Hood Frazier of Rice, Dara Wier of Hollins College, Michael Pettit of Roanoke, and Tom O'Grady of Hampden-Sydney.

There will also be music provided. The group Country Folk from Darlington Heights will be playing. Tray Epps and Dale Whitehead, who make up the group, have performed at Longwood before. Also appearing will be Longwood's talented Jacqui Singleton. Several minstrel groups will also be playing.

To go hand in hand with the music will be dancing.

Students from Longwood's

modern dance class will perform ballet and modern dance during the day. To keep the kids happy there will be a clown around.

The Festival will have arts and crafts from all over the state. Some arts and crafts will be available for sale to interested persons. Lindsay Jones who is a representative from the Harold Decker Gallery in Norfolk, will judge the arts. For prizes, there will be a total of $1,000.

The show will start at 10 in the morning and run until that evening. The inventory of arts will be oil and acrylics, photography, sculpture, and the general crafts. The children will also have a chance to show their talents at the children's art show workshop. The Central Virginia Chapter of the Virginia Museum is sponsoring the festival and local merchants are supporting it.

If anyone is interested in helping out or contributing their talents, contact Bev Gibbons, 392-3861.

Once Upon A Time . . .

For her journalism feature, freshman English major Twinkie Plant researched social regulations of Longwood in years past. She began her research when assigned an informative speech. Freshman Production also gave her a chance to look back to yesterday. And it all came together in the following story. —

By TWINKIE PLANT

Once upon a time in the year of 1884, the state of Virginia felt the need for a special institution to train public school teachers. That year the Farmville Female Seminary was taken over by the state and turned into the State Normal School at Farmville. Once this had been established we were on our way.

At the turn of the century young women attending the State Normal School were becoming women in their own right though they were confined to the Honor System necessary at that time to any student body preparing to be teachers.

The students didn't have very much to say about the way in which they were governed. Even so, the students were not as docile as the bad-times would like us to think. The Social Code was in the making as our older sisters searched for a way in which we could govern ourselves. It was decided that the social rules would be enforced and punishments handed out by the Executive Committee of the Student Council.

The earliest records available are 1913, at which time two girls were campused for a week after being seen in an automobile with a young man. The next year, two students were given a warning by the college president for talking with boys. Cutting across campus, reclining on campus, breaking of shrubbery, throwing trash or water from the window was strictly forbidden. Study hour rules demanded no noise in rooms, halls, or bathrooms.

Everyone was required to come to meals unless excused by the Home Office (today's Dean of Students) or in the infirmary (going to every meal could put you there too).

Students had to have permission to leave the grounds except for a walk. Outdoor exercises were required for one-half hour every day. Playing the victrola or piano was forbidden during study hour and NO ragtime on Sunday.

By the 20's, students were allowed to go shopping twice a week without permission from the Home Office and were given the home privilege of going to the "moving pictures" on Saturday night with a chaperone. Students were also allowed to leave the college once a month with the permission of the College President and the Head of the Home.

Card playing, horseback riding, going to the Farmville post office or railroad station was forbidden. Being joined at the soda fountain or on the street by young men was POSITIVELY FORBIDDEN!

By 1933, the House Council was formed to take the responsibility of enforcing the social rules. Every hall elected a president (sound familiar?) to fulfill the following duties: she maintained absolute quiet during the study hour; she turned the lights out at 10:30 p. m. and, for those with extended hours, at 11:00 p. m. The hall presidents were also warned to be on the look-out for cigarette smoking. One girl was campused for six weeks because smoke was found in her bathroom. Two other girls were campused for eight weeks for smoking with dates. In four weeks, nine girls were campused for smoking.

That same year it was decided that girls attending the movies, with boys on Saturday afternoon, should just be warned. Stricter action would be taken only if such "immoral" behavior continued.

In the winter of 1936, four girls disguised themselves and went to the midnight show. They returned at 3:00 a. m. knowing they would be campused for six weeks. You know what? They were right.

Such concessions in the rules were made as; one would be allowed to sit on the campus in the morning and afternoon, but NEVER at night, freshman would be allowed to go downtown three days a week instead of two; the liberties granted these girls were shocking!

The 1940's twinkled in with big bands and a big war. But State Normal School known as the State Teachers College by now was the same. All the old rules still applied and many new ones such as "no showers after 7:30 p. m." were added. Girls were still campused for leaving campus without permission, for going to movies without permission, and for breathing without permission.

The Student Council was having difficulty getting rid of its "police" image. (Poor things!) Just because their duty was to patrol the streets of Farmville looking for escaped prisoners, excuse me, students; posting guards in the dating parlors; and checking out rumors at every turn; whatever could possibly have given the Council that image?

The students were not oppressed though. Three girls were given a warning for building a fire in a trashcan to roast marshmallows. In October of 1945 the Student Council decided to post a list of all the rules in the Home Office, now known as the Information Office. That must have covered one entire wall! In 1945 (brace yourselves) girls were allowed to walk downtown with a boy for a coke after dark!

Spring in the 1950's did seem to be the time to be in trouble. Two girls confessed at a freshman class meeting that they were the girls who had painted "54" on the sides of the Rotunda dome. It apparently started a long tradition of numbers painted all over buildings on campus. (Wouldn't you know it would be a Red and White who started it?) The 1950's meant bedcheck at 11:00 p. m. and Official "busy signs" purchased from the hall presidents for a nickel. These signs were not to be violated by knocking on a door on which the sign was posted. If one did knock on that door she was honor bound to turn herself in. All phone booths were locked at 11:00 p. m. and no incoming or outgoing calls were to be accepted or made. One student of the 50's reported to me that she along with a group of friends had some rotten apples sitting on a ledge outside their window in South Ruffner. A group of boys from Hampden-Sydney were outside the window and soon found themselves covered with the apples mysteriously thrown from the ledge. At 3:00 a. m. this must have been quite a scene!

The 1960's were tame featuring only a few unusual regulations such as not sitting on blankets in front of the dorms and sunbathing in dark clothes. Longwood College had been well established by this time and bringing with it, many of the trite rules of the past. In the late 60's and early 70's students were fighting the dress code, and developing a stronger student government. They fought the drinking rules along with other misdemeanors of the Social Code.

The past ten years have seen more changes than in any other. Many of the traditions have faded and few remain. This year alone will be marked as a time for many new things including males on campus. Would our older sisters thought this possible? Although we have seen some changes take place this year we may have to wait till next fall to see more progress.

Residence Board and Legislative Board have worked hard together this semester in passing and dropping many of the outdated rules that do not apply to us today. These will go before Dr. Willett and the Board of Visitors next for approval. With little luck they will have no trouble being passed and we will no longer be today's students troubled with the rules of the past. Once upon a time . . . never comes again.

The Bizzare Behavior Of Soap Opera Addicts

Lisa Turner, another freshman, chose the topic of soap operas because, "I was surprised because my roommate was watching them." When asked if she watched soap operas, she answered, "I watched one with Jill and it was very ridiculous." She claims that she will not begin to watch any, but says, "I can see how you'd get hooked because I was asking a lot of questions." Lisa's story follows.

By LISA TURNER

About seven weeks ago, I first noticed some bizarre behaviour on the part of my roommate, Jill. After lunch she would glance furtively at the clock, murmur something about checking the mail or getting change for the Coke machine, then disappear for two hours at a time, Monday through Friday.

This puzzled me a bit.

One day, while running an errand, I discovered the reason for all the secrecy. Jill is a soap opera addict.

I was surprised, and thought this was very amusing. I figured she was just bored, or doing it to avoid studying History or something, but when she began to reschedule her sun-tanning hours I began to worry a bit. I started noticing how crowded the New Smoker is during The Young and the Restless, and looking at the racks on magazine stands devoted to Daytime TV, TV Romance, and publications like that.

I could never figure out where the attraction lay. I remember the summer between 10th and 11th grade, when I spent a lot of time with a friend, Linda, who liked to watch General Hospital. Whether we were out playing tennis or just sun-tanning, we always seemed to end up in front of the television set at 3:00. Linda would absorb the high drama and excitement that must go on in every hospital, and I would eat potato chips and dip while my eyes glazed over with boredom.

I have since had my consciousness raised just a little. Several magazines have devoted entire articles to the social significance of daytime serials (Time did a cover story last year on the subject; Ms. Harper's, the New York Times Sunday Magazine and the New Yorker also published features on them) and I have seen a few talk shows which dealt quite seriously with what seems to be a pretty frivolous topic.

There is talk about their growing popularity among college students. A California housewife is doing a very profitable business sending out a newsletter on serial plots; The Washington Post recently began running a quick synopsis of stories near the TV listings each Monday in their style section. The genre has become popular enough to deserve its own satire (Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman) with the prospect of a new Norman Lear night-time serial arriving soon. Apparently someone is taking the soaps seriously.

The shows themselves have become a bit more socially-oriented in nature. Whereas family problems (the usual affairs, unexpected pregnancies, divorces and alcoholism) which made up the early serial plots still prevail, current soap operas are just as likely to mix in a few episodes on drug abuse, women's rights, mental health, child abuse, natural childbirth and abortion. According to Time, All My Children is rated one of the most popular among the younger audiences (college students and young professionals). The series has dealt with the problem of child abuse, recently, at the end of some episodes viewers were told where they could get help. Agnes Nixon, the show's creator, is very proud that one of her characters had television's first legal abortion. (Even so, this raised some problems with the Planned Parenthood movement because the character happened to be the show's bitchiest woman, and some felt this would tend to make viewers feel unsympathetic to the cause.)

One very highly-praised story line dealt with the problems that returning Viet Nam veterans faced; true, the war scenes were shot on a riverbank in Connecticut, but the episodes were filmed partially with Vietnamese actors.

One Life To Live shot its scenes on drug abuse from inside New York City's Odyssey House, complete with actual doctors and patients. This was in response to the plot, where one of the younger characters confessed she had tried drugs. Exactly how she got from the town of Llanview, somewhere in the Midwest, to New York, and why, was never specified.

Soap operas are still mainly concerned with the clash between good and evil; rich and poor. There are always plenty of sweet, clean minded heroines, and their wicked (and infinitely more interesting) sisters who lead wild, unhappy and dissipated lives. The Young and the Restless focuses on the relationships among the rich and elegant Brooks sisters (complete with sibling rivalry) and the less fortunate Foster family.

There are discrepancies in plots. One woman was killed when she fell up a flight of stairs on her wedding day; several characters have literally returned from the dead — they are found wandering around in Paris or New York, the victims of amnesia. Characters are replaced; sometimes whole personalities change. (One student, Pat Hartline, reports that her mother quit watching General Hospital in a fury when the whole show was overhauled. Some people still like familiarity.) Lapses in the writers' judgements are easily explained away by schizophrenia (which seems to rank as one of the most common mental states among characters, particularly unloved wives.) Once they have finally been born, children grow up at an alarming speed, practically overnight they are old enough to cause their parents much grief.

And there are plenty of children. Most soap opera characters have managed to reach the 1970's without ever hearing of contraception. Almost every affair ends in pregnancy. One observer, Ellen Peck, has complained with some truth, that the birth rate in soap operas rivals that of Latin America.

But some new trends have been capitalized on. More and more daytime serials are using black actors and actresses in important roles. (For a while, the Maryland PBS sponsored an all black serial, Our Street, but it was very short-lived.)

It is still hard to find blue collar characters, even though by most estimates the majority of the audience is low and middle income housewives. Sometimes a character will be given a Polish or Italian surname, but this is usually a very minor character who is soon written out of the script. (One show, Ryan's Hope, does chronicle the lives of an Irish family. This show also set another precedent in that it is set in New York City, whereas most series are set in fictional Midwestern cities.)

Longwood Ghosts: Fact Or Fiction?

The journalism students of English 210 have been required to write feature stories on subjects of their own choosing as their term project. The following four features were written for that journalism class.

Stacey Smith is a freshman who plans to pursue a career in communications. She chose as her subject the various ghost stories of Longwood. When asked why she picked that subject, she responded, "When I first came here... the upperclassmen came into my room and told me all these stories..." She continued, "People still sit around and eat popcorn and tell stories... and when there're no facts around, it makes you wonder."

Following is Stacey's story.

By STACEY SMITH

"Ghosts are the surviving emotional memories of people who have died tragically and are unaware of their own passing. A ghost is a split-off part of personality remaining behind in the atmosphere of their previous existence, whether a home or a place of work, but closely tied to the spot where their death occurred," says Hans Holzer in the book The Ghost Hunter's Strangest Cases.

And ghosts are one of the first things a Longwood College freshman is introduced to by the upperclassmen. Many legends, rumors and scary ghost stories have been handed down through generations of Longwood ladies. These stories bring to the bewildered freshman a few fears and to the upperclassmen a lot of good laughs.

The stories which mainly revolve around teachers and students on campus contain chilling tales of how they met with their deaths.

Dr. Jarman, one of the most famed ghosts on campus, has been spied attending productions in Jarman. One girl explained that he sits in the left side of the balcony. According to her, when ever his spirit is near, the stage right door in the studio theatre opens unattended. One night the players decided to hold a seance in order to contact his spirit. Deciding that the seance didn't work, one girl went for a walk outside and began talking to a man who was wandering around outside. They walked for a while and discussed various topics and later she returned to the building.

The other players in the meantime had been searching everywhere for her since she seemed to suddenly disappear. When she returned with the statement, "You all, I just met the neatest man," they were suspicious and showed her a picture of Dr. Jarman, who of course had been dead for quite a while. She declared that the man she had been talking with was in fact the man in the picture... Dr. Jarman. Dr. Jarman has also been accused of pulling tricks on the players. Often lights have gone out or not been turned on when they were supposed to come on. Investigations proved that it was not mechanical failure. Some players have drawn the conclusion that these tricks were not done by human hands. A Longwood graduate relates that on nights of a full moon the ghost of Dr. Jarman's dog, Bob, sits under the crabapple tree near the dining hall and howls. The dog is a black and white pointer.

The ghost of Dr. Stevens, who haunts the science building, met a grisly death on October 31, in 1945 when she grabbed one of her students experiments that was exploding and ran outside with it. Unfortunately, she received critical burns and died days later in Southside Hospital.

Several students report that her ghost has been heard moving around on third floor Stevens. One reports that the elevator in Stevens has climbed to third floor, opened for a few seconds, closed and returned to the bottom without anyone directing it. One of the science professors explains that this incident could be credited to a short in some wires circuits in the elevator. Others have been electric sparks jump back and forth between Wheeler, Cox and Stevens or South and Stevens on of course midnight Halloween night. This could be drawn to her burning ghost on a restless flight.

Another ghost, that resides in French, seems to have no specific origin. It has been speculated that it might be the ghost of a girl who died in a fire. But the girls who lived in the suite 314 and 315 last year, are not sure what it was. They remember hearing some strange knockings coming from inside of their walls. It seemed to move along inside, back and forth in the interior of the walls. At first they figured it was the girls next door, says Kim Padgett, a Longwood sophomore. But the next day they mentioned the occurrence and each thought it was the other. Kim recalls that one night it began tapping out the nursery rhyme, "Mary had a little lamb." The girls were frightened enough to talk to the RA and the Housemother, but most people think it was a joke and made nothing of it.

Most of the students who were interviewed, seriously believe that these strange happenings were the work of some restless ghosts or some sort of force. These events, though somewhat investigated by students, were never explained therefore the ghosts were given the credit.

For some residents on third floor South Cunningham, last semester was a question of what was to happen next. Their ghost liked to play little pranks on them. The two girls would often hear footsteps running down the hall late at night. Whenever they looked out to see who was there, not a person would be in sight. One resident would stand right next to the door and wait until the footsteps reached the outside of the door. Upon throwing open the door, she was astounded to find absolutely no one there.

Objects in their room would mysteriously disappear and then later appear just as quickly. Ashtrays would suddenly break with no one lending a human hand.

This same resident, Joan, remembers on one certain afternoon watching her roommate combing her hair. All of a sudden her roommate froze and turned chalk pale. Joan, not knowing what in the world was wrong, ran over to her and tried to find out what had happened. Her roommate seemed to be in some sort of trance and stood rigid staring in the mirror. Finally Joan got through to her and she somewhat hysterically yet abnormally calm explained that she had seen a woman walk by the window. It was a ghost and it was dressed in old tummy clothes and had high button up shoes and an ankle skirt. Joan asked if she was sure of what she saw, and she replied yes, I saw it.

Joan had no reason to question her roommate's sanity because she had come into some contact with some strange things herself. She recalls being asleep on her bed and feeling someone standing over her. Upon trying to open her eyes, she found that she couldn't, no matter how hard she tried. Her eyes seemed to be glued together. Once she got them open, she found no one in the room.

These girls absolutely believe in the spirits that occupy their room space also. They have no idea as to who the lady was, but it has been questioned that it could have been the ghost of Dr. Stevens. They are not afraid of these so called "ghosts" because no harm has been done to anyone and there has been no extensive damage to their possessions. In fact, the two girls have become very interested in supernatural forces and have done some research on the subject.

Many tales surround a girl and a fireman who died in the fire that occurred in the White House in the year 1949. Tabb was later built to replace the burned building. The Farmville Herald in the March 11, 1949 issue quotes Dr. Jarman as saying, "No one was hurt and there was no loss of life in this fire."

The ghost of the girl who was supposed to have died in the fire has been heard moving back and forth in the colonnade screaming "help, help." Sources prove that she did not die in the fire so where did this ghost evolve from? Perhaps she was created such as many others to frighten fellow students. Then again, if her ghost does exist why does she haunt the colonnade?

Another student reports that sometimes late at night the face of Mrs. Tabb can be seen reflecting out of a mirror. One student awoke one late night to see a woman rocking in a chair. This may have been Mrs. Tabb or it may have been a dream.

Though it is normally unusual for newer buildings to have ghosts, rumor indicates that the high rises are holding their own in the competition for a bigger and better ghost.

Frazer's ghost is a seven year old boy, who was accidentally killed while Frazer was being built. The young boy was playing on the elevator shaft and fell from a high level. As the story goes, his restless ghost rides up and down on the elevator late at night and the pitter-patter of his little feet have been heard on the halls. Another account of the boy's ghost gives the youngster the name, Stevie. It has been said that Stevie went up on the elevator to visit someone and disappeared on the way up. He has never been seen, or heard from again.

Margaret, a resident of Curry, reports that in the corner of her room on 6th floor, a small oval light appears every night. She is positive that it is not a light shining through the windows, and has noticed that occasionally it moves to the middle of the room.

Could this light be some force of the man who was working on the construction site of Curry and mysteriously disappeared? Was this man accidentally cemented into the foundations of Curry or did he just run away and was never seen again?

The Farmville Herald cannot recall any of these events happening during the construction of Frazer and Curry. The wife of the man heading the construction site of the high rises has never heard of a young boy being killed or a man disappearing. The clipping file on Longwood holds no record of these events either.

How can this campus contain ghosts of people who have never died? Are these stories merely made up to cause interest and excitement? Or is there really some basis for the Longwood ghosts?

In conclusion more data and extensive research would be needed to prove any question of the existence of these ghosts. And if enough information was collected would it be enough to settle in our minds whether Longwood ghosts are fiction or fact.

Soap Opera Addicts

It always seems that about 95 per cent of those employed are either doctors, lawyers, or nurses, and very prosperous ones at that. Women are finally beginning to enter the professional world in other than nurse-caretaker roles, although it is still their personal problems that are accented. And despite a hard day's work, they still manage to maintain spotless (neurotically clean?) homes.

In a way, it is probably good that there are so many doctors in attendance, because soap operas are depressingly morbid. The worst thing that could possibly happen invariably does. People don't catch colds; they contract spinal meningitis or brain tumors. This is probably very unsettling to another recognized segment of viewers — the bedridden. (Tabb's head resident, Mrs. Naomi Ordogh is very vocal on this point. She thinks that sick people should be forbidden to watch soap operas because "they're (the writers?) just in it to stir up people's emotions... no one should have to watch that kind of show.")

Sometimes a show will focus on a particular illness to inform (even though this is rare.) One soap opera provided its viewers with information on leukemia, and another featured a young woman who discovered she had uterine cancer because she neglected to have checkups. The producers of both shows were flooded afterward with letters from viewers, mostly complimentary. One woman attributed her life to a checkup she had after watching the show.

Even with incidents like this, people are still ashamed to admit they watch soap operas. And it is very hard to get a Longwood student to admit to enjoying them. Of all those interviewed, only one person admitted to rearranging her schedule in order to catch a favorite serial, and the rest all tried to give the impression that, well, if there was something better to do they wouldn't hesitate two seconds in switching. So why are so many people glued to the set during The Young and the Restless?

"I really don't know why I like them," Jill finally says after some thought. "I guess I get caught up in them. I don't think about anything else when I watch them... they're kind of an escape from everything. If you're watching a soap opera you're not thinking about the Botany test you just blew this morning."

(It is interesting to note how people claim to have begun watching their favorite soap operas. They will use passive tense — "I was caught up; I was addicted..." They will accuse their mothers and older sisters of influencing them; one girl blamed her boyfriend. They usually complain about that famous soap opera device — the cliff hanger ending each day, especially on Fridays. It does not seem to have occurred to anyone yet that you could tune in next Friday, or a month from Friday, and not have missed anything important. Time is remarkably flexible on the soaps — terminal illnesses drag on for years, burns heal rapidly, and one brave woman was pregnant for 18 months.)

Most viewers at Longwood do not think that the soaps have any particular social significance. Many said that they think that they are too unrealistic to teach anyone very much. Only one girl, Pat Hartline, admitted that she had learned anything from them and still did not see how she could apply it anytime soon. (Pat was referring to the Leboyer and Lamaze methods of childbirth.)

Jill is skeptical about soap operas because of all the hyperbole. "They are really dramatic. All this stuff probably does go on somewhere, but it's so ridiculous (that it happens all at once)..."

Jean Stephenson thinks that one could learn a lot about marriage and divorce from the soaps, but does not sound terribly convinced as she says this. She says she watches them mostly to pass the time away.

Everyone except Pat said that they watched the soaps solely because they had nothing better to do. Even Pat was not terribly impressed by their quality — she claimed that she just likes to watch TV, and that anything is better than the game shows on now — "They are a pure show of greed, period. When people dress up as carrots to make money..." Pat shrugs and looks mystified. She says that she would never think of watching a soap opera during prime time (The Nurses has been the only prime-time serial, and it failed disastrously a few years ago.) She has never watched Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman, and is not that interested in the upcoming Lear show. (Its premise is that women and men have completely switched roles.)

At the end of the summer I ran into some friends (male) who were discussing a recent plot on The Young and the Restless, but they have since miraculously forgotten any such conversation.

Most agree with Kevin Beisworth, who feels that the acting is cheap and the writers play on people's emotions.

Abortion: Hard Lesson To Learn

By DEBBIE MOUL

One of the most controversial issues today is abortion. Although many debates have been battled out over the pros and cons of abortion, many individuals are unaware of the facts centering around it. It is rapidly becoming a common, favored and simple procedure.

About one-third of legal abortions obtained in the United States are by teenagers, one-third by women twenty-five years or older and one-third by women in their early twenties. By 1975, approximately 1,000,000 abortions had been performed and recognized in the United States.

Several students on campus readily voiced their opinions on abortion. All of the girls agreed that abortion should be legalized. In the case of rape, an individual should have the right to obtain an abortion. When asked what advice they would offer a friend who is pregnant, the girls all replied that they would advise her to do what she thinks is best. If she can keep the baby, fine, but if she can't, then she should consider abortion. These girls would never simply say, "It's up to you." One girl in specific had several opinions on abortion and what action she would take. She would have the baby and give it up for adoption. If the baby were conceived out of love, she could not have it aborted. If she were to become pregnant and could not allow herself to have an abortion, she would have the baby and give it up for other childless families. The majority of males do not want and could not handle the responsibilities of fatherhood. When asked how the financial situation should or would be handled in the case of pregnancy and abortion, each girl was certain that her boyfriend would automatically pay for the entire thing. One girl though, believed that if the girl has the money, then she can pay. Many girls don't even tell their boyfriends so they handle the situation themselves. These are just a few of the many opinions that people have about abortion.

Everybody has opinions on the subject, yet many individuals do not really know what is involved with abortion. What is abortion? The technical definition of abortion is the expulsion or removal from the uterus of a fetus before it has attained viability, that is, before the born infant, with appropriate life support, has become capable of surviving and eventually maintaining an independent life outside the uterus. The majority of abortions are performed within the first trimester of pregnancy, the first twelve weeks.

Abortion is a stressful experience often involving risks to mental health. Accompanying an abortion is the usual feeling of relief. In order for others to gain a better insight into the events surrounding abortion, a Longwood student volunteered to relate her experience and psychological reactions.

When asked to sum up her abortion in a few words, she said, "My abortion was the most painful thing I've ever experienced and I pray that I never have to go through all that agony again." It doesn't bother her to talk about it because the more she talks about it, the easier it is to accept. The following is her account of her experience.

"First off, I want to say that not all women suffer as I did and not all women feel any sort of mental anguish. Abortion is a very individual thing and affects everyone differently. I just can't understand how they can go through that procedure, the preceding and the proceeding events, and not even be slightly affected or even feel some remorse or guilt."

"What really made it difficult for me was the fact that I come from a close family, all of my relatives and my own family as well. Everyone loves children, especially my mother and my sister. At times, before my abortion, I'd sit alone in my room and listen to music. All of a sudden, I'd burst out crying. I always had this one thought running through my mind; Mom...baby. My parents know that I'm not a virgin but they think that I stopped having sex one and a half years ago. It was so hard to keep it from them, especially from her for she can see right through me. I'm used to telling her everything. I wanted this baby. I really did, but with my current lifestyle, I knew that I wouldn't be able to raise a child properly. I'm still in school, I have no money and no father for the baby. What kind of life could I offer a growing child? I've hurt my parents a lot over the past few years and I know that something like this would literally kill them."

"I had been dating John for about seven months at the point of conception. I never used any protection nor did he. I have been having sex for over three years now and all I can say is, I've been damn lucky. Well, I came home for Christmas and saw John that very night. I'm pretty sure that it was that night that I conceived. I missed my period in January. It usually comes around the eighteenth of every month. I waited but it never came. Subconsciously I knew that I was pregnant but I tried to tell myself that it wasn't true. A friend of mine down the hall had had an abortion a couple of weeks earlier and so I related my symptoms to her; swelling of my breasts, frequent urination, loss or increase of appetite and I was continually tired. My grades were beginning to slip. The first week of February, I went to the Southside Hospital for a pregnancy test, a urine test. It cost me ten dollars and since my cheques go to my mother and then to me, I'd have to tell her some story as to my reason for writing a cheque to the hospital. They told me to go to the infirmary the next day to get the result of my test. You can bet that it was hard for me to get to sleep that night. The next day, another friend of mine and I went to the infirmary to get the results of my test. The nurse called me back and told me that the test was positive. I thanked her and went back to my room where the tears flowed instantly. I stopped crying and told myself that I had to be rational about the situation. There's a big difference thinking you're pregnant and knowing you're pregnant. Well, I went over to a friend's house who let me make the necessary long distance phone calls. It was about February 12 so I called this clinic that had been highly recommended to me. I'm from Northern Virginia so it was pretty handy. It was the Northern Virginia Women's Medical Center. They were really nice to me so I made an appointment for February 25. That would make me about eight weeks pregnant. The appointment was for 9:15 a.m. and I was to bring a sample of my first urine of the morning, a sanitary belt and I was not to eat or drink anything before the appointment. My next step and one that called for courage was going home that week end and telling John that I was pregnant with his child. I needed money and support. I saw him Friday night when I got home but did not say anything until practically the end of the evening. When I did tell him, he just got all quiet and then said that he'd give me seventy-five dollars, which is exactly what I wanted, half. He said that he'd take me and be there when I was done, after all, he said it was half his responsibility. He said that he should have insisted that I go on the Pill, but we never discussed it that much because I have set ideas about the conceptions of birth control. At the end of the evening, I told him that I'd call and let him know what my plans were. In the middle of the week, I called and told him that my appointment was for the following Friday. Everything appeared to be going smoothly. It was just a matter of time now. I did not sleep very well and at times I really lost my appetite. I was constantly tired and I could feel my grades slipping. My roommate was great and didn't hassle me. I really think that she was behind me all the way."

"Before I knew it, the time was here. My best friend took fifty dollars out of her account and my other friends loaned me money, too. Jill and I boarded a bus Thursday evening. We got into Springfield at 8:30 where another friend of mine, Pam, picked us up. I was going to stay at her house Thursday. I had a hard time getting to sleep but I finally did. I woke the next morning, showered and got Pam and Jill up. I had told John to meet me at Tysons Corners at exactly 8:30. Pam dropped us off at Tysons. John was fifteen minutes late. You'd think he could be on time for once. I was beginning to get hysterical so I took a walk. Pretty soon, I saw Jill and him coming down the mall. We were soon on our way."

We got to the clinic about five minutes late but it didn't matter. Deep down I was hoping that I was too late and would have to come back later. No such luck. The waiting room was like a morgue. You practically had to laugh to keep your sanity. All of the patient's friends were sent to the guest waiting room. Before they call you in, you have to pay. It's pretty scary when you think about it—handing over $150.00 in cold cash. I was then taken in and given a blood test and they took my blood pressure. Believe it or not, I wasn't really nervous or scared. My friends had assured me and psyches me up for the procedure. I walked into this little room. Two other girls were already there. The girl after me came in, hysterical and crying. That certainly didn't help clear the air. Then our nurse, Kathy came in. She had on jeans and a smock, very informally dressed. It made you feel really comfortable.

Altogether, there were four of us and Kathy in that little room. We talked for an hour or so, a counseling-type session. Kathy asked us what our feelings were, what made us decide to have an abortion, how our boyfriends reacted and other relative questions. She gave tranquilizers to those who wanted them. I did not take one because I wasn't really nervous. Then one by one, we were called in. I was the last person to go in. They left me all alone in that little room. By then, I was beginning to get a little uptight. Finally Kathy came in and asked me if I wanted to go sit in the recovery room with the others. I said yes and so she took me to an adjacent room. There were green and yellow La-z-boy recliners in two groups of four. Afghans were draped over them and little tables with bowls of cookies were placed between the recliners. I sat down next to Laurie, the first to go in. She had had two previous abortions. I asked how it was and naturally she said that it wasn't bad at all. Of course she wouldn't tell me if it really hurt. Holly came out next and told me the same thing. She didn't look too good, though. Connie hadn't come out when they called me in. I went into this little room that closely resembled a gynecologists office. I was told to disrobe completely and put my clothes in the designated bag. They left the room and so I got up on the table, properly positioned my body and placed my legs over the knee stirrups. When Kathy and the doctor came in, they were surprised at my preparedness, but I have spent a lot of time in front of gynecologists this past year, but that's another story in itself. Kathy stood beside me the entire time, telling me exactly what was going to happen. I told her not to tell me when I would get a shot. I hate shots and the thought of getting one internally makes me cringe."

"If I remember correctly, the first step was using this silver instrument, I forget the name, to open up or stretch the vaginal wall to enable the doctor to get a clear, unobstructed view of the uterus. After he has done this, he administers a local anesthetic, a shot on the cervix, the opening of the uterus. I didn't know the shot was coming. I jumped. I had assumed that since I had a firm, strong body and had been exercising properly, that I wouldn't experience much pain. Boy, was I wrong. Next, the doctor began to stretch my cervix by inserting a series of metal dilators, each slightly larger than the preceding one. That took about a minute but I know that I would have died if it had been longer. I must have squeezed the blood out of Kathy's hands. She tried to keep my mind diverted but it's hard to ignore pain like that. We talked about John and she quickly asked me questions about him and I would attempt to answer them through my cries of pain. That was sheer hell. When the cervical canal had been sufficiently enlarged, a plastic tube called a cannula was inserted into the uterus, to dislodge the products of conception from the uterine wall. This type of abortion is known as Uterine Aspiration or Suction Curettage. The uterine contents are sucked out by an electric pump connected to that plastic tube, the cannula. This takes about a minute and the pain I felt was fifty times that of menstrual cramps. Kathy kept telling me to relax my abdomen and to take deep breaths. The uterus rejects any foreign objects and it's sort of like a battle taking place in your abdomen and there is nothing you can do. After the procedure was completed, the doctor removed every piece of apparatus. I lay there, my abdomen was throbbing and I felt a little blood so Kathy fastened a very large and gaudy sanitary napkin to the belt around my waist. She told me that I have a very tight cervix and a strong uterus and that I should never have abortions. Boy, that made me feel lousy. Finally, yet, gradually, she helped me down off the table. I felt queasy and had to stop and gain my strength back. I walked slowly out into the recovery room and Kathy helped me into the recliner. Laurie, Connie and Holly were all there. I made a joke about the way they had all said, "Oh, it's not that bad." But I could not sit very long. I had the worst cramps. Kathy gave me some Tylenol and some ginger ale. I did not keep that down for long. I went into the bathroom and vomited. At the same time, I passed a clot. I felt a lot better after that. All of the nurses were really concerned about me and my somewhat green appearance. I just joked back and they were amazed that I could laugh at a time like this. It's all I could do to keep from crying. They made me a little bed on the floor upon which I rocked back and forth, crunched up like a potato bud. Meanwhile, Kathy delivered an informal lecture on the conceptions of birth control. She showed us each kind, explained how they worked and gave us the percent of effectiveness of each. She then asked each of us what type of birth control method we wanted to use. I got a two month free supply of the Pill. After she finished, one by one, we all got up and dressed. They took our blood pressure. They didn't want me to go but I assured them that I would be okay. I thanked them and left the room to get John and Jill. My pants were not zipped, my face was a combination of green and white, my hair was a mess and I was carrying my shoes. Right then Pam saw me, she sensed how bad it was for me. John got the car and I got in slowly. Once inside, he asked, "How do you feel? Did it hurt?" Oh, God, I could have killed him. Pam got on his case, too. For the first time in eight months, I snapped at him. He took us to a friends house around the corner from my house. Judy took me in, let me rest and fed me. I was famished. After about an hour, I got up, fastened my pants, put on my shoes and Pam and I walked slowly up to my house. Mom didn't know that I was coming home so it was a nice surprise. I just told her that I had cramps, my period and all. It was hard to keep everything from her. I felt really good on Saturday and Sunday."

"Well, to make a long story short, I started taking the pill, got violently sick over Spring Break and lost ten pounds. I was constantly popping pain pills. I stopped taking them and was miraculously cured. I had to tell mom and dad that I was taking it. I told them that there had been a few times when John and I had almost had sex. They seemed disappointed and were glad that I had stopped taking the Pill. It

Three Additional Works Enhance Sully Collection

Low Tide

By MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

The Thomas Sully Collection was established in 1971 with a monetary donation plus several art objects from Mrs. Jeanne Sully West. Mrs. West, a distant relative of the portrait painter now living in Buckingham County, made her donations with the desire to enrich the programs in art and to perpetuate the name of Sully.

In 1972 the Friends of the Thomas Sully Gallery Organization was established. They hold an annual benefit dinner and various other fund raising programs to support the organization.

The year 1973 saw an impressive exhibition of Sully works with pieces on loan from the Smithsonian Institute, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and other national galleries. Another similar exhibition is planned for early next year, yet it is hoped to include various works from Sully's contemporaries.

The Executive Committee was appointed in 1975. Members include: Miss Barbara Bishop, project director; Mr. Robert Whitton of the Longwood College Foundation; Mr. William Whidden of Farmville, Virginia; Mrs. Duval Ridgeway-Hull, an alumni from Roanoke; Dr. William Peele, of Longwood College; Dr. William Frank, of Longwood College, and Dr. Henry Willett, Jr., of Longwood College.

The existing collection has been enhanced with the addition of three new pieces. Low Tide by Jane Peterson was a gift from Martin Horwitz. Journey of Youth by Edward Cotes and Thomas Cole was purchased by the Friends of the Thomas Sully Gallery. Funds donated by the class of 1976 provided for the purchase of Eastman Johnson's Landscape. These additional works will be housed with the other works in Lancaster, totaling the collection to sixteen works.

The Friends of the Thomas Sully Gallery foresee the construction of a separate gallery to house the collection in the near future. They also hope to expand the collection to include more works by various 19th century American artists.

Renowned artists of the 1800's include the portrait painter Gilbert Stuart, the Hudson River School artist Thomas Cole, and local color artist Caleb Bingham. Sully, a native of England, moved to this country at the age of nine. He began his study and career in art under his brother and brother-in-law. Traveling back and forth between Philadelphia and England, American Gilbert exerted influence on Sully, as did English Sir Thomas Lawrence.

Journey of Youth

Sully's work has been described as being rich in color and sensitive to lines. He has exhibited controlled but free brush strokes, and balance in composition.

Last week Robert Mayo, a museum consultant, was employed by the executive committee to assist the committee in the development of the Sully Collection and Gallery. Mayo served for nine years as director of the Valentine Museum. He was curator of the Jamestown Festival Park for three years and also served as curator for the North Carolina State Department of Archives and History.

Mayo's assignment with the Sully Gallery will include: the development of the gallery master plan; development and implementation of an overall fund raising program; serving as an adviser in the purchase of art suitable for the collection; investigation and recommendation of potential donors, and assistance in the conservation of the collection.

The Sully Collection in Lancaster is now available to all students. The gallery is a method of education to students as well as becoming an established gallery in Southside Virginia.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

The past year has not been without change. All of the changes which have occurred have not been because of coeducation, yet the arrival of male dorm students did force some changes. Male and female residents have also asked for other changes which have yet to be realized. There has been fussing between students and the boards and the administration. Challenges to existing policy have been voiced, and where-as the word 'challenge' may suggest negative connotations, it should also suggest growth. When students, after having the charge of apathy slapped in their face time and time again, are concerned enough to voice their opinions, complaints and suggestions, that is growth. Yet that should not, and must not be the end of the progress. Students can speak out all they want but if there is no positive action taken to genuinely consider the situation, then all growth will diminish.

For greater growth there must be efficient communication between students, the boards and the administration. Presently the system of communication and information is somewhat uncomprehensible. There seem to exist some policies only in the minds of the administration, policy which is not written down, and policy which students have no way of being informed of. Policy of this kind, such as administrative probation, is unfair. Until a student exhibits such behavior as the administration would believe to warrant administrative probation, the student is ignorant as to the existence of such policy. And if this policy is unrecorded, what other policies are unrecorded? And why is any policy unrecorded, unavailable to the student? Doesn't this seem to be a break down in communication?

Of course there is the student handbook, which many officials and administrators seem to have memorized. Yet even within the handbook there are obstacles to open communication. The handbook states that there exists a statement of student rights and responsibilities, yet one has to go elsewhere to locate it. And then when one goes elsewhere to locate it, he is told that all that is recorded in it is not legally binding. If the written word is not legally binding, why have it recorded?

More change is needed to overcome communication barriers and to secure accurate information. When students speak and ask questions, they need to be listened to, and their questions need to be answered. Failure to do so will result in anything but growth, and more than likely in apathy.

(Because the Rotunda contains a human interest news story centering around the breaking of a residence regulation, this does not mean that the Rotunda condones the breaking of the regulation; the Rotunda is simply reporting a news story.)

Individual Rights

By MARTHA BLACKBURN

Judicial Board seems to believe that they hold the right to search a students room. We would like to know where they obtained such power!

We are not condoning the use of drugs, however, if a search is to be held, it should be done so legally. Students at a Michigan College had their rooms searched by college officials (no warrant) and marijuana was found. The situation is much like Longwoods. Two of the students were suspended from the college, and therefore, they filed suit. The case is known as Charles Smyth vs. Lubben. The court held that the protection of the Fourth Amendment was afforded the students. They were adults and entitled to the same rights or privacy as any other adult in our society. The Dorm room was their home for all intents and purposes and they have the same right of privacy as though it were a "house" protected by the Fourth Amendment. The Fourth Amendment applies even if college officials or college authorized persons conduct the search. It made no difference that the students had signed a dorm paper waiving search or consenting to regulations about search. He did not waive his rights under the Fourth Amendment. The Court rejected the theory that college officials, because of regulations, may infringe on the outer limits of a student's constitutional rights.

In the case Shelton vs. Tucker in 1960 the Supreme Court held that a magistrate (judge) must issue a search warrant. The Court also stated that evidence cannot be used before a college judiciary board unless a proper legal warrant was obtained for the search.

The Tinker vs. Des Moines School District case of 1969 sums up "in our system, state operated schools may not be enclaves of totalitarianism. School officials do not possess absolute authority over their students." The Supreme Court states in Shelton vs. Tucker "the vigilant protection of constitutional freedom is nowhere more vital than in the community of American Schools."

Unless a legal search warrant is issued by a judge, it is beyond

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

ADMINISTRATION QUESTIONED

Dear Editor,

I am currently a freshman and am writing to comment on two things in the issue of the Rotunda of two weeks ago.

About the death of poor dear departed Rebel: I realize it must still be painful to the grief-stricken fathers to have his name brought up, and although it is insensitive of me I feel I must. I had met Rebel only briefly but I had, like all who knew him, felt his charm and it was with real sorrow that I learned of his passing. However, under Residence Hall's regulations' item number three (page 62 in the student handbook) it clearly states that "students may not have pets or stray animals in their residence halls". I question the responsibility of the Rotunda in condoning the breaking of this rule. I question even more strongly the obvious part of Bill Breeden in breaking this rule. As Tabb Dorm president, his responsibility is to see that rules are observed. I believe that the "no pets" rule is ridiculous but as long as it stands it should be obeyed. If you disagree with a rule it should be changed, not blithely ignored. I wonder if Mary Meade Saunders would be better off tracking down rule violations such as this rather than harassing students on suspected violations.

This brings me to the second reason for this letter. Billy Rogers was expelled from Longwood without trial by Judicial Board. True, he was expelled from school by the Administration after Miss Saunders went to them. He had also been warned that one more violation would cause his expulsion, but does being somewhat curi with Miss Saunders constitute a violation? Even so, does the Administration really have the right to expel him without due process of what is supposed to be Longwood College policy? This is setting a dangerous precedent. If the Administration can ignore the policy of the school in such a way as to expel a student without letting her or she be tried then we might just as well get rid of the Judicial Board. It is in violation of the students' rights — if they can do it to Billy they can just as easily do it to anyone else who displeases them or wounds Miss Saunders' pride.

I'm asking the Administration to please speak up — give us your reasons or make a statement of some kind. Why are you letting all the blame for something that was at least 50 per cent your responsibility lay on the shoulders of Miss Saunders? Are you ashamed or asleep? I am asking the student body not to let this be forgotten until it is rectified. Don't let the good things that Longwood once stood for be forgotten.

Thank you,
Melissa Kay Cutting

ADMINISTRATIVE SUPPORT

Dear Editor,

Since beginning Longwood in the fall I have read many letters to the Editor of the Rotunda complaining about the rules, policies and the administration of Longwood. Only a few of these letters have explained why a rule, policy or the administration is unfair and none to my knowledge have offered an adequate solution to any problem. Speaking for myself and others at Longwood, I wish to express a few opinions and facts.

I am a male student at Longwood and it is a fact that the administration has been most helpful and cooperative on every occasion I have needed assistance, and I know of others who have had the same experience.

If you complain that Longwood is not putting out 100 per cent effort, can you honestly say you are?

What I believe some of the students at Longwood must do is:

1. Realize they chose to come to Longwood in spite of archaic, asinine rules, that rules can and are changed, but not by complaining. Certainly there are rules that need to be changed but here is a legitimate method to follow if this is to happen.

2. Realize that the administration at Longwood's first concern is to see that you can receive a good education and are qualified in your chosen field, and hopefully mature enough to succeed in it. If you feel the administration should be replaced, whom do you feel should replace them? Surely you don't think you are qualified to do so.

3. Offer constructive suggestions on how "to go co-ed with 100 per cent enthusiasm" for example, and support the boards elected by the majority of the student body in their efforts to do so. They were elected by you to serve you.

4. Decide through which window Longwood College Policy should be thrown and submit a better one to replace it.

I too would like to wish some of the students at Longwood luck for if they spend their lives complaining and asking for a change without being willing to develop and support a better system, they are definitely

Sincerely,
Averett Jones

A Plea For Mutual Effort And Trust

By ELLEN CASSADA

After having experienced Longwood College for four years, there are several questions I would like to ask. Most questions have surfaced in the past year, as coeducation and paranoia have been struck. Defensive walls higher than Curry and Frazer have been erected, and actions "In the best interest" of students have resulted in suspension for some.

What's the big deal behind coeducation? Do the guys have a secret plan to destroy the school and its image? Are they plotting to change the system overnight? There have been no major changes this past year, unless chocolate milk and the extension of open house hours can be considered some changes.

Let's face it, Longwood, this

This year's J.V. lacrosse team finished an undefeated season with a 4-0-1 record. The last game was played at Lynchburg College April 19. The Longwood J.V. team overpowered Lynchburg with a 17-1 victory. Barbara O'Brien had 1 goal, Janie Carson 4, Jo Woo 1, Katie Trainer 3, "Skeet" Forthuber 3, Linda Eagle 2, and "Fuzz" Schivone had 3. The J.V. defense played strongly this year with the help of co-captain Pam Hazelgrove. Defensive players, Teresa Ware and Wanda Peterson have also contributed much. Linda Eagle, the other Co-captain, was a leading force in the offense. The team has played consistently well together and has learned a lot this year.

The Varsity team lost in an extremely close game with Lynchburg, 8-7. Again, the team really played all out late in the second half, but time ran out too soon. The four scorers were Jenny Morrow with 3 goals, Terry Voit with 2, and Carol Filo and Terry Donahue with 1 each. The attackers took the ball down to the goal on several occasions, but were not quite able to capitalize due to bad passes and shots.

Much credit goes to the defensive players for putting forth a great effort throughout the year. Special recognition goes to Debbie Daniels and Scottie Capehart, who were two fine defensive players. Co-captains, Terry Voit and Cathy Holt provided leadership for the varsity team. The varsity record was 1-6.

Two of the players, Cathy "Little" Holt and Barbara O'Brien, will be graduating this year. Several others played their last season this year because they will be student teaching next year.

Both teams appreciated the help of the team managers, Dorreen Shuffler and Rhonda Brown. Everyone on both teams put out their finest efforts and displayed good sportsmanship.

This week end the varsity team and substitutes traveled to Sweetbriar to participate in the VWLA Tournaments.

Frazer Wins Softball Championship

By D.J. LINDSEY

Warm weather, a cool breeze, the sun shining, these were the background conditions for the first Men's Softball Intramurals Championship game as Frazer and South Cunningham prepared to do battle. It was only fitting that for the championship game; it would turn out to be the best game played this year. Frazer came into the game humming with confidence, and with good reason, they had won all the past games by a combined score of 42-15. But Frazer was quickly brought down to earth by South Cunninghams' pitcher Wayne Dunkley, who's knuckle ball baffled all the Frazer batters. The game settled down into a defensive battle with neither team able to ignite anything until South Cunningham scored in the third. The score remained 1-0 until the 5th final ending. Frazer was up to bat and this was to be the last chance. With this in mind, Frazer erupted for five runs to put the game away 5-1.

It was a great game by both ball clubs and South Cunningham gave a good account of themselves. But, the winner of the first annual men's softball intramurals was Frazer Dorm.

Sunday, April 17, the Longwood Archery team went to Madison College to compete in a shoot. Longwood came in second with 2067 points. East Stroudsburg State College finished first with a total of 2146 points. Madison was in last place with 1966 total points. Longwood's leading scorer was Colleen Blakely, who tied for second place in the women's individual competition, with a score of 718. Carolyn Henshaw, with 703 total points, finished fourth in the individual competition.

Longwood hosted the VFISW Tournament Tuesday, April 19. Only two other colleges besides Longwood participated. Longwood, for the fourth year in a row, captured the first place title in women's team competition with a total score of 2781. Madison came in second with 2616 points and Westhampton had 2059 points.

There were two rounds of Eastern 600's shot, one in the morning and one in the afternoon. Colleen Blakely shot 506 in the first round and a 482 in the second, for a total score of 988. Both scores were All American (480 or above for women is necessary), which gave her first place in the women's individual competition. Carolyn Henshaw came in second, shooting 474 and 470 for a total of 944 points. The third place winner was from Madison, Cindy Dupre, who shot a 469 and 472 for a total of 941 points. The other Longwood archers scored as follows: Kitty

Hicks scored 849, Penny Norford 636, and Betsy Crupper 383.

The only male participants were from Madison. Rick Kiser shot a 524 and a 520 to capture the first place position of the men's individuals. Second was Tom Cox with a 502 and 516. Phil Bruce, was third with 490 and 504. An All American Score for men in an Eastern 600 is a score of 510.

Acting as Lady Paramount for this year's tournament is Ann Somerville, who was a 1976 Longwood graduate and an outstanding Longwood archer.

This week end the women's archery team went to the Philadelphia Invitational at Fairmount Park, where competition is for a NAA 900. Then they will go to Eastern Regionals in Wildwood, New Jersey, at the Wildwood Convention Hall. At regional, the team will shoot a FITA 1 (60 arrows from 18 meters at a 40 centimeter target face). Colleges from Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, and Virginia will be competing.

Tennis Team Sets

New Record

By BENNIE SHAW

The Longwood College Tennis Team closed out its 1977 season with two impressive victories over Randolph-Macon and Bridgewater. The matches were determined by the scores of 8-1 and 9-0 respectively. Their two victories enabled Longwood to finish the season with a 10-0 record. This marked the most victories recorded by the L.C. team in sixteen years.

Coach Harriss, who has coached the team since 1961, said of this year's team, "What can I say, our record speaks for itself; and I am extremely pleased and proud of the girls." She continued, "We have a young team and if they continue to work hard we have a very bright future."

In the Longwood-Bridgewater match, the score was Longwood, 9, and Bridgewater 0.

Quarles defeated Wateshouse 7-5, 6-2; Koehlein defeated Derrow 7-6 6-1; Stephens defeated Buckmoyer 5-7, 6-1, 6-0; Harwood defeated Ryan 6-0, 6-4; Barrett defeated Stivers 3-6, 6-4, 6-1; Donnelly defeated Bittner 6-2, 6-0.

In the doubles, Harwood-McLawnhorn defeated Buckmoyer-Miller 6-4, 6-0; Koehlein-Quarles defeated Ryan-Stivers 6-4, 6-3; Barrett-Stephens defeated McAllister-Gohagan 6-0, 6-2.

Legislative Board

Board Passes New Hours

By DEBBIE WEBB

IT HAS BEEN PASSED!! Last night (in case you didn't already know) open house hours began during the week 7:00-10:00 Monday-Thursday.

The majority of the meeting was spent reviewing constitutions. A report will be made when they are completely passed.

Students are needed to serve as board members for summer school. Anyone who will be at Longwood for summer school and who is interested in serving on one of the boards should contact Linda Crovatt, Box 224.

Pitch-In Week was last week, and we hope that everyone has seen at least one of the efforts by Legislative Board to beautify the campus. Under the leadership of David Reins, Dottie Labahn, and Mike Markley, board members have been planting grass seed and roping off the worst areas in hopes that grass will eventually grow there again.

Last night was our last meeting, so I won't make any further comments about coming to the board meetings. We all hope that everyone feels the board has served them well, and brought up any matters that concern you.

was supposed to have so many ill-effects."

"So, here I am, trying to forget everything and John. I broke up with him on March 14, exactly nine months that we had been dating. He wasn't beside me at all. I don't think he even cared or understood or tried to for that matter. I was hurt badly but I'm now looking into the future and of good things to come. I learned by lesson the hard way."

world is composed of males and females, and all have to work together to see proposed changes become realities. Both administrators and students need to take their masks off and meet each other face-to-face. A little honest communication and trust could go a surprisingly long way.

It is the responsibility of the administration to protect individuals on campus against physical or other harm. The "Joint Statement on Rights and Freedoms of Students," which was prepared by representatives of the American Association of University Professors and various other college associations, serves as a guideline for Longwood procedures. It is not legally binding, but it was approved in 1969 by the Board of Visitors, faculty and administration, and Legislative Board. Under the section "Standards of Conduct Expected of Students," it states that "Disciplinary proceedings should be instituted only for violations of standards of conduct formulated with significant student participation and published in advance through such means as a student handbook." With this in mind, what is "administrative probation?" Is it written down anywhere, or is it one of those discretionary powers to be used as an administrator sees fit and on whom he sees fit?

There have been incidents where students have been pronounced guilty even though they defend their innocence. In the Joint Statement, there is a paragraph that states, "In all situations, procedural fair play requires that the student be informed of the nature of the charges against him, that he be given a fair opportunity to refute them, that the institution not be arbitrary in its actions, and that there be provision for appeal of a decision." What justification is there for suspension without a trial by peers? How can a long term suspension be in the best interest of some students? It would seem more likely that an education is in the best interest of anyone who wants it. Who is impartial enough to say that an act was either right or wrong? There is a very fine line between the two, and attitudes and personality conflicts are causing too many harsh decisions.

But the administration is not the only area of concern. This semester has been a proposal for an investigative committee written up, presented, and tabled not once but twice. It is unlikely that it will be voted on until next fall. When students go through the proper channels for changes that are wanted and needed, they are tables. The investigative committee has been talked about for almost a year now, and it's time for a little action. What kind of student government do we have when proposals are not voted on the same semester as they are proposed? Issues can be discussed until they are buried in words, and the investigative committee seems destined for rejection. One argument is that seniors won't be here next year and therefore a vote shouldn't be taken until the next freshmen class arrives. Who knows better than seniors the changes that are needed? Does four years of experience count for anything?

Many seniors have become disheartened and a little disgusted with Longwood College. Good ideas have been forgotten, and good students have left because of exaggerated charges and personality conflicts. How about a little mutual effort and trust? Think about it, Longwood—that's a new idea that might just work.

Convocation And Capping-Week For Seniors

By JAN TURNER

"I don't know about you, but I sure am glad to be a senior!" exclaimed Sue Rama, president of the class of 1978, at senior capping. A year that has been long awaited by many is finally here, and will go by faster than any others have before. It will be a year filled with anticipation and decision-making, as well as excitement and good times. One senior described her forthcoming year as "hard work, a lot of hard work."

During the past four years at Longwood, some students have proven themselves as outstanding achievers. One organization that recognizes such achievement is Geist. Tapping only juniors and seniors, Geist recognizes three qualities in the student — scholarship, leadership, and service. Two seniors were tapped in last Tuesday evening's ceremony: Ginger House and Sue Rama.

Ginger is an elementary education major from Emporia, Virginia. She is a member of Alpha Sigma Tau sorority, served on the Freshman Commission during her first year, and was a junior representative to Legislative Board. "The only time I really had any idea that I would be tapped was when the two Geist members walked around the auditorium for the last time — not until that moment. My whole four years flashed in front of me. I realized then how much I loved Longwood and how many friends I had made. I was so shocked I trembled all over." Even though she will miss school, she is looking forward to life after graduation in May. "I feel like I've been given one of the best educations at any college there is. I'll always have memories of what went on here at Longwood, but I realize that college life can't go on forever."

Coming to Farmville from Chesapeake, Virginia, is Sue Rama. She is seeking her B.S. degree in business administration, and plans to teach. Sue has played varsity basketball and volleyball, as well as making the Dean's List in 1976, serving as a Colleague in 1975 and an Oktoberfest usher in 1976. "I was very surprised and very shocked when I made Geist. It was a great feeling. Becoming a member of Geist is an extreme honor to me." Sue also feels her years here at Longwood College have been worthwhile. "I'll miss Longwood and the people I've met here. The more you're here, you meet people and make friends that mean a lot to you. I don't think I'll ever lose contact."

The next event to take place was senior capping, which occurred last Wednesday evening in Jarman Auditorium. Dressed in their gowns, the seniors were seated, with their little sisters directly behind them. This ceremony was a meaningful one to all who were involved. Margaret Hill, a little sister to Barbara Suttle, describes her feelings: "Being only a sophomore, it really hadn't phased me yet what it felt like to be a senior. I realized what it would be like when I placed the cap on her head. I was just as excited as she was." To add a special touch to the ceremony, all little sisters made the cap tassels themselves. Some even symbolized what the seniors had done in college. Laughter filled the auditorium as the seniors were capped, along with hugs and a few tear-filled eyes. A reception immediately followed the event in the Gold Room.

Convocation, the final event and perhaps the most important one before graduation, took place last Thursday afternoon. Proceeding in a double line to "Trumpet Tune in D Major," professors entered the auditorium and were seated in front. Seniors walked in a single line directly behind. Dean Wells then introduced the Longwood Scholars. To be a scholar, the student must maintain a cumulative average of 3.5, and must be interviewed by a review committee. They were asked to stand — first juniors, then sophomores, and last, but not least, the freshmen. This was followed by Sue Rama's introduction of the guest speaker, Dr. Harrison B. Wilson, President of Norfolk State College.

Dr. Wilson is an honor graduate of Kentucky State College where he majored in Health and minored in Sociology. With distinction from Indiana University, he earned the Master of Science degree in Health, Physical Education and Administration; and the doctorate in Health Science and Administration. He is married to the former Lucy Reed, who is a scholar and Professor of Education at Old Dominion University, in Norfolk, Virginia. They are the proud parents of six children.

Dr. Wilson remarked that he felt quite at home here at Longwood. He congratulated Dr. Willett for strive, a reputation for academic standing, and for progress. To the faculty and seniors, he wished them well with all future endeavors. "The future of our young people is so intertwined — part of the fun of growing older is not only watching young people achieve, but being there with them while they do so." He related to the student body a story of an eagle that was raised as a chicken. Though the bird was an eagle, it knew only how to act as a chicken because it had been treated as one. A naturalist came upon the eagle and wanted the bird to be what it was intended to be — an eagle. He forced the bird to gaze into the sun, and realizing its true being, the bird spread its wings and flew away, never to return. "Circumstances of life have made us think we are chickens, but we are eagles. We must stretch our wings and look into the sun."

"Longwood College is merely the educational basis for our future," remarked Dr. Wilson. He said three objects were needed in life for shape and substance: a polisher, a pair of binoculars, and parenthesis. The polisher should be the hand type. When finished with college, the student should expect a good deal of hard work. The student is ready for that first job, ready to go out into the world — and it's not that easy. "You'll have feelings of being underqualified. This isn't to blame the institution or the educators, but you won't be altogether ready for the future."

"The second object is a pair of binoculars. They enable us to see views we cannot otherwise see. We are able to lift our courage and spirits. This is a process that doesn't stop at the age of eighteen, but continues on throughout our lives. This is sure knowledge that we should never stop learning."

The third and final object needed in life is parenthesis.

It is the qualifier the humanizer. Just to learn a little is dangerous. Education isn't enough. Parenthesis is also a symbol of a broader view. People as well as things are included. It helps us to maintain a sense of personal perception. Our goals must be inner-directed." He ended his speech with a line from Langston Hughes' poem about life. "Life for me ain't been no crystal stair . . . I'm still climbing." Afterwards, everyone joined in singing one verse from "America" which added special meaning to convocation.

During the past week, the seniors were unbelievably busy. Excitement, as well as a few groans and grumbles arose. "It feels good being a senior," Sue Bona remarked. "We've had one meeting after another — if it wasn't convocation it was always something else! I'm about to drop dead. I don't know any school that has been as busy as we have. You go up to U.Va. and you don't even know anybody, here it's close. I'll be glad when it's all over though!" Another senior, Penny Webb, remarked, "I'm very glad I came to Longwood — I haven't regretted a minute of it. I will be very glad when I leave. In fact, I've counted 247 days until graduation!"

This last year at Longwood will mean many different things to each individual. To most seniors it will be a most special one. But along with the good times, there will be hours of seemingly endless work for others. It will be a year of preparation for life out in the real world. Here, students have been protected as they were in their homes to a certain extent. Counselors, deans, and professors have provided them with guidance. Parents still play a role. After this year, seniors are on their own. It must be an exciting feeling, as well as an apprehensive one. The future will bring whatever it will bring and they must be ready to face it.

Blair Adds Experience To TR Program

By DEBBIE MOUL

There's a new face on campus, a friendly face, the face of Bob Blair. Mr. Blair, a new professor with the Therapeutic Recreation department here at Longwood graduated from the University of North Carolina where he also obtained his M.S. degree.

Before coming to Longwood, Mr. Blair maintained several Therapeutic Recreation oriented positions. He was employed with the Veteran's Administration for three years, a practitioner in the field for the Federal Government for six years, with the Arlington County Department of Recreation and Environmental Affairs working with Special Populations and he was a Director of an Easter Seals Camp in Southern Pines, North Carolina.

Why Longwood College? Mr. Blair states that he was unchallenged in his work with the government and thought that he would give the field of education a "real go". His acknowledged rapport with students is admirable and many have served internships under him.

The need for Therapeutic recreation is crucial and great for it is not only a broad field but an important one as well. Mr. Blair claims that he himself has much to learn. Therapeutic Recreators must be motivated and be able to work on a one-to-one level with other individuals. The department not only prepares Therapeutic Recreation majors but also those with T.R. background to work in any recreational area, yet they serve their internships in one specialized area.

Mr. Blair enjoys tennis, family camping and horses. He is a resident of Boonsboro, Maryland and goes home every week end to be with his wife and their little adopted boy. Hopes are high for adopting a girl in the near future.

As one of the advisors for the newly founded Therapeutic Recreation Majors Organization here on campus and as a professor, Mr. Blair wants to do the best job that he can here. It will be a lot of hard work and long hours yet he hopes to make the other departments more knowledgeable as to what Therapeutic Recreation is and to form some type of interdisciplinary relationship with them and the community.

T.R. Majors And Instructors Hope To Organize Club

By PAULA JOHNSON

Cerebral palsy, one hundred percent disablement due to an accident of war, the mentally handicapped . . . It is doubtful that the average Longwood student will ever face these or similar cruelties of life in their lifetimes, but to those who are majoring in Therapeutic Recreation, these will be no rare things. Therapeutic Recreation (also known as T.R.) is open to all fields of physical therapy such as in veterans' hospitals and in geriatric centers. T.R. is a new field and Longwood is the first Virginia school to offer it as a major.

To gain work in Therapeutic Recreation, one must have certification for the various levels of the field. The lowest level, a T.R. Technician, requires a two year associate degree. The second level, a T.R. Leader, requires a four year B.S. degree plus experience in an internship with a recognized group. The third level, which is a T.R. Specialist, requires a B.S. degree of four years plus experience with a recognized group. The fourth level, which is a Master Therapeutic Recreation Specialist, must have a master's degree in T.R. as well as two years' experience.

On Wednesday night, September 7, the first meeting of the Therapeutic Recreation Majors Organization was held in the A-B rooms of Lankford. The meeting, led by Bill Hesse, was to organize the group, to set up standards and goals, and to elect a committee to run the organization. Hesse, as well as the organization's backers, Tom Steinocher and Bob Blair, stressed the fact that the organization should exploit T.R. throughout the school and the community for sponsoring activities for the locally handicapped, attending conventions, and bringing in guest speakers.

The audience was receptive to the ideas and goals that Steinocher, Blair, and Hesse were aiming to achieve. All T.R. majors are encouraged to get involved with the organization, to push T.R., and to make Longwood a recognized school in Therapeutic Recreation. The organization has scheduled their next meeting for Thursday, September 15, from 1:00-2:00 p.m. in the A-B rooms of Lankford and all T.R. majors are encouraged to attend.

New Science Equipment

By JUDY FAIRES

Thanks to Dr. David Novak some science students will have some new and helpful instruments this year. The apparatus was very generously made available to Longwood by the University of Virginia, at a substantial discount.

The equipment will be used by chemistry and physics students, some of the equipment dealing with electronics. A special room has been set aside for usage of the new instruments this year.

Also acquired by the Natural Sciences Department is a very large amount of chemicals, second hand, which were also found by Dr. Novak.

IRC Sponsors Program

By KAREN SHELTON

Grady Nutt, the Prime Minister of Humor, will be speaking Thursday, September 22, on Lankford Mall. This Christian Humorist who has made eleven appearances on The Mike Douglas Show says that all of him enjoys "keeping folks happy." This Inter-Religious Council sponsored program will begin at 6:30.

Riding Club Meeting

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

How to teach riding to the handicapped will be discussed by freshman Leanne Mattox at the first meeting of the Longwood Lancers.

The Lancers, a campus riding club, will meet in the Physical Education Lab in Tabb basement at 12:45 Thursday. The club has between 12 to 15 members and invites any interested student or faculty member to attend this meeting.

The Lancers sponsor fall and spring horse shows, a Wheels trip to the International Horse Show at Capital Center, clinics, films, and a social. This year they also hope to have a community service program for the local handicapped.

Miss Bush, a faculty sponsor of this organization, calls the club an "educational endeavor" and says it is open to everyone.

Kappa Delta Pi

By PEGGY ALEXANDER

The members of Kappa Delta Pi will conduct an initiation ceremony on Thursday, September 15, at 5:30 p.m. in the Alcove Banquet Room. Dinner will follow the initiation at 6:00 p.m.

Kappa Delta Pi is a national honor society of education. Juniors having six hours of education and seniors who have earned twelve hours of education are entitled to membership if they have a 3.2 cumulative average. Psychology 240 or Psychology 250 may meet the three hours of education requirement.

Please get in touch with Dr. Aubry in the Education Department or Peggie Alexander if the preceding qualifications are met.

New Sports Information

Director Recently Appointed

By JUDY FAIRES

Bette McKinney, who has been a teacher here at Longwood for four years, was recently appointed Longwood's Sports Information Director. She is the first person ever to hold this office, and she views the position as a very interesting challenge.

Ms. McKinney will act as a coordinator for the new public relations office, which is currently working on a brochure for Women's Intercollegiate Athletics. This program includes several teams which have been state champions.

The change from an English professor to the head of the Sports Information Office did not happen suddenly as Ms. McKinney served a one-year internship at the Public Affairs Office. She is still doing some work in that office, as well as her new job and her teaching.

The women's program will offer the following intercollegiate sports: tennis, basketball field hockey golf, volleyball, gymnastics, lacrosse, and fencing. The men's program will offer soccer and basketball as intercollegiate sports. Riding and archery teams will be coed.

Hey, I Think I'm Gonna Like This Place

By KIM LAUTERBACH

Before school started this fall, many freshmen were running around preparing for a totally new experience—college.

The Rotunda was interested to find out the first impressions of those students coming to Longwood and see how this year's freshman class felt about their new college experience.

Many seemed to have realized that college life would be a vast change from high school but weren't exactly sure what to expect.

"We were looking forward to college. We felt like we were moving into an apartment and that the next day we would get up and go to work. We did! We also soon realized that college life requires a lot of studying," agreed Kim Wood and Mary Kirkman.

Some looked at moving away from home as an "advanced way of playing house," as Anna Staley puts it. "My roommate and I looked forward to decorating our room," added Polly Sorg.

With the adjustment of college life came the varied feelings of leaving home. Some were happy and some were sad. However you felt, the majority admitted that they would miss home, at least until they had adjusted to college life.

Sandra Lassister looked forward to going home every week end. "I think it makes the week go by faster," commented Sandra. Whereas Nancy Colella lives in Albuquerque, New Mexico, she recalls that Saturday she came to Longwood alone. "I was really nervous at first. I wasn't sure what was going to happen to me until I was greeted by such friendly people. Then I knew everything would be alright."

Generally most agreed that the friendliness and warm welcome given by the colleagues made the change of pace a lot easier.

"I missed my parents after they left but I wanted to get out and explore the campus and meet new people. Besides, the people here made me feel like I was right at home," joyfully explained Tammy Bird.

As the first day of college rapidly approached, many soon-to-be freshmen, had assorted emotions. Emotions of panic on the first day, sadness saying good-bye to old friends, memories of what high school was like, the excitement of a new experience and the joy of meeting new friends. But with this mixture of emotions, good and bad alike the Freshmen class seems to be adjusting well to their new life at Longwood. It seems that most have come to feel as Tammy Bird feels, "... right at home."

Students To Benefit From Recently Purchased Universal Gym

By DAVE PHILLIPS

To those students of Longwood College who have always wondered what a Universal Gym is, a golden opportunity has presented itself to find out; Longwood has just purchased one.

New to Longwood this year is one of the world's most efficient weight machines. Efficient not only in the sense of the amount of time needed to work out, but also spaciouly efficient—the sixteen station weight machine can fit into an area only slightly larger than the average dorm room.

The machine is an intricate system of weights, pulleys, and cables which can develop nearly any muscle of the body. The amount of weight being lifted can be changed simply by moving a metal key further up or down the stack of weights. The ease and simplicity of changing the amount of weight lifted makes the Universal Gym an infinitely more practical choice than free weights.

In addition to this, the gym incorporates a system which is called "Dynamic Variable Resistance." This device adds more weight to the lift as it nears its completion. This becomes necessary for when the arms or legs near full extension their power increases. By adding more weight toward the end of the lift, the effort required remains constant throughout the lift providing a harder, more thorough exercise.

There were several reasons behind the purchase of the Universal Gym; the biggest being the lack of any real training equipment. Also in the forefront of the administration's mind was the desire to provide the student body with another option with which to spend their free time.

So, at the cost of only $4,600 (delivered and installed), the Universal Gym constitutes a rare bargain. The open hours during which students can use, look at, or fondle the gym are as follows: Monday, Wednesday, and Friday 11 a.m.-12 p.m., 1-3 p.m., 4-7 p.m.; Tuesday and Thursday 2-10 p.m.; Saturday and Sunday 1-10 p.m.

New Dancers Chosen

On September 3, 1977, fourteen prospective new members for Longwood's Dance Company began try-outs. On the 5th, there were eight girls to choose from and now the six new members are: Ellen Hitt, Sandy McFall, Cindy Morris, Tanya Luther, Terri Stuart, and Becky Doree.

With the arrival of new members and the uncertainty of old members returning, the Company is still in pretty much of an organizing stage. The Company's choreographers are busy with preparing for upcoming performances.

The company will present its Fall Concert on November 3, 5 and 6.

Placement Office Offers Much

By LINDA CARRILLO

Because many students are not aware of all of the services offered, the Office of Career Information and Placement now deals mainly with seniors. Miss Androniki J. Fallis, the Director of Placement and Assistant Director of Admissions, would "love to have the freshmen, sophomores, and juniors use the career information aspect of the Placement Office."

She emphasizes that her work involves more than a list of current jobs for graduating students. With no extra cost, the Office helps the senior with resumes, letters of introduction, interviews with employers, and applications.

In addition, the Placement Office remembers the student after he has graduated since files are kept for ten years after graduation. One part of Miss Fallis' work concerns the recent graduates who do not have a permanent job.

For the freshmen and upperclassmen who have not decided on a field, Miss Fallis is "delighted that career information and career counseling is becoming of major interest." The Placement Office, which is open during the week and is located on the second floor of South Ruffner, has films on interviewing and information on careers.

In November, recent Longwood graduates will be invited to speak about their careers. Miss Fallis added that a report to the Board of Visitors on the employment success of the 1976 graduates is being compiled and will be published.

Because "every experience you have will enhance your chances in your future employment," Miss Fallis encourages students to visit the Placement Office and to take advantage of the services they offer.

Phi Beta Lambda Invites Business Majors To Join

By KAY COLEMAN

Welcome back to Longwood, Phi Beta Lambda members. Our chapter is looking forward to having an eventful year.

Last summer was an eventful one for four Phi Beta Lambda members. Susan Lewis, Rhonda Riggins, Diane Morris, Cindy Chapman, and one of our co-sponsors, Miss Sarah Lowe Thompson, attended the National Phi Beta Lambda Convention. At this convention, which was held in Denver, Colorado, July 5-9, Diane Morris placed tenth in the nation in extemporaneous speaking.

Fall is recruitment time for Phi Beta Lambda, the national organizations for business majors. All Longwood College business majors are invited to join our chapter. There will be more information about Phi Beta Lambda in the daily bulletin and in a special membership recruitment letter that will be mailed to business majors.

The higher education bond, one of five packages placed before the Virginia voters, is of direct consequence to Longwood College. Of the $86,475,000 being distributed to colleges and universities, we will receive $3.5 million for a new gymnasium complex. The majority of the upperclassmen will not directly benefit from the new gym, yet it is that body of students which can appreciate its necessity. Upperclassmen, you've seen physical education programs operating from various points all over campus. You have been involved in the initial groundwork of a therapeutic recreation program, a program which needs room to grow. How ideal a large, centralized complex would be.

Lowerclassmen, you are beginning physical education programs, you obviously need the best a department can offer. For those aspiring teachers and professionals, you need the best possible learning situation. Once out and into the teaching and professional systems, you may have to improvise because of the less than ideal situation at hand, yet you have learned and trained in the best.

The bond itself is the most sensible means of appropriating money to state public institutions. Virginia citizens will pay nothing additional for the bond; its cost will be assumed by existing tax revenues. The only alternative, and an undesirable one, would be to increase state taxes.

You as a student must realize the necessity of the bond, support the bond, and then you must combine your enthusiasm and efforts with those of all Virginia students. Together we must tell the entirety of Virginia that we want the bond, that we need the bond.

Male Dorm Student Arrested For Possession

By MARGARET HAMMERSLEY
Thursday evening, September 8, at approximately 10:00, Longwood police lieutenant Webb and Deputy Sheriff John Hickman entered the room of Sophomore Carl Petersen, according to police chief Smith. Chief Smith told The Rotunda that the following information was reported to him by Lt. Webb. Hickman received word from an informant that Petersen had drugs in his room. Hickman notified Lt. Webb. Webb in turn notified Dean Heintz, who notified Dr. Willett. Dr. Willett told Hickman and Webb to issue a warrant. Smith said that the warrant was for drugs and paraphernalia.

According to Smith, Webb and Hickman went to Petersen's room in Cox dormitory. Petersen was not there. Cox's head resident let them into the room where they found a small amount of marijuana and residue in pipes.

When questioned, Lt. Webb replied that he preferred to reveal nothing until after Petersen's trial.

According to Petersen, the search warrant, which he found Friday morning, September 10 was issued for "morphine and other uncontrolled drugs, and paraphernalia". Friday afternoon at approximately 1:50, Petersen was arrested by Lt. Webb and Chief Smith in Lankford's snack bar, and taken to the Sheriff's office. Petersen said that his bond was originally posted at "$1,000 cash and $2,000 property." He added that after he spoke to his lawyer, his bond was reduced to $250 cash or $500 property. At approximately 5:00 p.m. Friday, Petersen was released on his own recognizance. The trial date has been scheduled for October 22, 1977.

When speaking with Dr. Willett, he commented that he had been made aware of the situation before the police came onto the campus. When asked about the issue of the warrant he replied, "I felt we had no choice as far as the situation was concerned." He added that it would have been a mistake legally had he not cooperated with the authorities.

By BRIDGETSCHERZ

This November, along with selecting the political roster for the coming year, Virginians will vote on a series of individual bond referendums. The "bond package" collectively refers to five separate proposals to finance crucial renovation and construction projects within the state through the public sale of general obligation bonds. Approval of all five referendums will make available 125,000,000 to finance specific projects in education, correction, mental health, parks and recreation and port commerce.

The largest of the five bonds would provide some 86,000,000 for badly needed renovation, expansion, and construction projects on the campuses of the state's community and four-year colleges. Of particular concern to this community is the appropriation of the 3.5 million dollars needed by Longwood for the construction of the new health and physical education facility included in the proposal. Other education oriented projects to be generated by the bond include the building or repair of libraries, academic halls and office space to compensate for the deterioration of some existing facilities and increased enrollment.

The Corrections Proposal encompasses the second largest bond, allocating 21 million directed primarily toward the housing, vocational rehabilitation and medical care of the state's inmates. Treatment of youthful offenders will also be affected with the expansion of the Bon Air facility and new 200 unit center planned in Southampton County.

The 4 million dollar Mental Health bond will eliminate unnecessary transportation costs at Western State by transferring remaining equipment and patients to the new site. Also slated in the proposal one land acquisition and site preparation for two new training centers for the mentally retarded.

Over the decade 1966-76 visitors to Virginia's state parks have increased from one to three million suggesting, especially during the summer months, the limits of their natural boundaries and visitor facilities. The Parks and Recreation bond will encompass 27 projects in 25 state parks and if approved will generate 4.5 million from the federal government in matching funds. The objectives sought in this referendum are to provide more and better park lands through the improvement of existing trails and visitor facilities and development of state owned areas that have not yet been opened.

The last proposal, the Port Facilities Bond, will update and expand container ship berths in Norfolk, Portsmouth and Newport News to take advantage of the Commonwealth's increased handlings in commercial trade. Including port facilities in the bond referendum reflects necessity of reacting to competition in commercial shipping and of insuring the Hampton Rhodes status as one of the best ports on the Eastern Shore, outranked only by New York.

A bond, as a source of capital, may be thought of as a massive home improvement loan, assumed by the state, to meet immediate building needs. Like the individual borrower, the state shares the combined motives of keeping abreast of its physical needs, expanding public facilities to meet population growth as an individual adds a dormer to his house, and of bolstering Virginia's attractiveness to out of state students and vacationers as the homeowner seeks to increase the property value of his home.

According to a leaflet prepared by the Cooperative Extension through VPI, the passage of the bond referendums would not incur a tax increase or result in a financial deficit. Deficit spending occurs when a governor or legislature allows current expenditures to exceed available tax revenues within the current budget cycle, therefore relying on future revenues to reconcile the difference. The state constitution and the Appropriations Act prohibit deficit spending in Virginia, the publication said.

Concerning the possibility of a tax increase as a repercussion to the passage of the bond, both the

THE LAZY DAYS of the summer will soon be over, if in fact there were any lazy days this summer. It seemed to us that the vacation period passed all too quickly. With some one, in some cases several people, in almost every organization away for a bit of holiday, business as usual was faster this summer than we recall formerly.

Farmville will have an increased population of over 3,000 practically overnight as the two colleges open bringing 720 students to Hampden-Sydney and 2200 to Longwood. The sudden addition to the 4000 residents almost doubles the population instantly. It makes for a period of unusual activity and takes a few weeks to properly shake-down.

It is nothing new for this town. The colleges have added to the town's social, business and religious well-being for a century or more. Each year Labor Day is anticipated with the influx of the young people and return of their teachers to begin the fall and winter swirl. The "town and the gown" get along well together. There is really never a dull moment, with athletic events, cultural entertainments, seminars, art shows, and an ever parade of visiting alumni-alumnae (pardon us NOW members) who renew associations formed during their former four-year stay as Farmville residents. Farmville could become a staid old town except for the contacts with so many young people and their friends and relatives. On the other hand Farmville is known as the "Friendly town," much of it due to the long associations with the two colleges.

A hearty welcome to the old students and the freshmen, to the new and old members of the faculties, as the important year 1977-1978, begins in our long history of education.

"How 'you'all, glad to see you back."

CABARET

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Face it, either you have it or you don't...and if you've got it, chances are that you came by it cheap. The voluntary surrender of your dollar is a pretty painless parting of the bills to "come to the Cabaret old chum." Next Monday, September 19th, 8:15 curtain time, The New York touring Company will present what N.Y. Times critic Walter Kerr described as "a stunning musical, brilliantly conceived," on the Jarman stage. Rather than spread out a lot of black and white coining raves (it's a little late to start selling the product now, all seats are reserved) it might be a better idea to talk about the play itself, how it came about, some of the thematic refrains that people often have a sense of, but don't fully grasp amidst the theatrical hoopla, and maybe mention just a few of its credits in passing.

"Cabaret" actually did in a sense "come about" in that the story line and theatrical interpretations that resulted in the current production were not conceived by a single playwright, but began as the observations of a young Englishman, Christopher Isherwood, of the garish decadence in early 1930's Berlin. He recorded his encounters in this Germanic "wasteland" in a book called "Goodbye to Berlin" which he later re-titled "The Berlin Stories." The book turned out to be very successful for Isherwood and one story in particular, "Sally Bowles," a character sketch of a flighty English girl abroad, was picked up by popular playwright John VanDruten, and adapted to the state. Taking the first line of Isherwood's book as the title of the play, "I Am a Camera" opened in New York in the fall of 1951. Both the show and Julie Harris, who played Sally Bowles, profited from the two season run. The play was popularized and Harris took the proverbial ascent to "stardom."

Another playwright, Joe Masteroff, decided to add the musical element and took the project to Broadway producer Hal Prince who was already well on his way to a reputation with the success of his production of "Fiddler on the Roof." Prince lined up song writers John Kander and Fred Ebb who later were awarded a Tony for 'Cabaret' as the season's best musical.

The film "Cabaret" starring Liza Minelli and Joel Grey both of whom easily scooped up two of the eight Oscars awarded to the picture, was released in 1972. The film version altered the plot distinctively from the stage portrayal. The nationalities of the lovers are reversed (Sally is an American in the movie, her lover is the Englishman) and two new characters were added to act out exemplary scenarios of a self-mockingly cruel and reckless era.

For all its glittery cavorting, lively music, and bawdy jest the audience feels, almost as if it were an unexplainable draft, the uncanny phantasms of the advancing Nazi movement. Berlin seems to feel it too; but instead of checking to see who the prowler is outside the door, they turn up the music so they do not hear his footsteps drawing closer to their homes. Listen especially for the context in which such songs as "Cabaret" and "Tomorrow Belongs to Me" are sung. Taken apart from the play the song "Cabaret" comes across as a party-ers overture, carefree, an invitation to enjoy. When Sally chooses the burlesque Never Never Land of the Kit Kat Klub over the realities of the world in which her lover exists she is not inviting the audience to step out for an evening, but to escape into pretend world of the cabaret until reality blows it away, "and when I go, I'm going like Elsie." "Tomorrow belongs to Me" is sung at the beginning of the musical by the Master of Ceremonies with the cynical grin that seems to hang in an almost omniscient, Cheshire-like apparition over the remaining action of the play. He is drowned out though, by the youthful vitality of the waiters carrying off the chorus as he retreats from the stage. At the wedding Herr Schultz and Fraulein Schneider interpret the song as an expression of the end of their separate lonelines. Each guest who sings along with them however, has their own, sometimes very different, conception of tomorrow and who will in fact be master of it.

Alexick Showing Opens Today

By DAVID ALEXICK

The subtle power of a simple color or form to set itself off from its surroundings and to speak to us like nothing else we see in the world around us is a unique property of art. With regard to the abstract quality of many of the present paintings I have tried to allow color and form to speak for themselves.

Simplification, the ordering and reduction of form to its essence, has always been a fundamental artistic consideration. I have selected subject matter that I feel close to, such as the still life, the landscape, windows, passageways, the human figure, plant forms, mankind's desire to discover and explore and the joy of pure color for its own sake.

Certainly mythological considerations, along with the form and color, seem to have entered into some of the paintings.

I consider painting a process of discovery. When I paint, I try to discover what I can do that nobody else can do. I realize that I won't always know what that is until I am finished and maybe not even then. I like what Rothko said about painting being "an adventure in an unknown space." I think that's one of the things that art and life are all about. I also like the things that Maslow says about self-realization and self actualization. I think that they, too, are what art and life are all about.

Some of the pieces I consider studies because I feel they are steps along the way toward some future work. I decided to show them, after some consideration, because I felt they had a certain feeling of completeness about them and that they could properly be a part of a display of recent work.

Finally, DeKooning once said that "what I see becomes my condition." I feel that, in large part, what we see does become our condition — which is why I think art is so important.

Varied Style And Definite Interest Displayed In Art

By PAM KELLETT

There's art in the study rooms at Lankford again. Anybody seen it? It's the work of Michelle Fugate, a senior art major. I saw it. At first glance, her work displayed a varied style and definite interest in the human figure. I wondered about the person behind the paintings.

Speaking with Michele opened many doors in respect to the show and her relationship with art. She admitted that this was her first crack at a private exhibit, although she has won prizes in group shows in the past.

Consequently, she decided to display in this show, what she considered to be, the best pieces from various stages of her development—hence the varied styles.

A pleasant looking ink and watercolor entitled "Two Violinists" turned out to be representative of an earlier stage (it was actually done in high school) when she was learning to paint realistically. She explained to me that she felt learning to depict things realistically is important to learn before dealing with abstraction, but added "I rate for people to always want my work to look like something or to be pretty."

Later, in college, she adapted a more graphic approach with acrylics, exemplified by "Girl with Flowers" and "Persyphone." The use of distinct colors is a major component in these works. A pink and red girl stands out from an explosion of yellow and pink flowers in "Girl with Flowers." A blue Persyphone stands ignited with gold hair in a blue underworld.

Persyphone reappears as a water-color (titled "Spring") in a green and yellow upper-world. Michele's image in this case is mysterious and more delicate than graphic.

A different kind of inspiration came from some painting classes at Old Dominion University, where a professor taught her to loosen her brush strokes and layer her colors. Several large portraits demonstrate this style. Two of my favorites demonstrate this style. Two of my favorites are "Nick" and "Girl in Orange." "Nick," a mammoth male head done in deep green and brown tones with a deep forehead and huge irregular eyes, makes quite a startling image. "Girl in Orange," on the other hand is a simple rendition of a seated model, bathed in an absorbing orange color.

Michele likes her work to contain emotional value in some cases. "Beneath the Surface," a temperamental delineation of two green and orange figures is her attempt at a pure emotional concept. It follows the idea of Edward Munch in his well known painting "The Scream."

There is something in the show for almost every aesthetic taste for the interesting reason that it spans seventeen years of one person's artistic growth.

First Varsity Season

13 New Soccer Players

By Margaret Hammersley

The men's soccer team in its first varsity season is comprised of six returning players and 13 new members. With the recently attained varsity status, Coach Williamson foresees challenge and tough competition for the team. Those teams scheduled for this season are for the most part more organized clubs than Longwood. When asked which teams he expects to be the toughest competition, Coach Williamson named Greensboro College, University of North Carolina at Greensboro, Lynchburg College and Hampden-Sydney College.

With only six returning players the coach commented, "It hurts to lose those members, we were counting on." Yet, after only a week of practice he added with optimism, "we have more speed than last year. I believe that we have more skill than we did last year." Last season ended with a 2-3 record.

The team's first match is a home game with Greensboro College, Saturday, Sept. 17, at 2:00 p.m. Home games will be played on the field behind the second avenue school.

Returning goalie Roy Adkins will rotate goal and play halfback. The halfback is both a defensive and offensive position. Requiring strength in tackling, kicking and heading. Defensively the back moves with the opposing forwards trying to regain the ball, or trying to force the forward outside with the ball. Offensively the back moves the ball forward to his forwards. The halfback will score at times. He seldom moves more than three-fourths down the field.

Kevin Bedsworth, returning, will most probably retain his last season's position as fullback. Strong kicking and aggressiveness is required of this defensive position.

Greg Dunn, returning, played fullback last season. His probable position this season will remain as fullback.

Steve Nelson, returning, should retain his last season's position as inside wing. Wings are forward positions requiring speed, skill and stamina. The forwards are the most frequent scorers.

Longwood Tennis Coach Attends National Conference

By PAMELA McDOWELL

Beginning August 31 and ending September 2, the Seventh National Tennis Teachers Conference met at the Roosevelt Hotel in New York City. Mrs. Phyllis Harriss, the Longwood College tennis coach, attended the conference. The purpose of the conference was to advance new techniques and ideas. She also attended the U. S. Open at Forest Hills, N. Y. Mrs. Harriss participated in clinics guided by some of the top tennis instructors in the nation. John Newcombe was one of the clinicians and talked extensively on the subjects of the overall game, doubles, court positioning, and angles, which consists of positioning oneself on the court where the opponent's opportunity of getting a point is cut down.

At the conference Mrs. Harriss saw demonstrated the latest equipment used as teaching aids, such as ball throwing machines and stroking devices. She expressed interest in acquiring some of this equipment for Longwood but said that "Longwood is better off than a lot of schools" concerning tennis because the classes are divided into beginning, intermediate, and advanced classes.

The clinics, which Mrs. Harriss recorded on tape, covered everything from group teaching, technique, and equipment, to how to be rated as a pro.

One of the most exciting events for Mrs. Harriss was being able to attend the U. S. Open. There she not only saw Stockton and Alexander, but Billie Jean King, Ann Smith, and Tracy Austin. "It was a dream come true," said Mrs. Harriss. "I feel I have reached another goal, and wish I was thirty years younger. The purpose of this program was to learn from each other. Basically today, tennis is the same as it was years ago. It is the new approaches I want to pass on to my students."

Longwood Joins Soccer Association

By Margaret Hammersley

On July 6, 1977, Longwood College applied for membership to the Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association (VISA), and thereafter became an affiliate member. That status will be held for one year, after which Longwood will become a state member.

VISA is a state association and not a conference, which promotes soccer throughout Virginia. Virtually all schools in Virginia, regardless of size or affiliation, are members. Schools and coaches receive exposure and are promoted by the association. At the end of the season VISA sponsors a playoff championship for state member teams. The playoffs conclude with the announcement of the all-star team, voted on by state coaches.

Sunday, September 4, Coach Williamson attended the annual meeting of VISA hosted by Hampden-Sydney College. Such a conference keeps coaches and officials communicating about the rules of the sport and changes in rules as they occur. Williamson commented that meeting with the VISA members offers a "pool of ideas, which is especially good for a young team like ours." An "observe and teach situation" allows for an interchange of ideas. One of the many advantages to belonging to such an association is the ease with which games can be scheduled.

After attending the first VISA meeting Williamson commented, "It was good for me to rub elbows with coaches who have been coaching for a while."

Coaches Attend Dixie Conference Meeting

By Margaret Hammersley

Dr. Judy Johnson, Dr. William McAdams, Mr. Richard Williamson, and Dr. T.C. Dalton attended the annual fall meeting of the Dixie Conference in Rocky Mount, North Carolina, August 30 and 31. At this time Longwood is considering application to the Dixie Conference, Division III of the National Collegiate Athletics Association (NCAA) for men.

Division III is comprised of smaller schools which give no financial assistance to athletes. The Dixie Conference, comprised of eight Virginia and North Carolina schools, is one of several conferences within Division III. The option of joining Division III but remaining an independent school is also available.

When The Rotunda talked with Dr. Johnson, she said that the trip was one to gather facts to report to the Intercollegiate Athletic Council (IAC). She commented that the Dixie Conference is "one of the more viable alternatives," yet emphasized that all alternatives are being considered and "no decision has been made at this time."

While Longwood is in a nonscholarship position, Dr. McAdams feels that the Dixie Conference may be a favorable one. "A more accurate decision will depend on the direction which men's athletics will take."

Mr. Williamson commented that the trip was an informative one, but feels that there has not been enough comparison between conferences for him to make a recommendation. It proved exceptionally helpful to him as he picked up an additional soccer match scheduled at the end of the season with the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

Dr. Dalton has replied, "It is up to the coaches to recommend it to the IAC and the President if they want to."

The members of the Dixie Conference are St. Andrews, Methodist College, North Carolina Wesleyan, Greensboro, University of North Carolina at Greensboro, Averett, Christopher Newport and Virginia Wesleyan.

Welcome, Miss Budd

By SANDRA LASSISTER

Miss Budd is an alumni of James Madison University. Her intended major at the time of her entry at college was dramatic arts and English, but she was later influenced by gymnastics, and therefore changed her major to Physical Education. She received her Bachelor of Arts and Masters Degree while at James Madison University. She has taught in both public and private school systems. She also taught at Marateens Gymnastics School in Maryland. Miss Budd is currently development and elementary physical education program at Campus School. The gymnastics department should grow with the aid of such an enthusiastic person as Miss Budd.

IAA Off To Good Start

In New Season

By ANN RUOTOLO

The Intramural Athletic Association (IAA) is an organization created for the students' enjoyment. Although the group focuses on arranging a variety of Intramural sports, it also participates in promoting class spirit. Events lined up for the first semester include the newly organized Softball and Flag Football team games, Tennis, Bowling, and volleyball matches, and the ever popular Inner Tube Water Polo competitions. IAA's contribution to the Oktoberfest is the mad color rush, where greens and reds compete in games, skits, and other activities for the recognition of being the most highly spirited class.

Meetings are called to order every Thursday night at 6:45 by President Kim McCanna. Every Longwood College student is an automatic member of IAA; however, one person is selected from each dorm (two from Curry and Frazer) to be a voting member representing the entire dorm. Other voters of policy decisions include the executive council members, a public chairman, the intramural managers, and the intercollegiate athletics director. Participation by non-voting members is strongly encouraged, for it is the entire student body that determines the overall effectiveness of this organization.

At the first meeting, held August 31, names of the executive council members were announced. The president is Kim McCanna, and the secretary is Carol Filo.

One position which has not been filled is the Vice Presidency. Anyone interested in gaining immediate leadership can be nominated for this rewarding position. One must be responsible to carry out the many tasks accompanied by the recognition, which includes coordinating activities with managers, planning events with Mrs. Price, coordinating the song contest, taking charge of getting and presenting trophies, and presiding at meetings in the absence of the president. If anyone has suggestions for nominees, or would like to be a nominee just show up at the next meeting in Lankford.

They are off to a good start in the new season, having formed six football teams and five softball teams.

Tennis: Yesterday And Today

By DEBBIE NORTHERN And MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

100 Years Of Wimbledon

On July 19, 1877, 100 years ago, the All England Croquet and Lawn Tennis Club sponsored the first tournament for the Challenge Cup, known today as Wimbledon. Before 200 spectators Spenser W. Gore defeated C. G. Heathcote. At that time general admission was one sterling and one shilling.

In 1881 the Renshaw twins, Ernest and William, appeared on the British Circuit and would dominate the sport for the next ten years.

The first tennis superstars, referred to as "The Magic Twins," captured eight singles championships, with Ernest taking seven and William one. In 1889 the brothers were fated to play each other in the singles final, Ernest won.

It has been noted that William Renshaw contracted the first case of tennis elbow.

Women were not allowed to compete at Wimbledon until 1884. In a similar case of sibling rivalry, Maude Watson, the first female champion of Wimbledon, claimed two titles by defeating her sister.

In that same year sibling rivalry doubled when the first Wimbledon doubles was played by the Renshaw twins and the Clark brothers, Joseph and Clarence. The Renshaw brothers won the contest.

At only 15 years old, Lottie Dod captured the court from 1887-1894, winning five Wimbledon titles.

The first foreigner to take the Wimbledon crown was the American May Sutton in 1905.

Hailed as the "Goddess of Tennis," Suzanne Lenglen of France won five consecutive titles dating from 1919-23 and also winning in 1925.

Native Richmonder International Star

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Richmond, Virginia, is the hometown of Champion tennis player Arthur Ashe, the only highly successful black player in the history of tennis. The thirty-three-year-old Ashe's best tennis years were 1975 and 1976, but his first major win was in 1968 when he topped Tom Okier in the U. S. Open Championships.

In 1975 he had a 108-23 win-loss record, with nine tournament championships totaling $338,337 in prize money. This was his golden year in which he was ranked number one after winning the World Cup Tennis finals and defeating Jimmy Connors at Wimbledon.

The first part of 1976 he won 29 of his first 30 matches and won five out of six tournaments, but in the latter part of the year he hit a slump from which he has still not recovered.

Ashe is not overly perturbed by this slump and has no intentions of retiring from tennis any time in the near future. He says,

"The first black recipient of the Wimbledon title was Althea Gibson, winning in 1957.

On the first day of this centennial tournament, the Parade of Champions was staged before spectators numbered at 37,389. Names of the past and present — Henri Cochet, Rene Lacoste, Rod Laver, Bjorn Borg, Billie Jean King — formed a procession to receive silver medals of honor presented by the Duke of Kent. Causing tremendous British upset, Jimmy Connors refused his invitation to participate in the Parade of Champions.

One hundred years after Gore defeated Heathcote, Virginia Wade, after twelve years of professional play, captured her first Wimbledon title before a crowd of 14,000 spectators. The British champ, then third seeded, defeated Rosie Casals in the quarter finals, Chris Evert in the semifinals to face Betty Stove in the finals.

The men's finals came down to Borg and Connors. After a 3 1/2-hour match, Borg exhausted Connors for the title.

It was this centennial year that two new records were set by one American. Eighteen-year-old John McEnroe of Douglaston, New York, was Wimbledon's first qualifier to reach the semifinals. He was also the youngest semifinalist.

The serving of strawberries and cream, a tradition peculiar to Wimbledon, totaled in 1940 pounds of strawberries and 164 pounds of cream — or 65,000 single servings.

"You've got to keep your sense of humor, winning and losing are both part of life, and you've got to maintain your sanity."

In 1973 he became the first black ever to be allowed to play tournament tennis in South Africa, despite his being refused entrance to the country in 1970.

Arthur Ashe has many other loves besides tennis; he loves London, prosciutto, cassette tapes, and crossword puzzles. In fact, he once quipped to a World Tennis reporter, "I want to be buried six down and three across."

Even though Ashe has not recently been in the major throes of tennis competition, many people feel that he has the potential for a comeback. If he should decide to retire, he says that he would like to go into film making, write a book, or pursue other facets of his diversified interests.

Evert And Vilas Take Titles

Forest Hills Stadium at West Side Tennis Club, the site of the U.S. Opens, dates back to 1923. The first foreigner to take the U.S. Opens championship was Rene Cacao in 1926.

The U.S. Nationals were renamed the U.S. Opens in 1968, the year of Arthur Ashe's first victory.

Chris Evert captured her third straight U.S. Opens Championship this year at Forest Hills, and in the men's singles, Guillermo Vilas took his first championship.

Miss Evert took the title and her 113th consecutive clay court victory by defeating twelfth seed Australian Wendy Turnbull, 7-6, 6-2, Saturday. She advanced to the finals by overpowering Betty Stove 6-3, 7-5. Her finals win gave her the $33,000 prize out of the $462,420 purse. No woman has won the title three consecutive times since Maureen Connolly did so from 1951-53.

In 1975 and 1976, Miss Evert won the title by overcoming Evonne Goolagong. About her Evonne Goolagong. About her 1977 win, she said, "I wanted to badly."

Miss Turnbull had earlier topped sixth seed Rosie Casals, third seed Virginia Wade and second seed Martina Navratilova, who she stunned 2-6, 7-5, 6-4 in the semi finals, to bring her up to the finals against top seed Chris Evert. Wendy Turnbull lost 6-1, 6-0 to Miss Evert at the Family Circle Tournament in April and lost four times to her in World Tennis play this year.

Defending champ Jimmy Connors, if he has won the finals, would have been the first man since Fred Perry in 1936 to win three singles championships. He took a hard defeat for the title from eighth seed Guillermo Vilas, who won 2-6, 6-3, 7-6, 6-0. Vilas lost to Connors last year in the semi-finals 6-4, 6-2, 6-1.

Jimmy Connors won the championship in 1974 over Ken Roswall 6-1, 6-0, 6-1 and in 1976 he defeated Bjorn Borg 6-4, 3-6, 7-6, 6-4.

Saturday in the semi finals Connors ousted Italian Corrado Barzutti and Vilas took his 17th consecutive straight-set victory over Harold Solomon of Silver Springs, Maryland.

1977 Wimbledon top winners, Virginia Wade and Bjorn Borg, were knocked out of the Forest Hills competition before reaching the semi-finals. Men's seed and two time Wimbledon champ, Borg, defaulted to tenth seed Dick Stockton due to a painful pulled shoulder suffered the day before the U.S. Opens began.

Borg decided to forfeit with the score standing at 3-6, 6-4, 1-0. Many felt that this year Borg would defeat second seed Connors, last year's victory.

After taking the forfeit, Stockton went on to the quarter finals, where he was overpowered by Solomon 6-4, 6-4, 6-2.

Third seed Virginia Wade of England made it into the women's quarter finals before being dumped by Wendy Turnbull. Miss Turnbull, referred to as "The Rabbit" because of her quick court play said, "I knew I had to keep Virginia AWAY FROM THE NET AS MUCH AS POSSIBLE." Thus, by using lobs, she was able to defeat the Englishwoman causing one of the biggest upsets at the U.S. Opens.

Another upset in the quarterfinals was third seed (Continued on Page 8)

Victorious Season

Predicted For Longwood

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Longwood Tennis squad has so far been cut down to nine players. Five players have returned from last year. Margie Quarles, whose last year's match statistics stood at 9-0 (100 per cent), Gwen Koehlein, with 6-2 (75 per cent) for the season, Teresa McLawhorn, with a 5-0 (100 per cent) record, Mary Barrett 2-1 (66 per cent) for the season and last year's alternate Jill Bacchieri. Newcomer players are Nancy Leidenhammer, Judy Fayne, Diana Nash and Angie Geist.

Tennis Coach Phyllis Harris says her team "looks good" and she is predicting a "winning season." Last year's fall squad had a 5-3 record, while the spring

Kid Wonder Emerges

Information from World Tennis Magazine, April 1977, and U. S. Opens Magazine

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

A new tennis "kid wonder" has emerged this year, namely 14-year-old Tracy Austin, a spry five-foot-one, pony-tailed court whiz from Rolling Hills, California.

When she was merely two years old she began to play tennis. At the age of eight she won her first title in the 10 and under and 12 and under singles in the Los Angeles City Championships. At the age of 12 she was drafted by the Los Angeles Strings in World Team Tennis.

So far Tracy has not lost in her age bracket or to anyone younger than herself. In 1973 and 1974 she won the indoor girls' 12 singles and doubles championship. The following two years she took the National Public Parks' girls' 14 singles and the USTA girls' 14 singles.

Earlier in 1977 Tracy defeated Diane Fromholtz, who is ranked 9th in the world, in the quarter finals of the Family Circle Cup.

Tracy's big moment came when she made it to the third round of Wimbledon before being crushed by her idol Chris Evert 6-1, 6-1.

Last week, as the youngest player ever to compete at Forest Hills (she was also the youngest ever to play at Wimbledon), she made it to the quarter finals before losing to 5th seeded Betty Stove 6-2, 6-2.

Terry Austin is being regarded as another Chris Evert. Not only is Tracy starting her career at about the same age as Chris Evert did, but both players play the base line heavily (Tracy will continue to do this until she grows taller), and have very strong two-handed backhand strokes. Tracy, even though she admires Miss Evert, complains about the comparison, "I'm tired of everyone saying that I play like her, I have my own game."

Robert Landprod, Tracy's coach, has urged her not to become a professional player, even though she qualifies, until she is at least 18 years old.

She has plenty of time to mature and play her own game, but for the time being, it is back to school for the ninth grade tennis wonder.

Goldsmith From London To Appear Tomorrow

By DEBBIE MOUL

Peter Gainesbury, the Director of Research at the Worshipful Company of Goldsmiths in London will be here at Longwood to speak on Wednesday, September 21. Longwood is the only school in the United States that Mr. Gainesbury is speaking to. The primary reason for his visit to the U. S. is to obtain sponsorship for further research, on silver, from the major silver producing and processing interests in the United States. In his travels, Mr. Gainesbury likes to visit as many schools as possible teaching them the arts of jewelry and-or silversmithing.

Mr. Gainesbury is a trained metallurgist with 30 years of experience in precious metals. Eleven years ago he became a member of the Worshipful Company of Goldsmiths where he set up an advisory service for the jewelry and silverware industry. When using the word industry, he includes mass production costume jewelry, fine jewelry, artist-craftsmen jewelers and silversmiths, the largest and the smallest producers and even amateurs. He has been retained by the Chamber of Mines of South Africa to advise on the setting up of an advisory service for gold jewelry makers which will eventually cover the whole of Europe, the United States and South Africa, and which will operate in five languages. Mr. Gainesbury's particular expertise and experience has been in the fields of investment casting and gold alloy research, silver sand casting, hardenable silver, photo mechanical techniques, the use of refractory metals and the coloration of metals.

A fraternity or guild of Goldsmiths is known to have been in existence by the 12th century. The Livery Companies of the City of London are the living successors of the ancient craft guilds common to the medieval cities of Europe. A large number of the City Livery Companies, founded in this way, are still in existence and of these the Goldsmiths' Company, more than most, have retained their close connection with the craft from which they have taken their name. The Goldsmiths insisted on the necessity for full and careful training before any man should be entitled to call himself a goldsmith. The Goldsmiths' Company not only manufactured gold, silver and platinum wares, but also samples of the gold, silver and cupronickel coinage of the realm. The Company holds records dating back to the 14th century.

To stimulate public interest in the work of contemporary craftsmen the Company organize exhibitions in the United Kingdom and overseas, and frequently lend pieces from their own collections to exhibitions throughout the world. Exhibitions and discussions of this sort will be held on Wednesday, Sept. 21. Beginning at 12:00, there will be slide presentations and discussions by various artists and instructors involved with jewelry and metals. Mr. Gainesbury will speak Wednesday evening in the Bedford Auditorium. The whole day will not only be interesting but informative as well. All students are urged to attend the exhibitions and lectures.

Klowns And Meisters Chosen For Oktoberfest

By KAREN SHELTON

Amidst festive music, swaying spotlights, and the antics of Geist klowns, the 1977 Oktoberfest court was tapped. The anxiously awaited ceremony began as the members of Geist, dressed as klowns, raced down the aisles throwing candy in all directions.

Sara Jo Wyatt, Oktoberfest Chairman, welcomed everyone and introduced them to the spirit of Oktoberfest through a slide presentation of last year's Oktoberfest. Klowns, color rush, skits, ushers and usherettes were all parts of this reminiscing.

The Klowns are very important to the Oktoberfest spirit; they add color and cheer to the entire week end. After numerous practices and try-outs, this year's Klowns were chosen, and Linda Crovatt announced their names amidst applause and cheering. These are the Oktoberfest Klowns for 1977: Patty Thomas, Nicole King, Valery Naranjo, Linda Hitt, Anne Niezgoda, Claire Gilles, Kit Hughes, Linda Wolk, LaDonna Wright, Robin Bryant, Rosalind Crenshaw, Kim Furbee, Kim McCanna, Pee-Wee Gilbert, Dottie Lebahn, Sandy McFall, Jayne Carson, Lynn Plageman, Celeste Rodriguez, Holly Kirksell, and Colleen Russell.

After the excitement of the Klowns, Geist tapped the ushers and usherettes. There is an usher and an usherette from each class chosen for their spirit, loyalty, and activity. They bring a bit of German dance to the week end.

Keith Moore and Brenda

Petrow were chosen as the usher and usherette from the Freshman class. Brenda is known by her jock shorts and socks and her basketball ability. Geist selected Keith because of his spirit and talent.

Kaye Midkiff, a Colleague who was active in Oktoberfest last year and Chairman of Residence Board this summer, was tapped as usherette from the Sophomore class. Geist chose Hank Dahman as Sophomore usher. Hank, a member of the Famed Artist Series Committee, is both theatrically and musically talented.

Anne Leavitt and Dana Overstreet were named Junior usher and usherette. Anne is actively involved with SUN working with entertainment and publicity. Dana, who was head Student Assistant, is a familiar face in the dining hall.

Geist tapped Debbie Potter and Mary Meade Saunders as the Senior class usher and usherette. Debbie was a Student Assistant and an Orientation Leader. When her name was called, there were tears because "that's the way it's been for the past three years." Mary Meade was last year's Oktoberfest bum and Joanie in this year's Red Orientation skit. She is Residence Board Chairman.

Three of the most important Oktoberfest people were the last to be tapped. From the Sophomore class, Geist chose Jan Bates as Mittenmeister or "Midway Marshall." As a means of introduction for Jan, Sara Jo said, "This Sophomore is mighty fine. She's smiling all the time. In Freshman production, Colleagues, and Oktoberfest, she's always given it her very best. She's good at wetting down the head resident, but at the BSU her time is well spent." When asked about being chosen, Jan said, "I can't believe it! When I start running around in the little German dress, I'll know it is real!"

From the Junior class, Linda Kulp was tapped as Festmeister or "Mistress of Ceremonies." Linda's spirit and contributions to the school are obvious. About her, Sara Jo said, "Here is a green and white with spirit strong and true. When it comes to Oktoberfest, there is nothing she can't do. A familiar face at green and white sings. In the Orientation skits, her voice does ring. No, Longwood has not passed this actress by; she's a player as well as in Alpha Psi."

Seeing and feeling the Blue and White Spirit is an important purpose of the Oktoberfest week end, so Geist chooses a Senior, who has had three years to build a blue and white spirit, as Geistmeister or "Mistress of Spirit." This year's Geistmeister is Maria Corbin. "There's a special lady that this girl knows. Her name is Miss Cox, and she's always on the go. Yes, for this girl 'Time is like a butterfly.' Her red and white spirit is always flying high. She's always at skits, paint battles, and sings. She's smiling all the while when doing these things. At most all activities you'll surely see her."

Thus ended Oktoberfest Tapping 1977. Everyone left there with anticipation of the coming excitement of Oktoberfest week end. Alice Clay, Sophomore chairman, said, "I love seeing people so happy!"

Longwood Senior Studies In France

By PAMELA L. McDOWELL

Many students wish to study abroad and this past year Miss Leslie Kamrad, a senior at Longwood, did just that. She attended the Institut D' Etudes Francaises De Touraine in France. This school is a part of the Universite De Tours and is for foreign students who wish to study the French language. The Institute is a part of Alliance Francaises which directs schools throughout France. Miss Kamrad pointed out that it is not compulsory for a student to attend the Institute but that they may attend the University with French students if so desired.

At the Institute the courses are divided into six levels or degrees. There are six degrees, with the 1st degree being the elementary level and the sixth degree courses being the advanced or "superior" courses. The courses are taught on a monthly basis and it takes approximately three months to complete each level. The elementary courses are taught in one classroom from 8:45 to 12:15 and consists of lectures. The students in the superior courses study the geography and culture of the country. These levels also have four classes a day though there is no set schedule of daily classes. The French grade on a fractional system. A good grade would be 15-20 while 12-20 is the minimum.

The degree Miss Kamrad obtained in France is equivalent to two years graduate work in the U. S. or entitles her to enter a French University as a Sophomore. In France she lived with French families. "You never really understand a language," Miss Kamrad commented, "until you live in the country and experience contact with family life." Socially the French schools don't have many organizations. They put emphasis on studies. Students do not specialize in France but study all subjects in their one field. For example, a Language major will study four or five languages. While in France Miss Kamrad visited Paris for five days, the Louvre, Mont Saint-Michel, which is a monastery and Chartres, which is a cathedral famous for its stained glass windows. She also spent fifteen days in England.

In order to attend a school in France, a student has to fill out a simple application. Nine months of school cost approximately $600. Miss Kamrad paid $2070 for half board which consists of two meals, a private room and laundry service. To arrange transportation a student can contact tourist agencies, a charter plane, or buy an advanced purchase ticket. Miss Kamrad stressed the fact that all arrangements should be confirmed both by the student and the person overseas.

Miss Kamrad's future plans consists of teaching French after her graduation from Longwood. She hopes to return to France someday to visit.

40 Students Enrolled In ROTC Program

By PAMELA L. McDOWELL
ROTC has come to Longwood! Forty students are taking advantage of this program which will assist them in either a civilian or army career. Major B. B. Hamaker, coordinator of the Military Science Program at Longwood College and Associate Professor of Military Science at the University of Richmond, said the response has been gaining momentum. So many students have enrolled that two sections are being taught: one on Wednesday afternoon and one on Thursday afternoon.

Students enrolled in this program are eligible to compete for three, two and one-year ARMY ROTC scholarships. The scholarships pay full tuition, all textbook expenses, laboratory fees, and $100 a month subsistence allowance for up to 10 months each school year that the scholarship is in effect.

"ROTC at Longwood offers a new dimension," said Major Hamaker, "a break away from normal campus life. It offers challenge, adventure and an opportunity to find out about oneself. Although there is the usual academic taxation in the course, the student has an opportunity to get out from behind a desk and learn."

Assisting Major Hamaker in his instruction will be SGM Gillikan, who's interests are in the areas of map reading, orienteering, and rappelling. Rappelling consists of walking down the wall of a building or cliff with the assistance of a rope. The ROTC course consists of learning to read maps, to use a compass with a map, and to orienteer, which is the navigation across country. This program also offers insights into management, organization, leadership, and principles as they are reflected in basic tactical techniques and operations.

The ROTC has now one working organization on campus called "Run For Your Life." This consists of running a certain number of miles within a specified amount of time. Fifteen students have enrolled. Certificates are given for running 500 miles, every 100 miles after that, 750 miles, 1000 and 2500 miles. We are proud to announce that Major Hamaker will soon reach the 2500 mile mark.

On October 7th and 8th, the ROTC students will go to Nagshead, N. C. for instruction on hang-gliding. This trip, which is open to all students at Longwood, will consist of learning the parts of and how to operate a hang-glide and mastering the apparatus when in flight.

Business And Economics

Lecturer To Speak Tonight

By CERESA HANEY

Dr. Reuben G. Miller, professor of economics at Sweet Briar College, will be the first lecturer in Longwood College's series of Business and Economics Lectures for 1977-78.

The public is cordially invited to hear Dr. Miller discuss "Long Range Strategic Forecasting" on Tuesday afternoon, September 20, at 4 o'clock in Jeffers Auditorium.

A specialist in international economics, money and banking. Dr. Miller was Fulbright-Hayes Lecturer in Economics at National Taiwan University, Republic of China, in 1965-66. In addition, he spent a year at the University of Stockholm, in Sweden.

He has served on the faculties of the University of Montana, Ohio State University, Oberlin College, University of Massachusetts, and Smith College.

Author of numerous articles in professional journals, Dr. Miller also co-authored two books with Richard S. Martin—"Economics and Its Significance" and "Prologue to Economic Understanding."

Other Business and Economic Lectures for this year are scheduled as follows: October 6 — C. Coleman McGehee, chairman of the board for First and Merchants Corporation; November 10 — Mrs. Patricia F. Gaines, Director of Personnel Training for Zerox Center in Lynchburg; January 26 — Dr. Anthony G. Porreca, College of Business Administration at the University of Tennessee; and February 9 — Ms. Merle T. Alvis, Employment Representative with Babcock and Wilcox in Lynchburg.

Dr. Bland

Receives Award

By PENNY ROBINSON

Dr. Beatrice Bland, Professor of Education was named Outstanding Adviser for Alpha Delta Pi Sorority in this Province of Virginia. The award was presented at the Alpha Delta Pi National Convention held at the Breakers in West Palm Beach, Florida, on July 1. Dr. Bland was unable to be there to receive the award. A Tea in her honor was held September 13. Penny Robinson, president of the Longwood's chapter presented the award to Dr. Bland. The adviser must contribute a great deal of time and energy to be considered for this award. Dr. Bland contributed a special blend of ingredients, warmth, generosity, and genuine concern for the sisterhood of Alpha Delta Pi. Nominations are made by the chapter and sent to Executive office who make the final decision.

New Talent In Home

Economics Department

By PENNY ROBINSON

The Home Economics Department has a new spark of talent and energy this fall, she is Dr. Marguerite Griffith, a native Virginian from Richland. She received her undergraduate degree in Home Economics from Milligan College in Tennessee. Dr. Griffith obtained her Masters and Ph. D. Degree in Home Economic Education from Virginia Polytechnic Institute while working and teaching. She taught at Kent State University in Ohio for two and one half years before coming to Longwood College.

Glad to be back in Virginia, Dr. Griffith is readily re adapting to southern life. She is "impressed with the friendliness and sense of purpose of the Longwood students." In her spare time Dr. Griffith enjoys oil painting and is an amateur astronomer.

Grady Nutt, "The Prime Minister of Humor"

Christian Humorist Combines Comedy And Religion

By KAREN SHELTON

Grady Nutt is tall, friendly, easy-moving, and with a twinkle in his eye, he brings audiences hearty laughter and good will, insightful meaning and solid thought; he sends his newly made friends away chuckling and thinking. "If joy and hope were diseases, Grady Nutt would be an epidemic," wrote one of his admirers.

Grady sings, juggles, "handbones" and plays a dozen different musical instruments, including the tiple — a small, 10 string Spanish folk instrument that he calls a "ukelele with thyroid trouble." He calls himself a humorist. "A humorist isn't a comedian. He's not just trying to crack jokes. . . a humorist is an interpreter of life. He takes a common experience — something that's happened to everybody — and filters it through his own way of looking at things until it comes alive for another person who can say, 'Oh, yeah! Right! That's the truth!'"

Embodied in this story teller, humorist, minister, writer, enjoyer, insight giver, and life celebrator, there is an unusual Nutt — open and eager to unshell what is ordinary and allow the treasures of truth and humor to spill out to those who hear him.

Nutt says, "I like to preach, but in a light, easy way. Like Mary Poppins, I believe a little sugar helps the medicine go down. I try to get the punch line in early, so when I pull the trigger, everything falls in place. When I'm in the middle of a sermon, I'm finding points where I can dramatize with wit the things that hang on your mind better."

This Christian humorist, whose curious mix of religion and comedy works well, will be speaking on Lankford Mall, Thursday, September 22. The program will begin at 6:30, and it is sponsored by the Inter-Religious Council.

Spanish Professor In Educational "Who's Who"

By LINDA CARRILLO

Dr. Maria C. Silveira, an associate professor of Spanish, is to be included in the first edition of "The World Who's Who of Women in Education." This publication, which will be sent to several of the world's major libraries, will contain her biography.

Dr. Silveira, her hands' and eyes conveying a natural ebullience, said that the honor "came as a tremendous surprise to me. The man who called asked me if I had received the information. I told him, 'you have the wrong person. You don't mean me.'" She continued that when she was notified of the award, "the first person who came to my mind was a former dean of Longwood, Dean Brooks, because he had so much confidence in me."

Beginning her teaching career at the age of nineteen, she holds several degrees and is currently a Ph. D. candidate at the University of Virginia.

The Spanish professor attributes much of her success to her students, "without my students, I could never make it. As a teacher, you always have doubts if you are doing a good job. Until time passes, you don't have the perspective." Dr. Silveira believes that her students' work and abilities are responsible for her selection by the "World Who's Who."

Although she feels honored to be in the directory, Dr. Silveira recalled that the highlight of her career was being chosen to speak at the 1970 Foreign Language Conference. She was introduced as the teacher whose students could be recognized as Longwood graduates because of her "special stamp." She added enthusiastically that "It's an honor that a department so small has students so perfect!"

As a refugee from Cuba, Dr. Silveira explained that "since this country gave me the opportunity to start all over again, I feel that this honor is my way to pay back something."

James Mapes Facinates Audience With His Hypnotic Talent

By JAN TURNER and FRANCES HALL

If you didn't see I.B. Dent get thoroughly ridiculed by a group of angry females, then passionately kissed by them five minutes later, you really missed a treat. Something like this doesn't happen to anybody at anytime, but it did last Thursday evening at "Power of the Mind," with host James Mapes.

Declaring himself a hypnotechnician, and not a hypnotist, he had his first experience at the age of seven, when he predicted the death of his grandmother exactly eleven and a half months away to the day. Several years later, his mother took him to Duke University for testing. Oddly enough, he failed the tests, but his mother took them and passed! She was then considered what they called in those days a "psychic." Again, at the age of fourteen, he predicted the fate of his brother and friends and was able to save their lives. Ever since these predictions, he has been fascinated by the power of the mind.

Mr. Mapes was able to hypnotize particular members of the audience, enabling them to arrive at a state of total relaxation. By concentrating on colors, geometric forms, and picturesque scenery, their subconsciousness was revealed. Little did they know before they came to the demonstration what they would end up doing!

The participants imagined themselves in many different situations, such as in cold, hot, and windy weather. They actually unbuttoned their jackets or sweaters, shivered, and held their arms over their heads when it "started to rain." As the demonstration continued, the group smoked what they thought were joints and drank daiquiris actually believing they were stoned and drunk. One guy even fell out of his chair and rolled around on stage! Mr. Mapes also took the group back in time to when they were eight years old. They imagined themselves at different movies, and went through a series of emotional responses. They laughed, cried, became angry and afraid. The highlight of the evening was three young men who thought they were the greatest strippers of all time. They competed against each other, taking off their clothes (don't worry — only to the waist!) and shoes to burlesque music. The audience roared and seemed to enjoy this more than anything else. It was by all means entertaining! But contrary to popular belief, none of these events could have taken place had not the participants concentrated and paid attention to the best of their ability.

Sophomore Debbie Kinzel remarked "This was the first time for me under hypnosis. I'm not the type of person who can lie with a straight face — I can't fake it and I didn't. I was in such deep concentration I did everything he said, although I knew what I was doing. I was aware of people around me, but you just don't pay attention to them. I wasn't thinking about anything in particular — I was totally relaxed. In fact, several years ago, my school guidance counselor advised me to undergo some E.S.P. tests, and I did. They revealed that I do have some inner perception." Beth Weisel, another sophomore, attended the demonstration last year also, and was able to "go under." "It was so weird. Your mind keeps jumping from one place to another. You can't hear anything but his voice. It felt as though I had been asleep for an hour, and it was only a few minutes. It would be great if you could do this between classes! Hypnosis can definitely help you. Your mind becomes so much clearer."

James Mapes is extremely serious about his work. He remarked that "it is possible to hypnotize anybody if their intelligence is high enough. A person with low intelligence, bordering on retardation, and a baby cannot because they have no concentration span." He needs the participant's attention more than anything else. "Sometimes, people can't be hypnotized because they won't allow themselves to be — they try too hard." He believes there is actually no such thing as hypnotism, but he uses the word because people expect to hear it.

With his own clinic in New York City, called The New York Center for Hypnosis and Mind Control, he works at many different jobs. He helps people lose weight, stop smoking, get rid of phobias and amnesia. "People always know everything they do, but sometimes they forget. Hypnosis helps." But the biggest problem people seem to have is lack of self-confidence. "More people come to my clinic for the development of self confidence than weight control and smoking combined." Helping people and the police to locate objects associated with crimes, he has even worked with the Son of Sam, convicted murderer. He wasn't at liberty to discuss it.

During his workshop last Friday afternoon, people came to learn about self-hypnosis for the purpose of self improvement. Some people wanted to stop smoking, lose weight, improve in sports, and have more confidence in themselves as individuals. Others came merely to learn how to relieve tension and relax, something that is hard to do these days. He discussed becoming aware of ourselves, and finding out who we really were. This workshop was to help the students do just that. Everyone involved was either sitting straight up in their chairs or lying on the floor while he went through three relaxation exercises with breaks in between. Afterwards, most of the students seemed much more relaxed than they were when they first arrived, and happier too. He told those attending not to expect miracles. It would be something we would have to work at and develop. Within four weeks, if faithful, we would notice a drastic change within ourselves.

James Mapes — a fascinating person who enjoys being with people and helping them too. Besides working at his clinic, he is also an actor who has appeared on many television shows. They include Bonanza, Star Trek, Mission Impossible, The Virginian, and Gunsmoke. He

Dr. Novak Involved In Research

By JUDY FAIRES

Dr. Novak is one of several scientists in this nation who are working on a theory that light energy can be converted into chemical energy. This process that he is studying will "mimic" photosynthesis, and it will produce hydrogen from water.

Hydrogen has usually been produced from water through electrolysis, but this process would be impractical for usage on a large scale. Dr. Novak believes that within twenty years the process will be at the point in which the layman will be aware of the process. Not long after that the process will be in usage.

Dr. Novak has been working with Associate Professor Demas at the University of Virginia for the past two summers. Other scientists working on this theory include Professor David G. Whitten of the University of North Carolina, Dr. Mark Wrighton of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Dr. Melvin Calvin of the University of California, winner of the Priestly Medal.

Scott Sparrow Interprets Dreams

By ANN RUOTOLO

Have you ever wondered about a dream you've had and what it meant? If your answer to the question is yes, and you have an avid interest in dream interpretation, the S-UN sponsored workshop on "dreams and illuminations," held last Wednesday, would have been your answer.

Scott Sparrow, who works for the Association for Research and Enlightenment in Virginia Beach, was the guest speaker at the workshop. He discussed three methods for Dream Interpretation which could be understood and applied by even the novice interpreter. For one and a half hours the participants told their dreams, and with Mr. Sparrow's guidance, found clear meanings to the nature of their dreams and the parts they played in the dreamer's real life. Also, general questions about dreams were answered.

If you happened to miss the workshop, Mr. Sparrow left a few outlined procedures for Dream Interpretation with Mr. I. Dent. They can be picked up at the S-UN office in Lankford. Mr. Sparrow also invites everyone to stop by the A. R. E. for lectures, courses, and movies on the same subject. The building is located on 67th Street in Virginia Beach.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

Education, college or otherwise, is not limited to work inside the classroom. Most every day, somewhere on campus there is an event or activity waiting to be taken advantage of. There is a semester full of scheduled events including artist series appearances, visiting scholar lectures, recitals, readings and the like. For the most part, all are free.

On the adjacent page a staff writer has reviewed the exhibit of contemporary paintings on loan from the Virginia Museum. The exhibit is housed in the Lancaster Gallery. At the time of the reviewer's viewing, she was the twentieth person to view the collection. That was sixteen days after the show had opened. Tomorrow will be the final day of the show.

With an event like an art exhibit, the viewing may be entertaining as well as educational. The event is being reviewed in part as a preview for prospective viewers. Unfortunately, all exhibits in the Lancaster Gallery are locked; a librarian must open the gallery for the viewer. This obstacle, however, is hardly large enough to prevent one from viewing the show. (The reason that the gallery is locked is that two years ago a portion of an exhibit was destroyed by ink pens and magic markers.)

As most events are free, they will probably require that the student leave the dorm. And it just may happen that the activity will occur at the same time as this week's episode of "Starsky and Hutch," but the events are here and available to all. The time has been taken to select and reserve all events. Support them.

Governor Godwin Emphasizes Higher Education

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Last week, state politicians, educational administrators, and students met in Richmond at a luncheon sponsored by Virginians for Bonds. Governor Godwin spoke at the affair which served as an organizational meeting and problem-solving symposium for Students for Bonds, the campus faction of the referendum lobby.

In his speech the Governor emphasized the need for the appropriation of funds through the bond. Citing the successful implementation of the 1969 bond package he reminded the attendants of their allegiance to one another as Virginians in considering the overall benefits of each individual package. Capital made available through these bonds would not only provide buildings, berths and recreational facilities, but would also create additional jobs throughout the state. Three alternatives on how to approach the problem of insufficient or deteriorating state facilities are to 1) increase taxes, 2) secure building capital through bonds, or 3) to do nothing at all, which, according to the Governor, is "not characteristic of responsible Virginians."

The luncheon was primarily directed at the Students for Bonds, a statewide league of student campus coordinators whose objective is to provide information on and advocacy for the bond referendum. Student representatives from such schools as VCU, UVA., Norfolk State, and William and Mary discussed obstacles they have encountered in attempting to fulfill this objective including general apathy, administrative resistance, and lack of funds with which to buy publicity. Longwood was also represented by five of its students despite a severe case of nonattendance at its first meeting of Students for Bonds. Assuming that the poor response was due to a conflict in meeting times, the organizational meeting of Students for Bonds has been rescheduled to meet tonight at 6:15 in the alcove of the main dining hall. Types of strategies, committee chairmen, and the extent of campus awareness of the issue will be discussed. Workers will be needed to design and paint visual materials, gather information on the progress of the bond, supervise absentee balloting, and man the local polls during Election Day.

By DAVE PHILLIPS

It's a suitcase college. For some reason the preceding four words never found their way into a Longwood College catalog. Many of us brave souls who actually stay here on weekends were unaware of the serene, halcyon atmosphere which pervades the Longwood campus on weekends. Party? Where?

Letter To The Editor

Dear Editor,

I would like to express my concern over the lack of Letters to the Editor in this newspaper. I am sure that the students on this campus have complaints, or commendations, or simply views to express. The fact that upsets me is that these people are not taking advantage of the opportunity this paper is giving them to voice their opinions. If they feel strongly about something they should want to let others hear their viewpoint. One of the best ways of doing this is to write The Rotunda a letter and have it printed.

Possibly, if the students were informed of the procedure to follow in writing a Letter to the Editor, they would be more apt to sit down and write one. It should be known that the letter must be typed, signed, and delivered to the Rotunda office by the Friday before the publication date.

It is not that difficult a thing to do. Again, if people have gripes, commendations, acknowledgements of happenings, agreements or disagreements with anything printed in this newspaper, I hope that they will not hesitate to let others know, and write a Letter to the Editor.

Sincerely concerned,
Dave Gates

Who? Really? More than three people?

Estimates vary on the number of lemmings . . . er, students who evacuate Longwood on weekends, however it is known that traffic on 360 east quadruples. State police have been known to reinforce their battalions with high-speed pursuit cars to catch the more determined students.

Hypothesis abound for the cause of this strange behavior — some of the nations finest behavioral psychologists have been called in to study this phenomena but they have been able to do no better than "they miss home" or "they want Mom's food" or "they desire peace and quiet in which to study" or even "CHI supports it." Some have even gone as far as to imply that those of us who stay here are the ones exemplifying "... truly deviant, reprehensible social behavior" and should be "tar and feathered."

Well, I'm sorry but no amount of cajolery, intense peer pressure or even threats of bodily harm and injury will convince me to alter my position because I know the answer. You see, Longwood has been invaded by high school students. That's right. Well, yes, they've gotten their diploma and all of the other necessary accoutrements but they have yet to emotionally graduate. They trundle off to college with all three of their yearbooks, pictures and other assorted mementos with which to help them survive the week. Then, come Friday, they flock back to their old alma mater for the football game and such and don't return until late Sunday evening by which time they're in a state of delirious ecstasy. These symptoms last into early winter when the realization strikes that there aren't any more football games to attend. Many students panic but the more resourceful of the breed find better, even more gratifying activities. The truly clever and adventurous may even entertain the thought of spending a weekend at Longwood. Such audacity!

Well, I'm a troupier and I think I'll stay here this weekend. Read a book.

Voter Registration Deadline October 8

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Students that have never voted before or have not cast ballot in the last five years are required to register in their place of domicile by October 8.

Unlike the criteria for residence, which is met merely by living in a dorm, "domicile" involves year-round residence with an intent to remain in the community beyond graduation. Disadvantages to consider in registering in the college community include rendering yourself subject to jury duty and payment of local taxes. In some cases students who claim domicile outside of their hometown are exempted from their parents' health and auto insurances.

The most legally snag-free procedure then, if you are not yet registered, is to go home sometime prior to Oct. 8 and register then. Most registrars are open Saturday mornings, although it may be a good idea to check with your particular locality for their hours in advance.

Absentee ballots are available to registered voters through the mail. Students for Bonds will provide Absentee Ballot request forms to all eligible students who need them beginning sometime next month. As all ballots cast via the mail must be received by Election Day, the last week in October has been designated as Absentee Ballot Week as an organized attempt to hustle the procrastinators to the P.O. Details on the workings of this project will be released at a later time.

Our Town Cast Selected

By BARBARA SLOUGH
Thorton Wilder's Our Town will be presented on Jarman stage September 28 through October 1. Set in Grover's Corners, New Hampshire, at the turn of the century, the play emphasizes the transience of life.

To relay this theme, Wilder enforces audience involvement. The cast, consisting of Longwood students, faculty, and members of the community, uses mime to involve the audience. In addition, the apparent lack of scenery and the multiple roles of several actors, provides for a great deal of flexibility in terms of time and setting.

Mr. Young, the director of the play, is very satisfied with the cast. "The only problem," he stated, "is getting constant use of Jarman Auditorium stage. Up to this point, it has impaired the progress of the rehearsal of the play. However, we shall overcome!"

The leading role of the stage manager is being played by Lee Tatum. Portraying the Gibbs family are Henry Emmerson as Dr. Gibbs, Barbara Wood as Mrs. Gibbs, and Hank Dahlman as George Gibbs. Portraying members of the Webb family are John Hudson as Mr. Webb, Vicki Mann as Mrs. Webb, and Kerry McCarthy as Emily Webb.

OUR TOWN cast prepares for semester's first production

Drama Curriculum Expanded

By BRIDGET SCHERZ
Beginning this semester, the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts will initiate a course program for a degree in the Dramatic Arts. This new curriculum is designed so that students interested primarily in theater studies will no longer have to compromise half of their coursework to another major in order to comply with academic policy.

The degree offered will be a B.A. stipulating, as in other majors, that the student complete one foreign language course on the 200 level. Along with the standard general education requirements, majors will be expected to complete with at least a 2.0, courses in Speech, Theater History, Directing, Acting, Stagecraft (previously Play Production), and one drama-related elective.

Besides the coordination of the new degree, the most obvious innovation in the department is the Play Production program in which participating students receive course credit for working on shows. The credit system is open to all students on a Pass-Fail basis, who log at least 45 hours of work on a major production. One credit is allotted per production for acting or contributing to one of the technical crafts such as costumes, lighting, properties, sound-music, make-up, and publicity-house. Dramatic Arts majors must complete at least 4, and no more than 8 credit hours in Play Production although they may work above this limit without further academic credit. Only one credit per semester may be received.

Department head, Dr. Patton Lockwood, compared the Play Production system to receiving credit for a type of lab. Whereas class meetings generally encompass theory, working on the shows is an "essential learning experience" in that the "productions are the culmination of the lectures."

More information on the new Dramatics Degree will be given at the meeting this Thursday for majors and other students interested in pursuing a theater degree. It will also provide an opportunity for the department to receive direct student feedback on the successes and shortcomings within it.

Art Offerings Include Film Studies

By DEBBIE NORTHERN
Cinema Studies, which were classified as an English course last year, have been retitled Film Studies and are now offered under the Art Department. Film Studies offers three levels of study. These courses, with the exception of Art 258, may be taken as literature credits or as art credits.

Dr. Charlotte Schrader-Hooker is the Professor of the Film Studies and Filmmaking. She says that before, when Cinema Studies was listed as only an English course, "it got lost in the English studies." "Film studies classes are still being accepted for English credit... since they require a good bit of reading," she added.

Another reason for the department change was that filmmaking was classified as an art course, and consolidation of this course and film studies was desired. Says Dr. Hooker, "Film studies lead to filmmaking."

She says her teaching aim is to "make people aware of the great heritage that exists" in films. The college has a "nice collection of films dating back to 1895, which was the beginning of filmmaking." In class, famous films are screened with emphasis on "understanding the history of film as an art form." Dr. Hooker explains that her studies of classical films are "similar to studying Milton and Chaucer."

"Ultimately the Art Department wants to offer a concentration in films and photography," she added.

Perhaps an added incentive to her filmmaking and film studies courses is that the Datsun Motor Company is offering prizes of a car and scholarships to colleges and universities students for films or papers about films. Dr. Hooker is hoping a Longwood student will take advantage of this opportunity.

Also at the end of the semester, her filmmaking class will hold its own film festival to show their works.

The film studies courses are: Art 256 (English 256) entitled Film Studies I: History, which the Art Department pamphlet describes as "a survey of the first fifty years of the motion picture with emphasis upon the major directors of America, Germany, Russia and France; Art 257 (English 257), Film Studies II: Genre, described as "a study of the avant-garde, documentary and fiction film with emphasis upon American and foreign filmmakers," and Art 258, Film Studies III: Theory and Criticism, which is "a study of the major film theorists and critics with practical experience in film criticism, selection, and evaluation."

Other new art courses for this fall are Art 155, the Basic Processes and Principles of Photography; Art 211, Art for Special Populations; and Art 416, Advanced Casting.

Art 355's title was changed from Fundamentals of Photography to Photography as an Art Form.

If interested in any of these new or changed courses, please see the Art Department for additional information.

Contemporary Paintings Vary In Style, Expression

By PAM KELLET

Tomorrow is the last day to visit the exhibit of contemporary paintings from the Virginia Museum Collection. When I went to see them (in the downstairs gallery of Lancaster Library), they had been up for 16 days and only 20 people had taken the time to see them. It's possible that this is because the gallery is kept locked, and many people may not know to ask the librarian for the key. That policy has been in effect ever since a junior show was vandalized two years ago.

The 16 paintings now on display are a fair and worthy showing of various styles and expressions from some of today's artists.

In terms of realistic imagery, three paintings come to mind, the first being "Summer's End" by Charles Rain. Summer's heat lingers in gold, orange, and red as the seashore and its abandoned shelters recede into the horizon. A grey-suited man wades with unsold paper windmills. The idea is as clear as the photographic quality. In the same meticulous vein, Robert Vicky rendered a warm brick wall on a slant with a cool flash of Coronet as a nun leaves the picture ("Nun and Arch"). The third painting dealing in the realistic approach is "Street Dance" by Bernard Perlin. It takes awhile before one can see that the misty glazes of brown, purple, blue and green are actually couples waiting across the canvas with a retreating star. The curves of their arms propel them around in their swirling colors.

For those with an eye for the abstract, there are several pleasing works. "Family Portrait" by Robert Gwathmey, for instance, uses a very stiff, balanced linear contour colored in like a stained glass window.

The same stiff approach is apparent in Roland Peterson's bright and cheerful "Picnic Figures" except his brush strokes are more free and the linear quality more subdued. Mary Tatum Abram's "Paradise Tree" (incidentally, the only woman represented in the show) is a splendid example of loose brush strokes. Her blue-toned tree leaves move well with the contrasting orange negative space.

In a somewhat personalized cubist approach, Donald Merrick deals with planes of yellow and turquoise blue interspersed with white in his "Seashells by the Seashore: Ocracoke." A curved figure of a woman that lurks behind a lighthouse dominates the picture with her contrasting shape and splashes of orange.

A very different attitude of abstraction is offered by Leonard Edmondson in "Passages." Here, an almost primitive approach is taken with symbolic looking shapes painted on a glazed background of blending colors. The result resembles a stylized cave painting.

For those with a more trained aesthetic eye there are studies of color and movement, such as "Merbyside II" by John Curran, "Corrosion and Blue" by Benjamin Wigfall, and "Tracey" by Alexander Liberman. "Corrosion and Blue" is my favorite in this group. It deals with tones of brown and a tiny bit of blue that seems fluorescent in its hunt for orange (the compliment of blue).

Shall I go on? I think not. There are more paintings in the show, but there are also more than 20 students in this college — so if any cultural interest has been inspired, there is one more day to visit the gallery.

Tennis Team Loses To RMWC, Wins Over Mary Washington

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Longwood Tennis Team dropped their first match away at Randolph-Macon Woman's College last Tuesday, but took their first win over Mary Washington Friday.

Randolph-Macon had "more experience" according to Coach Phylliss Harriss. She was not disappointed by her team's 8-1 loss because she feels her team is "building up." Teresa McLawhorn was the only team member to win her match.

Friday, Longwood had a 6-3 victory. Coach Harriss was "real proud" and "knew they could do it."

The team was playing extremely well Friday after a hard practice the day before. This Friday Richard Bass, a pro from Richmond, will assist the team in a workout before the team plays Madison Saturday.

Scores from Mary Washington match:

- Singles:
1. Teresa McLawhorn lost to Kathy Cesky 6-2, 6-3
 2. Margie Quarles d. Pam Neagley 6-2, 4-6, 6-2
 3. Gwen Koehlein d. Sue Wilson 6-1, 6-0
 4. Mary Barrett d. Evelyn

New Coach - New Team Hoping To Qualify For Nationals

By DEBBIE MOUL and DEBBIE NORTHERN

There's vigorous action on Barlow Field right now. Longwood's hockey team, under the fine coaching ability of Mary McDonough is preparing for a hopefully successful season. Miss McDonough, a new addition to the Physical Education staff here at Longwood, graduated from Madison College (James Madison University) with a B.S. and a M.S. degree in Science with emphasis in Physical Education.

Her previous involvements with sports are most admirable. She was a member and played on the United States Hockey Squad in 1975. Miss McDonough's ability not only lies in hockey but in lacrosse as well. She played for the United States Reserve in 1974 and was a member of the United States Lacrosse Squad in 1975. She has coached lacrosse at Georgetown University and while a graduate student was an assistant coach in both hockey and lacrosse at Madison, where she played four years varsity hockey and lacrosse.

After college, Miss McDonough played for the Washington Field Hockey Association. She has been in eight National Hockey Tournaments and eight National Lacrosse Tournaments. In addition, she coached the 1976 Southeast Team at Nationals.

Her coaching career began at Hayfield Secondary School in Alexandria. Since then she has coached at various hockey camps such as the Mt. Pocono Hockey Camp in Tobyhanna, Pennsylvania, where she coached this summer. Fourteen Longwood hockey players attended this camp.

Out of a field of about 40 contenders, 27 fortunate hockey players survived the grueling heat to make the 1977 Field Hockey Squad. Returning Seniors from last year, Carol Filo, from Virginia Beach; Cathy Lowe, from Chantilly, and Terry Voit, originally from Pennville, N. J., will be playing their fourth year of varsity hockey. Seniors Scottie Capehart and Terry Donahue, both of Richmond, have returned with three years of varsity experience. Senior Clare Baxter from Princeton, N. J., did not play last year, but has one year varsity and one year JV experience as goalie at Longwood. Also Senior Ginger Nicklas of Virginia Beach has returned from an absence with two years' JV experience.

Other returning players are Sophomores Suzanne Ash of Richmond, Kim Ferbee and Debi Kinzel of Virginia Beach, Debbie Northern of Warsaw, Robin Rowen of Colonial Heights, Wanda Petersen, of Alexandria and Teresa Ware of Jackson, Florida. Myra Gwyer, from Richmond, is a returning Junior.

Newcomers are Freshmen Barb Cox from Wilmington, Delaware, Julie Dayton of Laurel, Delaware, Teri Davis and Cindy Droseski of Alexandria, Donna Deats from Spotsylvania, Jeanne Nolte of Richmond, Celeste Rodriguez of McLean, and Jackie Steel from Warrenton.

Also Sophomores Doreen Shuffler of Virginia Beach, Genice Morgan of Alexandria, and Bev Kobayashi of Falls Church are new this year.

This year's Manager is Diane Harwood.

The hockey team hopes to qualify for the upcoming Intercollegiate Tournament held in Denver, Colorado. There is no reason why they don't go to the nationals. They are a good team but they will be challenged by teams that play just as well if not better.

Miss McDonough feels that the team looks good as does the action on the field. They have a lot of potential in doing well. The players are willing to practice during the day which is advantageous in that they can receive individual attention. She feels that you can have a lot of experience as a coach but smooth interaction and communication between the players and the coach is most important.

Says Coach McDonough, "They work real hard. I'm pleased with what I've seen so far."

Over the Thanksgiving holidays, the third AIAW U. S. Field Hockey Association Collegiate National Championship will be held at the University of Denver. Sixteen (Continued on Page 8)

— NOW PLAYING —

Two intramural sports are now in progress. Five intermediate teams, divided by dorms, are now playing softball. Main Cunningham's team is captained by Susan Gray, North Cunningham's captain is Jo Ann Havell, Windy Moorefield heads Wheeler's team, Kathy Barcalow is AST's captain, and Sue Jones captains the Frazer team. Beginning teams are also organizing and are scheduled to play at later dates. Softball managers are Becky Mattox and Tommy Stout.

Six co-ed flag football teams are also on the field. Sue Bona and H. L. Clay are managing the Tabb Grabbers, the Better Sex, the Weight Training I, Sue's Girls, French Foxes, and the Night Owls.

— COMING —

Men's and women's tennis singles are scheduled to begin soon. All interested may sign on the I. A. A. board in the smoker. Deanna Van Wey will be managing the tennis.

Participants for men's and women's bowling must sign by September 22. The bowling manager is Debbie Fore.

All IAA news is posted on the board in the smoker.

— EQUIPMENT LOAN —

The I. A. A. owns equipment which may be checked out by any student at any time. Golf clubs and bags for both men and women are kept in the club house at the golf course. Students must furnish their own golf balls. College identification must be shown before clubs and bags are issued.

Tennis rackets and badminton rackets are available for one day's use. Betty Brown, stationed in the towel room of the pool locker room, checks out this equipment.

— I. A. A. MEETINGS —

All students are invited and encouraged to attend the Thursday 6:45 p. m. meetings in the I. A. A. room in Langford. This year's officers are: Kim McCanna, president; Alda Brown, vice president; Carol Filo, secretary; Debbie Fore, treasurer; and Ms. Carolyn Price, adviser.

Coach Harriss Has Wallet Stolen

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Friday during the tennis match with Mary Washington, Coach Phylliss Harriss' wallet was stolen. Coach Harriss left her wallet inside her purse in the Forty-Love room beside Barlow Courts. Her wallet was missing when she went to look for it later. Campus police located the wallet in the men's shower room, but the thief had gotten away with about $21.00.

Mrs. Harriss was grateful to get back her driver's license and pictures of sentimental value.

She was also pleased that the thief did not take her credit cards. Mrs. Harriss has left her purse in the room before and has "never thought" of anyone stealing it.

The only words she has for the thief are, "If you really need the money I'll be glad to lend it to you when she went to look for it later. Campus police located the wallet in the men's shower room, but the thief had gotten away with about $21.00."

Golf Team Expects "Excellent" Season

The 1977 golf team consists of seven members. Four players have returned from last year, Sophomores Deanna Vanwey of San Diego, California, Becky Webb of Galax, Janet Clements of Vernon Hill, and Senior Meg Baskerville from South Boston. Newcomers are Freshmen Deborah Hood from South Hill, Kathy Smith from Covington, and Sophomore Penny Stephens from Ashland.

The Longwood golf team won the state championship last year and has held that title four times in the past seven years.

This year's team opened its season against James Madison University on September 15. Longwood defeated the opposition 7-5. Low scorers were Kathy Smith in number four position with an 82, Deborah Hood in number six position with an 83, Captain Deanna Vanwey in number one position with 87 and Janet Clements in number two position with 80.

Coach Barbara Smith predicts an "excellent" season for her team.

Today Longwood will take on the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and Madison College at home.

Soccer Team Makes Comeback In Second Half To Tie Score

By Margaret Hammersley

Greensboro scored three goals in the first half while Longwood failed to score at all. Offensively, Longwood moved too quickly with the ball, unable to control it. Without teamwork Longwood could not get in position to score. Defensively during the first half, Coach Williamson faulted "the defense and the goalie for not working with each other." When Link was covering one area of the goal, no fullback dropped back to cover the remaining area. The first two of Greensboro's goals were scored in that situation.

Greensboro was extremely quick with their throw-ins. The ball was in the Longwood defensive area before the fullbacks were.

Greensboro's goals were scored by Steve Gates, 10 minutes into the half; Bob Brewer, unassisted, 14 minutes into the half; and Guy Nghibi, assisted by number 7, 29 minutes into the half.

After only twelve minutes into the second half, Longwood had scored their first three goals. Slowing down and working with each other, Longwood was able to score and keep Greensboro from scoring. Coach Williamson complimented the forward line on their teamwork to score, and the defense's positioning and play with the goalie.

Four minutes into the half, David Kormornik scored the first goal unassisted. The second goal came six minutes later by Steve Nelson, assisted by Kormornik. Kormornik scored again, assisted by Mark Conte, twelve minutes into the half.

Tied 3-3, with both teams tired but determined, and anxious spectators, the game went into overtime with two ten minute halves. The first half was scoreless. In the second half Greensboro's Bob Brewer, assisted by number 13, scored 16 minutes into overtime. With 16 seconds of play left, Nelson, assisted by Kormornik, scored the final goal to tie 4-4.

The officials were kept busy, but Williamson commented that they did a good job. "They were in position on the field and followed the game."

Joe Link, the freshman goalie, proved his ability Saturday. Coach Williamson commented, "I must say, he has plenty of courage; he's not afraid of the area or anyone coming in." He added, "For a freshman he had an exceptional game."

Following the excitement of the game, the untaping of ankles, the men's departure to dinner, Coach Williamson sat quietly in his office. Reclined in his desk chair he smiled, saying, "I'm most pleased with the character of the team; when they were down at

Soccer Gaining Popularity In North America

By Margaret Hammersley

After a scanty beginning, and until recently, soccer has had an uncelebrated existence in the United States. Fortunately, for the now millions of fans, the situation is changing.

Soccer has been named the national sport in most European countries for years. To many nations soccer is known as football (not to be confused with the American version of the game), a game where the ball is moved with the foot. Variations of the game date back to ancient civilizations. In England, however, the progress and development of the game can be charted.

In the earliest days of the game, the British government tried to ban soccer, yet enthusiasts would not allow it to happen. The first basic rules were not established until 1848 when Cambridge University did so. The rules were later recorded in The Simplest Game, printed in 1862. In the next year the first body of rule governors formed the Football Association. The game later became known as soccer. One variation of the game was labelled rugby football, football in the American sense.

Early soccer had two goalkeepers. The offside rule was then defined, and goalkeepers were limited to one.

The 1880's brought controversy as whether to keep soccer at an amateur or a professional level. The first players wanted the amateur standing to remain, yet it was the desire of the working class for the sport to advance. They foresaw a profit in professional play.

It was in 1885 that professional soccer was legalized, and the first championship playoff, the Football Association Cup Final, was held in London in 1901. The crowd was numbered at more than 100,000.

The game, first stabilizing in Britain, was then exported from Britain to colonies and possessions across the world. Even today this accounts for the number of foreign players on American teams.

France, Belgium, Switzerland, Holland, Denmark and Spain formed the Federation International Football Association (FIFA) in 1904. By 1954, 130 nations had joined the roster of FIFA leagues. National leagues are usually divided into four divisions of 11 or 12 teams in each. International competition takes place in the playing of various championships.

Every four years leading players from the winning national teams compete for the World Cup. The players must be citizens of the country for which they play.

Dubbed as the two international soccer superstars are Eusebio, born in East Africa, and Pelé, born in Brazil.

In 1957, at the age of 15, Eusebio signed his first professional contract with the Sporting Club of Lourenco Marques. He was later traded to the Benfica Club in Portugal. To most sportsmen he is rated second only to Pelé.

Often referred to as the greatest of soccer players, Pelé, a native Brazilian, was born Edson Arantes do Nascimento. Pelé was playing organized soccer at age 14, and the next year he signed with the professional Santos. The world got its first look at the superstar when he played in his first World Cup Championship in 1958 at the age of 17. In 1975 after 18 years with the Brazil Club, Pelé joined the New York Cosmos. October 1, 1977, at the age of 36, Pelé will retire from professional soccer.

His last game was in August when the Cosmos met the Seattle Sounders in Soccer Bowl '77.

The history of soccer in America has not been as structured nor as organized as European soccer. Not only were the majority of American professionals nonnatives, they were also late comers.

In the mid 1880's, American collegians were playing soccer, but by the name of football. It was not long before rugby and football, as we know it today, stunted the growth of soccer.

It was not until 1933 that the U.S. established the first national association, the American Soccer League. The formation of other leagues soon followed. With the varied leagues and little unity, the sport struggled.

The increase in popularity came in the 1960's. Schools and colleges were playing soccer, offering scholarships. 1967 marked the establishment of the North American Soccer League (NASL). It now consists of 20 teams nationwide.

Popularity is increasing, and it is in part due to the selling of the sport. Mr. Francisco Marcos, Vice President of Public Relations and Development of the Tampa Bay Rowdies Soccer Club, spoke over the phone with The Rotunda of how he sells soccer. He promotes soccer as a "family sport . . . competing with the beaches, movies, Busch Gardens . . ." He explained that when the Rowdies started, soccer was virtually nonexistent; "it could not go over as a sport." The club administrators package the sport as entertainment, including family prices and cheerleading. Their goal is to reach the families in the hope that they "will come back as soccer fans."

Player identification with the fans is uppermost in the minds of the club's promoters. "All players are more or less English speaking players . . . so they can identify with the fans," says Marcos. The players often serve in public service capacities, and in educational situations. Clinics are frequently conducted by the players in junior high and high schools.

Mr. Marcos also noted the absence of a professional football team in Tampa as a plus in soccer promotion.

Mr. Bobby Muffat, Publications Director for the Dallas Tornado, the oldest club in the league, also spoke of soccer as a "family-oriented sport; on the grass roots level, women can play."

"Family" and "fans" seem to be the key words of the promoters which spoke to The Rotunda. Mr. Dave Ferroni, with the Minnesota Kicks' public relations office, emphasized the family and student pricing. Fans are also allowed free parking at the Kicks games. He added that "The players feel a strong obligation to the fans and the public."

Soccer, having been referred to as "a suburban sport" by Ferroni, and as a "cosmopolitan" sport by Muffat, is securing large crowds. In their second season, while competing with baseball, hockey, and football, the Kicks drew crowds of 30,000 and more. The Kicks fans are aged between 18 and 25 years. Both Ferroni and Muffat estimate that 50 per cent of the fans are female.

Speaking of the influence of professional soccer on collegiate soccer, Mr. Marcos commented that the popularity increase with the collegiate game is due to the emergence of the professional game. He added that collegiate players "are being treated now like real athletes." For the professional draft, Mr. Marcos said that teams are beginning to look more closely at high school players; coaches desire to "get them young and mold them." Mr. Muffat concurred with that statement saying that many high school students will move directly into the professional circuit and gain their education elsewhere.

Commenting on the growth of soccer and the universality of the sport, Mr. Muffat allowed, "I'm positive that when we land on the moon, we won't be hitting a golf ball around, it'll be a soccer ball."

It has been through the help of foreign players such as Pelé, and foreign coaches conducting clinics that soccer has stabilized and begun to gain popularity in the United States.

Former F.B.I. Agent Is New Campus Policeman

By DEBBIE MOUL

"FREEZE! F.B.I." And then what? — the tall, lanky man in blue saunters casually up to you and with a devilish grin on his face says "Hey! What can I do for Ya?" His name is Frankel Woodson, but you can call him Frank. His beat — Longwood College. Sure he was a special agent for the F. B. I., so what is he doing here? Well, sit back, relax, and listen to Frank's life story.

It all started in Cumberland County when Frank graduated from Luther Porter Jackson High School. In June, 1963, he enlisted in the Air Force and went to Albany, New York. From New York, he went to Lackland, Texas for eight weeks of basic training. Frank was stationed for two years in Kansas City, Missouri and in Spangdehlem, Germany for two years.

In June of 1967, Frank said goodbye to the Air Force and went to work for J. Edgar Hoover in November. He had fourteen weeks of training in Quantico, Virginia. He was sent to the Academy as a police instructor. He started out as a fingerprint technician, "latent examiner". While living in Washington, D.C. and working for the F.B.I., Frank attended night school at Strayer College in D. C. It was here that he obtained a B.S. degree in Business Administration. In 1970, he entered the Public Relations field for the F.B.I. And after eight years, Frank made it to the top. He was now a Special Agent for the F.B.I., or "G-man" as they prefer to call themselves. This only lasted for a year for Frank spoke his final "Freeze! F.B.I." and came home to Cumberland County and to Longwood.

Frank Woodson is down-to-earth, witty and most important, himself. He is married and the father of two girls, ages 7 and 15 months. Says Frank of his girls, "They're tough!" to which one might reply, "Just like their daddy." He plays tennis, football, baseball, handball, racketball — a truly versatile athlete. He enjoys music and likes to dance.

Says Frank "I like people. I like working with people. And I get along with just about everybody." He likes to treat people the way he wants to be treated. If you see someone in need, give them a helping hand.

So go up and introduce yourself and the next time someone asks if you know Officer Woodson, you'll be able to say, "Oh, yea! Frank, the 'Old Friendly Cop'."

Technical Difficulties Mount In Border-Line Riot

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Last Tuesday, the afternoon drowsiness that customarily settles over the TV lounge in the New Smoker was rudely and abruptly splashed by border-line riot activity involving some 15 to 20 students. The apparent cause of the uproar was a seemingly unobtrusive television which unexpectedly "gave up its signal" during a crucial part of the daytime serial "All My Children." According to a well informed source the incident occurred when Tara, one of the program's regulars, was teetering between death and prime-time's answer to guaranteed plot climax, the ever popular coma. The initial reaction was one of general alarm, which shaded briefly to a kind of amused perplexity which quickly ionized itself into vicious outrage when it was discovered that no one present knew how to fix the thing.

Several solutions were attempted however none to any avail. The first adjustment was made by a patient traditionalist who immediately went for the dials, but ultimately went berserk and was taken away, obviously shaken, by other members of the group. A second attempt was made when a student in sneakers began to deftly work the set over with her feet reminiscent of the Argentine Pele during exhibition. Again no luck. The final effort, also unsuccessful, came from a possible graduate from the Kung Fu School of TV repair and recycling who began doing a little "body and fender" work on the picture tube with a ragefully tightened wad of fingers.

The group eventually collapsed, weary and despondant when someone adapted the old query "is there a doctor in the house?" to the problem at hand — "Is anyone here taking 'Radio and TV?' Isolated bands of the frustrated "Soapers" were reported as seen aimlessly roaming around campus looking skyward "for aeriels, you know."

Peterson Reports Suspension

By Judicial Board

By MARGARET
HAMMERSLEY

Last Thursday, September 22, Karl Peterson appeared before Judicial Board in a closed hearing on the charge of possession of marijuana. The trial was an after effect of Peterson's arrest September 9 for possession. Peterson states that Judicial Board passed a one and one half year suspension on him.

According to Peterson, there was no concrete evidence produced. He stated that he pleaded the fifth amendment to all questions.

Lieutenant Webb appeared at the trial. Peterson reported that Lieutenant Webb mentioned that "an informant had said that I (Peterson) had ten bottles of morphine in my room." Peterson denies that testimony. He added, "I thought he (Webb) prejudiced the board quite a bit because the board may have felt that I had had connections with the hard drug." The Rotunda was unable to contact Webb for comments.

The Rotunda was able to contact Gay Kampfmüller, Judicial Board Chairman. Miss Kampfmüller was not at liberty to discuss the trial, but commented that she had asked before the trial that "nothing be repeated outside of the room." She stated that the board will say nothing so as to "protect the student."

Peterson has appealed to the Board of Appeals.

Additional Cox Rooms Searched For Drugs

By MARGARET
HAMMERSLEY

Two rooms in Cox dormitory were searched for drugs early Sunday morning by Judicial Board officials. Karl Liljegan, resident of Cox 008, and John Trout of 007 notified The Rotunda of the morning's events.

Liljegan states that at approximately 2:00 a.m., someone was pounding at his door claiming to smell pot, and that the door be opened. Believing it to be "a clown" on the hall, he left his room via the window. Outside he was confronted by another student who told of several people at his door. Returning inside, Liljegan recognized Cox resident Jackie Hall at his door.

Two board officials and 2 campus policemen later arrived with a search warrant. Liljegan was asked to sign the Warrant.

John Trout, having been asleep, claims to have been awakened by the pounding and the "yelling of obscenities." Trout says that both rooms were searched but no drugs were found.

Gay Kampfmüller confirmed the fact that she was "called on the suspicion of marijuana." She said that she did obtain a search warrant, and she did search the two rooms.

Hlad Enthusiastic About Teaching

By FRANCES HALL.

Longwood is fortunate to have a new faculty member. Mr. Hlad has now joined the Sociology Department. A native of St. Louis, Missouri, he did his undergraduate work at Boston University and went on and got his Master's Degree there. He spent the next few years in the service. After that, he worked at Harvard and later at Princeton where he obtained a second Masters degree.

Mr. Hlad spent seven years teaching at Ohio University where he was named Outstanding Teacher in 1972. His last position was at Bucknell University in Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, where he taught for three years.

Here at Longwood, Mr. Hlad is teaching three sections of introductory Sociology, in hopes of getting more students interested in the Sociology Department. He is also teaching a course in criminology, deviance, and law. He feels that this is an interesting area for everyone since it deals with a subject on which "everyone has an opinion". However, Mr. Hlad considers himself to be "a fairly diffuse character" because he has interests in so many different areas of Sociology and has taught so many different courses in his field. Mr. Hlad is a fascinating person to talk with, mainly because he is enthusiastic about teaching and about his field. He is fascinated with Sociology and states that, "there are a variety of Sociologies". We are happy to have Mr. Hlad, his wife Harriet and their two sons, age eight and four years, with us in the community. Many lucky students will have the opportunity to find out about all these "sociologies" that Mr. Hlad referred to.

The Student Education Association is having its membership drive this week, September 27-29. The theme for this year is "Everything Under the Sun", which the members of the S.E.A. feel properly describes education today.

Tonight, the Student Education Association will sponsor a guest speaker in Hiner, room 109 at 7:00. Mr. Charles Jackson, Central Regional Representative of the Student Virginia Education Association and a member of the Student Education Association at Virginia Union University in Richmond, will speak on the various benefits obtained by being a member of the Student Education Association, the Student Virginia Education Association, and the Student National Education Association. A reception will follow for Mr.

Jackson to answer any questions concerning S.E.A.

On Thursday, Mr. Reggie Smith will be on campus to speak on "The Role of the Student Virginia Education Association in Teacher Preparation" which will be held in Room 109 in Hiner at 7:00. Mr. Smith is currently the Director of the Virginia Education Association in Richmond, Virginia, and an active member of the National Education Association. A reception will follow.

The Student Education Association (S.E.A.) is an organization for those in the nation's colleges and universities who would like to explore the world of Education. Affiliated with the National Education Association and the Virginia Education Association, it provides an excellent opportunity to find out what teaching is all about...everything from teaching aids to politics.

The S.E.A. at Longwood College is the J.L. Jarman chapter which was organized in 1939. Ours is the second chapter in Virginia to receive a charter from the National Organization.

Membership in the S.E.A. includes membership in the Student Virginia Education Association and the Student National Education Association. Members also are covered by the Educators Professional Liability Insurance and receive several Educational Journals and newspapers.

Membership forms will be available at each of the events. Anyone interested in joining the Student Education Association can contact Sherry Herald, Box 649 or Donna Huff, Box 519.

Merle Norman Shop Opens

New Figure Salon

By LORI DAVIS and PAULA JOHNSON

Have you ever wanted to get that "totally together look"? Well, now you can get it...right here in Farmville!! Mrs. Linda Lindsey is opening a Figure Salon to be a part of the Merle Norman Cosmetic Studio at 223 North Main Street.

Merle Norman has been in business for almost 30 years; her studio here in Farmville has been open for 4 years now. She always stressed good complexion care, in fact, herline of cosmetics is the NUMBER ONE recommended make-up by the National Dermatologist Association. Merle Norman cosmetics are not expensive, they're high quality and long-lasting, and come with a full money back guarantee. Her motto is "Try before you buy". There are samples of everything in the store and there is personalized service including private counseling.

The new addition to the studio will open on October 1. The membership is $10 to join and $10 a month. Members have unlimited access to the salon. The hours are Monday and Tuesday—10-9 and Wednesday—Saturday—10-5. Mrs. Lindsey is looking for girls to help her operate the salon at night so she can extend later hours into the last part of the week. These "helpers" will have FREE membership and use of the equipment anytime.

The equipment includes vibrator belts, roller bars, ballet bars, bicycles, bench presses, and lats pulls. If you are interested in signing up, contact Mrs. Lindsey and tell her what days and hours you can work, consistently.

The whole idea behind the program is, of course, physical fitness. But think of all the FUN!! (What is there to do on campus on a Tuesday night?!!). She hopes to put a stereo system in soon to do music exercising. While having a good time, your body will be benefiting and you'll look and feel better!

Mrs. Lindsey has studied under the Merle Norman people in California. She is the most qualified person around. She takes four classes a year in places such as DC and Raleigh to keep up with the latest.

Mrs. Lindsey is going to teach a class, "A More Beautiful You" in Coyner Building here on Campus. Registration is the 26th of September. The class is 5 weeks long on Mondays 7-9 p.m. There is a limit of 15 spaces in the class and 5 have already been taken.

The theme for this class is "a total look." Physical fitness, nutrition, hair and skin care, basic, creative, and special occasion make-up, etc.

So come on down to the Figure Shop and meet this talented lady and have a good time—get in shape!! Longwood is lucky to have a great opportunity like this. There is no other place like it for 48 miles.

New Business Professor

Interested In His Field

Mr. Dickens, newest addition to the Business department.

By LINDA CARRILLO

The new professor in the business department, Mr. Thomas Dickens, declared that the "whole business area is very interesting to me. I have been active in the stock market and have an interest in management because I have been in management positions before." Recently moving to Farmville from Richmond, Mr. Dickens was previously an administrative assistant at the secondary level, and for the past 3½ years, he was an accountant. Mr. Dickens's classes include accounting, management, and marketing.

Concerning job opportunities, the business teacher feels that "the business field is probably increasing, certainly as much if not more than the other fields."

A trend that "is significantly having an impact on careers is the electronic equipment. I don't think I can look down the road to where computers will be running us." He hopes, though, to teach "an appreciation for this impact, an attempt to effectively use the computing capabilities we have available." Because he has recently been involved in the business world, Mr. Dickens plans to relate his experience to his teaching. He believes that there is "a big difference between talking about the way things are in the classroom and the actual doing."

In reference to the conflicts between a class and a career, Mr. Dickens stressed that he was "a great believer in the case method. Try to draw from real life, real business situations; look at them, analyze them, and determine what you would do."

As a first-year teacher, Mr. Dickens feels that the "best thing that I can give to my students in management and marketing is to try to bridge the gap between the theory we talk about in class and the practice of the theory."

Near-Professional Actor

Plays Stage Manager

By BARBARA SLOUGH and LEE TATUM

Every night that rehearsal for Our Town is being held, Lee Tatum drives from his job in Richmond to Longwood to prepare for his role as the stage manager and then home to Buckingham County. If you ask him why, the answer seems simple yet truthful, "It's (acting) something I've always been interested in," he states.

But acting, for Tatum, is more than just a passing interest. At one time, he seriously considered it as a career and studied at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in New York. There, he studied under one of the best dramatics teachers in the business with such people as Anne Bancroft and the star of the TV series Ben Casey. The lack of stability and security in the field soon led him to study psychology at the University of Virginia after the Korean War. Although he had officially given up professional acting, however, he joined the Virginia Players at U.Va. and won several awards during his college career.

After he received his degree, however, Tatum spent time behind the cameras creating commercials for television and radio until he landed his present job at a Richmond advertising agency. Now Tatum does occasional voice-overs for TV and radio.

With his schedule, he finds it exceedingly difficult to find the time to participate in the production of plays. The last part Tatum played at Longwood was the role of King Henry II in Lion in Winter in November of 1972 for which he won the best actor award. However, the first play he was in at Longwood was Joan of Arc as produced by the Virginia Players.

Tatum would like to do more plays than just one every five years since he really enjoys working on a play. In his words, "It's a lot of fun and you meet a lot of really nice people. Also, Longwood has a real fine drama department and a great stage. For me, he adds, it is as much fun to do this play on this stage in Farmville as it was when I was in New York."

portraying. They have worked very hard to get through the ups and downs which come with putting a play together, and it seems they will be successful in their endeavors.

Our Town, in general, is a drama which takes place at Grover's Corners, New Hampshire. It is the story of two families, the Gibbs and the Webbs. George Gibbs and Emily Webb meet, fall in love, and marry. Emily dies and then, in a flashback, the audience views her life on earth. The show moves evenly and keeps the audience, as well as the cast, involved in what is happening.

Our Town runs September 28 through October 1 at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. Longwood College students with their I.D. can get in free.

Goldsmith Speaks Of London Guild

By DEBBIE MOUL

On Wednesday evening, Peter Gainsbury, the Director of Research at the Worshipful Co. of Goldsmith's in London added the final touch to an interesting afternoon of lectures and exhibits on jewelry and metalsmithing.

Bedford Auditorium yielded a large audience consisting of Longwood students, professors from the Art Department and visiting students from Virginia Commonwealth University. Gainsbury, seemingly at ease and very comfortable with the audience began with an informative talk on the Worshipful Co. of Goldsmiths. The Co. or rather the Livery Co. or Guild of Goldsmiths has been in existence since the 14th century. It wasn't until 1327 that the company received the Royal Charter, the year that the company officially commenced. The worshipful Co. is celebrating their 650th Anniversary this year, 650 years of success and outstanding achievements.

The original livery companies were concerned with the elections of sheriffs and Lord Mayors. In the company, the position of freeman could only be attained through marriage to a freeman's daughter, previous employment in the position or election to the position. The Co. is governed by a court and/or system. They consist of four well-balanced men; one in four must be with the trade, goldsmithing.

The Worshipful Company today has a number of functions and involvements, one of these being trusts and charities. The Co. donates $2-3 million dollars a year to various trusts, a most admirable quality. A Char of the Pyx exists; concern with mints and coinage. For every 5000 coins made, one coin is placed in the "Pyx Box," the purpose being to verify the number of coins saved

Oceanography Class Learns About Sea Life From Field Trip

By JAN TURNER

Wednesday, Sept. 21

The day had finally arrived! No classes or homework for three days because our oceanography class was leaving for the Eastern Shore! The bus was to leave at 6 a.m., and didn't until 6:30 because of Whitney, John, and myself. John's car stalled out on our way over to the science building, so we had to drag our gear all the way there. That's not my idea of having fun at six o'clock in the morning! We all made it though, but barely!

It was pitch black outside, and most people went back to sleep. Our first stop was on a beach in Yorktown. We looked at and jellyfish, and various other animals we could find. It was so good to get away from Farmville for awhile! We stayed there around forty-five minutes, then loaded on the bus again, which was headed for Gloucester Point. There, we saw the Virginia Institute of Marine Science and took samples of fish and plants from the water. It was hilarious seeing everybody in waders, which made them look as though they were wearing barrels. We had to go out into the water about waist-high and drag nets. I believe what we were doing was called seining. If not, I'm sure Dr. Batts will be happy to correct me! We learned how to work some oceanography equipment, then got back on the bus to eat lunch. I forgot to mention one very important thing — Ginger sprung a leak in her waders!

Our next stop was at the Kenneth Rice Fossil Pit. It looked like the Grand Canyon — it was huge! We stayed there an hour or so and dug up fossils, millions of years old. I didn't find anything important, but it was really interesting — and tiring too. After that, we stopped in Hampton at a Chinese-American Restaurant. Not that I'm partial to the Chinese, but I ordered an all-American seafood platter. I ate until I could hold no more, because I knew I wouldn't get anything like that from the Slater food service! Everyone else ordered either Chinese or American food, and seemed to enjoy it enough to have rolands for dessert! Then we boarded the bus again, which took us to our final destination, Watchapreague. We would be there two nights.

I figured the time to be around 8:30 when we got to Watchapreague. Our cottage looked quite nice! All the girls had to sleep upstairs in room "C," and the guys were in room "E." The bunkbeds didn't look too comfortable, but my sleeping bag would fix that. Around 9:30, Dr. Batts and Mr. Austin decided to show films. No-not "Blazing Saddles," but "The Million Dollar Salt Marsh" and some other film whose name I can't remember. We had been up almost 16 hours with no sleep, and I was more than ready to go to bed, as almost everyone else was. Afterwards, Joan and I took a walk to get a little more familiar with the town, then I came back and went to sleep.

Thursday, Sept. 22

At 6:35 we were awoken by loud knocks on the door. At first I didn't want to get up, but the smell of bacon quickly changed my mind! One odd thing had occurred during the night — Ginger had a nightmare about some of the bugs we had caught, and cried out "what is this?" Today we went out into the bay and salt marshes on two open boats. One of the drivers was extremely nice-looking, and all girls got on his boat! Our excitement died down a little when we discovered the ring on his left hand. We caught two huge flounders, crabs, spot, and even a skate and two rays! I ate my first raw clam — dug it up out of the sand, opened it, and carefully gulped it down. Not bad! Near the end of the day we got out of the boat and walked through salt marshes, picking periwinkles off the spartina alterniflora! That's another name for smooth cordgrass. We were all soaking wet and freezing after being out in the water all day, and were glad when we headed back to the house. When we got back, we cleaned the fish, cooked it, and enjoyed eating all of it! That was by all means a gourmet meal! We sat around and talked most of the night, then went to sleep.

Friday, Sept. 23

We got up around 7:30 I think, and then ate breakfast. Afterwards we cleaned up and prepared to leave for Fort Story, in Virginia Beach. After scrubbing pots and pans and mopping floors, we loaded everything, including us, onto the bus. We crossed the Chesapeake Bay Bridge Tunnel, and got to Fort Story near 11:00. The first thing we had to do was observe the waves and their patterns. Then Dr. Batts asked us to find some beach clams and ghost crabs. We were finally able to take our shoes off and had to roll up our pants, unless we wanted to get soaking wet again. About an hour later, we arrived at MacDonald's, where I made the mistake of ordering a fish fillet. I had been eating and talking fish for three days! We soon found ourselves back on the bus heading towards Farmville. This had surely been a nice trip, and a nice vacation from our regular school routine! I wish we could have stayed there longer. Everyone in our class knows each other on a friendlier basis now, so I'm looking forward to seeing them all again on Monday!

Commentary

The Imposition Of Opinions And Values

By DAVE PHILLIPS

There are those people in any society who find it necessary, in fact imperative, to force their opinion and values upon others. Throughout history every social conflict and disturbance can be traced to people of this nature. They are opinionated, dogmatic, narrow minded and archaic in regarding their values, beliefs and morals. They are zealously over ambitious. They can be found anywhere. Even here at Longwood people can be found who suffer from this particular disorder.

For example, let us take Longwood's own Judicial Board into consideration. Last Thursday night (Sept. 22) they reviewed the case of a student who had been caught with a small amount of marijuana in his room. It antagonized no one, it imposed on the rights of no one. It was meant simply for personal, private consumption and use. For this horrible crime against nature, the board handed down a one and a half year suspension.

Apparently not satisfied with mangling one person's career and wrecking havoc on his personal life, three of these true believers (excuse me, members of "The Board") then proceeded to the first floor of South Cunningham dormitory. There they declared that girls on the second floor had complained of smelling the odor of burning hemp. It was so bad that "...their eyes stung." The absurdity of this and other statements made by these three board members extends beyond my comprehension. All of this over the drug which a Presidential Commission recommended legalizing and described as being no more harmful or detrimental than tobacco or alcohol. News travels slowly through the backwoods of southern Virginia.

Says Carolyn Wells, Vice President for Academic Affairs and Dean of the College, "I am happy for you that you have chosen to become a part of our Longwood experience." It's been an experience all right. An experience in time-back fifty years.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Double Jeopardy

Dear Editor,

We would like to take a moment or two to comment on the recent harassment of Karl Peterson. First of all, since when is double jeopardy commonplace? At Longwood it is beginning to appear like a persons' rights are not being upheld or protected by the law but more or less crucified by it. When should a person be tried for the same offense twice? We thought that Longwood had a Judicial system set up to protect students and to handle situations that arise within the college. Granted, informants went to the town police without going through student judiciary procedures but in this case we feel that the campus should have had nothing to do with it other than to be aware of it. However as things turned out Karl Peterson was brought before Judicial trial through the Longwood system and in our opinion he was found guilty before the trial even began. We feel there could be many reasons why he was guilty before trial.

The main reason is that we think the board consists of many students who don't appreciate males now abundant on this campus. Therefore we feel that negative feelings toward the accused were prevalent. Secondly, although police were brought in to produce evidence none was brought out to fulfill that purpose. Another aspect of the trial is that the police were brought in to produce evidence against Karl and a member of the faculty was not even allowed in to speak on his behalf. Where can any of this be justified? Another thought recorded here is that many students are beginning to think that all of the board members including Legislative and Residence board members are actually puppets of the deans and not individuals that have the ability to make up their own minds. The deans may say jump and the boards will probably come back with how high?

As a final note we would like to thank Kathy Barcalow for standing for Karl's defense...even though we feel she was fighting a losing battle. Also we would like to thank the many friends who stood behind Karl. It is unfortunate that the attempts made by these people were to no avail. We will all miss him.

Thank you,
Twinkie Plant
Charlotte Williamson

Judicial Board Questioned

Dear Editor,

On September 8, Karl Peterson's dormitory room was searched for drugs without his being present. The next day he was arrested, charged with possession of marijuana and paraphernalia, taken to Farmville jail and told his trouble would be greatly lessened if he gave the names of other people that he knew used drugs. Upon refusing, he was issued a summons to appear at county court in October. Soon after, he was summoned to appear before Longwood Judicial Board, which he did on September 22.

At the Judicial Board trial, police Lt. Webb testified, saying that Peterson's room was searched in part for ten bottles of morphine. No morphine was found in Peterson's room and Peterson had no knowledge of any morphine. But the officer's loose testimony served to make utterly groundless connections between Peterson and the hard drug that he had no knowledge of whatsoever. Not wanting to divulge the details of the incident and thereby prejudice his later trial in county court, Peterson followed his lawyer's instructions and pleaded the fifth amendment to the questions put to him by the Judicial Board. Upon doing this he was interrogated rapid-fire fashion to trick him into breaking his fifth amendment right. The Judicial Board's decision was to suspend Peterson for a year and a half.

So what do we have? A student's room is searched without his being present. An attempt is made to bully him out of his constitutional rights. Loose and groundless implications are made about him in court without examination when the defendant is powerless to defend himself without prejudicing his later case in county court. Lastly, the student is given an ultrastrict punishment-for what? The charges were unclear. No accusers were named or present. The confiscated evidence was not ever present to show the Board what and how much the defendant had possessed. Why was a trial held at all, except for the sport of it? It seems Peterson was guilty until proven innocent, anyway and proving is so tiresome a technicality. Is this an example of the rights that all of us, as students at Longwood College, can expect? Can we accept that at any time we may go back to our rooms to find them being searched? And if ever we are called before Judicial Board, perhaps, before we show, we should do some heavy praying.

I think all of us, as Longwood students, should closely examine the present workings of the Judicial Board and its members. The Judicial Board is a necessary function. But are its members performing their function? Are they keeping justice or playing power games that condone harassment? If they are playing power games, who are they playing them on? Whoever they happen to prefer. All of us. You.

Dan Corrie

Thank You

Letter to the Editor:

I've always known that Longwood has the greatest girls from all around, but the teamwork and willingness to help in an emergency is overwhelming. One of our girls had been hurt and everyone thought it was just a minor injury. However as the night progressed, she became ill. As the girls heard about her, they came to help in every way they could. They left parties, studies, and preparations for going home for the weekend. Their concern and help was so unselfish and loving.

There were others who were not students who were helpful. We are most grateful to them also.

We are in an age when we feel that the world has become hardened to people's needs. This is not the case at Longwood.

Again sincere thanks,
Ann Johnson

Irrational Behavior

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter to complain about the unnecessary and inconvenient searches that are taking place this year at Longwood. An example of this irrational behavior of accusing students by members of the Judicial and Residence Boards was displayed at 2:00 Sunday morning.

I was awakened by a high member of the Residence Board who was angry at someone who stole her beer. The board member was violently kicking on my suitemate's door and screaming foul language. This was so loud that I thought that the commotion was at my door. By the time I got out of bed, the campus police were on the scene with two members of the Judicial Board. The two Board members has a college search warrant for

From Circus To Oktoberfest

The Circus Comes To Town

By DEBBIE MOUL

Clowns and their rib-ticking antics, fresh buttery popcorn, light fluffy cotton candy, and Lisa, the Elephant—they all spell circus. At least that's how Doc Boas of Circus Kirk spells it.

Circus Kirk, a three-ring all student circus is coming to Longwood on October 5. Where else can you see 100 volts of electricity pass through the body of the "electric girl" or pet a boa constrictor? Acrobats, high wire performers, clowns, jugglers and many more and they're all teenagers spending their summer vacation in the magical world of a traveling circus.

Circus Kirk began in 1958 when Dr. Charles W. Boas, Professor of Geography at York Pennsylvania College came up with the idea of producing an all student, three-ring, tented traveling show. It took ten years for his dreams to materialize. "Kirk" is Scottish for church, derived from the circus' former association with the Lutheran Church. Doc Boas had been a press agent and a clown for the Ringling Brothers. Circus Kirk has a 52 member cast, high school and college students from all over the country. It is the only all student tented circus on tour in the United States. The "Big Top" yields 1500 people on wooden benches with a slight touch of antiquity. No sooner has a team of gymnasts cartwheeled and cavorted across the length of the tent then llamas, dogs and horses prance into the center ring. But it's the Circus Kirk clowns that steal the show.

Where did the first circus originate? John Bill Ricketts, a very famous English equestrian had the first circus in America. By 1792, he was showing in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. It is recorded that George Washington not only attended the circus in 1793 and 1797 but being an ardent rider himself, rode with John Ricketts and in 1797 sold him a horse which became an important part of the show. His circus known as the Pantheon later went out under the name of the New Olympic. The Mount Pitt Circus in New York was the second to exhibit in America.

In the early part of the nineteenth century, the traveling circus came into being, this being the forerunner of the circus as it is known today. Shows in those days were crude affairs and churches proclaimed circuses to be immoral. Years have passed and circuses evolved from one Big Top to side shows as well, from one to three rings and from small seating capacities to large ones. The Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus has led the way in streamlining and maintaining the circus.

Circus Kirk offers talented students to gain experience in one of the oldest of the performing arts. The major characteristic that distinguishes this student circus from the big time circuses is the feeling among the crew that they are all part of a large family.

Longwood's Student Union is sponsoring the gala affair. About 75 tickets were given to the State Welfare Department so that deprived children can see the shows, a one-in-a-lifetime experience. So when Circus Kirk comes around, everyone get out there and share in the excitement that these performers experience just trying to put a smile on your face.

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

This year will be the golden anniversary of a yearly fall festival at Longwood. Throughout the 50 years this festival has evolved into what is now referred to as Oktoberfest Weekend.

The first celebration was Circus, which originated as a carnival sponsored by the Farmville Chapter of the Alumni Association held in December of 1925. But Circus did not become a yearly event until December 10, 1927 when it was sponsored by the Joan Circle of Alpha Delta Rho of the State Teacher's College. School organizations were invited to put on ring shows, with a prize offered to the best performance. The event, held in the gym, featured, according to the November 30, 1927 Rotunda, a "parade, side shows, freaks, ring performances and all of the animals which anyone might expect to see at a circus."

The highlight of the night came with the crowning of Anne Ferree as the Circus Queen. The queen was elected by the student body, but the winner was not revealed until Saturday night. Afterwards a grand parade was held and the Hampden-Sydney Orchestra played for the dance which lasted until 11 p.m.

Delta Sigma Chi won the $5.00 prize for their circus performance. The Choral Club and French Circle took Honorable Mentions.

The Rotunda called Circus the "first big cooperative project which has been given in the school."

The Second Annual College Circus was held November 3, 1928 with Margaret Leonard as Ringmaster. The Junior Class won the ring show prize and Mabel Fitzpatrick was crowned Queen. This Circus was held in the same pattern as the previous one.

It was not until 1935 that Circus was held in October and Alpha Kappa Gamma sponsored the event. Students showing high degrees of spirit and leadership ability were honored by being named to the positions of Ringmaster, Animal Trainer, and Carnival Chairman.

Guiding themes and an addition of a day were added in the 1940's. In the 1950's Usherettes were chosen from each of the classes.

In 1966 Alpha Kappa Gamma joined the National Society of Mortar Board, thus changing its name to Geist, which is the German word for spirit. Geist changed Circus to Geist Festival, which was made a weekend affair instead of just one night.

The expanded event featured a midway, an art exhibit, hockey games, color rush, and an H2O Club show. Geist wanted to stress excellence in class skits, not competition, and to promote campus spirit.

The first Oktoberfest was held on October 25-27, 1968 sponsored by Geist. Oktoberfest was based on the German festival and made as authentic as possible.

Fifteen units paraded down the streets on Friday. Saturday's events included the Fort Lee Army Band in concert, a midway composed of 24 booths behind the dining hall, with an additional theme midway composed of seven booths around Tabb Circle; and a hockey game between the Alumni and the Varsity team. Color skits took place on Friday and Saturday nights.

The first Oktoberfest Usherettes were Ann Altor, Tricia Bates, Susan Davenport, Shorti Marconi, Cindy Jamison, Sybil Prouse, Ann Bristow, and Merb Richardson. Their responsibilities were to do the shoe tap (an authentic German dance) at color skits, cut the cake in Lanford, and man the Geist booth.

Mittenmeister was Pat Cloonan who lead the parade, manned the information booth and announced the winners at skits Saturday night. Festmeister was Dillard Vaughan who was Mistress of Ceremonies at the skits.

This Oktoberfest also featured the walk of old (ha, and a Sunday powder puff football game sponsored by the Young Republicans.

At the second annual Oktoberfest, the colleges first meeting of parents and alumni was held. The Fort Lee Band played again and the midway booths totaled 36.

In the hockey games Longwood won over the Richmond Club, but lost to the Alumni.

Throughout the years Oktoberfest has become a major school event, keeping the same basic form as when it originated in 1966.

To someone who can't execute "Where Have All the Flowers Gone" on the guitar without getting debriefed by a physical therapist, what Chris Legnaioli said at the snack bar the other night seemed to be more than just a bit of a paradox. Flanked by a six and a twelve string guitar at the coffeehouse Thursday night, Chris seemed more at home playing his music than with a lot of "talky" interludes in between.

His choice of songs as well as his style reflect what he considers now to be an almost traditionalist concern for poetry in music. Glancing down a Coke dampened list of "musical groceries" the performer scribbles down to organize his thoughts, I noticed quite a few folk-rock staples among them. In fact, he builds his set primarily from such artists as Dylan, Chapin, Fogelberg, Denver and the Beatles, relying on tone, rather than style for variation. This selection and sequencing of his music is perceptive of the different types of audience involvement in a coffeehouse. During some songs such as "Country Roads," people took a musical intermission from swigging and munching to sing along with Chris, and at other times he strummed a mellow background to quiet conversations. More often he was their personal balladier as when he sang Michael Murphy's "Wildfire" as if it were his own.

A first year student at VCU, Chris studied music, first through lessons, then independently, for 13 years. Besides playing with Blue Ridge, a regular RED LYON band, he is an active veteran of the Richmond bar circuit having played in such places as the one-time Gandalf Staff's. He sees his pursuit of a Business degree as a good professional asset in providing his own promotional and managing needs of which he already has taken charge. Having written one completed song, "A Part of Me Is Gone," (Chris is strictly a "melodyman," like many of us is more often than not "at a loss for words") he respects the ability involved in the crafting of a successful song one that successfully says something about its writer.

Not a theatrically egotistical performer — or a musician willing to compromise his own standards for the sake of having something to sell, Chris Legnaioli defines a successful concert as something that is experienced from both sides of the mike, "you have to please them, and please yourself."

By LISA CUMBEY

It was dark when I walked through the front door of Bedford. As my eyes adjusted to the brightness of the corridor, I spotted a girl with a big smile and long, shining brown hair, sprawled on the floor. She was concentrating on a silk-screening project; her materials were scattered about on the floor around her. I figured this had to be the girl I was looking for. I introduced myself and asked if she was Donna Athey. I wasn't surprised that she was.

Donna is the artist who painted the English mural in the lower dining hall. She also painted the Art-Nouveau flower mural in the snack bar. She said she was asked to do the one in the lower dining hall, and the advisement of Miss Bishop (who Donna proudly claims is a genius) was painted during the latter part of last year and the early part of this semester. She says she spent about 54 hours on it. She has done murals before, "...a winter scene for a store back home." She doesn't know if she will be asked to do any more murals for this school, but she has her own ideas about what she wants to do for herself. "I'd love to open a store—just a little shop—and sell all kinds of Art." She would do very well in this trade with only her own work—she is extremely versatile in her types of art, her media and her subject matter. She showed me some work she had submitted in applying for a scholarship; there was everything from a brass necklace with hand-made links to a pastel drawing of a hobby horse to a wooden bread-box with a copper front to yarn crafts to, well, you get the picture.

Donna loves Longwood, and says she would recommend it to any Art Majors. "Not only does it have a good Art Department," she brags, "but it also has a nice, friendly air about the entire school."

Tennis Team Splits Matches

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Longwood tennis team took a 7-2 win over Randolph-Macon (Ashland) last Wednesday, but came away with the exact opposite score Saturday in their loss to Madison, 2-7.

Longwood did not seem to have an extremely difficult time against Randolph-Macon. Only one match went into three sets, with most sets being decisively won by Longwood.

Despite good rallies and persistent play, Longwood could not overcome Madison. Coach Phylliss Harriss believes her team "played extremely well... there were five split matches."

The team finally has a manager, Steve Whitten. Their next match will be at home against Averett at 3 p.m.

Individual scores with Randolph-Macon, Longwood listed first;

SINGLES:

1. Gwen Koechlein d. Susan Helms 6-2, 6-3

Longwood hosted James Madison University and University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in a tri-match last Tuesday, September 20. Longwood was defeated in both matches with the scores Longwood 4, Madison 8; and Longwood 5, UNC 7.

In the number 2 position, Kay Smith scored 81, in number one position Deanne Vanwey scored 83, in number six position Penny Stephen scored 87, in number three position Becky Webb scored 88, Deborah Hood in number five position also scored 88, and in number four position Janet Clement scored 93.

Friday's match at James Madison University with William and Mary and Sweetbriar was successful for Longwood. Longwood defeated William and Mary 12-0 and Sweetbriar by a score of 11½ to ½. Against Madison Longwood did better than they had earlier in the week by tying them 9-9. Kay Smith had low score of 84. Dr. Barbara Smith, the team's coach, said, "I am very pleased with the way they played this weekend."

Just about all the Longwood coaches of the women's intercollegiate sports attended the Virginia Federation for Intercollegiate Sports for Women meeting held near Roanoke on September 10. The Federation meets twice a year, in the fall and in the spring.

The purpose of this meeting was to discuss problems in state women's athletics and to schedule state tournaments in various sports. This year's guest speaker was Celeste Ulrich, a national figure in physical education, who spoke at Longwood's graduation ceremony last year.

The VFISW is affiliated with the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women, which is the national chapter. Nationally, member colleges are in a certain region, determined by what state they are in. In January at Atlanta, Ga., representatives will meet to discuss proposals originating in

Soccer Team Suffers

First Defeat

By MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

The men's soccer team suffered the season's first defeat last Saturday at the hands of Christopher Newport. Superior in skill, the Lancers held Longwood scoreless at 0-10.

Coach Williamson acknowledged Christopher Newport's skill, and stated that their goals were scored on strategy. C.N. passed to its wing. L.C. fullbacks covered the wing, who passed back to the center. The center was open except for the goalie. Williamson stated that "in a one-on-one situation, it's awfully hard to stop the goal."

C.N. had more attackers than L.C. had defenders in the defense area. Longwood was unable to direct break the C.N. offense.

Coach Williamson commented, "we simply had a bad game," but he feels that the team can learn even when they are defeated, "I certainly learned some things." Despite the loss, he added, "but we'll come back hustling Tuesday."

Fifteen minutes into the half, CN's Bell scored, so quickly that goalie Link stated, "I didn't even see the first goal." Early in the half Link was injured and removed with Adkins substituting. C.N.'s Barranger, assisted by Stowell, moved in past Adkins to score, 19 minutes into the half. Two goals were immediately scored in the next six minutes by CN's Grendon, assisted by Curran, and Barranger, assisted by Vasquez.

Link, suffering a bruised ankle, came back into the goal before the end of the half. CN scored twice again. Scorers were Bell, assisted by Barranger, and Barranger.

At the end of the half, with the score 0-6, Longwood had attempted two shots at goal, and CN had attempted 14.

CN's seventh goal came 10 minutes into the second half. Stowell scored on a

L.C. Beats Mary Washington Falls To UVA

By MARGARET HAMMERSLEY

The hockey team won its first match of the season defeating Mary Washington 4-1, Tuesday, September 20. Playing the forward line were Julie Dayton, Carol Filo, Terry Voit, and Terry Donohue. Cindy Moss, Cathy Lowe, and Kim Furbee played the second line, with Scottie Capehart, Wanda Petersen, and Teresa Ware on the third line. The goalie for the first half was Terri Davis.

With the aggressive forward line positioned and passing, L.C. scored twice in the first half. Terry Donohue, assisted by Julie Dayton scored early in the half. The second goal was scored unassisted by Carol Filo.

The defense held Mary Washington down to one goal during the first half. The goal was scored by Courtney Cousins, unassisted.

Robyn Rowen replaced Terri Davis at the goal during the second half. Rowen had an easy half as Mary Washington could not break through Longwood's offense and move into a scoring position. Scoring the last two goals were Julie Dayton and Carol Filo.

commented that the team's strength was that "the team worked together." She also noted the aggressiveness of the team.

Last Thursday brought double defeat as both varsity and junior varsity played the University of Virginia. With UVA dominating the first half, both teams stood scoreless at the end of the half.

Longwood was scoreless, but refused to give up. Part of that determination must have been inspired by the spectators. The greater the pressure on the field, the louder the fans yelled. Visible from any spot on the field was the bold banner "Crush the Cavaliers. Colorado Here We Come."

Five minutes into the second half, UVA's Cindy Carzo scored, assisted by Merrill Wall. Longwood remained scoreless, but held UVA to one goal, the final score Longwood 0, UVA 1.

In their season's first match the junior varsity team started Bev Kobayaski, Donna Deats, Jackie Steer, and Suzanne Ash forward; Debi Kinzel, Barbara Cox, and Ginger Nicholas on the second line; Morgan Gwyne, Patti Hushon, and Jeanne Nolte on the third line; and Claire Baxter in

THE ROTUNDA

Tuesday, September 27, 1977

By
MARGARET HAMMERSLEY
This year's varsity volleyball team has been in practice since the beginning of September, preparing for their first game on the 30th. The team will travel to Lynchburg College to participate in an Invitational Tournament.

Coached by Ms. Price, and managed by Barbvara Greer, the team consists of 16 members, 10 of which are returning players. Returning are Becky Allen, a sophomore from Fairfax, Virginia; Julie Allen, a senior, from Newport News; Debbie Brown, a junior from Charlottesville; Kaye Carter, a sophomore from Christiansburg; Meg Cook, a sophomore from Salem; Teri Dunnivant, a junior from Pulaski; Linda Eagle, a junior from Lynchburg; Terry Johnson, a junior from Franklin; Caty Rafferty, a junior from Virginia Beach; Cindy Thomas, a sophomore from Roanoke; and Rhonda Woody, a sophomore from Rocky Mount.

The teams three new freshmen are Theresa Harris from Appomattox, Margie LaReau from Lynchburg, and Sherry Will from Madison Heights. Sophomore newcomers include Jean Rosemlein from New York and Cindy Smith from Appomattox.

Coach Price sees the team as looking stronger as a team now than they did at this time last year. She looks to the number of returning players as a strength, get realizes that the same situation occurs at other colleges. She has cited George Mason University, William and Mary and Eastern Mennonite as the toughest expected competition. Ms. Price commented "I am anticipating an exciting season this year, and am confident we will be ranked among the top teams in the small colleges.

Women's volleyball is gaining momentum and recognition in the United States. At age 18 the Korean born Debbie Green is one of several women in the sport's spotlight.

According to Volleyball Magazine, Debbie's skill and desire for volleyball was not innate. In the beginning of her development, she recalls no desire for the sport, only accompanying her father to socially oriented games. It was her father, Don Green, who then persuaded her to learn the sport, and to practice.

Debbie's high school career began in Westminster High School, California when she was a sophomore. That same year she began to work with Chuck Erbe and the Orange County Volleyball Club

(OCVBC):

When Erbe left the OCVBC to coach the Adidas team, Debbie went with him. At age 16 she played on Erbe's team, a winning team in the United States Volleyball Association Nationals Competition. She also played on the American team participating in the Mexico World Championships.

Last year Erbe and Debbie made another move, to the University of Southern California. And she plays there today. Debbie practices for hours daily, for one goal — the 1980 olympics.

Already Debbie has a list of travels and victories to her credit. She toured Korea when with the Adidas Club, and will repeat the tour this summer. In addition she will play in Japan, Hawaii, and Brazil.

Like Debbie, Erbe is looking to qualify a women's team for the 1980 olympics. Erbe is National team trainer. He is looking to high school athletes for recruitment. He commented to Women Sports, "Our greatest resource, as yet untapped, is the American female athlete".

Native Richmonder Wins PGA And World Golf Titles

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The winner of the August 59th PGA Championship in Pebble Beach, California and the 1977 World Series of Golf is Lanny Wadkins, 27 year old native Richmonder. He has also won two CBS Golf Classics and various other tournaments.

For the first time in the history of the Big Four Classics (Masters, U.S. Open, British Open, and National PGA), there was a sudden death playoff.

Those tied for the title in the PGA were Gene Littler, Jack Nicklaus, and Lanny Wadkins. Littler had lead the Tournament until the final day and it looked like he would be the winner. But Littler fell back into a tie with Nicklaus, with Wadkins only one stroke behind. The next day found all three contenders tied for top honors with totals of 282. Wadkins knocked them rest of the field out of the competition in the sudden death play off holes.

Wadkins started touring in 1972 and earned more than any other rookie for that year, $116,616. He won the U.S. Amateur in 1970 (Littler had won it 17 years before).

Due to a gall bladder operation, Wadkins dropped to 54th on the money list in 1974 and to 88th the following year with $23,582. His recent comeback has included winning the PGA Championship and the World Series of Golf during Labor Day week end.

By capturing a World Championship, a 72 hole Tournament which was held at the Firestone Country Club in Akron Ohio, he won the $100,000 purse. The field for this tournament included several United States Pros and International Champions.

Wadkins' winning streak did not last for the B.C. Opens Tournament which he failed to qualify for only shooting a 75 for a total of 148.

Lanny Wadkins and his friends were ecstatic after his two current victories which prove he is finally out of his three year slump. Says a friend, Bill Satterfield, owner of the Bermuda Run Golf and Country Club and development in advance, North Carolina where Wadkins has been living since 1971. "He's the type of guy who doesn't seem to enjoy golf until he has to do something." Satterfield added, "He lives on pressure...He doesn't know how to be conservative."

goal. The only goal in the match was scored early in the first half by UVA's Kemp Passano. Both teams played a hesitant game, often slow in moving to the ball.

At the conclusion of the games the coach commented on the "inconsistency" of play. She felt that the teams were equal in skill, but UVA "got some breaks at the goal." Coach McDonough concluded, "We made some mistakes in front of the goal, but it helps us this early in the season to see those mistakes."

Longwood hosts VPI today at 3:00. Varsity and junior varsity games will be played.

the state meetings.

Dr. Barbara Smith of Longwood will be representing Region II, consisting of five states, at the AIAW meeting.

A proposal to set up levels of competition for women's sports and allowing the schools to choose what level they should compete in, instead of allowing colleges to play any opponent, will be discussed at this meeting. Coach Phylliss Harriss saw the meeting as "very successful."

She says Longwood will be playing in the small college division at the State Tournament. Longwood has belonged to VFISW ever since the association came into existence seven years ago. Dr. Judy Johnson was this year's voting delegate for Longwood. She feels this is a "very important year for women's athletics."

penalty kick. Gilley scored the next minute when Link knocked out the ball and he kicked it back in. The final two goals came at the end of the half scored by Stowell and CN's number 15, to end the match 0-10.

A fair sized crowd of spectators showed for Saturday's game and would not leave until the final whistle blew. Desperate to see Longwood score, screaming and clapping, they mistook the ball in the back of the net for a goal. Unfortunately CN's goalie had tipped the ball just over the crossbar.

Relaxing in the whirl pool Sunday, Joe Link was asked of his injury. A CN man was coming down the field ahead of L.C. fullbacks. Leaving the goal area to get the ball, Link remembers, "I tried to skid and kick it away, I kicked the ball and at the same time he kicked my ankle." Link should be back in position for today's game.

Longwood travels to Liberty Baptist College today for a 1:00 p.m. match. The next home match is October 3 when L.C. hosts Averett.

English Proficiency Committee

Improves Student's Writing Skills

By NANCY ANDERSON
On Tuesday, September 19, 1977 the English Proficiency Committee held its organizational meeting for the 1977-78 school term. This committee has as its primary purpose the recommendation for further work of students who need additional instruction in writing skills. A "communication condition" for a student may be issued by any member of the faculty to the committee. The committee, in turn, requests that the student write several paragraphs on a prescribed question. These questions, prepared by the English Proficiency Committee, are in general topics. Graded by members of the committee, recommendations for writing laboratories or additional course work are made for each individual student. Through this process the students has the opportunity to correct his writing skills.

Dr. Cathleen Hosey of the English Department serves as chairman of this committee. In addition each department has one member. The following faculty members comprise the committee: Nancy Anderson, Barbara Burdick, George Elliot, Leta Jane Holman, Melinda Ingram, Judy Johnson, Terence LaManna, Anthony Maurice, Robert May, Jack Millar, Betty

Thompson, Sarah Lowe

Thompson, and Carolyn Waite. The next date for the writing test will be Thursday, October 27, 1977 or Tuesday, November 29, 1977. The location of the test is Grainger 108 at 1:00 p.m.

If students have questions, they are encouraged to contact the committee member who represents their department. The English Proficiency Committee holds its regular monthly meeting on the third Tuesday at 1:00 p.m. in Grainger 108.

to the number of coins supposedly make. The Co. also has one of the best collections of silver, antique silver and jewelry in the world. They are also very much involved in education, trade education and like to keep in touch with all of the schools concerned with the trade. The company runs a fine library with an archives possessing records dating as far back as the 14th century. The Co. likes to encourage the craft by commissioning items. Various exhibitions are constantly run all over the country and the world. "Loot," for young designers, craftsmen and others just starting out in the jewelry world holds exhibitions as well. These and those previously mentioned are just a few of the functions and concerns of the Worshipful Company of Goldsmiths.

The days events were most interesting and informative. Jewelry instructors from various colleges and universities presented slides and delivered lectures on the art of jewelrymaking. Mr. Gainsbury spoke that evening about various jewelry techniques and presented slides of the Goldsmith's Hall in London and of various items connected with the Worshipful Co. He found the exhibits most enchanting and the people participating to be very down-to-earth. He is seeking sponsorship for research on things concerning the silver industry for the benefit of the industry.

The evening was a success, both for Mr. Gainsbury and for those that attended, for everybody benefited from the lecture and the slide presentation. Anyone that took the time to look and to listen will undoubtedly concur with this.

Letter To The Editor

my suitemate's room. I overheard that they were going to search my room too. This infuriated me. I asked why and what grounds they had to search my room and the two Board members replied that since my room was connected to theirs, I might have drugs or the stolen beer in my room. I informed them that I did not, and that I had been asleep until the noise in the wall awakened me, and they seemed cynical to the fact that I was losing sleep because of the incident and opposed the search, but let them do it because the Honor Code says I have to. Therefore my room was searched without my willing consent. The two Board members were inefficient in their search and the manner in which they performed it. They did little more than take my room apart. Their search of my room was useless, because nothing was there to be found.

The Student Handbook on page nine states that a search may be conducted "by members of the Judicial or Residence Boards if preliminary investigation warrants the search." If the two Board members have the power to search rooms without due cause, then the students of Longwood can have their rooms searched at any time and this is against our Constitutional rights. There was no preliminary investigation. The Board members came and searched the two rooms and found nothing that they were looking for: drugs or stolen beer.

This is just one example of the overpowered Judicial and Residence Boards. A few females have the power to search a room without due cause and not caring about whose room they search, what time the search takes place, or who gets in their way.

Before I came to Longwood, just like everyone else here, I read about the friendly atmosphere and nice people that live and study here. If this is the type of friendly way of life that students can expect when they enter Longwood, they should know about this way of life before they come. Friendliness is part of the Longwood tradition, and that tradition must stop when the select students issue warrants without just cause.

Our Town Succeeds With Multi-Talented Cast

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

"Y'know, Babylon had two million people in it, and all we know about 'm is the names of their kings..."

"Our Town," presented last week by the Longwood Players and the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts, is Thornton Wilder's affirmation of beauty in the ordinary "acts" of living — The Daily Life, Love and Marriage and Death. Out of Wilder's theatrical time capsule unfolds an animated portrait of Grover's Corners, a small New Hampshire town at the turn of the twentieth century.

Our host throughout the play is the Stage Manager who, apparently well versed in the "busyness" and "dailyness" of the residents of "Our Town", makes all the necessary introductions, supplies a little town history and places the action in context of a time and setting. Lee Tatum, with his hat cocked back on his head and his thumbs tucked in his belt did a fantastic portrayal of the stage Manager as he saunters leisurely into interludes and action of the play to interject a little simple, down-home explanation of things. In his interpretation of the Stage Manager, Mr. Tatum seemed to embody in the speech, stance, and gesture of the character a sense of the New England way of perceiving life that made his character so credible. One problem however that is a kind of dialectical discrepancy — instead of a New England accent, Mr. Tatum had more tinges of a Western or perhaps Southern one. However, the manner in which Mr. Tatum spoke with his "visitors" to Grover's Corners, far outdistanced this shortcoming in credibility.

The remainder of the cast comprises a sociological "Noah's Ark" of the types of "ordinary folk" one might expect to meet in a town such as Grover's Corners. There is a boy, George Gibbs, and of course a girl, Emily Webb, played by Hank Dahman and Kerry McCarthy. Both wisely tempered the element of innocence to their advantage, charming the audience with its humor rather than provoking them with an excess of sugared gullibility. Hank and Kerry, as most of the other major characters, directed their speech and gestures to another character clearly and forcefully enough so that the audience did not have any difficulty "overhearing". Henry Emerson and John Hudson, as the fathers of George and Emily also gave effective portrayals. The roles of the mothers played by Vicky Mann and Barbara Wood presented an added challenge in that they required an extra helping of mime in acting out the daily household chores. Both actresses effectively conveyed that sense of detachment blended with an almost instinctive need to fuss over their children that is associated with the New England mother of that time.

Although this particular interpretation of the play did not lend itself to a technical extravaganza, there was solid evidence of some hard labor invested and a job well done. The lighting special of the constellation in the death scene was a nice touch in that it put what Wilder was saying in a universal perspective — both the people of Grover's Corners and the audience are under one sky. The shift from warm to cool illumination when the Gibbs stepped outside to smell the flowers was also evidence of crew's awareness of detail. The costumes were appropriate to the needs of the characters and what changes there were appeared to have been made smoothly. Likewise, the set crew moved in quickly and got the job of moving things done quietly. According to the program (and which I suppose is ultimately always the case) there were some "concerned citizens" of "Our Town" who did double-time on different crews or between acting and tech. And I hope that they realize their personal ovation, along with everyone else that has worked so hard, in the pleasure that this production has given to those who have seen it.

New Procedure For Birthday Dinner

The Dining Hall Committee at its meeting on September 22, 1977, discussed the problems which occurred at the last Birthday Dinner. Residence Board requests that students cooperate with the Dining Hall Committee in trying a new method of entering the Dining Hall for Birthday Dinner.

Groups of 8 are to enter by way of the porch on the east side of the Dining Hall and through the double doors on that side.

Groups of less than 8 are to enter by way of the main door. They are asked to please try to get a group of 8 before entering the Dining Hall.

The west door of the Dining Hall will still be used as the exit. Your cooperation will be most appreciated.

The German Festival

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Beer, fellowship, and fun are the trademarks of the German festival, Oktoberfest. The carnival, held in Munich, celebrates the annual season of buying and selling, feasting, merrymaking, and drinking. This year it was held from September 17-October 2.

Oktoberfest originated in 1810 when Max Joseph of Bavaria gave a grand party to celebrate his son Ludwig's marriage to Theresa of Sachsenhildenburghausen. It was such a success that the people clamored for it to be an annual event, and the site where it is held to this day was renamed Theresienweide, after Theresa.

At the festival are booths, rides, the roasting of animals over open fires, agricultural shows and horse racing.

Mrs. Betty Kidder, Treasurer of Longwood, was fortunate enough to have been able to go on the Longwood College Alumni Association's trip to Munich from September 16-27.

While in Germany, she went to the top of the Zugspitze, the highest mountain in Germany; to the royal castle, Neuschwanstein; to Oberammergau, home of the famous woodcutters. Also she visited the Olympic Village of the 1972 Olympics and saw where Mark Spitz won his seven gold medals.

In addition to sight-seeing, Mrs. Kidder went to Oktoberfest three nights. She was fascinated by the enormous beer halls where each beer distiller sells his own special blend of beer, serves food, and brass bands provide entertainment. There were about 10 beautifully decorated halls. Mrs. Kidder, who does not normally enjoy beer, found the German brew "delicious." She also said the people were extremely friendly and that "fellowship was the main thing." Mrs. Kidder was amazed that the barmaids could carry four one-liter mugs in each hand.

There was also a parade which lasted for 2½ hours with units from many different countries, German beer wagons, and German costumes.

Mrs. Kidder feels that Longwood's traditional Oktoberfest "captures the spirit" of the German festival.

Reds And Greens Busy

When asked about Oktoberfest plans, Sara Jo Wyatt, chairman, said, "Everything is looking good!" Reds and Greens are busy every night practicing skits and building and painting sets. Cheerful posters have been placed all over campus, and the balloons for the weekend have arrived.

The fun and enthusiastic group of Klowns is also hard at work. The ushers and usherettes are learning their dance. There are many new and exciting things planned for this year's festivities.

A puppet show sponsored by the Student Union will be an added attraction this year. Sara Jo said, "It is for all the kids at heart." Another difference in this year's Oktoberfest is the fact that the weekend activities will be extended through Sunday when a concert sponsored by S-UN will be held on Lankford Mall.

Sara Jo concluded by explaining that all the shows this year will have at least one performance in the morning. Therefore, it will be easier to see all of them without conflicts with the Midway and Hockey game. She said, "Everything is falling into place."

New Chemistry Professor

Plans Seminar

By PAMELA L. McDOWELL

One of the new faculty members on campus is Dr. Berwyn E. Jones, a Welshman from Lincoln County, Nebraska. Dr. Jones received his Bachelor's degree from Nebraska Wesleyan University, and his Ph.D. from Kansas University. His previous teaching experiences include twelve years at Monmouth College, Illinois, where he pioneered the Keller plan teaching, and two years at Upper Iowa University. When speaking of coming to Virginia to teach at Longwood College, Dr. Jones commented, "I found the offer at Longwood exciting. Five years ago this college didn't have any Chemistry majors. This year we will be graduating nine. The faculty is excellent and the students enthusiastic." At the present time Dr. Jones is teaching classes consisting of General Chemistry and Analytical Chemistry. Students taught by Dr. Jones will study chemical literature in the library and also learn to give seminars. The Seniors will give seminars on their projects of subjects from other seminars.

Of the teaching profession Dr. Jones remarked, "Of all professions, teaching is the only one where the professional's purpose is to render his service to the consumer. A teacher teaches a student to think and the student should put emphasis on the ability to solve problems."

During the next several years, Dr. Jones is interested in obtaining outside funding for scientific equipment. These grants would come from Science Foundations and would be used to purchase major equipment. Dr. Jones feels Longwood needs this equipment as some of the lab holdings are rather sparse due to the newness of the science programs.

This year Dr. Jones has instituted the first Chemistry Seminar. The seminar has been on the curriculum for several years but never materialized. This seminar, which enrolls all Chemistry majors, exposes students to all facets of chemistry that are not a part of the normal undergraduate curriculum. Dr. Jones also explained that visiting lecturers are scheduled to appear at Longwood, one of whom is Dr. Hawkrige, a professor from V.C.U. He will appear October 17th and speak on light reactions in green plant photosynthesis.

Presently Dr. Jones had the honor of being appointed to the

After School Workshop Features Puppets

By LINDA CARRILLO

Under the direction of art education students, Farmville area children will have an outlet for their creativity with the Puppet Magic Workshop. Mrs. Jacqueline J. Wall, who is the director of art at the J.P. Wynne Campus School, explains that the program will "get back to human feelings and human needs by making dead things come alive to communicate to others in a magic way."

Longwood's Department of Art is sponsoring this After-School Art Program for young people in grades 1-6. Meeting in the Art Room at the Campus School, the classes are scheduled from October 19 to November 16 from 3:30 to 5:00 on Mondays and Wednesdays.

Registration is conducted through the Department of Art, and October 7 is the deadline for enrollment. Longwood students who will alternate as teachers and aides are Patricia Bova, Anita Braden, Debra Clements, Doris Evans, Anne Fournier, Michele Fugate, Deborah Griffin, Susan Harrell, Cynthia Krott, and Kimberly Nichols.

Food Science Specialist

In Home Economics

By PENNY ROBINSON

Eva J. McCreary's ability and enthusiasm will be an asset to the Home Economics Department. Her field of specialization is Food Science. Miss McCreary has had extensive education in the field of Food and Nutrition. She received her Bachelor of Science Degree from Kent State University, and her Master of Science from the University of Wisconsin.

A registered dietician, she prefers "working with students and seeing them excel," and has chosen the teaching profession. She came to Longwood from the University of Delaware, where she was an Assistant Professor in the Home Economics Department.

Why Is That Art?

By LINDA CARRILLO

"Why is That Art?" is the topic of Jeff Davis' lecture tomorrow night, and also a question often asked by viewers of 19th and 20th century art.

One of the Virginia Museum's Visual Awareness series, Mr. Davis' lecture will deal with the characteristics that constitute a work of art.

In addition to his discussion, he plans to present slides of representative works of the major movements in the two periods from such artists as Paul Cezanne, Piet Mondrian, Marcel Duchamp, and Andy Warhol.

A graduate of Virginia Commonwealth University, the artist has also studied philosophy at the University of Erlanger, West Germany. His work has been displayed in Virginia and Washington, D.C. in both one-man and group shows.

The public is invited to attend the Jeff Davis lecture and slide presentation at the Bedford Auditorium, October 5 at 3:00 p.m.

Three Seniors

Receive Scholarships

By LINDA CARRILLO

Three seniors were the recipients of Longwood's newly-established Art Department Scholarship Awards. Donna Athey, studio art major, Susan Harrell in art education, and Mary LaPrade, an art history student, each received $100.

The requirements which corresponded to the three separate fields included a portfolio of works, projects in art education, and research papers.

The scholarships, which were open to all junior and senior art majors, were supported by the Oktoberfest Art Auction '76.

Music Fraternity To Present Musicale

By FRANCES HALL

"The Musicale is one of the requirements for their initiation," stated Robin Hewitt, president of S.A.I., "Pledges

Color And Movement Displayed In Alexick's Exhibit

By PAM KELLETT

Have you been thinking about color lately? Probably not. The colors around campus are pretty consistent, red brick, green plants, blue sky, khaki pants and regulation alligator shirts. Well, Bedford Gallery offers you a definite change with David Alexick's exciting exhibit of sixteen paintings.

Each piece is a design impression that further elaborates the theories of Cezanne and Matisse. Color and well thought out movements demand attention.

One of the first paintings you see is "Apollo Image: Androgynous Reach", a brilliant and cheerful pink, yellow and orange image of rocket shapes reaching for the sky, gently strained by contrasting black and green. The painting next to it, "Apollo Image: Promethean Flame" is a cooler impression. A true blue flood of space envelopes small darting orange shapes and a yellow sun with a hint of green below.

On a different side of the Universe, a tropical explosion of color commands a different impression. In "Tropic", a mixture of warm and cool colors converges in a meeting of circles. The green and pink forms, supported by a wafting blue foreground in "Martinique" seems to depict a map of islands.

On a different, more geometrical plane, "Cardwall Point Beacon" and "Beyond the Landscape: Color, Cosine, Tangent" show colors actively reacting to each other with strong contrasting black influence.

Some of his most interesting paintings are the result of still life studies. For example, a cool "Still Life Landscape" stares out of a 3-dimensional broken gold circle with purple and green fighting against each other for bright yellow spots. A warmer "Still Life in Green, Orange and Purple" represents a more elegant approach using the unfinished appeal of white canvas. Here, a simple contrast of aqua and magenta with orange hold together a stronger linear design.

The entire exhibit seems to be, in itself, an episode of color composition. You don't have to really understand what you're seeing—it's one of those things that, even if you don't spend a lot of time with it, you won't easily forget.

Show Closes Tomorrow

Photography Varied In Subjects

By CONNIE BARBOUR

This week the Showcase Gallery in Lankford exhibited the photographic talents of Lazelle Webb Parker. Miss Parker displayed over twenty black and white photographs showing her obvious talent. The photographs ranged from close-ups to long distance shots, landscapes, animals and people. Different lighting, developing and exposure techniques were used to achieve a variety of her prints, such as in one titled "trilogy", three sets of three photographs. A technique employing the use of back lighting to produce a silhouette-effect is exhibited in the photograph titled "Babes".

Miss Parker's shots are well taken, well developed and well arranged. They are interesting and appealing to the viewer because they have been taken at various angles and perspectives to show depth and distance. They also display a variety of personal interests. "Oyster Festival '76 Series" is a series of ten photographs showing several events of the festival. Others, like "Kentucky Road" and "Fall 1976" possess a clear, crisp quality inviting to the eye.

The public is invited to view this exhibit in the reading Rooms of the Lankford Building through October 5.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

Next Saturday is the last day for Virginia Citizens to register to vote. Election day is November 8, at which time not only will the next governor be decided upon, but also the fate of the Virginia Bonds. Remember, a new gymnasium can only be constructed if the Referendum is passed. If you are not registered by October 8, you may not vote; Longwood needs your vote.

After two incidents which have recently happened, I personally am convinced that additional room is needed in the Health and Physical Education Department. A few days ago in a swimming class, Dr. Johnson wanted to show a film, but the only available place to show it was in the lifeguard office at the pool. The office, approximately the size of a postage stamp (one of the rectangular ones), had to seat about twenty students. With space at a premium, a screen was replaced by a folded shower curtain hung on the office door.

Last week end after the soccer game with Christopher Newport, in which Goalie Joe Link was injured, the whirlpool was needed. Do you know where the whirlpool is located, or rather tucked away? Two friends needed to contact Joe and knew only that he was wherever the whirlpool was. Neither campus police nor the infirmary nurse could tell the two where to find it or him. Finally they walked into French and screamed "Hey Joe." The coach and athletic trainer heard them and led them back through the equipment rooms to the whirlpool.

Obviously, additional space would be an asset to the department. You can help alleviate the present situation — Vote Yes for Virginia Bonds.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Judicial Board Support

Dear Editor,

I feel that some individuals on Longwood College are not being very fair. Individuals that do not even know the judicial board members are simply tearing them apart with derogatory remarks. I know a few of the judicial board members and personally, I feel that there are no nicer people on campus. I know that judicial board did not or would not do any of the utterly ridiculous things mentioned in September 27 edition of the Rotunda, just to do them or because the deans suggest. Judicial board members are doing their job, what they were elected to do. If males want positions on the board, then let them run against the females and we will see if the campus really wants men to represent the justice of the campus. I feel that judicial board is doing a fine job. I've been with one of the board members when she was called out at 12:00 midnight on judicial board business not to return until 2:00 or 3:00 in the morning. To me, that position does not seem too desirable. But yet, she does it, knowing that it is late and she could be sleeping, knowing that the next day she will get all kinds of comments thrown at her by students who only know the one side of the story. I feel that it is not fair to the judicial board members to be jumped upon for doing a job that many other people on campus would not want. Stop and think the next time you pass judgment — you're judging judicial board before you have all of the evidence, so who are you to talk?

Concerned Freshman

A Lot Of Good At Longwood

Dear Editor,

We believe we can speak for many others on this campus when we say we would like to see the Rotunda return to its original purpose — to inform the student body of events on campus. Why waste so much energy and space to matters concerning only a few students? It seems to us much more beneficial and informative to include articles explaining proposals brought up at the Student Faculty Retreat, and events occurring in the music department as well as in other departments on campus. Contrary to the comments going around the campus, we feel that there is still a lot of good here at Longwood, and we can either spend our time complaining because rosebushes have thorns or rejoice because thornbushes have roses.

Sincerely,
AnnWyatt

Gretchen Rogers Displays Handwoven Art

By DEBBIE MOUL

Knit one, pearl two, crochet needles and sewing machines could not yield a more culturally antiquated exhibit than that of Gretchen Rogers, now open to the public in the Lancaster Library Gallery from September 30-October 24, 1977. The articles on display range from simple belts done in an array of colors to the most elaborate handwoven jackets similar to those that one might view in Sack's 5th Avenue display window.

Mrs. Rogers has been weaving for six years and has wanted to weave forever. She has studied and been educated in schools in Ohio, Massachusetts, England, Iceland, New Foundland, Israel, and Virginia. Mrs. Rogers studied weaving at Newton College, in Newton, Massachusetts. She possesses a B.A. degree in Adult Education and is a member of both the Handweavers' Guild of America and Richmond Weavers.

Mrs. Rogers was first exposed to colors and textures of the beautiful countryside, having been reared in rural Ohio.

Through weaving, with the use of contemporary colors and designs, she is able to keep faith or continuity with the past. Weaving is something that people have always done, and through it Mrs. Rogers finds pleasure in bringing beauty into the everyday home. She enjoys making beautiful things that people might readily use, specializing in clothing and creations for the home. Handwoven clothing articles must be shaped on a loom and therefore have no seams, often making them longer-lasting and more durable as were clothes in the days of old. When weaving, one takes a lot of time in just threading the loom, sometimes as long as two days.

Mrs. Rogers likes old things and houses. Her husband, two daughters and she reside in a 1800-1820 vintage farmhouse on three acres of land in Worsham, Virginia. When visiting, one may be welcomed by an influx of animals; two sheep, one dog, one rabbit, and assortment of hens (which supply them with eggs), chickens, baby chicks and two "insomniac roosters." Willie, a terrier, is the latest addition to the family.

The original house has been added on to. It is a large house with twelve foot high ceilings, white mantles, brick fireplaces throughout the house and it is furnished with antiques. Mrs. Rogers has a country yellow kitchen with a large picture window enabling her to gaze out over the land. In the evenings, deer may be seen cavorting across the fields. Yellow gingham curtains hang above a yellow wooden sink and a huge asparagus fern hangs in a smaller window, the setting undoubtedly picturesque and similar to one that Laura Ingalls Wilder might use in describing their "Little House on the Prairie." Up the banistered stairs, we come to "Her Corner," her 44" loom facing a large window. Outside is a seemingly immortal pecan tree, having reached the ripe old age of 200 years. Pecan nuts lay scattered upon the ground.

Mrs. Rogers' attitude about farm living and eating their own grown food is exemplified when she says "I want the children to know that all meat is not cellophane wrapped in the grocery store." The Rogers have a one acre garden and fruit trees. They have considered getting a cow but Mrs. Rogers does not like the strenuous idea of having to milk the cow. There have been times when the family has sat down to dinner and everything has been home grown except the milk, butter and cheese.

Mrs. Rogers simplicity and down-to-earth nature are clearly seen through her work. Many of the display items in the Gallery are for sale.

Take the time to observe and enjoy the many creations on exhibit, and if possible speak with Gretchen Rogers. She is a very fascinating woman.

Open Mike Features New Talent

By TWINKIE PLANT

The first Open Mike of the fall semester was held in the Gold Room last Wednesday night, presenting many new faces of those performing the talent we have here on this campus.

The night began to "Swing Low Sweet Chariot" sung by Bonnie Briggs, Bonnie Connor, and Cindy Cummins. Rusty Harley then joined Bonnie Connor in an original piano piece that he had composed. A bit of Neil Young was captured as Dave Wilson and Steve Druen hit the audience with "Helplessly Hoping"; among other favorites.

Not only was Neil Young in the picture, but the style of Carly Simon was clearly shown as Kelly Helms began "Anticipation". Kelly also sang a couple of her own songs; the first tune on trust. Kelly feels that "in any relationship two people have, if you don't have trust you really don't have anything." Her song implies the same.

Performing once again this year is Carol Brooks on the piano. Carol is a music major and played many pieces by Dan Fogelberg, James Taylor, and Barbara Streisand.

To tie things up for the evening Craig White changed the mood beginning with "Pickin' to 'Beat The Devil'". He sang many others that deal with social commentary.

"My favorite music is one that makes social commentary. Its fairly easy to write editorials but to do the same thing by writing or playing music that makes a statement becomes more critical to the audience because they see you do it."

Craig polished the evening off by doing an original ballad "I felt I had to make my opinion known. Some people can write into what has been happening on this campus. I hope that people will continue to direct letters to the editor on ANY issue they feel important."

This first open mike was a success featuring many talents. Sign up sheets are available in the Student Union Center for the next open mike. Everyone is encouraged to participate.

Dr. Sprague To Co-Star In 'Dear Liar'

By PAULA JOHNSON

Dr. Rosemary Sprague of Longwood's English Department will be appearing with the Daniel Players in the performance of the play Dear Liar by Jerome Kilty. The play will be held October 6-8 at 8:30 p.m. at the Southside Community College, John H. Daniel Campus, in Keysville.

Dr. Sprague, in the role of Mrs. Patrick Campbell, will be co-starring with Dudley Sauve who plays George Bernard Shaw. Dear Liar is a dramatization of the correspondences between Mrs. Patrick Campbell and George Bernard Shaw, whose friendship lasted for 40 years.

Dr. Sprague was asked to play the part of Mrs. Campbell by Dudley Sauve, who is also the director of the Daniel Players.

Dr. Sprague said that Mr. Sauve and she had talked about doing the play before, but their schedules were always in conflict.

Mrs. Campbell came through an era when a star was expected to be a star. She was always giving a performance. Said Dr. Sprague of Mrs. Campbell: "She was a professional from the word 'go.' She was well educated and an accomplished pianist. The letters reveal numerous facets of her life."

When asked how she felt about the play, Dr. Sprague said, "I love it. It represents a challenge for me." "Was she excited?" "Quite excited — and very nervous."

The regular admission price is $3.00. October 6 is Student Night, when the admission will be halved for students.

Tennis Team Easily Defeats Averett

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Longwood Tennis team took an easy win over Averett last Tuesday, 8-1, to bring the team to a 3-2 record. Coach Phylliss Harriss commented that the competition was "not the toughest" but she felt the team was "giving their all." Coach Harriss also felt that the team needs "work on placement."

Some members of the tennis team paired up with faculty members and male students to take on Mary Washington in a mixed doubles match last Wednesday. The match, which Longwood lost 1-5, was just for fun and does not count in the seasonal record. Longwood will have a chance to get even with Mary Washington in mixed doubles when a team travels to compete against them on April 21, 1978.

The next home tennis match is October 6 at 3:00 p.m. against VCU. Today Longwood travels to Staunton to face Mary Baldwin College.

Individual Scores Against Averett:

(Longwood listed first)

SINGLES:

1. Margie Quarles lost to Billie Cundiff 7-6, 2-6, 2-6
2. Gwen Koechlin d. Vicki Clarke 6-3, 6-2
3. Teresa McLawhorn d. Carol Assadourian 6-1, 6-0
4. Nancy Leidenheimer d. Sally Harden 6-0, 6-0
5. Angie Gerst d. Donna Platt 6-1, 6-3
6. Judi Fayne d. Debbie Porrer 6-3, 6-0

DOUBLES:

1. Margie Quarles and Gwen Koechlin d. Cundiff and Clarke 6-3, 4-6, 6-2
 2. Teresa McLawhorn d. Assadourian and Harden 6-1, 6-0
 3. Jill Bacchieri and Diane Nash d. Platt and Beetle 6-0, 6-0
- Individual Scores Against Averett:

I.A.A. Action

The women's intermediate level softball competition is over and the team from Wheeler won with a 4-0 record.

Flag football competition has also been completed for this year. The winning team is Weight Training I. They were undefeated also.

Men's and women's tennis singles are now in progress. Bowling intramurals begin this week. The next intramurals will be co-ed and women's bowling and innersube water polo.

Anyone interested in participating in Color Rush Oktoberfest weekend please check the daily bulletin for dates and times of tryouts.

Webb Places Third In Invitational

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Longwood College golfer, Kay Smith, placed third, with a score of 83, in the championship flight of the Mary Baldwin Invitation Tournament held September 30-October 1. Twelve colleges from Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina were represented. The winner was Brenda Baker of Madison who shot an 81.

The golfers played as individuals in flights determined by their season scores, thus they played against golfers of their own level. Other Longwood golfers to gain recognition at the Tournament were Becky Webb, who came closest to the pin on the 18th hole, and Penny Stevens and Deborah Hood, who won prizes in their respective flights.

Coach Barbara Smith says she was "not happy with the way they scored as a team." She added that with practice they should be prepared to play well Wednesday when they travel to William and Mary.

Soccer Loses Aggressiveness - Falls To Liberty Baptist

By Margaret Hammersley

The soccer team seemed to lose their aggressiveness last Thursday, suffering another defeat, on the road at Liberty Baptist. With the final score Longwood 1, Liberty Baptist 8, Longwood's one goal came 25 minutes into the second half as David Komornik scored on a direct penalty kick.

Trying to combat their weaknesses, the team members are going back to practicing the basic fundamentals of soccer. What is it going to take to play and win? "Plain hard work," answered Coach Williamson.

Although the team is a varsity team, the coach commented, "We are still a beginning soccer team." At this point the team has some learning to do. "It'll take a year or two to reach the proficiency level of the other teams," Williamson added.

With Liberty Baptist dominating the game, they scored five goals first half and prevented Longwood from moving into her own offensive zone. Liberty Baptist's Lawson, assisted by Kirim, scored six and a half minutes into play. Two and a half minutes later, goalie Joe Link fumbled a save allowing Barclay to score. Liberty Baptist's third goal was scored by Rascher, 21½ minutes into the half. The final two goals of the half came within a minute of each other. With ten minutes left in the half, Link left the immediate area of the goal to take the ball away from Wemp, who passed to Kirim to score. The situation was repeated as Wemp scored the fifth goal, assisted by Barclay. Longwood's trouble was the lack of support behind Link.

The second half brought Longwood their one goal, and Liberty Baptist three goals. Fifteen minutes into play Bates assisted Hammond for goal number six. Bates assisted the number seven goal scored by Kirim.

A tripping penalty allowed Komornik his direct kick to score.

The game's final goal, scored by Wemp, assisted by Kirim, left Longwood down, 1-8.

Thursday, October 6 at 4 p.m., Longwood hosts Mary Washington.

HPER Intercollegiate Committee

Now Taking Applications

The HPER Intercollegiate Committee is composed of all intercollegiate coaches, the Intercollegiate Coordinator, the Chairperson of the HPER Department (exofficio), and three student athletes. The student representation must consist of:

- a. a minimum of 1 male and 1 female
- b. a minimum of 1 team and 1 individual sport representative
- c. a maximum of 1 athlete from any one sport

Very generally speaking, the HPER Intercollegiate Committee deals with minor and major problems, issues, plans, operational procedures, etc., of the intercollegiate program.

The HPER has developed a new procedure for selecting student representation to the committee. We are requesting that any student athlete interest in being on this committee please go through the following procedure:

1. Applicants must have been a member of last year's (1976-77) varsity teams.
2. Interested candidates should receive applications through the intercollegiate coordinator's office. (Dr. Judy Johnson, Barlow)

3. Submit to the Intercollegiate Coordinator three letters of recommendation from fellow athletes.

The HPER Intercollegiate Committee will select its student members from the applications received. The deadline for all information to be received by the Intercollegiate Coordinator is October 18.

Equestrian Major Offered At Colleges

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Are you tired of the same old majors like English, Art, Home Economics? How would you like to major in Equestrian Studies? If so, you would have to attend a college like Lake Erie College, a private woman's college in Painesville, Ohio, to take advantage of this offering.

Lake Erie has classes in Equine Nutrition, which is about a horse's digestive system and feed; Equine Health; and Stable Management, about teaching, design, financing, taxation — even how to sell manure to mushroom farmers. Also offering are courses entitled Methods and Materials of Teaching Riding and Musculoskeletal Dysfunction, which is taught by Veterinarian Richard Chamberlain and is about "60 common equine hip and leg ailments."

Extracurricular activities include dressage, equitation, jumping, cross country, and fox hunting.

According to WomenSports Magazine, "The idea is to combine a liberal arts education with a practical career training to produce the renaissance horsewoman."

About 50 per cent of the 190 students in the Fall 1977 Freshman class came for the horse studies. Lake Erie's riding facilities include 440 acre Morely Farm, with stables, bridge trails, and an indoor equestrian center. The school has 30 mounts of its own and 60 students provide their own horses.

Their big event is the annual Prix de Ville Jumping and Dressage show in April. This is equivalent to a homecoming at other colleges.

The first program graduates have had much success, 20 out of a class of 29 have entered horse related jobs.

Charlotte Bayby, a graduate, has become head trainer at Fox Run Farm in Ohio and two other graduates show horses for Hugh Wiley, a former Olympian.

The only fear for the program is that there might not be enough jobs for all the Equitation Studies majors since other schools have begun to have similar programs. Lake Erie's program was instituted to increase the school's enrollment, which it has done significantly.

In Virginia such colleges as Averett, Radford and VPI offer Equitation or horse science majors and minors. Longwood has riding classes, a riding team, and a riding club, the Lancers. Ms. Sally Bush, riding team coach and riding instructor notes that horsemanship has "exploded in the last 10 years" throughout the country.

Double Wins

Hockey Team Crushes Tech And Cavalier Club

Terry Voit, Juli Dayton, and Cathy Lowe led the scoring attack for the Longwood College field hockey team in last Tuesday's 4-0 win over Virginia Tech.

"It sure makes life a lot easier," admitted LC Coach Dee McDonough after the victory on Longwood's Barlow Field. The coach noted some definite improvements in her team: "They were more aggressive today. They talked to each other more and worked together more."

Citing the team's biggest weakness as "lacking that second wave of attack," McDonough noted, "That's something that could hurt us later on."

McDonough commended Theresa Ware, Cathy Lowe, and Wanda Peterson for keeping the defense moving, thus holding the Tech team scoreless.

Juli Dayton scored on Longwood's third offensive drive seventeen minutes into the first half. The more aggressive Longwood team made seven shots at the goal during the half, while the Gobblers took only one.

Leading 1-0 after the first half, Longwood executed good defense in the second half and prevented Tech from making direct shots at the goal. Longwood missed some good scoring opportunities early in the half but continued its aggressive offense, taking thirteen shots at the goal.

Terry Voit scored her first goal with sixteen minutes off the clock. As Longwood continued to penetrate the Tech territory, Cathy Lowe scored for Longwood with ten minutes remaining in the game, and four minutes later Terry Voit scored her second goal.

The JV team advanced to a 1-1 record after defeating Virginia Tech 2-0. Freshman Donna Deats and Sophomore Debi Kinzel each shot a goal. Defensively the team looked very good, keeping the ball out of the striking circle. The Longwood offense dominated by keeping the ball down at Tech's defensive end for the major part of the game.

Saturday Longwood played host to the Cavalier Club of Richmond. Longwood came away with a 7-0 win to boost their season record to 3-1. In the first half Carol Filo and Terry Voit each put in one goal and Terry Donahue lead the scoring with two goals. Carol Filo and Terry Voit popped in another goal each, with half time substitute Debi Kinzel adding another score in the second half. Robin Rowen did not have much action come her way, only having to clear the ball once.

Since the Cavaliers did not have enough players to make up a second team, the Longwood JV only took them on for a 25 minute contest. Longwood's offense controlled the game, but was unable to score leaving the game a scoreless tie.

Riding Team In First Varsity Season

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Coach Sally Bush and the Longwood riding team are looking forward to their first full year of being classified as a Varsity Intercollegiate sport. Ms. Bush is predicting a successful season, which lasts the entire school year.

"Last year's riding team was very successful considering it was hard to find facilities and horses for practice," said Ms. Bush, referring to the fact that the team had no set practice time and did not have varsity status until the spring. Last year the team took 21 ribbons in competition.

The Longwood team is a member of the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association, along with 12 other colleges. This year's riding team will be competing in seven divisions, the Walk-Trot, with Beginner and Advanced Classes; the Walk-Trot-Canter, with Beginner and Advanced classes; Novice on the Flat; Open on the Flat; Novice horsemanship over fences; and Open horsemanship over fences. The Association also has two Alumni divisions.

Sixteen riders tried out, with only eight making the team. The riders for this year are Freshmen

Alice Bartlett from Gloucester who has nine years jumping experience, Leslie Henry from Williamsburg, who has eight years experience jumping, Sally Lowe from Staunton, Rhonda Powell who has five years flat riding experience, and Anne Powers from Richmond who has been showing jumpers for five years. Other team members are Juli Tracy Nokesville with five years experience in both jumping and flat, Junior Meg McDonald from Annandale, Senior Kathie Marth from Edgewater Park, New Jersey and Freshmen Reserve Rider Leanne Mattox, who both have four years experience jumping and flat.

According to Ms. Bush, Longwood has a "very young team", but they all have experience. She says, "Hopefully next year we can increase the team."

Their opening show is at "The Barracks" at the University of Virginia, where this year's Regionals will also be held.

Longwood will be assisting in the administration at the Regionals.

On October 21, the Fall Lancer's Horse Show will be held at 1:00 p.m. Joanne Jones from Buckingham County will be the judge.

Volleyball Takes First In Lynchburg Tourney

The Longwood volleyball team started out their season at the Lynchburg Invitational Tournament Friday, September 30. Longwood placed first in the tourney by defeating Radford 15-13 and 15-7, and Virginia Intermont College 15-11, 13-15, 15-3.

Virginia Intermont placed second, Radford third and Lynchburg finished a last fourth in the Round Robin action.

The next day Longwood was up against tougher competition in the Madison Tournament dropping three games. They lost to VPI 15-8 and 15-4, George Washington University 15-4 and 15-2, and Madison 15-12 and 15-3. The Longwood JV team also took on George Washington but was defeated in two out of three games, 2-15, 16-14, 15-12. VPI placed first in the tournament, George Washington second, Madison third, and Longwood finished last.

Coach Carolyn Price felt the team "played hard," but that Saturday they were up against big colleges with tough teams. She felt that the season is off to a good start.

Tonight the volleyball team will go to Lynchburg to play against Randolph-Macon Women's College and Liberty Baptist. Wednesday night will be their first home game against Hollins at 6:30 p.m., with the second team playing at 7:30.

Dr. Jones is the only professor to represent a Liberal Arts College on this board. He is now trying to find a way small colleges can obtain access to the Chemical Abstract Service. Dr. Jones is looking forward to instituting a program at Longwood by which the Chemical Abstract Service would Jefferson Cup.

In 1810, Thomas Jefferson designed a handsome, round-bottomed drinking cup. He commissioned a Virginia silversmith to craft eight cups in silver lined with gold. Jefferson treasured them highly, and bequeathed seven to his daughter for her children.

Stieff faithfully reproduced the eight-ounce Jefferson Cup (as well as two-ounce miniatures), for you and your family. It is the only authentic reproduction available—truly something to treasure and hand down.

Kline Displays Sculpture Of Building Blocks

By DEBBIE MOUL

Building blocks? You know — they had a picture, letter or a number on the side. You stacked them as high as you possibly could and just stood there, so proud of the tower that you had just created. But suddenly, your pride is crushed when your kid brother comes by and with one breath sends your monument crashing to the floor.

Paul Kline, Head of the Art Department at Bridgewater College, preserves these childhood memories in his sculptures, many of which are on exhibit in the Bedford Gallery from October 21 to November 14. Mr. Kline's interest in this particular type of art originated through a desire or need to make words in a sculpture. Building blocks enable him to successfully reach this objective since they already have words on them.

In his sculptures, Mr. Kline is not concerned with realism or with the abstract. He is interested in wood and metal, the materials that he uses and how these materials smell and feel when they are cut, hammered, welded, handled, painted and sanded. He is more concerned and interested in the sculpture itself, "the form these materials finally take, the subtle variations that occur within that form, and with the order and harmony achieved through the arrangements and relationships of these forms."

Mr. Kline attempts to convey messages and themes through his work. He has created a series of homage pieces, sculptures that "pay tribute" with reference to artists that he admires. The block sculptures on exhibit have been made over the last two years.

Mr. Kline has been Head of the Art Department at Bridgewater College for seventeen years. He obtained his B.A. degree from Bridgewater and his M.F.A. degree at Virginia Commonwealth University. He has taught both beginning and advanced sculpture, Art History, Art Appreciation and beginning Drawing and Painting. His works have been exhibited at the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts and at the Virginia Beach Boardwalk Show as well as other noted museums and shows.

When speaking of building blocks, Mr. Kline says, "Most of us have played with blocks years ago, but as we grew older and usually more inhibited — we put away childish things." He has added to his collection from several yard sales and from the toy departments of at least a dozen retail stores. Playskool, Inc. sent him four boxes of blocks-free of charge — to show their gratitude for the renewed interest in their product which he has exhibited.

Mr. Kline said, "These blocks are made to look at — and they are made to 'touch, feel, rub, and fondle.'" He urges viewers to at least touch them.

"Besides," said Mr. Kline, smiling, "They're fun to play with."

V.C.U. Percussion Ensemble To Perform

By PAULA JOHNSON

On Thursday, October 27, 1977, at 8:00 p.m., Longwood College Department of Music's Visiting Artists series will present the VCU Percussion Ensemble.

The Ensemble, conducted by Donald Bick, consists of nine members. Featured also will be Carmen Jordan, piano, and VCU faculty vocalist, Karen Floyd. Ms. Floyd is a recent winner of the Metropolitan Opera Auditions.

The music ranges from John Cage, an ultra radical 20th century composer, to Scott Joplin to Dmitri Kabalevsky. The works of these and other composers will be performed on marimbas, xylophone, bells, chimes, drums and numerous other instruments. Dr. McCray assures that the evening will be "very unique and very interesting."

The performance will be held in the Molnar Recital Hall and is open to the public at no charge.

Lintz Feels Closeness To Longwood

By CONNIE BARBOUR

Ms. Rhonda Aileen Lintz, a native of Tennessee, is happily a member of the Longwood College Social Work Department. Ms. Lintz received her B.A. from the University of Tennessee and a M.S. degree in Social Services from Florida State University.

Ms. Lintz's earlier work experience included working as a Resident Matron for pregnant women in New Orleans, Louisiana. Ms. Lintz has worked in public health and with tuberculosis control. She spent 17 years in Chest, Tennessee as a social worker involved with things as tuberculosis control. Afterwards, she worked with the area of retardation in Silver Springs, Maryland, at the Great Oak Center, which was newly opened in 1970. Until her job now, Ms. Lintz worked as a social work consultant at the Lynchburg Training School, working with retardation.

Ms. Lintz teaches classes in Service Delivery Systems and Advanced Social Work Methods. The former class deals with the development of systems of service delivery in relation to such things as laws, health care and welfare. It looks at how social services provides services for human needs. As part of this study the class will be taking advantage of a public hearing from the Health Systems Plan to be held here on campus November 7. One of Ms. Lintz's other responsibilities includes being in charge of Placement of Students for Field Instruction for juniors and seniors in the social work field. Since she had once held a job in Lynchburg, Virginia, working with social work students doing field instruction, many of whom were Longwood students, Ms. Lintz had a sense of closeness with Longwood College, which now has increased since she has become a member of the faculty here. Ms. Lintz stays in contact with the happenings of social work by being involved in several social work related organizations. She is a member of the American Association of Mental Deficiency, and she serves on the Steering Committee of the state chapter of this national organization. Ms. Lintz is editor of the Social Work Division Newsletter which is published 3 to 4 times a year. Ms. Lintz is also active in the National Association of Social Workers, in Lynchburg, and she has been asked to be on the Women's Issue Committee of that association.

As interesting as her background in social work are her personal interests and hobbies. She used to do a lot of camping. She enjoys hiking, painting, traveling and reading. She is now doing extensive reading in the areas of archaeology and anthropology with a great desire to go on an archaeological dig some day.

Ms. Lintz stated that she feels comfortable here at Longwood College. Her interests in the field of social work are very obviously positive and sincere. She views the field of social work as, "a rapidly changing field moving more toward a system of services." She commented that as it is looked at now the question asked is, "How social work can fit into social planning of society by providing such things as one to one counseling and provisions of support." She stated that, "It has been extended into so many areas," and she feels that, "the demand for social workers will be maintained in the immediate future with the need in many services such as health, mental and physical, welfare and industry for social workers. In Ms. Lintz's own words, "Social work helps solve human problems."

FEMINIST SOAP OPERA AT BERKELEY

(CPS) — As the world turns through the days of our lives, women at the University of California at Berkeley will produce their version of alternative lifestyles in "Changing Directions," a feminist soap opera to premiere on the campus radio station.

Deborah Schwartz, a producer and co-author, anticipates that the program will give a "very realistic" portrayal of women's lives while showing them possible choices besides children, housework and husbands.

The idea was born more than a year ago during a meeting of the KPFA women's programming group when Sheila Kirschbaum founded the Feminist Radio Serial Project and began writing.

The six pilot episodes will be distributed nationally.

Longwood Foundation Aids College Development

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Although it exerts an important influence on the campus' financial capability, the Longwood Foundation is an administrative organization of which students are only nominally aware. To many the foundation merely conjures up some nebulous postscript at the bottom of the faculty lecture series brochure or in the final frames following Dr. Sydnor's documentary on Nazi Germany. While these credit lines are more than an obvious clue as to what the foundation does, they say nothing of the Longwood Foundations' other programs, how these programs are implemented, or of the organization itself.

The Longwood College Foundation is a fund raising organization comprised of 25 directors who secure, assess and delegate to various programs, donations made to the college. Technically, it provides Longwood with a means of local control of private gifts that would otherwise have to be placed into the state treasury because of Longwood's status as a state-supported institution.

Mr. James B. Bourne, Jr., President of Franklin Federal Savings and Loan, presides over a prestigious board of successful career persons in such fields as banking, politics, manufacturing and education. Mr. George Bristol, Director of College Relations and also a member of the board emphasizes the advantages of having a coordinated, concerned effort comprised of people who, "without any pay, give of their time and resources" of which their "expertise in business and influence within the state" are crucial assets in acquiring funds for the school. Their terms extend for a period of three years.

Sponsoring such specific programs as Longwood Scholars, Sully Gallery, the Sydnor documentary, and according to Mr. Bristol, "a lot of little things in all departments," the overall concern of the Longwood College Foundation lies in institutional advancement. Revenues gained through increased enrollment, successful placement of graduates and status of alumni who achieve outstanding recognition in their fields all contribute to a positive image of the school. Looking at institutional advancement on an individual level, Mr. Bristol also observes that as students at Longwood "everyone is in college development." Viewing this in consequence to private support, he adds that, realistically, "people won't contribute to a school they don't respect."

Aside from having an access to potential contributors there is a psychological aspect to securing funds. "You don't ask for money," Mr. Bristol contends, "you sell programs . . . and the programs must sell themselves. People are not interested in donating five dollars for good will and nostalgia. They want to do something with their money." Tied in with presenting these programs to potential college philanthropists is the custom of entertaining them as a medium for the presentation. Asserting that there is "nothing secretive" in this custom, Mr. Bristol points out the value in protocol in dealing with a prospective contributor. Selling of programs is done "in an environment where the person is accustomed . . . (You) don't want to appear snobbish, but discreet in gaining support for the college. It is a tool, an asset for contacts."

The Foundation holds three annual fund drives during the year, a faculty and staff drive, an alumni drive and a business oriented drive. The traditional parents' drive is also an important financial source. This is held in September so that contributions may be filed as a tax advantage before the end of the year.

Looking toward the future, the board endorsed a recommendation to consider funding for an outdoor swimming pool to broaden physical education facilities and to aid in recruitment in the coming years. According to Mr. Bristol the idea was agreed upon as "one that seems to have merit" and "is under investigation." The college may also need to look toward the foundation as a means of financing the proposed physical education building should the bond referendum fail through.

Mr. Bristol is optimistic about the successful implementation of the Longwood College Foundation's goals for the coming year. That "all annual funds have increased is a significant indication that people are pleased with the college."

Investigation Committee

Constitution To Be Established

By CATY RAFFERTY

Legislative Board has formed an ad hoc committee that is responsible for drawing up the constitution for investigation committee. This committee feels that the student body should be aware of the responsibilities of the proposed investigations committee. The investigation committee will be made up of eight members and a chairman. Two people will be elected from their respective class. The chairman will be elected by the student body. When an offense or violation of either Residence or Judicial board has occurred, the chairman of the investigations committee will be notified. He or she will then delegate any two members of the committee to do the investigation. After the investigation the committee as a whole will meet to review the facts. No names under any circumstances will be mentioned at this time. The committee will decide if there is a need for a trial. If a trial is needed, the chairman of the respective board will then be notified. If the committee feels that a trial is unnecessary, it will go no further. During a trial the two investigators of that case will present the facts to the board. The rest of the trial procedures will remain the same.

All of this is just a proposal that has not yet been approved. We would appreciate any feedback from the student body. Please contact Caty Rafferty, Box 797.

LOG Teaches Of The Great Outdoors

By LORI DAVIS

If you're interested in camping, hiking, canoeing, bicycling, or caving, now you can be a part of any of this . . . and more!! There is a new club on Longwood's campus called the Longwood Outdoor Club (LOG).

Mr. George Stonikinis, the coordinator of the new group, is the man you want to get to know, if you love the outdoors. He became interested in this sort of thing when he was in college — especially caving. So last spring, he began reading news articles, as well as visiting other campuses and looked into the possibility of starting an outdoor program at Longwood. As he put it, "When we say we're going to do these things, we are!! This group will be a way for interested people to learn a mature, rational approach to conducting outdoor activity."

There will also be sectional leaders for the group, being either students or people in the community capable of instructing in a certain field.

LOG is not liable for any of its members. It is merely a linkage for interested people to get involved in these great opportunities.

There will be weekly meetings. There will also be speakers — some of the upcoming subjects to be presented are "back-packing kayaking, and survival in the outdoors." The club will have access to maps, too, as there will be trips to various places.

According to Mr. Stonikinis, "Right off, I anticipate camping, caving, canoeing and hiking." The club will also offer climbing, hunting, fishing, skiing, and ecology.

So come on!!! This promises to be a great thing! Be a part of the great outdoors!

Soap Operas And Sound Effects Part Of Radio And Television

By LINDA CARRILLO
Halloween, soap operas, and sound effects are a part of the curriculum for Speech 311, the radio and television course taught by Mr. Robert J. Woodburn.

Divided between lectures and actual practice, the course deals mainly with basic techniques. Mr. Woodburn commented that more emphasis is placed on radio broadcasting since the "basics learned in radio could be adequately transferred to television."

Students in the class carry out the theory with their own radio program, SRO (Standing Room Only). The taped material is broadcasted Tuesdays from 1:15 to 1:30 p.m. on Farmville's radio station, WFLO.

Preparation for the program involves learning about the operation of a typical radio station. The students experiment with script writing, sound effects, music, commercials, and public service announcements. They also write a drama script and tape it for a semester project.

The technical aspects of radio such as microphone techniques and the control board operation of turn tables, microphones and tape recorders are also explained in the course. During the lectures, Mr. Woodburn discusses the history and the terminology of radio and television.

Kit Orsi, one of the members of the class, said it was fun and interesting, although "you have to put time into it." He added that the students choose the subjects for the SRO program. He said that they "devise the characters, make up dialogues, use sound effects and music" in the programs they tape.

Mr. Woodburn believes that interest in the course will expand if Longwood's application to the Federal Communications Commission is granted for an FM station.

Concerning the FM station, he emphasized that the "primary reason is to serve as a better communications source on campus although it will cover the Farmville community." The Longwood station would present all types of music, campus news from all departments, interviews, and school and community events. He continued that with a campus radio station, many of the events could be covered live.

The speech professor said that increased interest in the field of radio and television may lead to a major in communications. Presently, Longwood only offers a few courses that deal with the mass media.

The radio and television course is unique in that all students are able to benefit from the results of the study, application of the lectures, and creativity of the class members by listening to SRO on Tuesdays at 1:15.

CROP Rock-A-Thon Saturday

By MARY LOUISE PARRIS
Another CROP Rock-a-thon is coming up! The Wesley Foundation is planning to hold the second annual CROP Rock-a-thon October 29, 1977 from 6:30 a.m.-4:30 p.m. at Lankford Student Center. What is a rock-a-thon? It is a fund raising project where the participants have sponsors who pay them a certain rate per hour to rock in rocking chairs.

Last year rock-a-thon participants raised $1400 for CROP and this year the goal is $1500. In order to reach this goal, everyone's help is needed - either as a "rocker" or a sponsor. "Rockers" need not spend the entire day rocking, they can come early or late, but the more hours "rocked," the more money for CROP!

All money raised will be donated to CROP which is the Community Hunger Appeal for Church World Service. CROP helps around the world in time of disaster by providing food, and clean water resources. CROP helps people help themselves in more than 30 countries by providing seed, fertilizer, roads, dams, irrigation systems, schools and family planning clinics.

There is an estimated 460 million badly malnourished people in the world today. Many may go days without food and perhaps months without a decent meal. Why don't you plan to give a few hours of your time or a few dollars of your money this Oct. 29 to help stop hunger? If interested in either rocking or sponsoring someone to rock, contact Marjorie Upshaw (Cox 212) or Laura Barker (Wheeler 115) or call the Wesley Foundation (392-4933). You will be taking a positive step in helping to relieve someone's hunger pangs.

Second Faculty Recital Sunday

By PAULA JOHNSON
Norma Williams of Longwood's Department of Music will perform in the second of Faculty Recitals on October 30, 1977, at 4:00 p.m. in Molnar Recital Hall. Her accompanist will be Frieda Myers, also of the Music Department.

Miss Williams' program will include the works of Handel, Bononcini, Pergolesi, Paisiello, Mozart, and Brahms. Featured also will be three songs by Debussy and a song cycle by Ned Rorem. Mr. Rorem is a recent Pulitzer winning composer. He will also be a guest at Longwood for a three-day symposium in the spring.

Dr. James McCray, chairman of the Music Department, gave high praise to Miss Williams, saying: Miss Williams has a more extensive background in the area of performance than anyone on the staff. Her years as a professional performer in Europe have been valuable in her teaching here at Longwood."

Miss Williams joined the staff three years ago. She has been featured in Handel's The Messiah with the Richmond Symphony.

There is no charge for the performance and all are invited to attend.

"Stairsteps?" To Be Presented

On Tuesday, November 1, 1977, the Oral Interpretation Class will present a program entitled "Stairsteps?" for students and faculty. The presentation will be given in the Studio Theater of Jarman Hall at 1:00 p.m. with no admission and will consist of choral readings, poetry, prose and soliloquy. Some original works by Linda Kulp, Vicky Mann, and Linda Moore will be performed.

Beth Bailey will welcome the audience and explain the purpose of the program. The theme "Stairsteps?" was selected to show the various stages in life from childhood to adulthood. Choral readings under the direction of Reeny Manley, Jan Turner, Kit Orsi, and Linda Kulp will be given. The children's story of The Three Bears will be acted with a flair of jazz, oriental, Shakespearean, and space influence. Bene Blake, Dianne Morris, Meryl Phelps, Larry Mann, Robin Jenkins, and Barbara Wood will read humorous and serious selections. Monologues will be acted by Alan Boone, Vicky Mann, and Linda Kulp. Valerie Davis, Leslee Evans, Denise Giond, and Sharon Miller will also participate in this program.

All faculty members and students are invited to attend.

Get Your Beer Here. . . Stroh Beer Ads Stir Controversy

(CPS) — It could be called the beer that made Nigeria famous. But it is being called offensive and racist.

The Stroh Brewing Company recently ran an advertisement depicting the beer-drinking habits of the Kofyar tribe of Nigeria in 65 newspapers.

Students at Kent State University were among the first to boycott the beer until the company made an appropriate apology for what they called a "bigoted and insensitive ad."

James Telisky, Stroh's advertising manager disclaimed any intent to offend viewers and that he was "sorry to learn the interpretation of this particular vignette assumed that Stroh's created an ad uncomplimentary to the black race."

Stroh's intends to run a monthly series of 11 ads, each representing a different race, to be published with the intent to make the messages "entertaining but accurate."

The facts for the Nigerian ad were taken from an article in the Science Digest (February 1963) "Ancient Beverage Center of Cultural Focus," written by a Chicago anthropologist.

Dear Mom,

Gosh, it's quiet now and dark, too. The stars are so bright. Hey, mom, one of them is winking at me. I'm going to make a wish. Everything is so peaceful now. Circus Kirk is sleeping. I feel so alone yet contented. Did you ever feel that way, mom? Do you know why I'm so happy? — because Circus Kirk is my family, because we made everyone smile today and because I got to eat an awful lot of peanuts! I don't know where to begin telling you about today. Everything was so fun and exciting.

Boy, mom, you would not believe all the work that has to be done when setting up a circus. The thing that is really great about Circus Kirk is that everyone helps, even the clowns. I heard T. J., the boss of the Big Top, (that's the biggest tent) tell someone that there is "very good interaction" among members of the crew. Mom, what does interaction mean?

Anyway, everyone worked diligently setting up the trailers and tents. The echo of stakes being driven into the ground was continually heard throughout the morning. But I just stood there gazing idly about. Frequently some curious student that happened to be ambling by would come over and talk to me. I sure got a lot of attention today. Well, the hours passed by and before I knew it, it was time to "get the show on the road" (I call that "Circus Talk"). Many enthusiastic people, young and old, eagerly awaited admittance into the Sideshow Tent to watch the incredible stunts that were to be performed.

The first sideshow performance began at 6:00. People may have been anxious before they entered by the looks of fascination and disbelief on their faces afterwards was priceless. When you first enter the tent, to your right is what Circus Kirk calls the "Petting Zoo." It is much fun watching the little children and their reactions to the animals. Some girls and boys marched bravely up to a goat and petted it while others took a step, changed their minds and dashed back to the waiting arms of their parents. The two llamas, Sha and Sulton, are really close friends of mine. I wish you could meet them, mom, but you'd have to be careful because they like to spit on you. I've tried to teach them better manners but they just won't listen.

Within minutes, the voice of David Scott, the announcer and a magician, attracts everybody's attention and the crowd soon congregates in front of the stage. I heard David say once that he really likes traveling, the hard work and the excitement of performance and from what I've seen, he gets his share of it. He did a magic trick and no matter how carefully the people observed his materials or hand, how it was done still remained a baffling mystery.

Next, Miss Serpentina hopped up on the stage but she was not alone. Her reptilian friend, a boa constrictor, was comfortably draped about her neck. Better her than me. I shook with fear while she posed very much at ease and smiling all the time. Boy, mom, that boa scares me more than King Cobras back home.

The courageous "Human Pin Cushion" performed next. What does it take for a bare-chested man to lie upon a bed of nails and support the weight of another person, or to stick a knitting needle through his arm which is not pierced? — deep concentration, a developed body or a lot of courage? Well, whatever it is, Jonathon Rickerman definitely has it. He may grimace in pain while performing but it is successful and his stunt is most effective. The only thing I've ever heard him say about this is "I love it." Gee, mom, will I be able to do things like that when I grow up?

Jim Judkins, Circus Kirk's Jack-of-all-Trades, does everything from assuming the role of Ringmaster to waking everybody up in the morning. But one thing that Jim likes to do best is eating fire. Mom, this man is incredible. The crowd tonight watched him in awe and fascination as he placed a flaming wand in his mouth. What really amazes me is that he looks like he's really enjoying himself. It looks too painful to be fun.

As soon as the Sideshow ends, the seemingly enthusiastic crowd moves on toward the "highlight" of the evening, the Big Top. Some people, coaxed by eager children, paused at the Souvenir Stand, the Concession Stand or to be photographed with the zaniest of zaniest, the Circus Kirk clowns, "Kadee" and "Modeen." I like watching the clowns. The music of "The Circus Kirk Overture" drifts from one end of the Big Top, inviting spectators in. Young men walk around offering cotton candy, popcorn, cold drinks and my favorite, peanuts, to the crowd. I saw a lot of people endulge.

Jim Judkins as Ringmaster introduced the versatile performers as they entered the arena. Acrobats, Bret and Michelle, on foot and on the trampoline did various flips and somersaults. Next, an aerial ballet left the audience breathless and truly fascinated. Ray Oxenreider, Head of the Animal Department, intrigued the little children with the pony, Filibuster. Filibuster is a friend of mine. The pony did a few tricks and pranced around the ring. Four dogs entertained next, jumping through hoops and wire-walking. Budd Gilyard next juggled with everything from rubber balls to flaming torches. Gosh, mom, he was so good. I wish I could do that. The "Human Pin Cushion," Jonathon, seemingly at ease, rode a unicycle every which way. A girl sat on his shoulders and he was still able to ride. Then it was time for some humor, "Kadee" and "Modeen." Their antics had the children giggling and the adults smiling. Everyone loves a clown!

Guess whose turn it was then. It was mine. And you know what I did, mom? I put two feet on a stool. I did really well. You would have been proud of me. I wore a really pretty chain on my head and they announced my name when I entered the ring. Yep! I did real well.

But, mom, when it comes right down to it, I owe everything to Doc Boas. He's the manager of Circus Kirk. I heard him talking the other day and everything that he said really touched me. He's the greatest! Doc was saying, "We project these images of youth. We have new acts that have the old snap, bang and vitality. What happens inside the tent, we think comes very close to the real theatre. As a professor or in the role as an educator, I have absolutely unlimited belief in the abilities of young people to do things. All they need is an opportunity. I enjoy working with people in this age group. I relate to them." I can't think of a nicer man to work for.

I heard Jackie Carter, a French Horn player in the band, say, "I enjoy the magic of the circus." Magic. You know, mom, she's right!

Well, it's late. I'm going to munch on some hay and then go to bed.

Love,
Lisa

Memories

Her Field had its lacrosse cages exchanged for tents, food booths and campers for the all student circus, Circus Kirk, on October 5.

"Welcome Ladies and Gentlemen and children of all ages!"

This traditional cry marked the beginning of the circus performance. Then the show began — with acrobats, jugglers, clowns, and stubborn trained animals.

But have you ever wondered what happens AFTER the last show? Well several Longwood students got a first hand chance to see and participate in the Final Act — the clean-up crew.

As the smell of freshly popped popcorn fades, the brass band packs up and the performers change, the hardy cleanup crew went to work taking down the bleachers, wrapping up ropes, and, finally, to roll up the Big Top and help hoist the large canvas onto the truck.

All this activity lasted about an hour and a half — with the pay at $1.50. A lot of hard work for little? ... don't bet on it. The volunteer's consensus was that it was most educational to see what kind of work needs to be done at a Circus, something other people have no chance to see. In fact, some of the L.C. workers thought helping out was so much fun that they considered running away with the Circus. Unfortunately no one quite filled the qualifications of a trombone player or any assistant electrician — which were the services Circus Kirk needed. One girl offered to try learning the trombone "real quick."

For those of you who just were entertained by Circus Kirk, you really missed an interesting experience. The Big Top came down with a whoosh ... the Circus got picked up and packed up ... ready for its six o'clock departure time.

The next day Her was restored to its soccer and lacrosse functions. And I — however much I wanted to — could not drag myself from sleep to wave goodbye to Lisa the Elephant.

The Ringmaster announces the next act.

Jonathon Rickerman wheels it around the ring.

A delighted audience giggles at the antics of Kadee and Modeen.

Courts Rule One-Year Probation For Peterson

By DEBBIE MOUL

Karl Peterson's case came before Prince Edward County Court Friday, Oct. 21. Mr. Boswell, Peterson's lawyer motions to Karl and together they approach the table and sit down. Commonwealth Attorney, William F. Watkins sits to the left. Longwood College Campus Policeman, Officer Webb and Prince Edward County Police officer, John Hickman sit to the right. Judge Hay presides. The charge is stated-control and possession of marijuana. The trial is underway.

An affidavit, a sworn statement in writing, is needed and must be filed in order to issue a search warrant, a legal writ authorizing an officer to take action as in making an arrest, seizure or search. Karl's lawyer, Boswell charged that such a warrant was not made. It was later stated that an affidavit was indeed filed in the district court but not in the circuit court. Several texts were cited regarding laws or cases concerned with search and seizure. Boswell stated that the warrant is to say exactly what and why the search is being conducted. Judge Hay responded by saying that the issue now is not the validity of the search warrant. "Whether he (Karl) has been prejudiced or not is the issue." A search warrant must state that the thing searched for constitutes evidence for the commission of the offense.

Commonwealth Attorney,

Watkins called Policeofficer, John Hickman to the stand. He was asked to repeat exactly what happened on the night of Karl Peterson's arrest. That night, Hickman had been informed that Karl Peterson was in possession of morphine. Karl was in the snack bar at the time. She, the informant, state that Karl was saying that he had purchased ten bottles of morphine for $55.00 and that he did, indeed have one bottle of the substance with him at the time. She said that Karl, holding a bottle up, had said, "This is morphine." He had bought the bottles of morphine and needed to "get rid" of them.

When the police officers arrived at Karl's dormitory room, they found on one. They posted a copy of the warrant on a bookshelf. A desk drawer had been left open and it was here that they found a ceramic jug, a pipe fixture containing residue. They continued to search and it was then they found one small pipe and one small bag of a greenish-brown substance, 0.5 grams of marijuana. Karl possessed a foot locker which had been locked at the time. The officers broke the lock, opened the trunk and found an 18" long pipe, a bong. They did not know what morphine looked like. Hickman stated he had known the informant approximately six months and did not know the informant to be a user of hard drugs.

Boswell stated to the court that the warrant stated that morphine and paraphernalia were the articles to be searched for. Judge Hay responded by saying that the possession of marijuana is a crime in itself. Paraphernalia does not include pipes, bongs and the like but, instead refers to syringes, needles and similar materials. The individual filing the affidavit must rely on a reliable source. Boswell questioned the reliability of the source. The warrant was for the search of his person, not his habitation. The informant had seen morphine on his person, not in his home. Boswell claimed that this was not reason enough for a magistrate to issue a search warrant, unless there was some allegation to some crime going on within the dwelling-but in this case there was none. A search warrant must state that something, contraband is in a specific place at a specific time. Judge Hay stated that the only way to confirm any beliefs is by going to the most logical place which is his home. Boswell said that you are likely to go too far when searching his home, his grandmother's house. Where do you draw the line?

Several other comments were made and questions raised concerning the reliability of the source and the validity of the warrant. Boswell rested his case by saying that the warrant should be dismissed. As far as Karl is concerned, having been expelled from school is enough.

Judge Hay placed Karl Peterson on probation for the period of one year. If he is caught with or near drugs, Karl must go back to court with the possibility of facing a jail sentence. Boswell and Karl appealed and Karl was then released on his own recognizance and must return to court on November 22 to appeal again. Smiling, Karl Peterson left the courtroom.

Male Students Mourn Performers' Death

By DEBBIE MOUL

En route from Greenville, S. C., to Baton Rouge, Louisiana, a chartered plane carrying the famed Lynyrd Skynyrd rock band crashed in a wooded area 2 miles northeast of the Louisiana-Mississippi line killing lead singer, Ronnie Van Zant, Steve Gaines, guitarist, vocalist, Cassie Gaines, Dean Kilpatrick, a member of the entourage, the pilot and the co-pilot were also killed in the crash. The plane having run out of gas, plunged into a densely wooded area just 200 yards from an open field which the pilot had evidently attempted to reach.

The tragic death of these performers has not brushed lightly over the Longwood Campus. Lynyrd Skynyrd was very much alive on third floor Frazier Sunday as shocked students continuously played the band's albums throughout the day. On behalf of the floor's residents concerning the occurrence, Robbie Ford said "we're all shook up. I was real sad to hear it." He had heard the news in the dining hall and upon returning to third floor, heard the music of Lynyrd Skynyrd from virtually every room. Robbie immediately put on an album in tribute to the band. Students feel sad about hearing such tragic news concerning someone famous like L.S., something that "we've admired for so long."

Reverse Discrimination In Bakke Case

By NANCY COLELLA

Allan Bakke, a 37-year-old engineer, applied to the University of California at Davis School of Medicine in 1972, when he was turned down; he was rejected a second time when he applied in 1973. Mr. Bakke claims that in not admitting him, the school violated the equal rights granted him by the 14th amendment.

The 14th Amendment reads, "No state shall . . . deny to any person . . . the equal protection of the laws." However, according to the Washington Post, the Supreme Court may make its decision on the basis of Title VI, a civil rights law, instead of the 14th Amendment, which reads, "No person in the United States shall, on the ground of race, color, or national origin, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving federal financial assistance."

U. C. at Davis receives such federal aid, but the program at their medical school reserves 16 out of 100 openings for minority students (black, Chicano, etc.), who are chosen under a separate admissions policy. According to "Newsweek" magazine, the Davis medical school, founded in 1968, had no previous record of discrimination, and since minority students need to prove that intentional discrimination occurred consistently over a number of years before a quota system could be put into effect, this did not apply to UC-Davis.

However, at most institutions, the loss of the quota system would mean the return to discrimination against minorities and cancel out the progress made in the past two decades. An important factor in the eyes of the institution is that an increase in minority students leads to increased state and federal funding.

The Supreme Court's decision, whatever it will be, will have repercussions across the nation at the admissions, graduate, and undergraduate levels.

Anthropology Minor Established

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

A new program initiated September 27 by the Academic Policies Committee will enable Longwood students to pursue a minor in Anthropology. This new minor sequence, under the auspices of the Social Science Department, requires that the student complete a minimum of 18 hours in Anthropology, 9 hours of which are prerequisite courses Anthro 201, 202, and 300 and the remaining 9 hours to be fulfilled by various Anthropology electives. As these courses are offered on a rotating basis, prospective minors should indicate an interest to the Social Science curriculum chairperson Dr. Mary Cristo so that the student can coordinate his schedule to complete these requirements in time for graduation. Course offerings in Anthropology are described in the new curriculum catalog and it should be noted that courses taken for express credit in Anthropology may not be applied in cross reference for Sociology.

Longwood Players Present "Little Eyolf"

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Before Fall Break when the outboard all-of-us were either sitting around on suitcases procrastinating away those last few days until Friday or scrambling frantically through Mid-terms, there were some students looking beyond the week long pause to early December and the next theatrical production in Jarman. Crew chiefs, technical workers, cast, and stage personnel were chosen that week for Danish playwright Henrik Ibsen's play "Little Eyolf" to be produced Dec. 7-10 by the Longwood Players and the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts.

"Little Eyolf" is the ninth in a series of twelve "cycle plays" in which Ibsen explores various levels of human experience through the medium of the stage. This particular slice of experience focuses on what happens when a quiet, introspective individual is confronted with physical and psychological dilemmas.

This first character, Allmers, portrayed by Ken Neimo, is a bookish, self-defined "meditative man" who holds a grand opinion of his own intellectual prowess. As a man never faced with pressure, he is adept at saying the "right thing at the right time" and it is in this self-wrought facade of the rock-solid intellectual that lies the potential dangerousness of his character. In the wake of the incidents that touch him in the play however, his illusion of stability is shaken as he begins to doubt his capacities as a thinker and as a husband to his volatile wife Rita. Lisa Hughes, cast as Rita, assumes the role of a lonely, sensual woman of substantial wealth who, although she provides Allmers financial stability, is actually an upsetting force to her husband's quiet, introverted world. Asta, played by Juliana Worsham, is Allmers' sympathetic half-sister who, because she processes the capacity for maternal empathy that Rita lacks, becomes a surrogate mother for their crippled child Little Eyolf portrayed by 12 year old Clifford Peale. Doug Massey, as Borheim, pursues Asta hoping to marry her but is kept from this because of her steadfast allegiance to her half brother and his son. The last role and perhaps one of the most haunting is that of the Rat Wife, played by Barbara Wood. The "shriveled," Pied Piper rider of Rats, is a folk figure type who is certainly symbolic of the guilt and hate the parents feel for the child and more generally, of the instinctual forces that cause the characters to change.

Now that the characters have been psychologically sketched and assembled in place, it only remains for you to take your place as an audience and watch them become undone. Dr. Paton Lockwood of the department describes the play as one that, "strips away the masks these people wear."

Blue And White Spirit Prevails

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Visitors, students, and staff enjoyed the festive air of Oktoberfest Weekend. Children of all ages smiled and laughed at the antics of the 21 crazy Klowns, played Midway games, and ate everything from hot dogs to cotton candy.

The day was filled with exciting events, such as the H20 Shows, a hockey game, puppet shows, music and color rush. Even Count Dracula made an appearance on the Midway.

One of the most popular Midway events was the "Dunking Booth", where members of the staff and student volunteers were periodically immersed in water by zealous softball throwers. This activity provided a marvelous opportunity for students to take out hostilities on their teachers or get back at one of their friends. Those persons sitting precariously over the water certainly did their best to provoke the throwers, suggesting that they get glasses or putting down their athletic abilities. Most of the throwers were able to make them swallow their words, or at least a mouthful of water.

Some other Midway games tested basketball and golf skills.

Of course, if one wished to take a break from the Midway, he could always refresh himself in the Beer Garden. No one had to ask where it was located, they just followed the steady stream of beer lovers up to the Dining Hall roof.

Spirits ran high as the Reds, Greens, and Blues competed in a variety of events at Color Rush. Such antics as the Klowns trotting and skipping around the field in the relay kept the tension of rivalry from getting too intense. But still all the teams energetically passed mattresses over their heads, threw water balloons, ran on "three legs" and sorted shoes. Everyone participating had a good time.

Oktoberfest night closed with the Alumni Chi Walk and everyone's favorite occupation, eating the immense clown cake.

As long as Oktoberfest remains a part of Longwood, spirit and friendly competition will prevail, providing an entirely unique atmosphere to the college campus.

Skits Climax Weekend

By LISA CUMBEY

After an exhausting day of competing in the Color Competition, watching the water shows and hockey game, shopping and playing games at booths, listening to the band concert and just mingling in a crowd estimated at 4,000 people and joining in the other festivities of Oktoberfest, hundreds of people packed Jarman Hall to view the Red and Green skits Saturday night. In the skits, the scripts, songs, music, sets, costumes — everything is created by the students participating. The skits are also the last phase in the Color Competition.

EST 1977

Debbie, Jo, And Dave

Send in the Klowns! And that they did to open the show. The Klowns did stunts and just plain acted crazy to get laughs from the audience. Linda Crovatt, Klown Advisor as a member of Geist, was herded to the stage and given a gift for giving such great moral support to the Klowns in those long nights of practice and throughout Oktoberfest, and for being "one hell of a girl."

The ushers and usherettes welcomed the audience and put everyone in a German spirit by doing a German dance. From some of the steps executed in the dance, I gathered that these people must be very coordinated.

The Green and White skit was performed first. It was about life, and which road in life you (Self) would take: good or evil. Some of the evils portrayed in the skit, such as Vanity, Hatred, Snobbishness, Jealousy and others were reflected in Self. But Innocence, represented by sparkling children, was also a part of Self. Parts of the skit were humorous (Twofaced Linda Paschall's "OH GROSS!"), but most of the skit was very deep and moralistic. Self eventually cast aside Temptation and joined Innocent. Which path would you have taken?

The Klowns came on again, after playing games with the children in the audience. (I overheard one Klown asking a little boy, "Do you remember where you were sitting?") They did stunts such as dive rolls over five people, cartwheels, back flips, etc. Then came the big moment: Squash. Squash is the 21 klown pyramid. With Linda Crovatt kneeling on stage in front of them, talking them through it, they attempted this great feat, but failed on the first try. One of the klowns shouted, "Let's hold it for the cameras!" and they tried again and almost made it, but not quite. On the third try, they did it — that 21 klown pyramid was up!

After the Klowns finished jumping around congratulating each other came the Red and White skit. Theirs was a very touching story of a "thirteen year old woman" trying to decide where she belonged; outside romping around on the baseball field and eating ice cream with the other kids or reading etiquette books and improving her posture. Nelly, portrayed by Gay Kampfmuehler, finally decided with a little persuasion from Polly (Susan White) and a fantastical trip to a place that was much like a picture she had painted "a long time ago, when she was a child," where there were children playing games, to not try to give up youth too soon, to take one day at a time.

Tension was rising as the audience waited for the judges to tally the scores and announce the winner. Since all of the other competitions of the day had tallied to a 32½-32½ tie, the winner of the skits would decide the over-all winner of the festival. The Red and Whites won the skits with 95½ points, causing utter pandemonium from the Senior and Sophomore classes.

Following the skits was the annual alumni Chi walk and the cutting of the Oktoberfest cake (which weighed somewhere around 400 pounds). This ended the events of the day and the Oktoberfest week end. Everyone retired exhausted and drained, but elated with the fact that Oktoberfest der Geist was again a success.

Hockey Team Takes 3 Games, Drops One

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Longwood hockey team traveled to compete against rivals William and Mary October 4. The varsity team was down at the half 2-0. Even after Terry Voit and Juli Dayton each scored a goal, they fell 5-2.

The JV team also was behind at the half, but they scored three goals in the second half to end the game in a 3-3 tie. Scoring for the Longwood JV was Suzanne Ash with two and Debi Kinzel with one.

October 6 the team hosted Westhampton. Longwood held a 2-0 lead at half with goals by Terry Voit and Carol Filo. Voit scored again early in the second half. Unfortunately L.C. failed to keep up their momentum, allowing Westhampton to score three quick goals.

The game officials awarded a playoff on penalty corners, where each team would have three corners in which to try to score. Terry Donahue scored a goal on Longwood's first corner. Westhampton was unable to score due to Longwood's fine defensive play. Therefore Longwood took a 4-3 victory.

The JV defeated Westhampton by a score of 2-0. Debi Kinzel and Suzanne Ash each popped in a goal.

Longwood took double victories over Lynchburg. Terry Voit scored both goals in the 2-0 win for the varsity, while Jackie Steer scored one goal and Debi Kinzel scored two in the 3-1 JV win.

During Oktoberfest, Longwood defeated the Virginia Beach Club 2-0 before a large crowd of spectators. Terry Voit and Juli Dayton each popped in a goal. The Beach Club graciously agreed to play a 20 minute game with the JV team, which ended in a scoreless tie.

The Varsity now stands at 6-2 and the JV at 4-1.

Today both teams will travel to take on Virginia Commonwealth University. Thursday they go away to Old Dominion University. Saturday a small tournament will be held at home with the Richmond Club and University of North Carolina — Greensboro.

Men's Golf Gets Varsity Status

The Intercollegiate Athletic Council of Longwood College awarded varsity status today to the men's golf team.

The new intercollegiate team, which was classified as an interest group last year, will be coached by Dick Williamson.

Williamson has already scheduled six matches for the spring. On its nine-hole course at Longwood Estates, the team will host matches with Averett, Mary Washington, North Carolina Wesleyan, and Hampden-Sydney. The Longwood team will travel to compete with Greensboro College, UNC-Greensboro, and Virginia Wesleyan.

A coeducational institution since June, 1976, Longwood College is presently fielding men's soccer and basketball teams in addition to the new men's golf team scheduled to compete this spring.

Volleyball Wins Home

Match Over Hollins

The Longwood College women's volleyball team claimed an important victory at home Wednesday, October 5, against Hollins College. After losing to Hollins in the first game by a score of 15-10, the Longwood team won the match by taking the next three games 15-9, 15-8, 15-9.

Playing before a capacity crowd in Iler gym, Longwood took the lead early in the first game with individual players Debbie Brown and Meg Cook spiking well. However, better teamwork benefitted Hollins as they captured the lead and won by five points.

The turning point in the match came in the second game as Longwood began its comeback. Holding its own early in the game, the home team steadily worked up to lead by as much as seven points, and Cook blasted two spikes for the winning points.

Good net play paid off for Longwood during the third game with Teri Dunnivant substituting for injured spiker Debbie Brown. Brown was able to return to play later in the game. The score remained close until Longwood pulled ahead to lead 10-8. The LC defense held Hollins for the rest of the game, and the offense chalked up five more points. Terry Johnson scoring the winning point on a dramatic put-away.

Hollins took the lead in the fourth game, but on Brown's serves the Longwood team worked up to a 6-6 tie. Longwood commanded the lead for the rest of the game, executing solid defense against Hollins' attempts to come back. Cook's on-the-line serve ended the game at 15-9 and won the match for Longwood.

The victory brought Longwood's record to 5-3. Coach Carolyn Price and her team travel to VCU to compete against George Mason University and Virginia Tech on October 18.

Golf Team First In Tournament

Longwood College placed first in the Virginia Federation of Intercollegiate Sports for Women Golf Tournament held at Spotswood Country Club in Harrisonburg October 14-16. As 1977 V.F.I.S.W. champions, the Longwood golfers hold a title they have claimed five times since the first tournament was held in 1970.

Leading by thirteen strokes after Saturday's first round, Longwood was declared the winner when a snowstorm prevented completion of the second round on Sunday. V.F.I.S.W. policies state that a tournament can be concluded after eighteen holes in the event of bad weather.

Longwood's team total for the eighteen holes was 353. James Madison University was runner-up in the tournament with a score of 366.

Low medalist in the tournament was Longwood's Deanna Vanwey, who shot an 84.

Soccer Loses Two Matches, Beats Mary Washington

By Margaret Hammersley

On the road last Saturday at Lynchburg College, a crippled soccer team struggled against the JV Hornets, losing 1-5. Absent from the starting line were Kevin Bedworth and Jack Thomas, out on leg and knee injuries. Two reserve fullbacks, Sherif Benshai and T. C. Jones, started on either side of Dunn, who was "playing half speed at best" due to an ankle injury. On the forward line, Mark Conte at left outside was suffering a bruised thigh.

Coach Williamson cited one problem as having "not enough people skilled in two or three positions," yet commended the men on their efforts. During the game's first half, the halves and fulls were "not getting the ball to the offensive people." Yet during the second half, the ball was in position, but the offense was not downfield quickly enough.

Williamson added that "Lynchburg's offense overloaded us," with eight men forward.

Dominating the play, Lynchburg allowed Longwood only two shots on goal, both taken in the second half. With 15:25 into the first half, Lynchburg's Taylor, assisted by Henry, scored the game's first goal. Assisted by Pelletier, Taylor again scored on a fantastically executed cross at the end of the half.

In the second half, after 3:30 off the clock a huddle of reds and blues formed before the Longwood goal. Among locking cleats, Forrester slipped the ball in for Lynchburg's third goal.

On an assist by Forrester, Taylor scored his third and Lynchburg's fourth goal. As Goalie Link attempted to slap the ball out of the goal, he and Taylor collided in the air, and the ball bounced in.

Working the right side of the field, wing Komornik scored Longwood's one goal on an assist from Hunt on the outside. The goal was timed at seven minutes into the half.

The final goal, at 12:10, was scored by Lynchburg's Pelletier, assisted by Forrester.

Tomorrow the team travels to once again face Mary Washington. The next home match is slated for Friday, November 4, when Longwood hosts Lynchburg's JV team.

In a home match on October 3,

Longwood fell to Averett College, 1-5. In his first goal of the season, Mark Conte scored late in the second half on an assist by Hunt.

Longwood's first victory of the season came October 6 in a home match against Mary Washington with a score of 5-2. The passing forward line scored four goals in the first half. Conte, Komornik and Gilleland all scored on assists from Hunt. Komornik scored again unassisted. Mary Washington's two goals, one unassisted, were scored during the first half.

Longwood's final goal in the second half was scored on a spectacular play by Hunt. All alone running down the right side of the field, Hunt rushed the goalie and scored, ending the match 5-2.

On Thursday September 29, Longwood lost its match to Liberty Baptist on their home field. Coach Williamson has recently been informed that Liberty Baptist had been playing an illegitimate member. Through forfeit, our 1-8 loss is now recorded as a win. The soccer team's record now stands at 2-2-1.

Baseball's Heroes Of Yesteryears

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

With the ending of the 1977 World Series last week in which the New York Yankees took the title, it is interesting to look back at some of the past heroes in the game. Names that come immediately to mind are Ty Cobb, Babe Ruth, Walter Johnson, Mickey Mantle and Hank Aaron.

Outfielder Tyrus Raymond Cobb played his final game 49 years ago. He was one of baseball's first superstars. His record of 4,191 hits still stands. The closest contender, Stan Musial, falls 561 short. During Cobb's career, he stole a total of 892 bases.

When the first nominees to the National Baseball Hall of Fame were voted upon in 1936, Cobb received the most votes, topping such stars as Babe Ruth and Walter Johnson, to become one of the first five players to be enshrined.

Except for a couple of seasons with Philadelphia, Cobb played for the Detroit Tigers. He was only in three World Series, in which the Tigers dropped all three decisions.

The noted fast ball pitcher Walter Johnson played ball for the Washington Senators. According to Sports Illustrated, before going to a World Series he "made 626 major league appearances and won 376 decisions in 18 years." Johnson played in only two Series — the first, a title clincher over the Giants in which he had a 1-2 win-loss pitching record.

In his career, he had 416 victories and is second only to Cy Young with 511. He also holds the record of 3,503 shut outs.

After Johnson retired from play, he managed the Washington and Cleveland ball clubs. He also was one of the first five players named to the Hall of Fame.

Babe Ruth might not have been able to remember names, to him everyone over 40 was Doc and under 40 "Keed," but he was definitely one of the all time best ball players in history.

During his career, he played in 10 World Series — only surpassed by Yogi Berra with 14. His Series batting average was .342.

His first three Series came with the Boston Red Sox as a pitcher. He began his career with the Baltimore Orioles in 1914 when it was still a minor league team. In 1920 he went to the Yankees. His career ended in 1935 with the Boston Braves.

No one has broken his record of three homers in a single game, although Yankee outfielder Reggie Jackson tied this record in the last game of the 1977 World Series.

Ruth was one of the original five Hall of Famers.

Mickey Mantle played in the first World Series game he ever saw. In 1951 he started in right field for the Yankees and scored the first of his 42 Series runs in the second game.

Unfortunately he did not finish out his first Series. Mantle was hurt after falling over an underground sprinkler and damaging his knee.

After playing in 11 more World

Series, Mantle amassed the following records: 18 home runs, 42 runs scored, 40 runs batted in, 123 total bases, 43 walks, and 54 strikeouts.

Mantle played center field for the Yankees from 1951-1968. In 1974 he was voted into the Hall of Fame.

Henry Aaron was another great outfielder, playing for the Milwaukee (Atlanta) Braves from 1954-74 and the Milwaukee Brewers from 1974-76.

His first World Series was against the Yankees in 1957 in which he totaled three homers. The next year, again against the Yankees, he had a .333 batting average. In his career, Aaron is only behind Pepper Martin and Lou Brock as a World Series hitter.

Aaron broke Babe Ruth's home run record April 8, 1974 by slamming his 715th homer.

Throughout the years, baseball fans have seen many marvelous players. These great players will always be remembered, even though their records may one day be surpassed by future baseball heroes.

Tennis Team To Play William And Mary Today

The Longwood tennis team fell to Mary Baldwin on October 4, 2-7 in an away match. Coach Phyllis Harriss commented, "The score was not indicative of the play. It was an excellent match."

At home, L.C. topped VCU October 6, 7-2. Gwen Koehlein, Margie Quarles, Nancy Leidenheimer, Angie Gerst, and Judy Fayne each took their singles matches, while Teresa McLawhorn and Nancy Leidenheimer and Jill Bacchieri-Diane Nash won their doubles matches.

October 19, Longwood traveled to Sweet Briar where they took a narrow 5-4 victory. Coach Harriss said neither team was playing particularly well, but the matches were close.

Presently, Longwood tennis team stands at a 5-4 record. Coach Harriss is predicting a winning season if they can win their last few matches.

Tomorrow the team will play William and Mary at home at 2:00 p.m. Friday they will host their first match with an out of state team, UNC-Greensboro. The match is scheduled for 2:00 p.m.

Golf Team

Becky Webb of Longwood was runner-up with an 88, and teammate Janet Clements placed third with an 89. L.C. golfer Penny Stephens shot a 101 to win the second flight.

JMU's Brenda Baker shot an 83 in Friday's competition to win individual championship. She finished two strokes ahead of William & Mary's Tracy Lainbach and Longwood's Becky Webb and Deanna Vanwey.

The Longwood team has an overall record of 6-2-1 this season. The team traveled to Winton Country Club October 20 for a match with Sweet Briar and will close out its fall season by participating in the UNC Invitational October 23-25 and in the Duke Better Ball Tournament November 1.

Will The Real "Woody" Please Stand Up

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Did you happen to catch that sign with a blue woodpecker on it declaring the fighting Woodies, that was in the Dining Hall a few weeks ago?

There seems to be mystery over who derived this possible new nickname for Longwood and we made the sign. No one rumored to have been the inventor of the "Woodies" will admit they had anything to do with it.

Several Faculty members commented that they saw Dr. Bill McAdams, a member of the Physical Education Department, bring copies of the "Woody" sign to a faculty meeting a few weeks ago. Coach Dick Williamson, Mr. Tom Steinocher, and Dr. Judy Johnson all verified the fact that McAdams brought the signs into the meeting.

Dr. Johnson claims that she was given the designs by McAdams for submission to the nickname committee, but is uncertain where he obtained the name.

When questioned, McAdams replied that he denied wanting the Woodies as a college nickname or having anything to do with the sign.

McAdams said his suggestions were the Saints, Cardinals, and Lions. He also said that he had received a memorandum asking him to rank some proposed suggestions in order of his preference or submit his own.

McAdams stated that a contest, sponsored by the media should be held to select a nickname, involving the students, alumni, and community. He feels a symbol should be originated to promote school spirit and to be used on fund raising projects.

Another "Woody" suspect, Mr. George Bristol, Director of the Longwood Foundation, also denied having thought up the name, although he says he likes it. He feels the negative feelings expressed by the students for the name "stimulates interest" and will get the students involved with having a nickname chosen. Bristol added that if people do not like the Woodpecker symbol, it could be changed to something like a woodsman.

A finger was also pointed at Registrar, Colonel Ray Gilchrist. He claimed not to know where the nickname originated, but that he had heard it brought up before. Gilchrist believes the nickname to be a "good one". He also has no idea who did the "Woody" poster, and says that it is a "big mystery".

At the time, an Ad Hoc Committee of the Intercollegiate Athletic Committee is considering a list of names submitted by students, alumni, and faculty. The Committee members are Dr. Carolyn Wells, Mr. Michael Barree, Mr. Emerie Noone, Jr., Dr. Shirley O'Neil, and student Dee Donnelly.

According to Dr. O'Neil, the Ad Hoc Committee will present a list of choices to the Intercollegiate Athletic Council, who in turn will send them to the Board of Visitors for selection of a school nickname.

Dean Wells stated that the list includes the suggestions voted upon last year from the student body. She added that the Committee must present the selections to the Board

November 4. The Board will decide on the college nickname.

Dr. T. C. Dalton says the four nicknames which have been brought up will be taken to the coaches for review and that a visual for each will be drawn up. The I.A.C. will meet November 2.

Dr. O'Neil felt that the "Woody" sign was just a move by Woody partisans to see the student reaction.

The names being considered are the Lions, Blue Jays, Blue Jackets, and the Fighting Woodies according to a Committee member.

It seems that no one wants to own up to originating the nickname "Woodies", which has just come into contention this year, nor seem to be sure who came up with the name.

Pecker Power ?

At the moment, no one wants to take credit for the origination of "The Fighting Woodies" as our mascot. I can't blame them. Longwood needs a mascot, but does Longwood need, much less deserve, the Woodies?

It would seem that with such a name tacked on to our athletics, we would be subject to a bit of ridicule. The most obvious ridicule, which would take only a short time to develop, would be the replacement of the Woodies with the Peckers.

What a heyday other college newspapers would have with a name like the Woodies: "Peckers Splintered By. . .," "W oodies Pecked Down One By One," "Woodies' Feathers Ruffled." And on the sidelines its, "Angered Pecker Coach Flies the Coop!"

After hockey games will the opponents huddle and chant "Thank you Longwood" — or will they huddle and chant "Ha! Ha! Ha! Ha! Ha!"

As the deadline nears, will we be doomed as "the fighting woodies"? . . . How does that cheer go, "Rah! Rah! Rah! Peck 'em in the knee. . . ."

Joan Speaks Out

On Woodpeckers

Dear Editor, Faculty, Students and Staff,

I have been here a long time . . . I have seen Longwood make many changes and have stood by without murmuring a word. I have borne many indignities — been rolled, turned, and been "ridden on a pony." Have I complained?

Now, I realize the school needs a nickname, like other colleges. The students last year came up with a few reasonable choices, but not everyone could agree on a name, so the issue was not settled.

But now one man has come onto the campus and without even asking me or the student body, has chosen a nickname for the college — the Woodies.

Well now I think it is time I spoke up! I have stood for the spirit and love of Longwood too long to be disregarded entirely as a patron — and replaced by a BIRD. Really — tell me truly — Would you like to see me replaced by a statue of a woodpecker to greet visitors to the Rotunda?

With All My Love,
Joan of Arc, "Joanie"

Slater Food

Complaint

Dear Editor,

Concerning the Slater Food Service, we are sick of finding hair within the food itself. Contrary to Mr. Klassan's belief, however, until the student actually registers his or her opinion by voting," he said.

"We believe that just about every student who does vote will vote in favor of these five bond proposals. Our task, then, is to turn out this vote," Mahan said. Since most students will vote by difficulties in institutional food preparation, however; when a minority of the students find this occurring at least once a week, we feel it must be brought to the attention of the Student body.

This problem has already been brought to Mr. Klassan's attention who seemed not to care and shrugged us off. If the head of the food service will not make any effort to better this situation, then who will look out for all the students' health. We would like to suggest the following:

1. The waitresses could wear their hair off their shoulders and away from their faces.
2. Hairnets should be worn by

ALL Slater employees.

We urge the students to alert Mr. Klassan if any similar problems arise at their tables so that this problem can be extinguished.

Sincerely,

Those who are concerned with what goes into their food.

Absentee Ballot

Voting Week

The week of October 24-28 has been designated "Absentee Ballot Voting Week" on Virginia's 48 public college campuses by Students for Bonds, a statewide student organization promoting passage of the proposed $125 million bond referendum on November 8.

Over 200 student volunteers will take part in activities which, according to state co-chairmen Ken Geroe and Steve Mahan, are the culmination of a three-step process begun last June. "To date, our activities in this campaign have been to inform students of the importance of the passage of this referendum and of the importance of registering to vote," Geroe said. "None of this work becomes meaningful, however, until the student actually registers his or her opinion by voting," he said.

"We believe that just about every student who does vote will vote in favor of these five bond proposals. Our task, then, is to turn out this vote," Mahan said. Since most students will vote by absentee ballot, "we are giving special emphasis to this area of the campaign in order to make the absentee ballot voting process as easy as possible for all involved," he added.

Activities during the week will include notices in the college media regarding procedures for absentee voting, posters and flyers publicizing these procedures, rallies, tables and booths around the campus, and a special activity to "celebrate" the end of the week's activities on the 28th.

"We are very proud of the way students all across the Commonwealth have devoted their energy, talent and enthusiasm to insure the successful outcome of this referendum," Mahan and Geroe stated, adding, "If we can continue to get our message across we feel confident that Virginians of all backgrounds will join with these young people in registering their approval of these bonds at the polls on November 8."

WHY IS SIGLINDA STEINFÜLLER DEAN OF BEER?

WHY NOT?

Fellow Beer Persons,

Life is full of unanswered questions such as: Is there intelligent life elsewhere in the universe? And if so, do they wear socks?

In beer, however, there are no unanswered questions. Because there is only one word for beer, and you know it.

Schlitz.

Therefore, as your Dean of Beer, I suggest you research the essential rightness of the word for yourself at your next social function. Or even your next antisocial function.

And please note: The recommended source material for locating the word can be found in any phone booth. In other words, look in the Yellow Pages. Under "Beer."

Thank you.

THERE'S JUST ONE WORD FOR BEER.  AND YOU KNOW IT.

Kenneth Winebrenner Brings Glass Staining To Longwood

By LISA CUMBEY

Do you think of stained glass windows as being used primarily in churches? If so, you should become aware of the fact that glass staining is a prominent art form these days, and is becoming more and more popular in the modern world. It is a rapidly growing hobby among crafts enthusiasts. True, its origins began with church windows and other religious productions — the earliest known being the Wissembourg Disk with the head of Christ, in the late eleventh Century. But now, more and more modern homes are including stained glass windows in the initial interior plan, and many restaurants, cafes, and the like feature stained glass windows. Greater numbers of people are anxious to learn this craft than ever, but teachers are short in supply.

The intriguing art of glass staining will be explained and executed here at Longwood on Wednesday, November 2, by designer and craftsman Kenneth Winebrenner. There will be a lecture-demonstration at 7:15 p. m. at Bedford Auditorium, in which Winebrenner will discuss the history of stained glass from its mysterious origins to contemporary applications in Virginia. Also, a workshop will be held on the same day from 9 a. m. to 3 p. m., where he will give a slide-lecture presentation and demonstration, and participants in the workshop will create stained glass objects.

Winebrenner is currently living in Richmond, where he, along with artist Lester VanWinkle, has a studio which makes objects in glass, wood, and metal for use in home and business interiors. One of these artists' most recent major creations was a 16-foot wide archway, combining wood, metal, and glass, for The Strawberry Street Cafe in Richmond.

Glass staining is an art that, with practice and skill, anyone can master. It is simple and intriguing. If you are one of those people who complain, "I'm just not artistic," then this just may be the art for you.

Kenneth Winebrenner works on his stained glass design.

Gym Plans Displayed And Questions Answered At Press Conference

By CERESA HANEY

A very informative press conference was held in the Gold Room on October 27. Discussion of the installment of intercampus telephones was at the top of the agenda. These phones are to be used, free of charge, when calling from one place on campus to another. It was mentioned that a phone should be placed outside the campus police office and one will be placed in the cabin. Installation of the intercampus phones should be completed by November 7.

Another topic of discussion was the instituting of an investigative committee. This committee, made up of eight members and a chairman, would investigate alleged violations for either the judicial or legislative board. Two members will investigate an alleged violation and report to the committee as a whole. The committee will then review the facts and determine if there is enough evidence to warrant a trial. Two members from each class will be elected to the committee and the chairman will be elected by the whole school. The matter of a college nickname was also discussed. President Willett stated that the I.A.C. will consider ten recommended names including Lions, Lancers, Virginians, Crusaders, Blue Jays, Saints, Blue Jackets, Cardinals, and the Fighting Woodies. This list will be narrowed to three names which will be presented to the Board of Visitors for a final vote.

One of the most important items discussed at the press conference was the plans for the new gymnasium and physical education building. President Willett explained that the latest plans represented a number of revisions from the original plans. The major changes were in the dressing rooms, the main gym, and the auxiliary gym. The male and female dressing rooms will both be accessible to the training room and there will be dressing rooms for visiting teams. Also, the seating capacity of the main gym has been increased to hold 3,200 spectators. And the smaller auxiliary gym has been doubled in size and now will have a full-height ceiling, compared with earlier plans for a 10-or 12-foot high ceiling.

The new building will also contain an "olympic-sized" swimming pool with six 25 meter lanes. The pool area will have a seating capacity for 500 persons. The building will also contain classrooms, ticket areas, concession stands, twenty-two faculty offices, and possibly seminar rooms or a professional library.

A student raised the question as to whether the entire $4.5 million for the new building would be covered by the bond referendum. President Willett stated that it will cover all but approximately $1 million. He quickly stated that the state will probably cover half of the remaining sum and the college will only have to pay the other half million dollars.

Another question raised in regard to the new building concerned the availability of parking space. President Willett explained that the plans include a parking area. He also stated that the campus school parking area could be used, and that the expansion of the Wygal and Lankford parking areas is being considered.

If the bond referendum is passed, construction of the proposed Building will begin in March and the building should be completed within two years.

Fall Concert Features Music Of Benjamin Britten

By PAULA JOHNSON

The Department of Music will present its fall concert, "In Memoriam: Benjamin Britten," on Sunday afternoon, November 6, at 4:00 p. m. in the Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Building.

Benjamin Britten was born in 1913 and died December 4, 1976. Throughout his career, Britten performed extensively as a solo pianist, accompanist, and conductor. He is most famous for his contributions as a composer.

He published his first compositions at the age of 21 years, even though he had been composing since the age of 8 years. His first recognition as a composer came when he was 30 years old with his Fantasy Quartet for the oboe and strings. International fame came to him with his Variations and Theme of

Frank Bridge. Britten is a unique choral music composer. His most frequently performed short piece is "A Hymn To The Virgin." His most performed piece is "A Ceremony of Carols."

Britten's style of music was somewhat eclectic: melodic interest is sustained, rhythmic line is clearly identified, recurring characteristics are ground bass and variation techniques. In his choral music dramatic lyric expression is always present.

The music presented in the concert Sunday will feature "Fanfare for St. Edmundsbury," a trumpet trio, "Rejoice in the Lamb," sung by the Camarata Singers, "Folksong Settings from the British Isles," featuring various music students, and "Psalms 150," Norma Williams and Barbara Berdick will perform solos, and the Camarata Singers will backup Miss Williams. The Concert Choir will perform as well as the J. P. Wynne Campus School Chorus, directed by Mrs. Cathy McCanless.

The concert will be presented to the public at no charge. All are invited to attend.

Dr. May Interested In Topology

By LORI DAVIS

"Longwood has been the friendly, small atmosphere I anticipated." These are the words of a new addition to the Math Department here on campus. Dr. Robert May is from Chattanooga, Tennessee. He graduated from Swarthmore College in Pennsylvania and received his Ph. D. from Harvard. He taught at the University of Utah for 2 years. Last year he taught at the University of Tennessee.

At Longwood he's teaching Algebra and Trigonometry, Calculus, and for the first time, Consumer Math.

His main interest in his field is topology, which is a branch of Geometry. Dr. May plans to continue keeping up with the current research in this field of math and do some research himself.

He is a member of the American Mathematical Association and the Mathematical Association of America.

He comments, "I think the faculty and the programs in the math department are well-designed to provide a good background in applied mathematics, which includes the new computer program and also, in abstract math."

Rush Gives Students

Chance To Meet Greeks

By VALERIE L. GEHRINGER

Rush is designed to give girls an opportunity to meet the Greeks on Longwood campus, and to become a member of the sorority of their choice.

This year's rush begins Nov. 7 and extends to Nov. 20. Sign up for Rush is November 7 thru November 8 in the New Smoker. A $3.00 rush fee and a picture of yourself are required. Then first round parties begin November 9 and November 10. These give each girl a chance to become acquainted with all 11 sororities.

Following first round parties, on the 15 and 16, each sorority holds skit parties. Each girl is to choose the seven sororities of her choice and attend their skits.

On Friday, the 18, Theme Parties are given. These are invitational parties and each girl may accept only 3 invitations from three sororities.

Saturday morning, November

19, inspirational are held. These are also invitational, and each girl accepts only two sorority's invitations. Saturday afternoon, Nov. 19, each girl signs preferentials. She chooses, in order, the three sororities she would most like to join.

On Nov. 20, girls pick up their bids and WALK is held that night. At WALK, behind Lankford, each girl walks to the sorority of her choice.

Rush is the time of year when sororities open their memberships to new people. Each and everyone is urged and most welcome to participate.

Eleven Panhellenic delegates will be available to answer any questions anyone may have beginning Monday, October 24. The delegates will be wearing navy blue ribbons with "Panhell" inscribed on them in white print for easy recognition.

Student Grade Appeal Established

The faculty of Longwood College is unequivocally committed to the principle that the evaluation of student work and the assignment of grades is a responsibility and a prerogative to be exercised solely by the individual instructor. (Much misunderstanding and confusion on the part of students could be obviated, should the faculty follow the already approved procedure as outlined in section 6.2.G.1. a. of the Faculty Handbook.)

Should, however, a student feel that the final course grade which he has received was unfairly or inaccurately awarded, he should see the instructor involved, so that the instructor may explain to him why the grade was assigned as it was.

If the student continues to feel that the grade is unfair, he may submit an appeal in writing to the department chairman (a copy of which shall go to the faculty member involved), giving the reasons for his belief that the grade should be changed, with supporting evidence. For grades awarded in the fall semester, the written appeal must be submitted no later than February 1; for grades awarded in the spring semester and in summer school, the appeal must be filed no later than September 15. Appeals filed after these deadlines will not be considered.

Unless the department chairman finds the appeal patently without merit, he shall hold a joint consultation with the student and the faculty member awarding the grade. If the matter cannot be resolved, the chairman shall so advise the Academic Dean of the college, who shall then hold a conference with the student, the faculty member awarding the grade, and the department chairman.

Should this conference fail to resolve the situation, the Academic Dean shall appoint a committee of three faculty members in the same, or related, discipline(s) on which the grade appeal is based, to review all matters pertinent to the appeal. The committee shall report its findings and make its recommendation to the Dean. The Dean shall then make the final decision regarding the appeal, and so advise the student, the faculty member involved, and the department chairman.

Scholars Program Receives $40,000

The Longwood College Scholars Program has received a $40,000 endowment pledge from Franklin Federal Savings and Loan Association of Richmond.

The $40,000 pledge, $10,000 of which has already been received to initiate the program, will fund indefinitely four scholarships for exceptionally capable students. The scholarships, to be awarded each spring, are in the amount of $2,500 each, to be used over a three or four year period.

Longwood Scholars are selected after intense screening of applicants. Those selected are required to maintain a 3.5 quality point average to retain the Scholar status.

Franklin Federal's president, James B. Bourne, Jr., stated that funds for scholarships based on ability, not on need, are extremely short in most colleges and universities.

"For this reason," he said, "Franklin Federal wishes to make its contribution to the student who has outstanding academic ability, regardless of his or her financial need."

Bourne currently serves as president of the Longwood College Foundation, Inc., a non-profit organization established for the purpose of securing private support for the college. He is also a member of the newly-formed Parents Advisory Council at Longwood.

Bourne's daughter, Ruth, graduated from Longwood in 1977, and his son, Bryant is a sophomore at the college.

Charlie Brown fans finally saw him as a winner on the television show It's Your First Kiss Charlie Brown on October 24.

Longwood students monopolized the TV rooms across campus for the event they have been waiting for ever since Charlie Brown first fell in love—him kissing the Little Red Headed Girl.

The eight students huddled comfortably in French Parlor were snacking on popcorn, and knitting needles stood ready, as they waited for the show to start.

Judi Stanley remarked, "I like Snoopy and Woodstock best." Alice Tucker feels that the Snoopy cartoon is a "cartoon everyone can enjoy."

Many TVs in dorm rooms were tuned in for this special CBS presentation. Berkley Harland, seated in her bed remarked about Charlie Brown's first kiss, "I think it is definitely a progression."

Charlie Brown started out in his typical loser style. He was sent into the Homecoming football game with his team behind by one point to attempt the winning field goal from the five yard line. If he made the field goal he would be the hero and the Little Red Headed Girl would think more favorable of him. Well, guess who is holding the ball for him. You guessed it...his nemesis Lucy, who pulled her usual trick of taking the ball away as he went to kick it. Thus Charlie Brown was ridiculed unjustly by his fellow teammates.

After Lucy pulled her sneaky stunt, Katie Trainor, one of the eight people in Curry's TV room shouted, "I don't like this cartoon... It's unfair!"

There was still one highlight left for Charlie Brown—escourting the Little Red Headed Girl to the Homecoming Dance and kissing her. But even this blissful thought was ruined for him by the jibes of the girls, who said his date would not want to be escorted by a failure. Ronnie Kirtz, another student in Curry stated that the scene "just shows how mean little kids are".

All hostilities were momentarily dispelled as the Longwood audience laughed at Snoopy piloting Woodstock through the air, with his ears going around like helicopter blades.

That night, Charlie Brown, with knocking knees and a flushed face, finally had his moment in the sun when he kissed his idol. The students offered loud applause at his feat.

The mood changed again as Charlie Brown woke up as from a dream, thinking his adventures were all done in his sleep.

"What a bummer," roared one of the students. With a groan Cindy Smith asked, "Was it really a DREAM?"

Linus saved Charlie Brown's day, and the L.C. students' sanity, by affirming that Charlie Brown did indeed kiss the Homecoming Queen. In fact, he was a big hit at the dance, doing the "hustle, bump, and chicken" with all the girls. No wonder Charlie Brown thought he was dreaming.

So, in the end, Charlie Brown as at last proclaimed a hero and finally attained one of his highest dreams. Katie Trainor remarked at the end of the show, "It's about time he came out on top."

Snoopy: One Man's Best Friend

He is "lost" without his contact lenses, "sleeps poorly" without a nightlight, and keeps his paws crossed "to ward off vampires"—and cats, which really scare him more. He gets tied in knots when he attempts to jump rope. Stage-frightened, he once made his understudy take over in an ice-skating competition at the last minute. And, although his recurring illusions of greatness rarely allow him to admit it, he deserves his reputation for helping his team lose baseball games by the score. But there is one field in which Snoopy, the canine cut-up of Charles M. Schulz's Peanuts clan, wins over all the "person Peanuts."

According to his creator, Schulz, "Snoopy is the easiest character to draw and possibly the most fun."

The bumbling beagle title star of "Snoopy, Come Home," highly-acclaimed Charlie Brown movie special, to be rebroadcast Saturday, Nov. 5 (8:00-9:30 p.m., ET) on the CBS Television Network, has all the ingredients of a perfect Peanut—on the drawing board, that is.

"From the standpoint of an artist, a really good comic-strip character is not only fun to draw and inspiring to imagination, but is, by the very nature of its personality, a creator of its own situations" says Schulz.

"Snoopy is flexible, and it really doesn't matter much if the nose gets a little too long or short," continues the creator of the dogmatic dog. "He still retains his unmistakable identity."

"And Snoopy is full of ideas. He gets them so fast that I can hardly keep up with him."

Linus, the thumb-sucking philosopher of the famous little group, is another of Schulz's drawing-board favorites.

"I enjoy drawing his hair," says the artist-writer about the clans Peanut Plato, "especially when Lucy has shouted at him and it flies up straight, or when he gets those wild expressions. Linus gives me a lot of ideas."

There is only one drawing board troublemaker—the most well-known and well-meaning Peanut in the package, poor little Charlie Brown.

"Oddly enough, that little round head is a problem," confesses Charlie's creator. "As my hand goes 'round and 'round with the pen, it runs into the wet ink."

But it all evens out in a way because Charlie Brown doesn't wear contact lenses, sleeps fine without a nightlight and really doesn't worry about vampires—or cats.

Peanuts Adds Thanksgiving Flavor

The Peanuts add some rather unorthodox ingredients to America's oldest holiday before going "over the river and through the woods" to Charlie Brown's grandmother's condominium for a traditional celebration, on "A Charlie Brown Thanksgiving," Emmy Award-winning animated special to be rebroadcast Monday, Nov. 21 (8:00-8:30 p.m., ET) on the CBS Television Network.

The story, which is concocted around a rather novel Thanksgiving meal of popcorn, potato chips, jelly beans, buttered toast and ice cream served around a ping-pong table in Charlie Brown's backyard, starts when Peppermint Patty invites herself and assorted other little nuts to Charlie's place.

The big-hearted title star is too polite—or "wishy-washy" as they call him—to refuse her. So with his standby, Linus, the slightly questionable help of Snoopy, the Peanut beagle, and the dog's "secretary," a bird of a different feather named Woodstock, Charlie Brown devises the most novel Thanksgiving menu since 1621.

And not only do the Peanut guests have a happy, haphazard garden party of sorts, they also discover that the holiday is for thinking and thanking as well as for eating.

Open Mike Offers Talent

By CINDY CUMMINS

The quiet hum of conversation and smoke scented air seemed to indicate just another night at the snack bar; then came "Twinkie;" (her last name is Plant) and with a few short announcements and a brief introduction, the evening was transformed into something different; last Friday night was Open Mike night.

Denis Helms and Lester Cruise opened the night's entertainment with a little Firefall, both displaying a great deal of musical talent and versatility. Denis, who was lead singer showed an amazing adaptability to all types of music. Joined by Lester's harmony and guitar playing they made quite a successful team. Together they took us "...back to place that's far away..." with some Dave Mason, did some foot tapping, hand clapping Charlie Daniels, then moved on to "Dog Day Afternoon," the Eagle's, "Life in the Fast Lane" and finished with the slow Mississippi beat of "Black Water" by the Doobie Brothers.

Charlotte Williamson, the only female performer of the night, added an original touch by singing and playing on the guitar, several original pieces that she herself had written. When asked if an original piece of music is harder to perform before an audience than other music she said, "No...it's much easier because I know my stuff better...I'm more comfortable with it. Her motivation for writing she said was life experience—things she wants to share with others. Did she try to convey anything through her music? "Definitely, when I sing my own music...other music I sing mostly for enjoyment."

Dave Wilson, playing excellent guitar, began with a little Crosby, Stills and Nash. Obviously at ease before an audience, Dave's eye contact was almost as interesting to watch as his music was to listen to. Regarding the audience with the hint of a smile which seemed to say "enjoy me" Wilson continued with a song from E.L.P., "From the Beginning" and written from Neil Young's Harvest Album.

Craig White also singing and playing and playing the guitar, brought a change of pace by adding a pleasing country sound to the songs he played and sang. Picking up the beat with a Dylan tune that had running lyrics, it made one wonder if Craig had learned the art of singing without treating. He then did Roberta Flack's "Killing Me Softly" and a song by John Pryne. His guitar playing ability only enhanced his performance.

Hank Dahlman, a music major here at Longwood, proved himself accomplished both at playing the guitar and as a singer. He began with James Taylor's, "Fire and Rain," and then did Mike Murphy's, "Wildfire." The audience was lively when he did his version of "Dead Skunk in the Middle of the Road." Later, he and Charlotte Combined talents to do "Father and Son" by Cat Stevens. The question is now, "What mystery person in the audience did Hank dedicate 'The Wedding Song' to?"

The night entertainment closed on a high note when Norman Harris, Charlie Mason, Hank Dahlman and Dale Roller joined to play some Blue Grass music that brought instant audience participation. Looking around the room, I realized that the crowd had grown considerably—well, it's hard to keep a good thing quiet isn't it? As Dave Wilson had lyrically put it earlier: "...you see, it's all clear, you were meant to be here..." You were right Dave, it was an enjoyable evening.

Phys. Ed. Complex In Detail

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

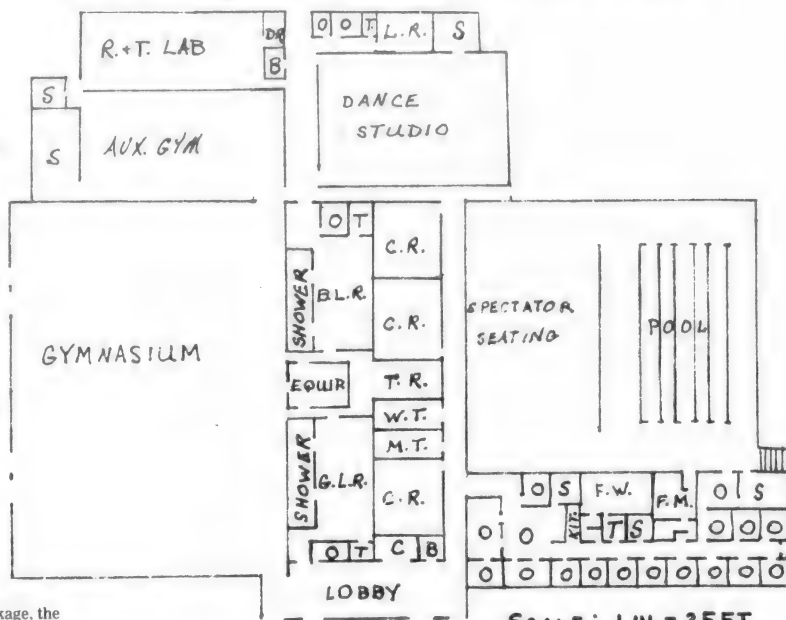

A new floor plan for the proposed Physical Education Building has been drawn up reflecting certain provisions for the handicapped and the changing orientation of Longwood as a co-educational institution. In lieu of these new demands, the original plans drawn up in the early 70's have become obsolete.

According to Dr. Peale, vice president for the administration, additions in the layout of the structure include a weight training room, expansion of the auxiliary gym, and additional seating capacity in the main gymnasium to seat 3,200 people. In speaking of the gym surface, Dr. Peale notes that the selection of flooring material will be chosen in anticipation of "various alternative activities" such as tennis, and concerts.

The pool, 25 meters long with 6 lanes, in Dr. Peale's opinion, "will be more than adequate." He feels that the 1/4 million dollars required to expand the facility by two additional lanes could be better used in the purchase of "more pressing equipment." The diving well is also "not capable" of state meets, he observed.

Designated as "site development", the project will also include five tennis courts adjacent to Her Building. They will be surfaced in materials similar to those used in Barlow Courts. Parking area for 110 cars will be constructed on campus. Dr. Peale stressed that the new building is an academic one, providing "general educational space" and is not a "fieldhouse." The four and one-half million dollars is anticipated from the

Should the bond pass as hoped, bidding will take place "very soon after Nov. 8th." Construction, which would take approximately two years under optimal circumstances, would begin March 1.

Dr. Peale concluded this interview by reminding students of the necessity of their support of the bond, "don't assume others will do your part for you."

On The Varied Life Forms At Longwood

By DAVE PHILLIPS

One of the purportedly unique things about college life is the varied number of different people one meets. Upon analysis of this hypothesis, however, I have discovered that the student body of Longwood College can be broken down into five or six distinct phyla. After weeks of research and study I shall now reveal my findings:

(1.) The high school student. This is one specie of student which seems to flourish on Longwood's campus. They can often be seen wandering aimlessly about salivating from the mouth. Upon reaching the vicinity of a CHI symbol they are overcome by a mindless passion to push some one into the center of it. The ramifications of this act are not yet fully understood but it is thought that it might be some type of foreplay to the mating ritual. This takes place every week end when the entire species migrates back to its old high school.

(2.) The would-be jock (joke). This is one of the more pathetic examples which exhibits itself on Longwoods campus. Not involved in any athletic activity whatsoever, the would-be jock is often seen cavorting around in a spotted and very chic warm-up suit. The reason for this seemingly natural affinity toward the warm-up suit remains uncovered despite intensive research still going on in the field.

(3.) The female day student. This specie is exceedingly rare but due to several fascinating aspects deserves a phylum of its own. The typical member is possessed of an outgoing personality, is very attractive and has the well known Farrah Fawcett ultra-bright smile. However, when called upon, she will often say "I already have a date for the week end" and "honest, I'm not lying! I always have dates five weeks in advance." I have asked for state funds with which to study this intriguing phenomenon more extensively.

(4.) The prep. We all know this one. Prepiness is a state of mind which induces very stringent standards of dress. Typical of the female are: topsiders, khakis, a thin plastic belt, the Izod rugby shirt and a sweater tied around the neck. For the male, attire remains basically the same except for the addition of a three-stripe two-tone belt. Males also, for some reason, tend to shun the sweater around the neck. Females are abundant here on campus but the male of the species tends to reside at Hampden-Sydney where the climate is more favorable to their proliferation.

(5.) The head. The head, despite his relatively oocuous behavior, remains one of the more harrassed specie here at Longwood. The head walks around in an almost continuous daze and suffers from the delusion that no one else can smell his pot. Suiemates have been known to complain that their toilet has "been turned into a giant bong" but other than that their suiemates are "entirely sociable when able to speak."

Due to the printing deadline this is all I've been able to compile but I hope to bring forth further updates in the future.

Wet Thanks

To the Student Body,
The H2o Club would like to express our thanks to the student body for coming to our shows during Oktoberfest!

The audience were so receptive and made us feel so good. We thoroughly enjoyed putting on the performances for everybody, and we wish we had had the energy to put on another show!

Because of everybody's support the H2o Club feels that this Oktoberfest was one of our best shows. We are so glad you, the student body, enjoyed the performances. Just wait till the spring show!!

Thank You,
Patti K. Chapman
(President of the H2o Club)

Oktoberfest... Spirit

Although one October week end per year is chosen by Geist to be a Blue and White festival, the spirit of cooperation and fun can be and often is overlooked during the competition of the week end. However, the predominant theme of Oktoberfest der Geist, 1977, was spirit.

The whole festival was successful because of the energy and enthusiasm of the entire Longwood College community. The skits, booths, and all performances on Saturday were of a high quality due to the support and contribution of every department. This is the Oktoberfest spirit which Geist seeks by sponsoring the event and choosing the meisters and ushers. This is the Blue and White spirit which CHI promotes and encourages.

Obviously, CHI does not have the opportunity or power to commend every individual involved in spreading the Oktoberfest spirit. We must be satisfied in merely thanking the college community for a successful and spirited week end.

FROM THE EDITOR . .

As election day nears, it is imperative that absentee ballots be placed in the mail now, to ensure that they will arrive in time to be tabulated.

With last minute bond questions arising, most were answered at the press conference last week and are published in one of the two articles. The latest revisions of the gymnasium plans have been displayed; a copy of the plans has been printed on this page.

Please keep in mind that the bond package is a non-partisan issue. The Virginians for Bonds headquarters in Richmond has released the following statements from both gubernatorial candidates. Both support the bond package.

John Dalton:

"I am firmly convinced that this is a responsible, financially sound way of providing badly needed facilities. Since the inflation rate in the construction industry is twice the interest rate that will be paid on the bonds, this means the longer we wait to build, the greater will be the burden on state finances. The yearly repayment on the bonds amounts to less than one per cent of the annual state budget and the bonds can be repaid without increasing taxes to do it."

Henry Howell:

"This is the most economical money that anybody will borrow for capital expansion and, in my opinion, it's good business to invest now in the future of Virginia. If we wait for inflation to jack the prices up, I don't know when we will be able to afford these needed improvements. I'm working affirmatively wherever I go urging my friends and neighbors to vote 'yes' on the entire bond package on November 8th. It's good business for all of us in Virginia."

Palm Reader Now Residing In Cumberland

By Margaret Hammersley

Looking into my palms, the dark haired lady spoke in a soft tone . . . she clasped my hands and a smile came across her amiable face.

The 37 year old woman, wife and mother of four, is a palmist now residing in Cumberland Courthouse, Virginia. Doris, a native of Athens, Ohio, has been aware of her psychic powers since she was seven years of age. One of seven sisters, all of whom have the power, she states that the power is "God Given" and is passed from her mother to herself. Mrs. Doris claims that her eldest daughter, aged 17, has the power, and senses that her other two daughters have the power.

A Greek orthodox, Mrs. Doris accredits witchcraft and voodoo to the devil. She feels that her own powers originate in, and extend only through this worldly realm. She comments, "To reach the beyond — I will not do that." She adds, "I'm skeptical about going beyond God's power."

The innate power allows Mrs. Doris to "Sense the future and the past as it comes into the hands." As many people go to the palmist out of curiosity, she can sense that, yet it does not block any of her feelings. She feels palmistry is a "positive thing, if you believe."

Mrs. Doris has no power with which to read her own future, "It's not within me to know my own, only God knows mine." She states that another reader could see the past and future, yet she adds that her religion will not allow her to have her palms read.

Neither can she read the palms of her children or husband, "A power forbids."

Before coming to Cumberland, Mrs. Doris lived and worked in South Carolina, and in New York. Why Cumberland? "I had a vision, or a feeling; I was told to come here by an inner voice." After a little over a month's residence, the family finds the peace and quiet agreeable.

Mrs. Doris is located in her private home on Route 60 west, approximately 18 miles outside of Farmville, at Cumberland Courthouse. She is open from 8:00 a.m. till 10:00 p.m. daily. As a discount to Longwood students, she charges only $3 for a full life reading. Readings will be confidential.

Punk Rock Comes To U.S. Via England

By JAN TURNER

"I hate you!" screams Johnny Rotten during a London concert. The lead singer of The Sex Pistols entices his audience with four-letter words and his torn clothing. Unfortunately, the British establishment rebels against their vulgar performances and bans them from radio, concerts, and nightclubs. But are they worried? Why not? Their recently released single called "God Save the Queen" is a best selling record.

A group known as The Gerns decide to live up the evening by smearing peanut butter all over themselves while performing in West Hollywood at The Whiskey. This certainly isn't your average American disco music — it's something entirely different — and it has already taken in millions of fans. This music happens to be called Punk Rock, and as Promoter Sidney Drashin says, "It's everywhere."

Actually, punk rock is believed to have been revolutionized by the Rolling Stones in the early 1960's. They wore what was at the time "mod" clothing and "wierd" hairstyles. Lead singer Mick Jagger forcefully defined the Stone's image as a hostile, aggressive, yet sensual group. Carl Betz, author of The Story of Rock remarked that the Stones "promoted a kind of cultural shock when they reached the United States. England had already developed a rock scene of its own." Mr. Woods, a rock critic who has worked with The Washington Post in the early '70's and with popular music and radio in Japan said, "The Stones were the first to cultivate that stage presence. I guess it is true that they were the first."

Punk musicians haven't been associated with the upper class. "The Rolling Stones definitely were not," said Carl Betz. "Their songs dealt with social norms inhibiting individual freedom. The greatest subject in their songs was alienation from society." Mr. Woods commented that punk rock "is primarily an English phenomena. It's an expression of rebellion by the working class and unemployed English kids. There are uneducated and unemployed youths who are pretty discontent with their welfare state. In the U.S. they aren't as valid. That doesn't mean there aren't any social problems."

"Says Johnny Rotten: 'The millionaire groups were singing about love and their own hangups. That's stupid. You don't sing about love to people on the dole.' Punk most certainly says anything and everything. It holds nothing back. As the Sex Pistols chant, 'God save the Queen—She ain't no human being.'"

Yes, punk rock has been flourishing in the United States, and for over a year or so in fact. Kids are bumping and grinding to its sounds in places like CBGB's in New York, and at The Whiskey in West Hollywood. Punk has also invaded Florida. The audience, as well as the musicians flaunt themselves in tattered clothing—deliberately torn. According to the fad, the rips are usually joined with silver or gold safety pins. Baggy pants with a direct connection between fly and pocket is yet another style. Hair is often heavily greased in London, and colored brightly in orange, blue, or green. Perhaps even two-toned. Aside from keeping rips from popping open, it is in vogue to also wear the safety pins in place of pierced earrings. High-fashion designers have even started creating punk "chic."

The Wierdos, Dictators, Siranglers, and the Damned are other various punk groups. It has been said that a new person has arisen who just might become the Mick Jagger of punk, Richard Hell. When asked who he thinks is America's number one punker, Mr. Woods replied "Root Roy Slim and The Sex Change Band." They've recorded two wonderfully sounding singles called "Boogie 'Til You Puke" and "Christmas at K-Mart."

Mr. Woods remarked that he hadn't heard enough of punk rock to determine whether or not it has any musical value. But others have, and their opinion seems to be that it does, despite its revolting attacks. Some people have referred to the punkers as being "a new wave." Sex Pistol's manager Malcolm McLaren regards that as "high falutin," calling the phrase "estab-

"What is a course of history, or philosophy, or poetry; no matter how well selected, or the best society, or the most admirable routine of life, compared with the discipline of looking always at what is to be seen?"

(Henry David Thoreau Walden)

Early one morning last semester, as the sun and the prospect of another Saturday to be spent at Longwood caused me to burrow deeper into the ribcordered amnesia of my bed, I was lured from my blanket knarled resting place by a curious dragging sound just beyond the door. Ruling out the possibility that MacDonald's had at last reconsidered and would, on contract, deliver some kind of Morning Mac, I staggered outside to investigate the commotion. There, instead of someone erecting a styrofoam monument of Egg MacMuffins, were by two suitmates Barb and Gwen socking arms full of sleeping gear, saltine crackers and soda bottles into a corner of the suite. Getting a "Nay" vote on my guess that they were practicing for some strange new brand of Civil Defense drill, I learned that they were preparing for an overnight expedition to the Cascades, a riverside trail not far from Blacksburg. Pointing out my potential uselessness as a guide (I had gotten a C in Astronomy the year before, and given a dark sky and a few hours, there was a strong chance that I could find the North Star) and the fact that I was the sole possessor of a cooler, I was appointed into this legion of two. In a bold renunciation of indoor plumbing and the week end salad bar, I heaped my sleeping bag and a pair of Frankenstein-stitched thermal underwear into the ever growing mound in the corner.

My romantic vision of "hitting the trail" were borne true only in the literal sense as we stumbled up the 2 mile climb to the mouth of the falls. Sporting an array of Safeway grocery bags, (which later fulfilled their claim to recyclability by progressively decomposing enroute and even more so "exroute" on the way out) a 6-packed carton of drinks, and a textilian confusion of extra clothing, we looked more life refugees from a garage sale than my conjured pictures of Lewis and Clarke, Having begun our ascent late in the day, our pauses to look down from the trail to compare the effortless rush of the water below, to our own hard-felt climb were fewer and farther between. Walking single file past kakied Tech students gliding easily down the path, sweaters tied around their necks with a meticulous air of casualness, Barb was led in the dimness of the late afternoon by the styrofoam chirping of the cooler which Gwen carried ahead of her, and I by the swish of Barb's pink blanket dragging along on the dusty trail.

An eighth of a mile from the mouth of the falls we struck our first clearing, and dubbing it "campsite" we laid our fragmented heaps of gear alongside a flat rock that was later to become our fireplace. Remembering the thunder that had become almost as familiar to us as our heartbeats in the concentration of the climb, we scrambled up onto some boulders there and witnessed the unceasing pouring of the falls below. Called the "Horseshoe Falls" their waters tumble furiously from ledge to moss-slimed rock spilling into a U-shaped pool at their terminus. Like a polished lens the calmed areas of the pool magnify a luminous pine green and brown bottom like tarnished pennies in an old park fountain.

As the fraternity cheers and brew-inspired war whoops of the day hikers were slowly taken over by the rustling of leaves and underbrush by the forest wind and the tiny creatures that exist in its accord, we turn our attention to the chore of assembling a camp. As Gwen had held the office of Fire Warden at school Barb and I thought that it was a natural assumption, although, as it turned out, not a very fair one, that she should somehow be unusually adept at producing a speedy and aesthetically admirable campfire. Sensing our dependance on her and our growing uneasiness as the sphere of visibility began to circumscribe itself closer and closer around us, she talked of the elements of a fire, of the necessity of drafts and of piling kindling like little teepees as she coaxed her numbing fingers to become nimble to the task. Identifying less and less with the principles involved in being able to initiate a fire with a few slivers of dried wood and a single match, Paranoia became our most natural diet as she invoked us to sacrifice one of our grocery bags to the Keeper of the Flame. Before long the flame licked out tongues of red and gold into the cold night air around us.

We cranked open a bottle of soda and wrapped biscuit dough around sticks which we stuck into the fire in celebration of our new found warmth. Gwen twirled her doughy stick in and out of the fire which resulted in a neat conch-shaped biscuit while a less observant Barb ended up holding something that resembled a charred, gooey parachute, suspended over the yawning pits of hell. I think the Keeper of the Flame must not have been fully appeased — because mine ultimately joined the grocery bag to round out the evening's sacrifice.

Layering on our extra clothing, we sweated and snorkeled ourselves into immobility as we waddled toward and finally rolled into our sleeping bags. Fatigue eventually was victor over our apprehensions about sleeping in the "wilds" and before long we traded our wary consciousness of the darkness around us for the subconsciousness behind our eyes.

During the night I awoke sensing the strangeness of the place to find that the fire had ebbed down to a pile of glowing cinders. Groping around in the moonlight I searched for sticks hoping only half under my breath that those I grasped wouldn't squirm. Coaxing the embers with breath and fuel, I felt the warm rush of heat and satisfaction as the fire resumed its former stance. As I stretched backward on the rock I saw through the circular clearing in the trees, fragments of the constellations. Being aware of a few of the most common ones I sensed the positions of their unseed stars obscured by the branches of the trees. It occurred to me then, amongst our makeshift, lumpy community of sleeping bags and bedroll, that what you know is important only as an indicator of all that you don't know. And becoming aware of the incessant pounding of the waterfall, hearing the individual splashing of the water from rock to rock also says something about the distinction you always hear about between listening and hearing, and seeing

Hockey Team Hosts Tourney-

Looks Forward To Nationals

The Longwood hockey team journeyed to ODU last Tuesday. Despite the steady drizzle which lasted throughout both games, Longwood returned home with double victories.

Juli Dayton scored the only varsity goal in the 1-0 win. The JV also had a narrow victory with Donna Deats, Debi Kinzel, and Jackie Steer each scoring a goal, making the final score 3-2.

The team hosted a small tournament Saturday, Oct. 29. The visiting teams participating were University of North Carolina at Greensboro and the Richmond Club.

Longwood's first opponents were UNC-G. The game ended in a 2-2 tie, with Juli Dayton and Terry Voit each having a goal. Goalie Terri Smith was able to keep UNC-G from going ahead in the game, by stopping a flick in the penalty stroke.

That afternoon, the Richmond Club took on UNC-G, winning 1-0 in the equally matched game.

The highlight of the game came as Longwood played the Richmond Club and against their coach, Denise McDonough, who played for Richmond. The L.C. varsity had a chance to use their varied hockey skills on their coach. Unfortunately the Club was able to get their revenge on last year's L.C. win over them by taking the game 2-1. Terry Voit scored the single Longwood goal.

Coach Dee McDonough

believes that ODU was the "best game we've played." She added that her team shows a great deal of teamwork and "will be ready for tournaments."

Coach McDonough sees "a lot of potential" in the JV for varsity players next year.

Today both teams will travel to Madison and will stay overnight, going to Bridgewater tomorrow. Friday the varsity team will go to the Tidewater tournaments at Westhampton.

During her first year at Longwood, Ms. Donough is predicting that the L.C. team will make it all the way to Nationals in Denver this month. Let's hear it for Denver in November!

Wrestling Interest Group To Begin Practice

By CONNIE BARBOUR

Of great and increasing interest to some on the campus of Longwood College is the possibility of a Longwood College wrestling team. An interview with Scott Conkwright provided answers to the question of the development of this group. Responsibility for initiating this group can be traced to Stuart Tennant, Assistant Director of Admissions, and I.B. Dent.

Scott Conkwright has a background in wrestling and has been assisting with the interest group. Scott is from Virginia Beach, and he has been wrestling since the fourth grade. He wrestled while in high school and went on to college on a scholarship. He spent one year at Oklahoma State and four years at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Scott now lives in Abilene on his parent's farm. He teaches Biology at Randolph Henry High School and serves as an assistant coach for football there. Scott feels that the present interest in wrestling is "a result of the school becoming co-ed."

Since the beginning of the semester as many as twenty-six students have shown an interest in the new team. A wrestling mat was ordered in August and is due to arrive this month, after which time scheduled practices are hoped to begin. The group is still in the form of an interest group. Plans are being made to have the requirements for establishing the team on Longwood's campus final by the beginning of the 1978-79 school year. Scott has been able to arrange three scrimmages for this season already with hopes of having two or more scrimmages set up this year.

A wrestling team consists of 10 members plus backup members. There are 10 weight divisions ranging from a 118 pound division to a heavy weight division.

There are three wrestling periods. The first period is set for two minutes, the second for three minutes, and the third for three minutes. In the first period the wrestlers start in a standing position. The wrestler to make a take down scores two points. In the second period the wrestler start in a position on the floor, one on his hands and knees and the other in what is called a referee's position. The third period is also started from the floor position with the two wrestlers reversing their holding positions.

Three team points are awarded for each team member who wins his match. Six team points are awarded when a wrestler is able to pin his opponent. To pin his opponent he must get him in a position on the mat in which both of his shoulders are held down on the mat for one second.

Scott commented that "it takes a lot of hard work to be a good wrestler. A wrestler needs to have good balance, a lot of strength and quickness." For anyone interested in becoming a member of the wrestling team they should be running and lifting weights in the universal gym now. For further information you may contact Scott Conkwright. Scott's address is: Box 207, Route 1, Charlotte Courthouse, Virginia 23923.

Golf Team Ends Successful Season

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The University of North Carolina Invitational Tournament held at Chapel Hill, North Carolina on October 25, ended the Longwood golf team schedule. Seventeen schools from around the nation were represented in this 36 hole competition.

Defending National Collegiate Champions Florida State and Runner-up national Champions were in attendance. Furman University, Greenville, S.C., has the two time National Amateur Champion on their team (Furman came in second as a team) Beth Daniels who won the

Tennis Wins Westhampton Falls To N.C. State

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

The Longwood tennis team played their final season matches this week. October 25 they traveled to Westhampton where they took a commanding 7-2 victory. On Friday, the team played a much more experienced North Carolina state team, losing 9-0. The L.C. team put up a good fight, but could not pull the match out against their strong competition.

Coach Phylliss Harriss remarked that State was an "excellent team." She feels her team "played very well" and was pleased with the Fall season. Coach Harriss sees her spring tennis schedule as a "tough, full schedule," but she feels "sure the players can handle it."

This fall they will not be making up the game against William and Mary, which was cancelled last Wednesday. Thus their final season standings are 6-4.

Individual scores against Westhampton:

Singles:

Margie Quarles d. Chris Skinner 6-1, 6-0
Gwen Koehlein d. Cindy Cooper 6-2, 6-3
Teresa McLawhorn d. Lisa

Hayford 6-0, 6-2

Nancy Leidenheimer d. Linda Swanson 7-6 (5-3), 6-7 (5-3), 6-4
Jill Baccheiri lost to Karen Joyce 6-3, 6-0
Angie Gerst lost to Laura McGuire 6-2, 7-5

Doubles:

McLawnhorn and Leidenheimer d. Cooper and Joyce 6-0, 6-3
Quarles and Koehlein d. Swanson and Hayford 6-2, 6-3
Fayne and Baccheiri d. Prince and Korman 6-4, 6-1

Individual scores against NC State:

Singles:

Margie Quarles lost to Anderson 6-1, 6-2
Gwen Koehlein lost to Green 6-0, 6-2

Teresa McLawnhorn lost to Suzanne Nirschl 6-3, 6-1

Nancy Leidenheimer lost to Ginger Lancaster 6-0, 6-1

Jill Baccheiri lost to Georgia Allen 6-1, 6-1

Judi Fayne lost to Carol Knapp 6-3, 6-3

Doubles:

Quarles and Koehlein lost to Nirschl and Green 6-2, 6-1

McLawnhorn and Leidenheimer lost to Lancaster and Anderson 6-2, 6-4

Baccheiri and Fayne lost to Knapp and Allen 6-2, 6-2

Basketball Seasons Open This Month

By CARLTON WHITE AND DEBBIE NORTHERN

Longwood College men's basketball season is in progress under the coaching of Bill McAdams, new to Longwood this year. McAdams, who played his college ball at Penn State, brings valuable coaching experience to Longwood. The span of his coaching career is as follows: Northern Virginia Community College; George Mason College; Austin Peay State University; and some high school coaching.

Coach McAdams is very enthusiastic about the coming season. Although playing such teams as Ferrum, Christopher Newport, and St. Paul's, McAdams seems to look forward to mainly the Al Morgan Classic. The Al Morgan Classic is a benefit game sponsored by the Bendix Corporation of Louisville, West Virginia in memory of Coach Al Morgan, a coach who dedicated forty years of his life to high school basketball. The game will be a single benefit game against Concord College at Green Briar High School, which has a seating capacity for two thousand people. This event will be an annual affair for Longwood, next year being a fourteen team tournament.

Patterned plays are the nucleus of the offensive game of this year's squad. McAdams describes basketball as a "game of patience" and believes in tedious defensive basketball. The development of a strong passing game, aggressive man-to-man and zone defense will be the key to success for a team with Longwood's height disadvantage.

An introduction to the players at this junction is appropriate.

Starters

Kevin Newton: 6'5", Guard-Center, Kempsville High — Virginia Beach. Average: 17 pts., 15 reb., Comments: "Good basketball sense."

Byron Bracey: 6'3", Forward, Hermitage High School. Average: 13 pts., 11 reb. Comments: "May be best overall player; has a soft touch, Plays team ball."

Mike Hamilton: 6'4", Forward, Parry McClellan High School — (All District and All Regional team). Average: 16 pts., 14 reb. Comments: "Team strong man; keen sense of playing around basketball."

Jimmy Yarbrough: 5'8", Guard, Longwood second year man. Average: 22 pts. Comments: "Quarterback of team; spark play; point guard."

Greg Gilliam: 6'2", Guard, Longwood second year man. Average: 12 pts., 7 reb.

Comments: "Adds height to back court, very quick."

Earl Witcher: 6'5", Center, Kempsville High — Virginia Beach. Average: 14 pts., 10 reb. Comments: "A lot of finesse."

Eric Benjamin: 6'3", Forward. Comments: "Strong forward, comparative to Mike Hamilton."

entire student body, faculty, and community.

The men's season begins November 25 in the Tipoff Tournament which will be held at Christopher Newport or Virginia Wesleyan. The first home game is November 29 against St. Paul's at 7:30.

Henry S. Clay: Guard. Comments: "Very good defense, fine outside shooter."

Lawrence Pleasant: Guard. Comments: "Young freshman guard, may be quickest player on squad, has tremendous potential."

James Braxton: Guard, Longwood second year man. Comments: "Very patient, quick guard."

Dale Portney: Forward. Comments: "Experienced player, plays good offense."

Brian Welbaum: Guard Forward. Comments: "Quick, has a good jumper, can go to the hoop."

Roger Strong: Guard. Comments: "Good outside shooter, great passer."

David Weaver: Forward. Comments: "Nice jumper."

Rob Johnson: Forward. Comments: "Good hustler, aggressive."

These are the fine young men on Longwood's squad. Instrumental in their success this year will be the support of the

Twenty Nine Players Try Out For Women's Basketball

Around 29 players tried out for the 23 spots on the 1977-78 women's basketball roster.

Coach Earlene Lang says her young, but very experienced, team must depend on aggressiveness and speed since they only have three girls with much height, Brenda Fettrow, Linda Baumlner, and Sue Rama.

She feels that the "whole schedule is a tough schedule." It includes such teams as UNC-Greensboro, East Carolina, Madison, and ODU. There are two tournaments, the High Point Round Robin and the Winthrop Invitational in February. The team also hopes to go to the VFSW Tournament at VPI&SU in March.

Coach Lang feels that to be successful, her team must have a strong defense, which will be the "key to winning." She is also "working on a running game." Defensively the team will be alternating between man-to-man coverage, the 2-1-2 and 1-3-1 zones.

She believes that the scrimmages scheduled next month with Salisbury State and University of Maryland, will be "real learning experiences."

Even though the team has a lot of new members, Coach Lang says the team is working well together and that her team will "head for the top." "The girls are capable of going to the State Championship," she added.

Returning to the team this year are Seniors Sue Rama, at forward, and Linda Baumlner, at center. Sophomore forwards Darlene Douglas, Kitty Hughes and Maryjane Smith, Sophomore guards Courtney Mills, and Sharon "Nick" Nickolson, and Juniors Ellie Kennedy, as forward, Cindy Saunders and Melissa Wiggins as guards.

The newcomers include Sophomores Dot Foley, at forward, Cathy "Skeet" Forthuber and Lori Grimm, as guards. Freshmen forwards are Molly Bell, Brenda Fettrow, Cindy Landon, Linda Pullen, and Nancy Wilson. The freshmen guards are Janice Arena, Debbie Head, Marie Steel, and Sherry Will.

Team managers are Nancy Colella and Sandi Cram. Trainers are Crystal Lumberick and Debbie Brown. Scorer is Lori Morgan.

The team is practicing hard and looking forward to the season opener at home against Virginia State College on November 29.

Volleyball Team Tops Mary Washington

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Last Tuesday the Longwood volleyball team traveled to Bridgewater, where they topped Bridgewater College 15-6, 15-6 and lost in a three game match to Eastern Mennonite, 15-11, 8-15, 7-15.

The next night the varsity team had two wins. They defeated Ferrum 15-11, 15-9 and came from behind to beat Mary Washington 4-15, 15-4, 15-13. The last game was a thriller where L.C. came back from a 10-3 deficit to take the game and match. The large student crowd cheered enthusiastically during this rally.

The JV team defeated Bridgewater, but lost to both Eastern Mennonite and Mary Washington in this week's action.

Coach Carolyn Price said her team did not play particularly well against Mary Washington. She was proud, though, that they "didn't quit." Coach Price added that the win over Mary Washington was an important conference win.

Today the team will travel to William and Mary to play against the Indians and Christopher Newport College. Both these teams are in the conference. Then on Thursday, a home match is scheduled against Roanoke at 7:30.

Due to the recent rain, the finals of tennis intramurals have not been played but should be completed by the end of the week. Bowling intramurals are over and the winners are as follows: Women's singles winner — Kim Cave, runner up — Kathy Breimann; Men's singles winner — Keith Vierling, runner up — Roger Bensenhaver; Co-ed team competition winners — Kim Cave, Jill Bacchieri, Keith Vierling, Roger Bensenhaver. Congratulations to all of these individuals.

Both women's and co-ed volleyball intramurals will begin tomorrow. Inner Tube Water Polo team entry blanks will be available by next week and are due back into Miss Price's office on November 16.

Longwood has been challenged by Randolph-Macon College, Ashland, to a flag football game on November 9 at 3:00 p.m. The game is to be played at Hampden-Sydney College.

Cancer is often curable.

The fear of cancer is often fatal.

Some people are so afraid of cancer they won't go to the doctor when they suspect something's wrong. Or even for a routine checkup. They're afraid the doctor will "find something". This fear can prevent them from discovering cancer in the early stages when it is most often curable.

There are over 3,000,000 people alive today who have had cancer. If that surprises you, it shouldn't. Cancer is highly curable.

individual title for the University of N.C. Invitational. Miss Daniels shot a 72 and a 73. Terry Mood of the University of Georgia came in second with Stephanie Konegay third from the University of N.C.

Low medalist for Longwood's team was Kay Smith with an 86 and an 87. Longwood's team placed 13th.

Longwood's overall instate record stands at 7 wins, 1 loss, and 1 tie, with one out of state loss. I.C. has scored 77 1/2 points compared to their opponent's 42 1/2.

As a team, Longwood won the VFISW State Championship. The state championship has been held eight times and Longwood teams have won five of them. This year Deanna Vanwey of Longwood was individual winner, with teammate Becky Webb as runner-up, making them the number one and two golfers in the state of Virginia.

Looking back at the season, Coach Barbara Smith commented, "Though we didn't play as well as we could have in the University of N.C. invitational, I am very pleased with the overall performance of the team this fall. Each member of the team, at some point throughout the season contributed to the success of the win-loss record. As the coach, I have personally enjoyed working with Janet Clements, Debra Hood, Kay Smith, Penny Stephens, Deanna Vanwey, and Becky Webb this season and I am looking forward to the spring season when the team will compete in several invitational tournaments in and out-of-state."

and looking.

The point I guess that I'm trying to make is that in camping and removing yourself from the barrage of civilized noise a person, if he allows himself to become aware, can learn to distinguish, and sort out the pieces of the drone that he encounters every day to decide what these noises are, where they come from and if they are important.

If I've learned anything technically from this experience, it is that I enjoy the sport although I knew very little about it. That following summer I moved to the Shenandoah valley for a short time and it is there that I good locational springboard to learn about getting along in the woods by reading, talking to veteran and novice packers and most of all by first-hand experience. In learning how to handle the "domestic" problems in packing, they can become things that you consider naturally interested of neurotically.

To find out more information about camping, contact the newly organized Longwood Outdoor Group, the Potomac Appalachian Trail Club at 1718 N. Street, Washington, D.C., 20036, or next week's edition of the ROTUNDA.

ishment language, more descriptive of a new hairstyle than anything else." Seymour Stein of Sire Records "finds that the music reflects a mood of total indifference among the young. They feel they had nothing to do with making the world the mess it is today, and they're not going to do anything to make it better because they can't. They come to the music for the sake of the music, for entertainment, for getting it on."

Will punk last? Or will it be regarded as just another fad, to fade away with time? No one really knows, but some feel that if Elvis Presley and The Beatles, who were once considered corrupt, became legends, then maybe punk will have the same success. Mr. Woods remarked, "I don't think it will fade quickly, but it will have a limited audience." No four-letter words are spared, and songs about love and sex are sung in detail. As Willi (Loco) Alexander, leader of a Boston band says, "Punk looks right at you and says something." What do you think?

Longwood To Host Famed Russian Poet

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

Monday evening, November 21 at 8 o'clock in Jarman Auditorium, Longwood will host a poetry reading by the internationally acclaimed Russian poet, Andrei Voznesensky. Among his itinerary of American campuses such as the universities of Columbia and Purdue, three major colleges and eight state universities, Longwood holds the distinction as his first Southern host and his last appearance on this tour of the U.S. This is his most ambitious of his five previous trips taken to this country over the last 16 years.

Sponsors of the bi-lingual presentation include the Gyre, Student Union, English and History Departments and the Longwood College Foundation. Mr. Voznesensky will read each poem in its original Russian, prefacing each with an introductory comment in English. Dr. Vest of the English Department, on stage with the poet, will supply the English interpretation of each successive piece.

Contemplating in his poetry such things as the passing of his friends and colleagues Boris Pasternak and more recently, Robert Lowell, Voznesensky gives a linguistically vibrant, intensely theatrical rendering of his works. Some of his American observations include strip-tease girls, a N.Y. airport, and the shooting of students at Kent State several years ago.

A fellow of the Kennan Institute for Advanced Russian Studies at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C. Voznesensky will return there in December as a poet in residence. In his native Russia, in 1962, 14,000 enthusiasts poured into a sports arena to hear him. Having published six volumes of poetry, Voznesensky's books, distributed in editions of 100,000 copies, are an instantaneous sellout.

His most recent collection, entitled ANTIWORLDS, is available for $3.95 in the English Department office on first floor Granger. This edition, in paperback, features both the Russian and English versions face to face. Translated by six reknown American poets, among them W. H. Auden, the work is an embodiment of a kind of universal citizenry of poets in the arts. As Mr. Voznesensky himself says: "We poets, American or Russian, we do understand one another. We poets are one nation. Wouldn't it be marvelous if we had our own capital on wheels, a train in which we could wander about the world like gypsies? This book that comes with my art with the art of six American poets is the closest I've come to that train."

Andrei Voznesensky will appear in Jarman Auditorium on Mon., Nov. 21 at 8:00.

Who's Who Recipients At Longwood

By LORI DAVIS

Twenty-one seniors have been selected for the 1977-1978 edition of "Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities". There was a quota of 35 people, and the recommendations from the faculty and Administration along with those from Geist Alumni and Geist members, gave the honor to the following 21 girls:

Past And Present Of Alumni House

By CERESA HANEY

The Longwood Alumni House is a charming structure with an interesting background. Originally built in 1800, the house was purchased for the college in 1908 and renovated by Dr. Joseph Jarman, fourth president of the school. The house originally served as the presidents' home and did not become the Alumni House until 1969 when President Willett moved to Longwood Estate.

When the house was purchased in 1908, it was a simple square frame structure. Dr. Jarman had the roof raised and added the fluted columns and side porches. He also built a small colonnade and a grass tennis court in the backyard, neither of which are still in existence. Mrs. Jarman cultivated a lovely garden and built a small pool in the backyard, but neither were kept intact over the years.

Most of the furnishings in the house were donated by alumni of the college. All of the rooms are furnished with lovely pieces of furniture including a victorian sofa and a Biggs reproduction in the "show bedroom". In the dining room are two lovely brass and crystal candelabrum, given by three alumni. And in the upstairs hallway is a recently received chandelier given by Dr. Elliot in the English Department. One of the bedrooms in the house is known as the Booker Room because the furniture was given by Harriet Booker Lamb, Class of 1928, in memory of her mother Jessie W. Booker, Class of 1904. There is a framed article in the room which states that President Grant slept in the Booker bed.

On display in the house are several collections, one of which is a pin and ring collection. Included in the display are various sorority pins and class rings of old alumni. The ornaments are generally given by family members of alumni and some of the rings in the collection date back to the early 1800's. The house also hosts a collection of college annuals dating back to the late 1800's. And encased on the wall in the parlor is a tie worn by Charlie Hop, a former professor and sponsor of the Green and Whites.

The Alumni House serves as a guest house for persons associated with the college. Alumni, parents of prospective students, and any other visitors of the college are allowed to stay at the house free of charge. Mrs. Lucille Cabaniss is the Alumni hostess. She has worked at the Alumni House for a number of years and is responsible for taking care of the house.

Mrs. Nancy Shelton, Director of the Alumni Office, reports that the Alumni House will be closed in January for several months while the walls in the downstairs hall, which are over 100 years old, are being redone.

LC And H-SC Teacher Exchange Program

By BARBARA SLOUGH

A new dimension has been added to Longwood's exchange program with Hampden-Sydney this year. For the first time in the history of the two schools, members of the faculties are exchanging classes.

Dr. Michael Lund, a member of Longwood's English faculty, and Dr. George Bagby from Hampden-Sydney, are each teaching a course in English Literature at the different schools. The idea originated when they realized that while they were teaching at different schools, the course was basically the same. The general idea, according to Dr. Lund, was to get a break from the normal routine and to be put into a different situation. However, Dr. Lund feels that although it is a change of pace, there is really not that much difference except for the different student body.

While it is possible that other members of the faculties will follow their example, Drs. Lund and Bagby have not made any plans for the upcoming semester. Any input from the student body could bring about more of these exchange programs with Hampden-Sydney.

Dr. G.C. Orth:

New German Professor

By KAREN SHELTON

"It is a pleasure to be teaching here," says Dr. Geoffrey C. Orth who just recently joined the Longwood faculty as a professor of German and English.

A native Virginian, Dr. Orth graduated from Washington and Lee University and received his M.A. and Ph.D from the University of Virginia. While doing his graduate work at UVA he served as an instructor there. Orth has also taught abroad. He taught English in Bremen, Germany for two years, and he said, "I had a lot of fun while I was there."

Dr. Orth is the first full time German instructor that Longwood has had in a few years, and he is working to build up a program in German. He hopes to even "possibly get a major back."

Orth enjoys his students because they are "inquisitive and interested in anything you try to teach." Due to the inquisitive nature of his students, Orth's classes feature high class participation with a time for questions and answers, and conversations. The classes are conducted in German, and Dr. Orth said, "The students follow well."

Dr. Orth is actively involved with the Foreign Language Club through which he hopes to get more people interested in languages. He stresses the importance of foreign languages "for anyone as a part of their liberal education." Orth continues, "...by being fluent in a foreign language, one's horizons are widened." A German Film Festival is planned for second semester in hopes that it will attract people to the language department.

An outdoor sports lover, Dr. Orth likes Virginia, and he chose Longwood because "it is a good typical small school with a good future... and Virginia high schools turn out good students." Another reason for his choice is the faculty-student relationship. He said, "I enjoy students talking to me; it is an definite advantage that is missed at larger universities where professors just don't have time."

The friendly intimate atmosphere and spirit of Longwood also impresses Orth. About the Longwood Spirit, he said, "Students want to be involved, and that's is great for the school."

Orth teaches all of the German courses offered here and also a course in World Literature. Next semester a course in German Literature will be offered because "many students have expressed an interest."

Winebrenner Appeals To Curious And Serious

By DEBBIE MOUL

Stained glass. What is it? How is it made? Questions such as these and many others were answered in entirety as visiting artist Ken Winebrenner delivered a very informative and demonstrative lecture on the art in Bedford Auditorium on Wednesday, November 2. Mr. Winebrenner is with the Art Department at Virginia Commonwealth University.

The auditorium yielded a fairly large audience consisting of curious and interested students and professors. Mr. Winebrenner introduced the art of staining glass and then motioned the audience across the hall to another room where he then demonstrated how to cut glass, effectively and harmlessly. After completing the short demonstration, everyone returned to the auditorium where Mr. Winebrenner proceeded to speak on the origin and methods of staining glass.

During the 12th century, buildings were constructed that utilized large building materials. Stained glass was used to fill any vacant areas that remained in a wall or other surface. During the Renaissance, Italian artists developed other stains and colors. Many Germans and Swiss contributed greatly in the further development of staining and coloring.

Glass is a slow-moving liquid that freezes at 120° degrees. Various metals are used to create the different colors of stained glass. First, the glass is heated into a molten liquid. Bots of gold are then added to create red glass, cobalt for blue, silver for yellow and lead which turns the glass clear. When glass is in a semi-molten state, rigid patterns may be rolled over it to create certain textures such as rainbows or prismatic effects.

Mr. Winebrenner also gave a slide presentation. There were slides of a church, his home and the studio where he works on stained glass structures, window, partitions, lamps and the like. He creates pieces for restaurants more readily than for churches. The Strawberry Street Cafe in Richmond now yields one of his accomplishments, a sixteen foot long stained glass divider. The divider was delivered piece by piece by two men.

Mr. Winebrenner just completed a series of stained glass for Howard Johnson's Restaurant. Many fancier restaurants have become interested in stained glass for decor. At his studio, the artists are oriented toward doing large pieces. The interest in stained glass is centered basically on the west coast. There are very few artists of this type on the east coast.

When having to create a particular piece of stained glass,

Variety Sets The Stage For Dance Company Concert

By CONNIE BARBOUR

Thursday, November 3, marked the opening of the fall Dance Company Concert, also held on Friday and Saturday nights. The program proved to be worth waiting for, exhibiting the product of a great amount of talent, hard work and good organization. This year's director of the Longwood College Company of Dancers, Dr. Betty Bowman, proudly commented that the dancers had done a "splendid job." Members of this year's dance company are: Wendy Barrett, Susan Clift, Becky Doree, Petite Grigg, Dottie Labahn, Sandy McFall, Terri Stuart, Sue Bona, Andrea Harkness, Lauren Mundy, Ellen Hitt, Cindy Morris, Sherry Hogge, Jackie Page, Tilsia Stephens, Teresa Snelling, Nickel Tucker, Tanya Luther, Carol Henry, Terri Williams, and Terrell Jones.

There was no total theme for the program. It consisted of several variations in movement, lighting, costumes, dances and music. The first of the nine arrangements performed was a moderately fast number with music by Ramsey Lewis entitled "Chill Today and Hot Tamale." In this number, choreographed by Petite Grigg, seven dancers in purple leotards with yellow accessories exhibited swings, leaps, and turns to the strong beat of the music.

"Commentary", choreographed by Sue Bona, was an experimental dance. The three robot-like dancers achieved constant motion, slow at times and speeding up at others, adding variations of movement. The lighting greatly aided the effect of this number.

"The Gangs", choreographed by Sherry Hogge, was a modern arrangement with music by Bernstein-Sandheim. Dancers dressed in cut-off and rolled-up jeans created the style associated with street gangs.

Andrea Harkness was the choreographer of the more serious arrangement entitled "Bondage." Through their movements, the dancers were able to capture the audience's thoughts so that they might perceive the agony of a bondman.

The entire dance company performed in the improvisation entitled "The Alphabet." This simple and cute arrangement seemed to get a great deal of response from the audience. Another favorite was a soft, delicate arrangement entitled "Pavane", a duet choreographed and danced by Tilsia Stephens and Dottie Labahn.

"Folk Dance" was a lively dance choreographed and danced by Sherry Hogge, Nickel Tucker and Sandy McFall. The spirit of the two leprechaun and nymph-like characters was enhanced by the Irish style music by The Chieftains, a background of large mushrooms, and green and white costumes.

"A Study in Terror", choreographed by Terri Williams was an arrangement with music by Strindberg. The dooming music and the movement of the figures clothed in black, hooded cloaks created a deathly, morbid atmosphere of evil.

The last dance entitled "Variations" was choreographed by Tilsia Stephens. This finale was a fast moving number arranged to the music of Donna Summer. The movements of the dance were quick and collective with the multiple colors of leotards helping to create the theme of variations.

The student choreographers exhibited a great amount of talent and ability. Each choreographer not only created his dance steps, but made the dance complete by choosing costumes, music, and lighting. There was a variation in dances performed and in the type of music. There were modern artist's music, such as Donna Summer, Ramsey Lewis, and Jefferson Starship, as well as classical artist's music, such as Strindberg and Varese. The fall concert was certainly a success.

ROBBIN THOMPSON LIVE IN THE GOLD ROOM — Robbin Thompson was in the Gold Room Saturday night and gave an excellent performance to a small but enthusiastic crowd of about 100 students. Thompson, Richmond's premier recording artist, was able to play at Longwood before flying out to California to finish work on his second album. Thompson started off with "Highway 101" from his first album and finished with "Sweet Virginia Breeze", the title cut from his second album to be released in February. Those present experienced a very enjoyable evening with one of the finer musicians recording today.

Musicologist To Present Seminar

By PAULA JOHNSON

Dr. E. Eugene Helms, Professor of Music and Chairman of the Musicology Division at the University of Maryland, will be at Longwood for two days, November 10-11, for various talks concerning the music field. According to Dr. McCray, Dr. Helms' visit is "on an equal par with our Visiting Artists Series."

Dr. Helms is an internationally known musicologist and a famous author. Several of his publications are Music At The Court of Frederick the Great, Words and Music, and Thematic Catalog of the Works of C.P.E. Bach. Dr. Helms also has received various research grants from the Universities of Iowa and Maryland and National Endowment for the Humanities.

On Thursday, November 10, at 1:00 p.m., Dr. Helms will present a formal speech entitled "Death and Resurrection in the Music Library." At 7:30 p.m., a Seminar will be presented entitled "process is for General Electric, Not for Musicians."

On Friday, November 11, at 9:00 a.m., Dr. Helms will speak to the Music Literature class. At 1:15 p.m. on Friday, Dr. Helms will speak to the Advance Music History class.

Dr. Helms' lectures are free and open to the public.

Students To Vote On Nickname

By PENNY ROBINSON

"To be or not to be," the Longwood Lancers or Longwood Blue Jackets. The dilemma of Longwood's official mascot will be decided quickly and democratically through a student vote sponsored by the elections committee.

The Intercollegiate Athletic Council presented four names to the Board of Visitors: Saints, Crusaders, Lancers, and Blue Jackets. They voted on November 4, and tied between the Lancers and Blue Jackets.

Longwood's mascot will become official after the election.

R.O.T.C. Takes To The Sky

By PAMELA McDOWELL

"Hang gliding is a good self-reliance sport," says John Harris, part owner of Kitty Hawk Kites. "It is exciting as well as peaceful. It gives you a tremendous sense of freedom."

At 6:30 a.m. on October 7, that is exactly what some of the students from R.O.T.C. set out to do. Armed with ten dozen doughnuts, the students left from Longwood for the University of Richmond where they joined students from U. of R., V.C.U. and the Open High School. They then left for Jockey's Ridge at Nagshead, N.C., where they would learn to glide.

The students arrived on Pea Island campgrounds at 1:30 p.m. and divided into two flight groups. The first group left for Kitty Hawk Kite school while the second group set up pup tents provided by the Army.

Ground school viewed a film on the parts of a hang glider, its operation and safety techniques. During the film, Jon Thompson commented that, "I wasn't interested in flying until my feet got off the ground for the first time."

After watching the film, the group, equipped with harness and protective helmets got prepared for the second phase of ground school which consisted of positioning and running with the glider.

After a short delay caused by rain, the instructors took the students up Jockey's Ridge, where they practiced running with the kites until it became dark. Wet and tired, they boarded the bus and went to eat dinner. Some students preferred to return to the campsite early and cook their meal there. Late that evening, everyone enjoyed roasting marshmallows and conversing with new friends.

6:00 a.m. came early when Major Hamaker walked through the camp shouting, "Come on, it's time to get up." It was dark when everyone "broke camp" and headed for breakfast.

One of the most enjoyable moments of the trip was eating a hearty meal while watching day break on the horizon and waves breaking on the beach in front of the dining hall. After eating, everyone lingered on the beach, enjoying a few moments of solitude before heading for the Hang Gliding School.

When the students arrived at the school, the instructors showed them how to carry the gliders onto the higher ridges. Once the kites were positioned, the students were divided into five groups and assigned to the kite designed to carry people in their weight range.

While giving instructions, Ralph Buxton commented that, "Teaching hang gliding is a decent way to make a living. I enjoy it and seeing other people learn to glide. People here are happy and having a good time. Being outdoors is nicer than a business atmosphere. Hang gliding is exciting. A person feels he is defying something, maybe, like you are cheating nature."

An instructor gave a demonstration flight and then the fun began. The kids ran, slid, bumped, jumped and sometimes even flew down the ridges. After a few false starts, bystanders noticed more and more students gliding instead of sliding down the sand dunes. When speaking of the harness used in gliding, Pat VanLuven, a student for U. of R., commented that, "Hang gliding is literally flying by the seat of your pants."

One of the most strenuous parts of gliding is carrying the glider up the ridge after completing a flight down. Though it isn't heavy, a glider is bulky, and it is more comfortable to have another person under each wing to assist in carrying it. Students made a game out of this work by racing down the hill to help the glider.

Teena Fun, a student from Longwood, said the first glide, you are but you do it anyway. a challenge. It's g learned about mosquitoes and friends."

C-Rations, M60's, M16's

By Margaret Hammersley

"I've got spaghetti and meat chunks, what've you got?"
"Tuna."
"Will somebody trade me something for spaghetti?"
Cellophane rattled, "instant cocoa, pound cake, spiced meat."

The Longwood ROTC Cadets had landed at Ft. A.P. Hill, Saturday, October 29, to join others like themselves in a two-day field experience program. Airlift '77 initiated the program Saturday morning. Five helicopters, supplied by the 76th assault helicopter company, of the Virginia National Guard, landed on Iler Field at 9:30 a.m. After a short safety briefing, 25 students boarded the vehicles and departed for Port Royal, Virginia.

Awaiting the Longwood cadets were approximately 175 cadets from the University of Richmond program, including students from Virginia Commonwealth University and Randolph-Macon College. The two-day program was planned and executed by senior cadets and additional graduate advisors. Representatives from the University of Richmond's Military Science Department were also present, including Colonel Ivey, Major Hamaker, and Captain Bailey.

Upon arrival at Ft. A.P. Hill, the cadets were assigned quarters and issued linens, equipment and C-rations. It was in one of the women's barracks, after the girls had returned piled down under pillows, blankets, helmets and other identifiable equipment, that the above conversation took place.

It was the girl's first encounter with military C-rations — canned in army green containers, packed in less than flamboyant (and less than sturdy) brown boxes. Following the initial excitement of the C-rations, orders were bellowed to wear web belts with canteens and folded ponchos to formation.

"My belt's too big."
"Can you fix this canteen?"
"Listen up! This is how you fold your poncho."

Sergeant Major "what's his name" unfolded the poncho on the barracks floor and demonstrated its folding and rolling, and attachment to the back of the belt. After somewhat of a frenzy and argument as to whether or not to wear field jackets, the girls were attired with their web belts in place, canteens on their left hip, ponchos hanging in the back, and C-rations under their arm, ready for formation.

From formation, A Company and B Company fell out to the mess hall where they received a practical lesson on the use of P-38's, can openers. The phrase P-38 spread around the mess hall like wildfire; everyone seemed pleased at the expansion of their vocabulary.

At the round robin field, the companies were divided and assigned to one of three stations, the rappelling tower, the M60 disassembly station, and the M16 disassembly station.

On the tower, cadet ranger Captain Petersen supervised the operations.

"Permission asked to climb ladder."

"Permission granted cadet."

"Permission asked to mount platform!"

"Permission granted!"

"On Rappel!"

"On Belay!"

"Off Rappel!"

"Off Belay!"

On the ground the cadets tied the rappell harness between their legs, under their backside and around their waist so as to produce a supportive seat harness. A large heavy pin fastens the harness to the rope.

At the tower ladder the cadet asks permission to climb the ladder and must await the granting of permission from a commander on the field. At the top of the ladder, the cadet then must ask permission to mount the platform, and await permission from a commander on the platform. For safety reasons, there are no more than two cadets on the platform at one time.

On the platform, the rappelling rope is fastened to the harness. The cadet, with his back to the field, assumes an L-shaped position, his legs perpendicular to the wall, his upper body parallel to the wall. The right hand placed at the small of the back is used as a break hand — it controls movement and speed. The cadet moves down the rope by sliding the right hand down the rope.

Secured to the rope, the cadet yells over his shoulder to the man below, "on rappel!" The man below is holding the end of the rappelling rope. He issues slack as it is needed. On the yell of "on rappel," the man below replies, "on belay," and the cadet takes that, "rough first step." It's impossible to fall off the rope, yet hanging upside down was not infrequent.

Once on the ground, the cadet rappelling yells, "off rappel," to which the belaying cadet responds, "off belay."

The rappelling technique is used when mountain climbing and caving. Captain Bailey referred to it as "confidence builder."

The cadets' reactions to their first rappelling experience were varied.

"I was scared, but don't look down."

"It's not that bad."

"Flying planes, anything, but I'm not sure about this."

"Can I go again?"

A M60 is a crew-served machine gun operated by a gunner and an assistant gunner. The cadets had to disassemble and assemble both the M60 and M16 rifle. The disassembly was executed by the dislodging of the stock group, the buffer group, the operating group, the trigger housing group, the barrel group, and the reliever group. A soldier comes to complete the process of disassembly and assembly in 45 to 60 seconds.

At the M16 station, the same instruction was taking place. Before the rifles were to be cleaned that evening, and fired the next day the cadets learned to disassemble and assemble them.

After the afternoon's instruction, the cadets had one final formation before the long awaited dinner.

"A Company!"

The best company!

All the way sir!"

right shoulder, the cadet triggered the weapon with his right hand. The range was divided into alleys; the cadets fired at targets in the alleys.

Laying on the left side of the M60 was the assistant gunner who fed a belt of ammunition into the gun. The gunner lay to the right of the gun. Firing, the gunner jolted from the expulsion of the shell; a trace of fire was visible behind the bullet.

Upon completion of the M60 one cadet remarked, "they ought to put a truck or a car out there —

Steve Miller samples C-rations for lunch.

After C-rations, four hamburgers or hot dogs, potato salad, and baked beans sounded like a gourmet's delight. The after dinner activities were a bit slower paced.

"Flat on your head; I don't want to see any cowboys out there!"

It was 7:45 Sunday morning. The cadets were in formation wearing their steel pots with liners, ready to move out to the firing range. (This was after a quick breakfast featuring S.O.S., for those daring enough to try it.)

On the range, cadet commanders demonstrated the firing of the rifle and machine gun. Major Hamaker issued orders from the range tower. Cadets were to fire only on his command. Weapons were to be pointed down range at all times. "Cease fire" was to be bellowed with the occurrence of any unsafe act, or with any malfunction of a weapon. The cadets were supervised on the ground by safety officers.

The cadets assumed a prone position on the ground behind the rifles. With the left hand on the barrel, the rifle butt against the something where you could see the damage."

Whereas the firing of weapons proved to be exciting to many, others were not so enthusiastic. "I don't like guns," responded one cadet.

With the estimated time of departure as 2:30 p.m., the cadets had just enough time to return to the base, clean their weapons, return their equipment and feast again on C-rations.

The Longwood cadets were to return once again on helicopters, one of the highlights of the trip. As they flew over Iler field, below them waited a throng of excited viewers, including participants in a fraternity football game. On the ground the spectators received quite a show performed by the pilots, but nothing comparable to what the passengers received. The flight home compensated for the endless formations, the heatless night, and the early morning start.

Being back home, it seemed like another world to that of Ft. A.P. Hill, but, the Cadets returned with imperishable remembrances — left over canned rations and P-38's!

Soccer Plays Close Game With Lynchburg In The Mud

By Margaret Hammersley

In soccer action last week the men were victorious on the road at Mary Washington, and lost at home to Lynchburg J.V., in two of the season's most exciting games.

Delayed for a week, the Mary Washington game was played despite the rain last Wednesday. The match was won 6-4 in overtime, as the teams met for the second time this season. Right wing Richard Hunt had a great game, scoring three consecutive goals.

Longwood's only goal in the first half was scored by Mark Conte. Mary Washington scored four goals in the half.

Coming back to play a "fired up" second half, Longwood held Mary Washington scoreless while scoring three goals for themselves. Komornik scored first in the half on a direct, unassisted kick. The following two goals were scored by Hunt.

At the end of regulation time the score was tied 4-4 as the game went into two 10 minute halves of overtime. Seven minutes into overtime Hunt scored his game's third goal. At 5-4, Conte scored in the last minute to bring the winning score to 6-4.

Coach Williamson commented that the defense was "up in the second half." He praised goalie Link for having "played his best game." Aggressively, Link "saved the game," allowing no attempted shots to score.

Friday's match was also the second between Longwood and Lynchburg. And it was also played in the rain.

Perhaps the season's best game, Longwood played hard and allowed Lynchburg to walk away with only a one point victory margin, 2-3. Lynchburg was the first scorer after one and a half minutes of play with what appeared to be a questionable goal. Blues and Reds crowded the blue goal, slipping and falling into mud holes. The ball went from player to player. Link was on the ground and the ball slowly rolled by. After some controversy the official declared the goal scored by number 15, assisted by number 8.

Seventeen and a half minutes into the half Lynchburg's number 4 rushed Link one on one to score.

With two and a half remaining in the half, Longwood shot a corner kick in which Lynchburg trapped the ball and sat on 17. Longwood was awarded a penalty kick. Before a Red wall, Hunt passed to Komornik whose kick hit the left goal post and bounced out. Griffin went for the ball but was stopped by Lynchburg.

It was 0-2 at the half.

Becoming known as "the second half comeback team," it was 35 seconds into the second half when Conte, assisted by Komornik, scored. The two were all alone on the Lynchburg goalie.

With fourteen minutes into the half, Lynchburg again scored. One minute later Nelson and Komornik worked the game's final goal, Komornik scoring. With 30 minutes remaining, rain and threatening dark, Lynchburg wanted another goal, Longwood wanted a tie. Both teams refused to quit.

The game ended 2-3, a much closer margin than the previous encounter which ended 1-5. "They were hungrier this game . . . they played tighter team ball," commented the coach.

A powerhouse of force and energy — Richard Hunt scores one of three consecutive goals against M.W.C. last week.

Williamson reflected on the team's progress. One of the earliest obstacles was learning which player was best suited for which position. He believes that the team has now found the best combination of people and positions. In the last two games Giza and Komornik have switched positions. Giza is now playing right inside, and Komornik center half.

The coach also accredits the team's progress with their "seeing more confidence in themselves."

With a record of 3-4-1, the men travel to Hampden-Sydney today to play at 2:30 p.m. The season's final match will be played at home Saturday afternoon when Longwood hosts University of North Carolina — Greensboro, at 2:30.

Win Over O.D.U., Lose To W&M

Hockey Goes To Regionals Friday

Last Tuesday the Longwood hockey team went on the road to play Bridgewater. Terry Voit lead the scoring with five goals, one of which was on a penalty stroke. Carol Filo made the other goal during L.C.'s 6-1 victory. The team looked strong against their aggressive and often slipshod opponents.

The JV team also took their game 3-1, with Suzanne Ash, Jeanne Nolte and Donna Deats each scoring a goal.

The next day both teams played Madison on a definitely unfamiliar field . . . astro-turf. Not letting the rain or the slick surface slow them down, the L.C. team went in to score a goal by Terry Voit to answer the first goal by Madison. Longwood did not get down the field offensively as much as they did in the Bridgewater game, probably because of the unfamiliar playing surface.

Madison's second goal came from an occurrence while has now haunted the team four times — the goal was scored after deflecting off the goal post. Thus the game ended in a 2-1 Longwood loss, despite the team's efforts to tie the score.

Celeste Rodriguez came from her half-back position to score the only Longwood JV goal. She was the only JV defensive player to score during the season. The JV team outplayed Madison to take the game 1-0.

The final standings for the varsity are 9-3, with the team losing to Richmond Club and tying UNC-G in a recent tournament. The JV stands at 7-1-1. They also tied the Richmond Club and Cavalier Club in 20 minute games. Coach Dee McDonough feels her JV team did "great".

This past week end the varsity team went to the Tidewater Tournaments at Westhampton. Their first game was against Old Dominion. Longwood won in overtime 2-1. Saturday Longwood lost in a tough game against William and Mary, 2-3. William and Mary was the only Tidewater team to defeat L.C. in regular season play.

Coach Dee McDonough

commented that the team "didn't give up when down." They played well and consistent.

About William and Mary, Coach McDonough commented that their team was quick and experienced in tournament play. This week end the hockey team will travel to William and Mary to compete in Regionals. Their first game is against South Carolina. Later they may have to play William and Mary again. Coach McDonough says, "We can play with them. They aren't any better than we are."

In order to go to Nationals in Denver, Colorado the team will have to play first in Regionals.

The Power Of The N.B.A.

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

Two fruit baskets were nailed at opposite ends of the gym. Eighteen young men, divided into teams of nine, bounced and passed a soccer ball, trying to score a goal by getting the ball into the basket. This was the beginning of one of America's favorite sports, basketball.

The game was invented in 1891 by James A. Naismith for his physical education class at the International YMCA Training School in Springfield, Massachusetts. The game rapidly spread to recreation groups, high schools, and colleges over the country.

Colleges picked up the sport in 1892. Five man college teams were used four years later. By 1915 standard basketball rules were established.

Professional basketball did not become popular until the 1940's, although many teams were on the courts earlier. Professional teams just played other teams in their area. Often players were on more than one team. For instance, early probasketball player Ed Wachter was in more than 3,000 games. He is credited with introducing the bounce pass and fast break to the game.

One of the first popular teams was the New York Celtics. During the 1920's and 1930's, they won 90 per cent of their games.

In 1927, the most famous pro team was established, the all black Harlem Globetrotters. This team still entertains spectators by their fancy ball handling and comedy throughout the United States and other countries.

Another popular all black team was the New York Renaissance Big Five. During their 1933-34 season, they won 127 games, dropping only 7.

In 1946, arena owners in 11 cities formed the Basketball Association of America. Earlier another league has been formed called the National Basketball League. Both these organizations merged in 1949 to form the National Basketball Association, with 17 teams in three divisions.

Today the NBA has two conferences. The Eastern Conference is divided into the Atlantic Division, with four teams and the Central Division with five teams, while the Western Conference has the Midwest Division with four teams and the Pacific Division with five teams. At the end of the regular season, the first and second place teams in each division enter the playoffs for the league championships. Last year the Portland Trail Blazers defeated the Philadelphia 76ers for the title.

Another league was the American Basketball Association, formed in 1967. They had an Eastern Division with six teams and a Western Division with five teams. The top four teams in each division vied for the championship. The ABA soon dwindled to only six teams.

A merger between the powerful NBA and the six member ABA resulted June 17, 1976. Four ABA teams joined the NBA. The ABA had lost a total of $40 million since its existence.

The Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame was established in Springfield, Massachusetts in 1959, where coaches, players, and contributors to amateur, high school, and professional basketball are recognized.

Professional basketball has risen from bushel baskets to hoops and nets. It has become a fast sport using the talents of many skillful, not to mention very tall, players, such as 1976 MVP 7 foot, 2 inch Kareem Abdul Jabbar of the Lakers, Julius Erving of the 76ers with a 30.6 point average in the playoffs last year and the Knicks Bob McAdoo, the high scorer in 1976 and 1975 MVP.

Volleyball Takes Roanoke

By DEBBIE NORTHERN

At home against Roanoke on November 3, the Longwood varsity volleyball team defeated their opposition, 15-12, 15-3, 15-13.

Coach Carolyn Price said her team "started off slow." They came from behind in the last game 10-5 to win. She felt her team played best in their second game, when they hit the ball hard and called good plays.

The Longwood JV played their final game, losing to Roanoke in three games. They had a good season considering the team was made up of only two returning players. It was also hard scheduling games. Coach Price said that most schools have no JV team so the L.C. team had hard matches against teams composed of varsity players. Also, due to injury problems, there were no substitutes for the last two matches.

Coach Price was pleased with the JV team and felt that they did a fine job. The JV team lost only three games.

Friday and Saturday the varsity volleyball team will be competing in the VFISW Tournament at George Mason University.

There are two small college divisions in the state. Eight schools, four from each division, will be competing in the Round Robin part of the Tournament. The top two teams from each division will then play in single elimination to determine the winner.

on the trail, there aren't too many calamities that modern technology and common sense can't handle. Boiling all drinking water, no matter how pictorially pure the stream may appear, is an absolute safety measure. Carry along some with you for a pit stop along the trail. Harvey Manning, in his book BACKPACKING—ONE STEP AT A TIME, observes that "snakes fear man and given a chance will flee his presence..." Creating enough rustling on the path will usually give them enough warning to slither aside and avoid a confrontation. It is true too, that a relatively small percentage of outdoor sportsmen are bitten by serpents each year. Carrying, and knowing how to use a snake bite kit are important first-aid measures should this occur. As difficult as it may seem, keeping calm is one of your best defenses as an increase in heartbeat will cause the venom to pulse that much faster through your system.

A few tips to keep in mind to make your backpacking experience "un-bearable!"; at night store all food in a plastic or cloth sack and suspend it from a tree branch approximately 10 feet off the ground away from the campsite.

Be sure that all food is out of the sleeping area and especially out of the tent. During seasons when bears are particularly pesky rangers may advise you to cook your food in an area separate from where you plan to establish camp.

Although national parks generally have a gate fee for all visitors, there is no charge for an "overnight" for packers. However, each packer must be issued a backcountry permit, indicating the area the hiker plans to stay and number of nights he plans to camp. A sweet

The Ins And Outs Of Camping

By BRIDGET SCHERZ

July 4th was Independence Day in a different sense this year. Having finally learned, since that slapstick maiden voyage just four months before, the practical distinction between a Kely and a 2-ply grocery bag, I assembled what I was told were the essentials, and something that felt like courage and prepared to take my first solo overnight hike into Shenandoah National Forest.

Due to circumstances of time and season, (I had only two days in which to hike during a time that was more than just unusually warm), the gear that I had selected to bring consisted of the basic packing paraphernalia. The question of money also provided a lot of answers as to what type of gear was brought and what substitutions and improvisations were made. One of the most popular refrains sung by experienced hikers time and time again is to avoid unnecessary gadgetry and buying of expensive specialized equipment until you are sure of your particular needs and if, in fact, you really like the sport enough to sink that much greenery into it.

It is for this reason that many novices choose the type of rucksack as their first bag. Rucksacks generally are soft, frameless or semi-frameless bags used a daypacks or in mountain-climbing, depending on their size. Some of the larger rucksacks with a stiffened back or semi-flexible interior frame can comfortably distribute up to 40 lbs. The popular Don Jensen achieves a similar effect as the semi-frameless although it is totally soft. Tight packing of the load in this bag creates a suspension similar to the stiffened varieties that these packs are soft causes them to ride close to the body, making them best suited for mountain climbing and scrambling along rocks. Their disadvantage as a hiking bag is that they render the hikers back vulnerable to whatever hard goods are stored inside.

The variations in packframes and bags are even greater. The best advice in shopping for one of these is to perhaps borrow and trail-test a few different types if it is possible. Be sure to adjust the shoulder and hip straps to your body line, remembering that you should be able to maintain a normal posture while carrying the load. Padded straps and belt are an important feature for comfort as they help prevent the nylon webbing from eating its way into your arm. As influential determine which model is best suited to your needs. Some worthwhile features in backpacking shelters include a rain-fly (this is suspended over the tent structure and acts as an umbrella, keeping the water from coming in contact with the inner walls and sewn-in floor (keeps out snakes). Good-items in small, compact quantities. It's a good idea to hold on to individually packaged samples of products for this purpose. A scout compass, costing only a couple of dollars, serves the purpose well and comes with an instruction booklet geared especially for beginners. A two cell flashlight with extra cells will do the job without adding a lot of weight. A "fire ribbon", a jelly-like material that squeezes from a tube, or solid hydrocarbon "fuel tablets" are useful for starting emergency fires particularly in wet terrain. Waterproof matches can be bought or made by dipping stick matches completely in hot wax and should be stored in a watertight container. The type of extra food is largely in individual choice, although size, perishability and energy value are worthwhile considerations. Extra clothing usually takes the form of a sweater and some type of foul weather protection.

On short trips food weight isn't a major concern. Many hikers like to throw in a couple of candy bars as a source of quick energy that is easy to eat and takes up little room. Something else to consider when gathering groceries is the increased rate of metabolism the body experiences with the added work of carrying and climbing. Dehydrated foods, while being light and complete, are also expensive and are really not necessary except on longer jaunts.

Utensils may either be collected from some old kitchen discards or purchased as one of those clip-together types you can get in a discount store for about $1. A mess kit, including a cup, small pot, and frying pan that stack and are clamped together is a good one-shot completion of the cooking outfit, although these too may be assembled from odds and ends at home. A small, inexpensive grate might also be a useful item. As use of the backcountry in national parks prohibits the making of open fires, hikers must find a compact alternative to them. Sterno, while awful smelling stuff, is light and inexpensive. Backpacking stoves can be found in a myriad of models, fuel types and prices and are usually a more permanent investment.

As far as beasties and hazards as proper fit and adjustment of the bag are, so is the way in which it is packed. Locate heavier items close to your back and up high. Metal objects should be kept away from the back as they may cause some discomfort and might also wear holes in the bag. A nylon stuff bag with a plastic liner (this may be a large trash bag) keeps the sleeping bag together and dry. This is lashed to the bottom of the pack frame, by nylon shock cords, although I found that two old leather belts work just as well and would probably last longer."

Along with the pack and sleeping bag, the tent is generally one of the larger and more expensive pieces of equipment. The first thing to consider in buying a tent, as with these other items, is the circumstances in which it will be used. How often you plan to use it and where, along with your budget should tentkeeping habits have a definite effect on its longevity. These shelters should be repaired as soon as possible, even if only temporarily, on the trail so that continued use doesn't worsen the damage and they should never be stored wet or excessively soiled.

What you decide to carry in your pack should be scrutinized carefully according to its usefulness and weight. Although much of what goes into a person's pack will reflect his own hiking idiosyncrasies, there are a few essentials which should be included in every bag. It's not a bad idea to make a checklist, giving absolute priority to such staples as a first-aid kit, compass, flashlight, firestarter, waterproof matches, extra food and extra clothing. An adequate first-aid kit can be thrown together by gutting a band-aid box and restocking it with a small vile of antiseptic, cotton, a few band-aids, and other emergency of packing regulations accompanies the permit of which the packer must acknowledge having full understanding. These regulations include such things as the prohibitions of open fires, carrying in of glass containers and littering. Signs instructing hikers to "Pack it Out" reflect the park department's concern for preserving an untrashed, natural environment. A Golden Eagle Pass obtainable at the entrance gates for $10 provides unlimited admission to all national parks for a period of one year.

THE DEAN OF BEER SUGGESTS ALL STUDENTS IMPROVE THEIR READING, WRITING, AND PUNTING.

Fellow Beer Persons, life is full of problems. Fortunately, as your Dean of Beer, I am full of answers. For example, many problems can be avoided with good reading skills. Such as "Danger, Wild Boar Ahead!"

Many others can be avoided through good writing skills. Such as "Dear Mom, Send Cash." However, some problems require more. Some problems require special attention. Such as "Good evening, Officer. What can I do for you?"

That is why, in addition to the fine arts of reading and writing, I recommend you master the fine art of punting. Preferably with either foot. That is also why I am offering $5.00 off the suggested retail price of an official, intercollegiate-quality Wilson football, with the Schlitz emblem. So you can practice. (Besides, no one would be interested if I offered $5.00 off on lip balm.) Class dismissed.

Dr. Sydnor Completes Book

Soldiers Of Destruction

Soon To Be Released

By CONNIE BARBOUR

Dr. Charles W. Sydnor, Jr., an Assistant Professor of History at Longwood has just added another facet to his list of accomplishments. Dr. Sydnor has written a book titled Soldiers of Destruction The SS Death's Head Division, 1933-1945, published by Princeton University Press.

The book elaborates on the history evolved about one individual of the SS Totenkopfdivision, or the SS Death's Head Division, a military formation that emerged basically out of the SS guard units that ran the concentration camp system in prewar Nazi Germany. The book traces the evolution of the division from its origins in the prewar SS system, the concentration camp system. Dr. Sydnor explained that, "The book analyzes the influences of the concentration camps on the mentality of the men who served in the division and how that particular political and ideological set of experiences influenced the division's combat performance." The book explores the "... impact this particular type of ideological development had on the quality, the ferocity, the ruthlessness with which the division fought." A good bit of the book is devoted to an analysis of the various campaigns in Europe in which the division participated, such as the Battle of France in the summer of 1940. Beginning with the invasion of the Soviet Union in June of 1941 the Death's Head Division fought exclusively against the Red Army, until the German collapse in the May of 1945. "So you have the creation and evolutionary development of a fanatical SS unit, powerful militarily, that is committed to what really is the ultimate purpose of Nazi Germany, the destruction of what the Nazi called the Jewish Bolshevik subhumanity, the Soviet Union." Dr. Sydnor's great understanding enabled him to analyze the thoughts of the world controllers of this time period which caused them to commit the acts they did. In his analysis of Hitler's motives Dr. Sydnor confirmed that "Hitler conceived of the Soviet hierarchy in the Soviet Union, and the Jewish world conspiracy against Germany as being one in the same thing. SS divisions were particularly employed in the war against the east since Hitler conceived of this as an ideological struggle, a crusade in a sense. The German campaign against Russia was meant not only to defeat the Red Army in battle, the classic objective of one state in a war with another state, the campaign in the east was really a war of inihilation. The objective in winning the war was not just to defeat the Red Army but to smash the Soviet State and exterminate the Jewish and Slavic peoples whom Hitler regarded as the biological basis of the Bolshevik system of power. Hence, this division had a consistently important and very conspicuous role militarily in the war against the Soviet Union."

Dr. Sydnor's interest in this aspect of history is rooted in his early life. He had originally chosen the topic of the SS for his doctoral dissertation at Vanderbilt in 1967, ten years ago. He was attracted to this topic particularly because so much of the revisionist or apologist literature for the SS in the period since the WWII had tried to "... portray these SS divisions as simply German army divisions that happened to wear field gray uniforms instead of green uniforms, and the SS soldiers were really a little different from the other soldiers who fought in the German armies." In proving his assumption Dr. Sydnor took one particular division and constructed an intensive analysis. He found the SS to be much different than the composition and behavior of an ordinary army unit. "The Death's Head division was one of the most reliable and one of the most famous military formations of the entire war. It was an elite formation. . . You had a combination of ideological and personal circumstances that produced a superbly, equipped and fanatic military unit that was capable of the most ruthless kind of conduct against the enemies of Nazi Germany." The Totenkopfdivision was commanded by people who had developed careers in the prewar assess. The commander, Theodor Eicke, in particular, had a definitive influence upon the development of the German concentration camp system. "He was the man who literally trained the senior wartime SS officers who ran the extermination camps." "Eicke is a figure who has been little known in German history until now. The book in a sense is a kind of biographical profile of him, because his influence was so important on the concentration camps. His personality was indelibly imprinted on the character of the Death's Head division."

The book has taken Dr. Sydnor ten years from the initial decision to work on the topic until its publication this month. The book is just now off the press and out of the binder, though it has not officially been published yet. The official publication date is December 1. It should be scheduled for syndicated reviews, probably by the New York Times Sunday Book Review section sometime in December, the Washington Post Book World, and also advertised in historical

Voznesensky - Soviet

Audiences Go Wild

By BRIDGETSCHERZ

For a literary figure who has weathered his writing career through the wax and wane of government approval, Andrei Voznesensky finds himself riding the wake of a Soviet fanfare of the type that, in this country, is usually reserved for rock stars, movie heroes and super jocks. And within the laurels of artistic superstardom are often entangled the briars of the unusual experiences that seem almost to be part of the crown.

Consider the scene a few months ago in Moscow when a teary-eyed young woman broke through the crowd of admirers and pleaded with Voznesensky for a ticket into the arena in which he was to appear. Inside, according to the poet, "people were packed so close together they could barely move." That one of his appearances can command a house of 12,000 people and that his books, issued in quantities of 100,000, are an instantaneous sellout, are indications of his own popularity as well as the emergence of the poetic artform in the Soviet Union.

Although he has never been categorized with such dissidents as Solzhenitsyn, Voznesensky has not found himself immune to the changing political temperament toward open expression in the arts. His most explicit government reprimand came in the early 60's when Khrushchev told him to get out of the country. Asserting his personal and artistic identity as a Russian, Voznesensky replied, "I am a Russian poet and I am not going anywhere." Even after mid-1963 when the hostility toward poets and their craft had slackened and popular poetry had mushroomed into the substantially viable movement that it is today, Voznesensky, as other prominent literary figures, was still held in check.

In 1967 when an American tour by the poet was canceled on political grounds, Voznesensky penned a fiery indignation which appeared in the editorial page of the French newspaper, Le Monde. In retaliation the Soviet government withheld publication of his books for a period of three years. A more recent, though less dramatic, instance of political "discretion" used in screening material for public consumption occurred a few months ago. A satirical piece that Voznesensky had delivered to a large audience on the Russian legacy of waiting on line to buy virtually anything was deleted from the television taping to be shown to audiences at home.

Peter Osnos, in his article in The Washington Post, accounts for Voznesensky's durability as artist in what he describes as a sense of balance that the poet maintains between, "... the integrity of his work and the pressures for political orthodoxy in a Communist state." It is perhaps this additional concern that inspires the poet. His motto to creation in fact may seem strange at first to those who do not automatically infer the suppositions and logic behind it: "Long live failure!" the poet exclaims. It is a somewhat startling echo of the age-old observation that discontentment provides man with the itch, and to satisfy it he has got to scratch. Voznesensky applies this to the consequences of his own success: "Sometimes I feel that one must

Longwood Junior Killed In Auto Accident

Miss Kathleen Ann Scott, a Longwood junior, was killed in an automobile accident Thursday night, Nov. 10. According to the report from State Trooper D.L. Holland, the accident occurred at 11:25 p.m., on Rt. 15 south, one mile out of Farmville.

Also occupying the car were three Hampden-Sydney students and another Longwood student. Susan Lynn Curyear, a Longwood junior, was Miss Scott's roommate. She was admitted and released from Southside Hospital, and is now at her home. The driver, David G. Graham, is from Baltimore, Md., and is a senior at Hampden-Sydney. He suffered a neck injury and was released from MCV Friday morning. David H. Fletcher, of St. Albans, W. Va., was admitted to Southside Hospital and soon after released with no injury. The fifth passenger was Jonathan S. Pananas, a H-SC freshman from Orange. He underwent an operation, Friday morning, for a blood clot in his brain. The operation was successful and at last report he is in stable condition with no permanent damage.

Miss Scott was the daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Austin B. Scott, of Virginia Beach. An art major, she was a member of Alpha Sigma Tau sorority. The funeral services were held on Saturday, Nov. 12, at the Emanuel Episcopal Church, Va. Beach.

Working Together For Education

By GLORIA AVERY

Educators throughout the nation are observing American Education Week this week, November 13-19. The theme for the week is "Working Together for Education." The Student Education Association on campus is taking an active part in American Education Week.

The Student Education Association had a reception for all Longwood student education majors Monday night. Educational materials were available to students at the reception. Today, the Student Education Association will eat lunch with the visiting committee of the National Council of Accreditation of Teacher Education. This committee will be on campus to review our teacher education program.

Kappa Delta Phi, the Education Honorary, will sponsor a business education speaker Thursday night in Bedford at 7 p.m.

American Education Week has been observed annually since 1921. Future educators should express concern in today's educational system. If they do not concern themselves with the schools, they are forfeiting some of the responsibility they share for the future of their community and country. On the other hand, interest and care can help minimize the pressures of current crises; and it can lighten the darkness of the unknown that lies ahead.

National sponsors of American Education Week are the National Education Association, The American Legion, National Congress of Parents and Teachers, and United States Office of Education.

Phi Beta Lambda Travels To Conference

By KAY COLEMAN

The Phi Beta Lambda Southern Region Leadership Conference was held in Hot Springs, Arkansas, during November 5 through 7. Longwood College was represented there by Betsy Whidden, Susan Lewis, Rhonda Ruggina, Cindy Chapman, and Miss Sarah Lowe Thompson, one of the Phi Beta Lambda advisors.

These five Longwood representatives attended many learning seminars while at the conference. The Secretarial Seminar was conducted by Susan Lewis, president of the Phi Beta Lambda chapter here at Longwood.

They were entertained by a banquet and a dance, and they came in contact with such notable personalities as the Honorable Paul Dietrich of the Missouri House of Representatives. Mr. Dietrich offered the keynote address at the conference.

Dr. Etheridge Discusses "The Neighborhood Mint"

Dr. Elizabeth W. Etheridge will give the second Faculty Colloquium Lecture at Longwood College for this academic year.

The public is cordially invited to hear her discuss the topic, "The Neighborhood Mint: Dahlonaga in the Age of Jackson" on Wednesday evening, November 16, at 7:30 in the Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Building.

Dr. Etheridge states that her lecture deals with the quarter century following 1835 when Congress authorized the establishment of a Branch of the United States Mint at Dahlonaga, Georgia. Dahlonaga was then a brawling settlement on the edge of the frontier where America's first gold rush was underway.

"The Branch Mint was organized ostensibly to help alleviate the nation's chronic shortage of specie," she stated, "and thus was a part of President Andrew Jackson's War on the Second Bank of the United States."

But, even though more than $6,000,000 in gold coins were minted there, the Branch Mint "was more closely identified with that enduring aspect of Jacksonian democracy, the spoils system. Georgians saw the Branch Mint not so much as part of the Nation's monetary system but rather as a neighborhood institution in which they had a proprietary interest and a natural right to office."

Dr. Etheridge, associate professor of history at Longwood, holds the B.A. degree in journalism from the University of Georgia, the M.A. from the University of Iowa, and the Ph.D. in history, also from the University of Georgia.

She is the author of "The Butterfly Caste—A social History of Pellagra in the South," published in 1972 by the Greenwood Press as part of the Contributions in American History series.

In 1974 and again in 1977, Dr. Etheridge was the recipient of summer study grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

The clogging workshop, the first of its kind, was popularly received last week.

John Marks Uncovers The C.I.A.

John Marks, the 32-year old co-author (with Victor Marchetti) of "The CIA and the Cult of Intelligence," is a graduate of Andover, Cornell and Vietnam, where he spent 18 months as a civilian advisor to the Vietnamese government. Back home in 1968, Marks was assigned to the State Department's Bureau of Intelligence and Research. In 1969, he became assistant to State's intelligence director and watched CIA operations from the point of view of a cooperating service. He was serving as an aide to Senator Clifford Case, a liberal Republican from New Jersey, when Marchetti asked him to collaborate on the book. Pursuing his fascination with the CIA, Marks, who works at the Center for National Security Studies in Washington, has recently been exploring the clandestine labyrinths of CIA economics. Outside the CIA, he is thought to be the world's leading expert on CIA cover organizations and secret corporations which he discusses here.

Longwood Represented At English Meeting

By SHERIE RAGSDALE

Is language sensible or nonsense? Is literature a salvation or ruin? Are standardized tests a use or misuse? These are just a few of the topics that Dr. Sneller's Teaching of English 480 class found extremely interesting at the Virginia Association of Teachers of English (VATE) meeting held November 4&5, 1977, at the Richmond Hyatt House.

Those, along with the Drs. Snellers and Dr. Douglas, who represented Longwood College were Jeanette Booker, Jan Lane, Brenda Ragdsdale, Meryl Phelps, Sandy Haga, Leslie Boatwright, and myself. They were introduced to well-known English educators such as Stephen Dunning, who is Past President of the National Council of Teachers of English, famed poet, and editor of several books, for example, Reflections on a Gift of Watermelon Pickle. Also presented to the group was William Stafford, an anthologized poet, whose poems are included in several books in Longwood's library. These are just two examples of the honorable guest speakers that were present.

But those from Longwood not only attentive to the guest speakers' theories of teaching English to today's student; they also bombarded with the worries and anticipations of English teachers from all over the state. With just a foot in the door of the English field, the future English teachers gave insights on expectations of students, parents, other teachers, and the school boards. As the various talks and discussion groups ended, they had feelings of relief, assurance, and encouragement. Immediately they began formulating in their heads new ideas for the future English teacher and tomorrow's student. The VATE meeting was a beginning step to interchanging ideas among educators near and far. For those who are interested in finding out what teaching of English is all about, the next event is a workshop, "Teaching Writing," on March 3-4, 1978, at the Richmond Hyatt House, sponsored by the National Council of Teachers of English.

'Hey! You're The New Major At Longwood!'

By Margaret Hammersley

"...I was getting madder and madder. She was in the back cleaning a big coffee pot, and she knew I was waiting because my car was the only vehicle in the parking lot. Finally she turned around, and when she did, pointed her finger at me and exclaimed, 'You're the new major at Longwood!' And there I was standing at Jax in Cumberland."

The new Major, tall, dark haired and mustachied, is Bryant Bonner, "B.B." Hamaker, Major United States Army. On loan from the Military Science department at the University of Richmond, Major Hamaker is the R.O.T.C. instructor here. He teaches two sections, of Military Science 101 on Wednesday and Thursday afternoons to 40 freshmen and sophomores.

To look at the multi-colored bars on his dress uniform, one would think he was born in fatigues, yet February 1978 will mark only his tenth year in the service.

A native of Portsmouth, Virginia, he was born in 1940, and grew up in the city. Upon graduation from Woodrow Wilson High School, he attended University of North Carolina on a football scholarship. In 1963 he graduated from Old Dominion College a physical education major.

Before enlisting in the Army in 1966, Major Hamaker had played professional football with the Norfolk Neptunes, and had taught and coached at Norfolk Academy.

The Major's enlistment in the Army has been a rather peculiar one. When asked why he joined the service, he replied, "I felt an obligation, a duty, to the country."

With the promotion to Corporal E-4, he was selected to attend Officers Candidate School at Fort Benning, Georgia. With the commission of 2nd Lieutenant Infantry, he left the States for the Republic of Vietnam, where he occupied the positions of Platoon Leader, Company Executive Officer, and Company Commander. After being wounded he was medically evacuated to the United States in 1968.

Following a short period of hospitalization, he requested to be returned to Vietnam where he served as an assistant G-2 (General Staff Intelligence), formulating tactical operations. Why did he want to be on the front line fighting? "Because I'm a soldier." During the time he spent overseas there was much turmoil and protesting at home. What was his reaction to the situation? Striking a match he responded, "I wasn't there to win a war." He lit his Camel and leaned back in the chair, "I was defending their right to protest." Did he ever question the war? "It wasn't my place to question the act of Congress or the President."

Back in the United States in 1969 to be hospitalized again, he could not return to the fighting. In 1970 he medically retired from the service.

The injuries he sustained from the war were injuries to his left hip and leg bone structure. After his second period of hospitalization the bones had failed to knit correctly, consequently, he could not walk without the aid of a cane.

In the following two years Major Hamaker taught with the Portsmouth School System, and at Virginia Episcopal School. He recalled that when he began teaching in 1970, "I couldn't even run a lap around the field." It was then that he decided to rebuild the left side of his body, and recondition his entire body. In 1970 he began running. Within two years, the man who previously could not walk without a limp, was running 14 miles a day.

In 1972 I returned to the Physical Examination Board, laid my cane on the table and said, 'You can have this back.' The Major was reinstated with the 9th Infantry Division, Fort Lewis, Washington.

Now in his third year at the University of Richmond, he has
